Chemaswet, who now lives in West Pokot District of western Kenya, was reported to have paid a secret visit to Sebei before a group of heavily armed thugs posing as cattle-rustlers stormed and wiped out a police post at the border town of Bukwa. The assault on Bukwa left many policemen and local residents dead and property looted or destroyed.

According to the source, the raid coincided with another incident in which some members of the people's militia who were stationed in the area rebelled against government authorities and fled to the bush with their arms. The rebels later attacked members of Kanchorwa District Team and Planning Committee and destroyed a house in which they were staying, and several government vehicles.

However, officials in Kapchorwa have said the situation in the district was not very grave.

The Chairman of the Military Commission, Mr Paulo Muwanga, said over the weekend that enemies of Uganda operating both from outside and inside the country had planned to invade from various sides and also start trouble internally.

ANOTHER FOOD CRISIS IN KARAMOJA SEEN AS POSSIBILITY

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 9 Oct 80 pp 8, 18

[Text] The Karamoja famine is presently contained but international aid officials are worried the northeastern region may lapse into yet another food crisis by the end of the year.

Famine in Karamoja, undoubtedly Uganda's top story this year in the local and international news media, reached catastrophic proportions in July and August, claiming more than 15 lives a day.

While international relief organisations rushed emergency food supplies to the region in August and September to contain the famine, the Karamojong suffered yet another setback in the form of poor yields from the annual harvests.

So without additional food aid to feed the region throughout the next year, more Karamojong are likely to die of starvation.

A World Food Programme (WFP) official in Kampala said recently that there is just enough emergency relief food in Uganda presently to sustain the region through the end of the year.

Originally, international aid officials had hoped that this year's harvests would be adequate enough to supplement the emergency food relief and feed the region well into next year.

But the officials are finding their estimates were a bit too optimistic and Karamoja surely will need additional food aid, as early as January.

This year's harvests were minimal due to a shorter-than-usual rainfall and the starving Karamojong's inability to work in the shambas.

The WFP estimates that currently 65,000 men, women and children in the region are being sustained just above the starvation level through daily feedings from the international relief organisations working in Karamoja.

After seeing the dismal harvests, the organisations predicted that more than 120,000 persons would need to be fed by the end of the year.

But as the need for food increases each day, officials now believe the number of persons needing food could well soar to more than 200,000 nearly two-thirds of the entire Karamoja population.

If the officials' predictions are correct and the emergency food supplies prove inadequate, Karamoja could face another famine unless additional relief is obtained within the next two months.

The present food relief operations, being coordinated by the WFP, are concentrated at 10 feeding centres throughout the region.

Each feeding station is being staffed by volunteers from more than 15 international relief organisations.

And each mission in Karamoja also is acting as an emergency food relief centres.

The aid organisations also have launched a massive feeding programme through all schools in Karamoja, whereby each student is given at least two meals a day.

While the bulk of the emergency food supplies came from the French government, aid also was provided by the United Nations' High Commission for Refugees, Oxfam of the United Kingdom, the German Red Cross, United States' USAID, UNICEF, CARE, European Economic Community, Catholic Relief, Islamic Solidarity Fund of Jeda and the governments of Belgium, Netherlands, Switzerland, Australia, Holland the Yugoslavia.

Meanwhile, the international aid organisations and the Uganda government are working on long-term measures to avert another catastrophic famine in Karamoja.

In Matany and Nabilatuk, for instance, a pilot "food for work" programme has been launched.

This programme concentrates on improving roads in the areas to improve access to remote regions, improving wells for drinking and agricultural purposes and encouraging more productive farming.

Currently, an Oxfam team is touring the region to identify other future projects such as additional food storage facilities in Karamoja.

This year's famine was heightened by the initial lack of security in the region and forced relief organisations to suspend food relief operations temporarily after one of the food convoys was attacked by raiders.

The WFP official in Kampala said none of the convoys have been attacked since operations were resumed in August.

While the international organisations mounted emergency food relief measures, several Ugandan organisations mobilised to assist the drought-stricken Karamoja region.

These actions clearly were signs that Ugandans ready to assist their less fortunate brothers and sisters and to fight against hunger in Uganda.

EEC AID FOR POULTRY--The European Economic Community (EEC) has granted 5.1m/- to rehabilitate the poultry industry in Uganda. This was approved by the commissioner at a meeting on October 8. The project will provide for repair of the hatchery at Entebbe and the import of 100,000 parent stock chicks, 120,000 pullet chicks, 12,000 broiler and 50,000 hatching eggs. The chickens will be used to restock government farms. But later they will be sold directly to farmers. The project to be implemented by the ministry of animal industry and fisheries is expected to be an important step in making poultry products easily available in Uganda at reasonable prices. The grant is part of EEC's assistance to Uganda under the Lome convention. Under this programme a substantial part of the assistance is given to projects which will enable Uganda to become self-sufficient in food projection. NATION BROUGHT TO STANDSTILL BY STRIKES

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 pp 2283-85

[Text]

OUAGADOUGOU was virtually closed down on October 4 and 5 when a general stike was called by all Upper Volta's trade unions in support of the primary school teachers' union, Syndicat National des Enseignants Africains de Haute Volta, SNEAHV. The government has therefore failed to prevent the skirmishing with SNEAHV from escalating into another confrontation of potentially disastrous proportions for the government with the country's trade unions.

SUVESS, the teachers' union for secondary schools, and the university have been on an open-ended strike since October 29 in support of their colleagues in SNEAHV.

The private school teachers union (SYNEPEL-HV), Syndicat National des Etablissements Privés d'Enseignement Laïc, organised a two-day strike on October 31 and November 3, to precede the general strike, which they also supported. While the government claims that there are more than 500 teachers at work in the country, the unions estimate a figure nearer 100.

The general strike of November 4 and 5 involved all four main unions, known in Upper Volta as the Centrales or Confédérations. The unions decided to leave the capital's electricity and water supply connected and allowed one bakery to produce bread. Otherwise Ouagadougou was closed down. A few Lebanese-run shops were open but even the central market was closed. Those in town were either curious citizens on their mobylettes trying to find out what was going on or the military and security forces. The military were directing the traffic while the CRS were stationed around the Place 3 Janvier, Ouagadougou's main square, in anticipation of any political meetings or demonstrations.

The trade unions have also given the necessary statutory notice — of five days — for an open-ended strike if their demands are not met.

Violence during and preceding the strikes has been at a minimum, although on November 3 a public meeting organised in Bobo-Dioulasso by the four centrales was broken up by an armed gang. The unions subsequently declared that members of the gang were recruited by the Minister of Education, claiming that they were armed with knives, batons and even pistols and roamed about much of the town seeking out the union leaders. L'Observateur, the country's only daily which is independently run, commented that "for union members the incidents reveal the incapacity of the PDV (Parti Démocratique Voltaïque) to lead the country and its desire to liquidate the unions and trade unionism in order to install a single party."

The PDV-RDA continued its publicity campaign against the strikers, principally by not allowing them access to the radio. Some of the local traditional chiefs, particularly in Ouagadougou, called meetings of PDV-RDA teachers instructing them to return to work. The meetings were heavily guarded and outsiders were not permitted to attend.

On November 6, the CSV, one of the four main unions, was still on strike and some strikers were arrested. Banks, post offices and the airport were still closed. The Minister of Labour denied on the radio on November 5 that anyone had been arrested, but the following morning the radio reported two arrests. Subsequently it became known that six people had been arrested and one had been released. The CSV has said that it will continue its strike until the five are released. By Thursday evening all were released but the CSV maintained that the stike would start again from November 11 — as we go to press there has been no confirmation of the union decision — if the government does not respond to union demands.

The dispute has become a complex issue of union claim and government counter-claim (see West Africa, October 27, 1980) in which the government has made little headway in satisfying the teaching unions. In the process the quarrel has acquired important overtones with the opposition Front Progressiste Voltaïque supporting the strikers and the government alleging that the unions are being manipulate for political purposes.

The immediate causes of the strike concern complaints by SNEAHV that two of their teachers, including the SNEAHV General Secretary, M. Baba Ouedraogo, were transferred from their posts and demoted (see West Africa, October 27). The Union claims they are being victimised for their involvement in previous strikes. President Lamizana retorted with the observation that civil servants cannot and must not expect to sit behind the same desk throughout their career. The unions had also objected to the selection of a number of teachers to receive scholarships for further training in France, claiming that they were given as reward for being strikebreakers.

The story of government confrontation with unions in Upper Volta is a much longer one, however. Since 1979 the unions have been actively demanding increases in the minimum salary and improvement in working conditions. At the beginning of the year the civil service received an increase in salary. This, however, did not prevent the continuation of the strikes and an intensification of union action.

The effects are already evident. That the army should make itself prominent during the latest strikes poses a number of questions. The armed forces are also very conscious of the fact that twice before in the last ten years the unions have been responsible for successfully putting pressure on General Lamizana's military government for more liberalisation. The strikes of late 1975 resulted in the constitution and election of 1978, the disputed results of which brought the present PDV government to power.

With a much longer strike imminent, and the government of M. Joseph Conombo having refused to negotiate directly with the unions, eyes turn to the military. November 1 was Army Day. At the opening of a new officers mess, the Defence Minister, M. Francois Bouda, said: "Our National Army has the eminently difficult task of combining a faultless national patriotism with sometimes also remaining the ultimate reference in the contingencies of national security."

Such speeches do not go by unnoticed in Upper Volta, and they serve to raise the often well-founded speculation about a move by the Army. The Voltaic Army is not a united group. For almost 15 years it has been controlled by General Lamizana, and he carries particular weight with the right-wing elements of the Army. It is possible that, should the political situations deteriorate further, President Lamizana would be well-supported within the military if he were to make a move to re-establish some order. It is equally possibly that like-minded officers may feel that the General should be removed.

There is also a very strong left wing, or radical group in the army. Composed largely of younger members of the officer corps, their solutions would not include the tolerance of parliamentarianism that has been the hallmark of Lamizana's comparatively benign leadership in the past. Certainly the President has voiced a fear of this privately. Should this section of the armed forces decide to act it could well bring in its wake Upper Volta's radical politicians, including Professor Joseph Ki Zerbo, who is Secretary General of the FPV. For all his radical views and critiques of the PDV, Professor Ki Zerbo is not inclined to Marxism. He preaches constantly for a government of National Unity.

The financial situation in Upper Volta is serious enough to warrant a concerted effort from all the country's politicians, of they are to retain some credit with the populace.

In General Lamizana, France has an ally in West Africa, who is well supported by Ivory Coast. Already France has come to the financial aid of the government. In August, the majority-state-owned Banque Internationale des Voltas almost collapsed because of the credit squeeze caused by Ivory Coast and Senegal pulling their money out of the West African credit institutions to combat their own economic problems. President Lamizana flew to Paris to request assistance, which he received. It was generally assumed in Ouagadougou that if the bank has collaped so would the government.

Meanwhile, M. Conombo's government has had to face a series of economic disappointments, some of its own making. The manganese deposits at Tambao have yet to be exploited because of the costs involved in constructing a transport system. Drought has hit some parts of the country. The rural development structure, founded on ORDs (Organismes Régionaux de Développements) is very creaky: some members of the administration would say that it is collapsing. With the publication earlier this year of the projects for the 1977-1981 Plan, the country was given as an excuse for the two-year delay in publishing and implementing the Plan that: "Conceived in order to be implemented from 1977, the projected 1977-1981 Plan only became definitive in 1979. The delay is essentially due to exceptional political circumstances." This meant the series of referenda and elections from late 1977 to mid-1978 and the subsequent dispute over who had a majority in the Assembly.

However, there are many Voltaics who are beyond tolerating parliament; for them it has become the stage for a government which looks only to its own stability. And with that view lies the implicit condemnation of a large proportion of the political class of Upper Volta.

BRIEFS

TEACHERS STRIKE--Ouagadougou, 22 Nov (AFP)--Upper Volta's teachers unions have called on their members to end the strike they began nearly 2 months ago. The back-to-class decision was made yesterday by the National Union of African Teachers and the Secondary and Higher Teachers Union. Teachers are supposed to return on Monday. It was not immediately clear what influenced the unions. However, there had been reports that the government was recruiting student teachers or new graduates to take over the strikers jobs, and the government had met one of the strikers demands: for better pay. The teachers went on strike on 1 October. In addition to more money, they wanted the return to Upper Volta of three interns sent on an educational administration course in Paris under conditions the unions judged irregular, and the return to their former posts of two union leaders who were transferred for having gone on strike earlier. The unions said that the suspension of the strike does not mean the struggle is completed. On the contrary, the struggle will continue in other forms until we obtain satisfaction of (our) just demands. The teachers strike triggered a confrontation between the government and the powerful trade union federations of this West African country. The federations called for a 2-day general strike early this month, but many workers went to their jobs anyway. [Text] [AB221241 Paris AFP in English 1153 GMT 22 Nov 80]

MOZAMBIQUE REBELS REPORTEDLY CROSS INTO ZIMBABWE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] THIRTEEN members of the Mozambique Resistance Movement (RNM), crossed into eastern Zimbabwe last Saturday and attempted to steal money from a local man in the Chipinga district.

A police spokesman said the men entered the Tsumandzari area, south-east of Chipinga, and demanded cash from the man. He refused to hand anything over and was assaulted. Police are investigating the matter.

In recent months, RNM fighters have crossed into Zimbabwe on several occasions, probably looking for food.

More arms caches have been found in Manicaland, the spokesman said.

Police recovered nine 82 mm mortar bombs, one 3.5 rocket and a quantity of other equipment in the Rusape area last Friday. These had to be destroyed.

Two men armed with AK rifles and hand-grenades carried out a series of crimes in the Marange Tribal Trust Land last Wednesday and robbed people of more than $600 worth of goods and cash.

Three crews of Masvaeaka Bus Company, spending the night at Mwaoro Kraal, Marange, were robbed of $814 by two armed men on Saturday night.

While lining crew members up before the theft, the men fired a few shots into the air.

ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION ON AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT

Paris LE POINT in French 20 Oct 80 pp 95-98

/Passages between slantlines originally published boldface/

[Text] The predicament of the poor countries in the Third World is no longer supportable. It is a disgrace to mankind and a threat to the security of the world. This is the conclusion arrived at by the personalities invited by LE POINT to the discussion, the main points of which are found below. Before discussing, passionately at times, the possible solutions. And especially the "trialog"--the idea proposed in May 1979 by Valery Giscard d'Estaing of a vast triangular cooperative effort between Europe, Africa, and the Arab countries secure in their new oil riches. Besides Alain Dauvergne, of LE POINT, the participants included: Chedly Ayari, 47, president of BADEA (Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa); Claude Cheysson, 60, European commissioner responsible for relations with developing countries; Henry Jean-Baptiste, 47, technical counselor to the Elysee on trialog affairs; Edem Kodjo, 42, secretary general of the OAU.

Edem Kodjo: At the summit of chiefs of state and heads of government on development in Africa held last April in Lagos, I along with others had occasion to say that Africa is dying. And that it is urgent to develop a new conception of development to enable the African peoples and the peoples of the Third World to survive. According to my statistics, there are perhaps 10 countries in Africa, out of 50, that are capable of staying afloat and surviving the crisis. Growth of the economy of several countries in Africa was barely above the rate of demographic growth. The World Bank has predicted for the years 1985-1990 a rate of growth of 1 percent, or even negative growth! This is where we are...

LE POINT: /How do you explain that? How do you explain that food production in Africa has decreased by 1.2 percent per year from 1970 to 1978?/

E.K.: It is even predicted, in fact, that if present trends continue, Africa will only be able to cover 60 percent of its own food needs by the year 2000. Why? There are first of all specific reasons: Africa is both the continent of perilous floods and pernicious droughts. But above all, up to now, Africa has had a policy of development externally oriented, toward exportation. It has not looked in its own back yard to define a policy of development aimed at satisfying the needs of the vast African masses. This is why the emphasis has been placed on the cultivation of industry, rather than on agricultural cultivation, which however is the key to food self-sufficiency. And, too, perhaps we have not always practiced a price policy that could encourage the peasants to produce. What is interesting is precisely that since the Lagos conference we have "reversed course." And decided to embark on a development of Africa that is oriented to Africa itself.

Claude Cheysson: One cannot speak of food problems without speaking of all the problems. Everything is linked. So let us go beyond the food system. We have lived in a system in which prices were fixed by, let us say, market forces. These forces created a largely artificial system, since in certain cases the price is based on a very small portion of production. Look at sugar: only 18 percent of world production is on the international market. And there are six groups up there who control the international trade in sugar, and it is they who determine what is called the market price. So it is no surprise that sugar prices can go up 300 percent in 6 months. And that it can decline by two-thirds of its value a year later...This system, which we, the industrial powers, would never have tolerated within our own society, we have found and continue to find perfectly normal on a global scale. And all at once, when it turns against us, there is total indignation: how do these oil producers get off playing the same game?...But it is really our own game: with sugar, with wheat, and, in the other direction, where we are the buyers, with cacao, coffee. The Nineteenth Century was the century of the industrial revolution. The Twentieth is the century in which in each of our countries we are searching for security, stability, the possibility of anticipating the continued increase in income and of assuring at least subsistence to the economically weakest. And so, this is the same evolution, toward the possibility of anticipating and guaranteeing, that we must strive for, on the international plane, for the benefit of the weakest societies. This is true for oil, and the OPEC countries must agree to discuss it with us. It is also true for wheat, for sugar, etc.

LE POINT: /Through the Lome agreements*, the countries of the Community have made major efforts at economic cooperation in the Third World, and especially in Africa. Also, in part, through Arab-European co-financing--which shows that the trialog is already operating to a certain degree. But up to now the Arab countries seem to be timid about gambling on Africa despite the abundance of their petro-dollars./

Ghedly Ayari: From the beginning of 1974 to the end of 1978, Arab transfers to Africa--and I am excluding the Arabic African countries--totaled $4 billion. This effort represents 0.7 percent of the gross national product (GNP) of the countries providing this assistance--there are five or six, the Gulf nations, who do this systematically. But if one takes into account all of the massive Arab aid to the Third World, one comes to 2 or 3 percent of GNP. And for countries like Qatar or Kuwait, we are bordering on 10 percent.

LE POINT: /Do the industrialized countries of Europe pour out much less?/

*Concluded in 1975 and renewed in 1979, these accords of economic cooperation link the European community to 60 countries in Africa, the Caribbean, and the Pacific.

E.K.: On an average 0.36 percent of their GNP. So, the Arab world can say in effect: "We are doing more than anyone, we are doing the most [that is possible]." But I myself answer that it is not enough. The experts consider that $4 billion per year for 20 years is needed to solve the problem of the poorest countries. That seems completely feasible to me; it is a question of organization, and this is where the trialog should come in. It is true that we have gone ahead with co-financing on several projects, of which the most spectacular is the OMVS (Senegal River Development Organization) with the construction of dams with the countries of the Sahel. But now we must have a rational organization to place this triangular system in a coherent framework.

C.A.: I myself don't know just what this trialog is.

Henry Jean-Baptiste: But of course you do!

C.A.: No. For me, we are talking about a tupe of North-South cooperation that includes--and it matters little what we call it--particular partners: a European group, African countries, and Arab countries. But in order to do what? Is it a question for the Europeans of finding larger markets on a continent which has needs--in this instance, Africa, and, in an incidental way, the Arab countries? Well, then it is a commercial affair. Or is it a question of a specific regional grouping between an Arab world, an African world, and a Western world? Or could it be a question of creating an axis of equilibrium, of strategic, economic, and political stability? Or, finally, is it a question of a unique enterprise, whose principal motive is the development of all the partners who have joined in? These are different schemes, even incompatible. In reality, the type of North-South cooperation about which we are talking will only sell, will only be acceptable, if it satisfies five fundamental conditions. Its first objective must be the total, integral, development of all the partners. The second is that this cooperation should be able to rely on responsible partners. Third element: the economic, political, social, and cultural diversity of the partners in question must be respected. In the fourth place, it must be open to the outside world, not closed in on itself. Finally, it must be compatible with global action aimed at renovating the international economic order.

H.J.-B.: Everyone will agree on the conditions and on the necessity of a new approach. But we must avoid caricatures. That, for example, which consists in presenting the proposals of the trialog too narrowly, by saying that it is Arab money, not European technology or African needs. This is unjust. And it is false. There is a bit too much the tendency to forget that many African countries themselves produce oil. Quite simply, the compexity of current problems calls for approaches at several levels--global, regional, and inter-regional. I note that the inter-regional level is the one where we have seen spring up, in recent years, the most truly productive innovations; I am thinking in particular of the Lome accords. And the African countries that signed these Lome accords did not feel they were betraying the cause of the Third World. To the contrary, several countries such as Zimbabwe, barely obtained independence before themselves subscribing to them.

E.K.: When we will be seated around a table to determine the content of the trialog--because Africa is not afraid to discuss--we will find the conditions of Chedly Ayari, because these are the elementary conditions of independence, without which nothing can be done. I do not see a single African state, a single state in the Arab world entering into an arrangement that would not assure its independence. Only, if we are all agreed on the conditions of independence, we must nevertheless recognize that today we are at an impasse. The North-South dialog is at an impasse, the last assembly of the UN just proved it again. We must break out of it.

C.C.: Two remarks. First, the North-South dialog will take place everywhere, or it will not take place at all. The North-South dialog is an orientation which should be found at the level of enterprises, at the level of communities, at the level of the international community. Next, I believe that we must not systematize until things are ripe for systematization. The Lome accords would not have been possible 5 years earlier: the English-speaking countries were not ready. So, the question that I pose myself is if we are today ripe for systematizing on a grand scale cooperation between the Arab countries, the African countries, and the European countries. Personally, I doubt it. All the same one must act. But out of compassion, not discussions, procedures, systems, mechanisms.

H.J.-B.: But who talked to you about procedures? On the contrary, we would like to make a few proposals, and study together the substance of new methods.

E.K.: It is I who am the representative of the people who are dying. And I will go anywhere to try to find solutions. If it is trialog, I am there to discuss it. If it is the North-South dialog, I am there to discuss it. If it is the Euro-African dialog, or the Arab-African dialog, I am there to discuss it. Because I am trying to find, in a concrete way, the ways and means to resolve the problem.

C.C.: There are two urgent needs. The first, food. We have spoken of this. The other, financing: we must get to the countries the money they need to buy the things they vitally need. The World Bank and the International Monetary Fund dispose of considerable sums, but the conditions set on their utilization are totally maladapted to the Third World. I believe that we should work more together on reform of these institutions. Secondly, one could surely go much further by way of projects jointly financed by Arab and European public assistance and by private financing. In particular, there are numerous development projects in the Third World that could have access to the Arab financial market thanks to a guarantee, a surety, from the European budgets. This could facilitate a resumption of investment that is absolutely necessary. For example, there are no more European mining investments at all--outside of uranium in Africa. Zero!

E.K.: What is the reason for that?

C.C.: It is because our enterprises do not have the fin ancial resources sufficient to make the very heavy investments that have a 20 or 30-year amortization. Especially since it is not obvious how stability or 20 or 30 years can be guaranteed.

LE POINT: /Political stability?/

C.C.: Yes. So there must be public guarantees.

H.J.-B.: Everyone agrees.

C.C.: I am delighted to hear you say so. This is interesting news.

H.J.-B.: Everyone here, in any case, will agree we should discuss it. The idea of guarantee funds seems to us to be one of the topics that could give the trialog concrete substance.

C.A.: Finding $4 billion doesn't worry me, that is within our reach. The problem, for me, is the whole vision of the year 2000 in Africa, described at the Lagos conference, which is a vision of African man, of the African city, of African development in all its dimensions. This indisputably requires the mobilization of much larger resources, and above all a concept of action. So, I am making a specific proposal: that, tomorrow, a conference bringing together Arabs, Africans, and Europeans be devoted to examining the new African development plan described at the Lagos summit. But, for heavens sake, if we do not want this business of North-South cooperation, under whatever formula, to fizzle out--and it could easily fizzle out--we must avoid saying: "You made $110 billion in fiscal year 1980. Where are these $110 billion, while there are continents dying of hunger?" The answers to that will be very simple. The Arab countries tell you today: "We are not responsible for anything at all. Neither for underdevelopment in Africa, nor for the drought in Africa, nor for the exploitation of Africa by generations of the Westerners. We have simply won the right to a more remunerative price for a rare product, which is thus necessarily expensive, and which remained undervalued for decades. Leave us in peace!"

H.J.-B.: I want to stay with your proposal--I believe it is essential--of calling a certain number of regions together to see how they should adjust their own policies of responsiveness, or development, or cooperation, in light of the requirements of this Lagos plan. There is a concrete and precise proposal!

E.K.: At bottom, I consider that we have made some small progress in our study today. Chedly Ayari has just made a proposal that seems fundamental to me.

C.C.: Yes, I myself am not fully convinced by the idea of having new conferences. The last North-South conference, in New York, was the two thousandsth!

E.K.: Mr Cheysson, it is a question of organization...

C.C.: You have need of billions of dollars--well, you will not get it at a conference.

E.K.: We are going through a strict test with the International Monetary Fund [sic]. For years, we have tried to reform the system, you were speaking of it just now. We filed out and you, Europeans, did not always support us in the reforms we proposed. How is it that you want to change the rules of conditionality today, if we do not organize ourselves?

LE POINT: /What is conditionality?/

C.C.: The [International] Monetary Fund was created quite awhile back, to work with the industrialized countries: at that time, only they were considered. Thus, by the rules of the Fund, in order to give out a loan, there was established a series of conditions that are adapted to the life of industrialized countries.

And this expression of condition was never modified, whereas now it would be desirable for the Fund to work with the Third World: it is simply absurd.

LE POINT: /And basically it is the United States that opposes the reform?/

C.C.: Yes.

E.K.: I would like to tell you that the director of the Fund, Mr de la Rosiere, is struggling all by himself, in the right direction.

C.C.: So here in fact is an area on which there should be systematic consultations between Arabs, Africans, and Europeans. So, let's do it. In the weeks ahead!

C.A.: For several years we have done excellent work in periodic meetings with the European bodies. We are also going to meet several weeks from now in Kuwait, and coordinate Arab-European activity on investments around the world, especially in Africa. But I should say that I sense the need, in the conditions that are currently running through the Arab world and the African world, of a major impetus, of a new Arab-African political wind at the summit, that will be productive, I am sure of it. On condition that Europe is ready to play the cooperation game entirely for development, in all its dimensions.

LE POINT: /Kurt Waldheim, secretary general of the UN, recently stated: "Beware of the despair in the Third World; it could lead to world chaos." Of what threat is he really speaking?/

C.C.: Let us not deceive ourselves. If the big problems of the present period, of changing the system, of changing the era--for we have arrived at a change of era and not a circumstantial crisis--if these big problems are not dealt with, well, we will reach a state of tensions the most obvious response to which will be war. This is true both in the political and the economic domain.

E.K.: The developed countries must not think that what threatens the world is only the disappearance of a part of Africa, of populations that are rent with hunger. The problem is global. Your own security, your own growth depend on the efforts that will be made to solve the problem of development. No problem today is really East-West. The problems are North-South, and it is only in this framework that solutions will be found. But that road will not be taken so long as cultural contempt is entertained and built into the system. So long as it is considered that Arab culture is of secondary importance, and that African culture is just for blacks.

H.J.-B.: We are living in a complex multipolar world, which requires several approaches. The approach that we are proposing, in the framework of a triangular cooperation founded on ancient traditions and on geographic proximity, is something that precisely makes possible this cultural opening which is fundamental. And which should henceforth be integrated into international relations.

C.A.: In "The World Challenge," page 245, Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber, speaking of the decline of the western world, writes this: /"Unless one chooses this path/ (of decline) /and lets oneself slide into it, it is necessary to invent a new cycle of development. This development must go with development of the Third World, it can only be accomplished with it. There will not be any other new frontiers in the world."/ I find that excellent. Basic.

For his part president El Hadj Omar Bongo offered stirring praise to his Mauritanian counterpart for the tremendous achievement in reconstructing national unity of his country as well as for his tireless efforts for the peace, prosperity and happiness of his people.

The friendly relations between the two chiefs of state as well as the brotherly ties between the Mauritanian and Gabonese peoples resulting from thieir membership in the Organization of African Unity (OAU), in the Nonaligned Movement, and in the Conference of Islamic States brought a particularly warm and enthusiastic spontaneous welcome to the chief of state and of the government of the Islamic Republic of Mauritania and his accompanying delegation.

During their conversations the two chiefs of state had important exchanges of view on relations between their two countries, on African questions, and on international questions in an atmosphere of brotherly understanding.

On the bilateral level questions of cooperation between the two countries in the various areas were examined; a common determination to strengthen, widen, and diversify that cooperation in the economic, social, touristic, cultural, and scientific domains was affirmed.

Accordingly, experts of the two countries met in Libreville from 17 October 80 to set forth the juridical framework of that cooperation.

The two chiefs of state signed:

--A general cooperation agreement

--An agreement providing for the creation of a Mixed Commission

The two ministers of Foreign Affairs signed the rules of procedure for the Mixed Commission as well as the minutes of the meetings of the experts.

Views were exchanged at the ministerial level on other agreements--in the fields of fisheries, air traffic, merchant marine, on commercial, cultural, technical and scientific exchanges, as well as on a convention on residence and circulation of persons and goods; they will be examined in detail at the first session of the Mixed Commission.

On the African level the two parties examined the situation in Chad and reaffirmed their eager hope to see peace and harmony reign dispute at the United Nations level.

The two parties reiterated their common desire to seek to strengthen Arab-African cooperation.

Reviewing the international situation, the two parties expressed their anxious concern over the aggravation of tension in the world, particularly in the Middle East, in the Maghreb, in Central Africa and in Southern Africa. They expressed the hope of seeing peace reestablished in these different parts of the world.

Considering the situation in the Middle East, which remains a constant danger to world peace and security, the two delegations emphasized the need for a global, just and lasting solution, characterized by:

--evacuation by Israel of all occupied Arab territories including the holy city of Jerusalem.

--recognition of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people represented by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

--establishment of an independent Palestinian state.

Moreover, the two parties, while recognizing that the racist and minority regime of South Africa is now undergoing its last convulsions, reaffirmed their determination to seek the elimination of racial discrimination and of apartheid in that region, and the achievement of independence and the institution of a democratic regime in Nambibia.

Also, the two parties expressed satisfaction over the accession to independence of Zimbabwe and its admission as member of the United Nations Organization.

The two parties also attentively examined one of the most worrisome problems of our time, one which calls for an urgent solution, namely the constant deterioration of the terms of trade between developed and developing countries.

They reaffirmed the need for the construction of a new international economic order based on justice, equality and equity, permitting developing countries to have access to new technologies, to conquests of contemporary science, thus encouraging a balanced evolution and rapid progress for all regions of the world.

Lieutenant Colonel Mohamed Khouna Ould Haidall, on concluding his official visit wished to thank president El Hadj Omar Bongo, the people, the government and the Gabonese Democratic Party for the brotherly and warm welcome accorded him and the delegation accompanying him throughout his stay in Gabon.

His excellency Lieutenant Colonel Mohamed Khouna Ould Haidella extended a brotherly invitation to his excellency El Hadj Omar Bongo, president of the Gabonese Republic, which he accepted, to make an official visit to the Islamic Republic of Mauritania. The date of this invitation will be decided in common accord through diplomatic channels.

ZIMBABWE TO POST HIGH COMMISSION IN ZAMBIA

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] ZIMBABWE'S High Commission staff for Zambia would be posted soon, a Ministry of Foreign Affairs spokesman said in Salisbury yesterday.

Although the spokesman would not say who would be the High Commissioner, other Government sources indicated he was likely to be a leading educationist.

Late last month it was reported that Mr M. Mapurunga had been asked to take charge of affairs in Lusaka, pending the appointment of a head of mission.

Yesterday the Ministry spokesman, commenting on moves to help thousands of Zimbabwean residents in Zambia obtain travel documents, said: "A mission is going to Zambia in a week or two. Some of the staff would deal specifically with the problem of issuing passports and other travel documents."

The spokesman said the Ministry had been conscious of difficulties faced by Zimbabweans in Zambia and abroad after independence when the British Government stopped issuing passports to them.

As a result those affected had to apply to Salisbury for the passports, causing a huge backlog.

Saying the Government was "on the point of sending staff" to deal with the situation, the spokesman thanked the British for having been "helpful" in trying to redress the problems experienced by Zimbabwean citizens abroad.

DISGUISED

Many Zimbabweans resident in Zambia are believed to have returned here disguised as refugees.

All they had to do was register with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees in Lusaka. They travelled free, obtained their Zimbabwean passports in Salisbury, and returned to their jobs or villages in Zambia.

Others have previously sought one-way travel documents from the British High Commission there, for the same purpose.

Among the large numbers of Zimbabweans in Zambia are farmers who emigrated from Southern Rhodesia in the late 40s or early 50s.

They are returning to try to acquire farms or other properties before prices rise.

The Ministry spokesman also said staff for other foreign missions would leave soon.

SOUTH AFRICA DENIES CAUSING DELAYS OF ZIMBABWE IMPORTS, EXPORTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] JOHANNESBURG.

A CLAIM that lack of co-operation between port, terminal and rail authorities in South Africa was causing headaches for Zimbabwe's economy and that both Zimbabwean imports and exports were suffering, was denied by a spokesman for the South African Railways in Johannesburg yesterday.

The spokesman, Mr Japie Radyn, director, operating control of the SAR, was commenting on a report in Business Herald in Salisbury yesterday.

Business Herald said that more than 55 000 tonnes of goods were stuck in the system. It quoted one Zimbabwean company which claimed this week that one shipment had been left in rail sidings for 20 days and had been totally ignored by South African Railways staff, reports Iana.

Importers in particular were suffering, Business Herald said, since they could not quote arrival dates of goods and shortages had and continued to occur.

"This allegation is totally unfounded."

"We had to curtail sending goods to Zimbabwe because of a backlog developing there. The SAR has more traffic on hand waiting to be dispatched than what is being cleared at the border."

Mr Radyn said only 13 000 tonnes a day was cleared in Zimbabwe while the SAR had at times had trucks loaded and ready for dispatch totalling seven times that tonnage.

He said at present the SAR only loaded National Railways of Zimbabwe trucks on SAR lines with goods for the north. This regulation has been in operation since last week and has been extended at NRZ's request.

ZAMBIA-ZIMBABWE TALKS ON SHARING RAILWAY ASSETS TO START

[Article by Tim Chigodo]

[Text] ZAMBIA and Zimbabwe are to start serious negotiations on the sharing of assets from the defunct Rhodesia Railways unitary system disbanded in 1967, a spokesman for Zambia Railways said this week.

The talks are aimed at resolving the long-standing assets dispute between the two countries which jointly operated the line.

The system was dissolved in 1964 when Zambia established her own network after independence.

Commenting on the move, Zimbabwe's secretary of Transport and Power, Mr Peter Lamport-Stokes said: "It is true that matters concerning the Rhodesia Railways unitary system require discussions between the Zambian and the Zimbabwean Governments."

He added: "The Zimbabwe Government is naturally willing to play its part in these discussions. The issues concerned involved the two governments and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on any of the matters in detail."

The dissolution of the railway system was also influenced by the Unilateral Declaration of Independence by the Rhodesian Government in 1965.

Up to 1972, the two governments had still not satisfactorily resolved the distribution of assets and liabilities of the old unitary system.

All assets purchased and all liabilities incurred before July 1, 1967, the date of the dissolution, remained in the name of the unitary system.

At that time Zambia demanded to have an equal share and revalue the assets by 30 percent. About 70 percent of the assets were held in Rhodesia.

When the border between the two countries was closed in 1973, the system jointly - owned undertaking set up at the end of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland incurred a loss of $14 million because of Zambia's restriction on trade with Rhodesia.

Then UDI made it impossible for the two sides to meet and discuss the sharing of assets amicably because Zambia did not recognise the Rhodesian regime.

According to a Zambia Railways spokesman, when the system broke up, it had a total of 12 000 wagons out of which Zambia got only 3 000.

Other assets include 403 steam locomotives of which Zambia received 159, including 72 passenger coaches.

The assets included buildings and repair workshops, some farms and land.

In 1974, the dissolution committee encountered several problems with the Rhodesian Government when they held talks aimed at settling the issue.

This resulted in Zambia having to import rolling stock to replace those stranded in Rhodesia.

According to the spokesman, little was recovered by Zambia because of the political situation which prevailed.

OPERATION OF BEIRA-UMTALI PIPELINE PLANNED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by David Linsell]

[Text] THE Beira-Umtali oil pipeline could be back in working order and carrying refined products early next year, if no faults or leaks are found along the 188 km, stretch from the Mozambique port.

Pressure tests along this section begin next week and should be completed by the end of December at the latest, Mr Kas Scheepers, managing director of Lonrho Zimbabwe, which controls the pipeline, said this week.

"We don't think the tests will take long, bearing in mind the nature of the terrain.

"If the results of these pressure tests prove positive, in other words no leaks are discovered, then we could be in a position to start pumping early in the new year", Mr Scheepers said.

"I'm optimistic and there is no reason not to be."

If his optimism proves to be well-founded the next step will be to discharge the estimated 14 000 tonnes of light Iranian crude oil which have lain untouched since sanctions were imposed in 1966 and the refinery was shut down.

Once that has been completed the pipeline will have to be cleaned to avoid contaminating refined products such as petroleum and diesel which are to be pumped to Feruka.

"Some extra plumbing and piping will have to be done at Feruka to allow direct access to the storage tanks," said Mr Scheepers.

Asked how much petroleum and diesel the pipeline would carry he added: "What we carry and how much we carry is a matter for the petrol companies and the Government to decide. Our only function is that of common carriers."

Mr Bob Yeoman, general manager of CAPREF, the company which owns the refinery, said: "If the pipeline were to be brought back into operation this should present no major physical problem as far as the refinery is concerned."

ZIMBABWE TRADE WITH S. AFRICA--Existing trade relations between Zimbabwe and South Africa were not affected by the severing of diplomatic ties between the two countries, a spokesman for the Ministry of Commerce and Industry said yesterday. He was referring to a 1964 trade agreement between Zimbabwe and South Africa giving preferential treatment of goods from this country imported to South Africa. A notice in yesterday's Government Gazette reminded exporters of the need to obtain preferential duty certificates and outlined the procedure for obtaining them. "It would not be in our interest to sever trade links with South Africa," the spokesman said. "Zimbabwe is dependent upon trade with that country." NAMIBIA TALKS OFFER--The offer by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, of Zimbabwe as a venue for all-party talks on Namibia's independence still stood, Mr Simon Muzenda, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, said yesterday. But he said the talks would have to be confined to the modalities of transferring power to the people of Namibia within the framework of United Nations resolution 435. During an interview, Mr Muzenda said Zimbabwe had not been involved in any behind-the-scenes moves. "We have played no part other than supporting the Namibian struggle within the framework of United Nations resolution 435 of 1978 and, as one of the frontline states, we support Namibia," he said. Mr Muzenda said Zimbabwe's view was that a successful solution to the problem was one that enabled Namibians to express their wishes freely and democratically through United Nations-supervised elections. Asked if he thought there was now a strong possibility of a successful solution, he said: "One cannot always read correctly the signs of time, but from our own side we have not yet seen the proper signs of movement to a proper, successful solution." ZIMBABWE WANTS OAU TRADE UNIONISTS--Zimbabwe wants to host the 1984 Organisation of African Trade Union Unity, publicity secretary of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, Mr Elphegio Soko said this week. Mr Soko who has just returned from Mogadishu, Somalia, where he attended the third congress of DATUU, said they made the proposal following Zimbabwe's admission into the organisation as a member. "The idea was welcomed by all countries which were represented at the congress," he said. DATUU is a wing of the Organisation of African Unity which meets every four years to coordinate the activities of the African trade unions in Africa. The union also maintains friendly relations with other trade unions in the world. According to Mr Soko, DATUU declared its unflinching support for the black workers in South Africa, Namibia and Palestine. Mr Soko was accompanied by Mr Webster Gwekerere, organising secretary of ZCTU. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 3]

LIBYAN PRISONER DISCUSSES CHADIAN MISSION

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 31 Oct-2 Nov 80 p 16

[Text] Nd'jamena--One of the five Libyan soldiers taken prisoner last week in Nd'jamena by Hissein Habre's Armed Forces of the North (FAN) said Tuesday that he had arrived in Chad 2 weeks ago in the company of 500 other Libyan soldiers "to raze Nd'jamena."

Questioned during the presentation of these prisoners to the press, this soldier, who is a warrant officer in the Libyan army, said that he had first stayed in Dougia, a village located 80 km from Nd'jamena on the banks of the Chari River, not far from Lake Chad. This village serves as the rear base for the troops of Goukouni Ouedde, president of the Transitional National Union Government (GUNT.)

According to this warrant officer, who is a member of the same tribe as the Libyan leader, Colonel Qadhdhafi, this detachment was "sent to Chad to raze the city of Nd'jamena."

He also stated that his group had been transferred by river to Farcha, the location just outside Nd'jamena of the command post of the government's coalition forces.

On this occasion, FAN authorities presented many documents taken from the Libyan soldiers during the attack last week north of the Chadian capital. Among these documents notably were Libyan military ID cards and mission orders.

Idriss Miskine, vice president of the FAN command council, said during this presentation that in Faya Largeau, a city located in Borkou Ennedy Tibesti (BET), 1,000 km north of Nd'jamena, Hissein Habre's forces had opposed the Libyan soldiers at the time of the 20 October attack. Thirty of them were killed and six others taken prisoner, he said.

MOVES TO SHED DEPENDENCE ON FRANCE DISCUSSED

Kuwait AL-QABAS in Arabic 21 Sep 80 p 3

[Article: "President of Comoro Islands in Kuwait Today"]

[Text] President of the Federal and Islamic Republic of the Comoros Ahmad 'Abdallah 'Abd al-Rahman is arriving in the country today on a 3-day official visit. The amir and senior state officials will be at the head of those on hand to greet him.

Official talks between the two countries are expected to deal with ways of strengthening bilateral relations and increasing Kuwait's participation in the financing of development projects for the Comoro Islands which gained independence on 6 July 1975. There will also be a discussion of current problems, in the forefront of which are the Middle East crisis, Arab-African relations and Arab-Islamic relations.

The Comoro Islands Republic consists of four small volcanic islands at the entrance of the Mozambique Channel, equidistant between Madagascar and the eastern coast of Africa.

The name Comoro [moon] Islands was given by Arab explorers, as they discovered these islands at night when the moon was full. The explorers came from the Persian Gulf in small boats.

The islands comprise 2,166 square kilomaters. It is a country which has beautiful shores, and its population is 400,000. All of them are Muslim and are made up of a blend of Arab and African peoples.

Murini is the capital, with a population of 40,000. It is located on Najazdaja Island, the largest island of the republic. The largest volcano in the world is on this island. It is known as "Kartala." There is a legend which says that the throne of the Kingdom of Bilqis, the Queen of Sheba, was hidden in the mouth of this volcano by order of the prophet Sulayman Ibn Daud.

As a result of fierce disputes among the sultans of the islands, the French succeeded in signing protection agreements with these sultans in 1886. In 1912, the French were able to annex these islands to France with the other colonies.

Fight for Independence

After decades of French colonialism, these islands began to witness obvious popular unrest. In July 1973, agreement was reached with the French government defining steps toward obtaining independence within 5 years. However, after 1 year, there was an outcry of public opinion, demanding the independence of the islands. France was forced to hold a popular referendum. After the results proved to be in favor of the popular demands, France tried to separate the island of Muri from the other islands. The parliament of the Comoro Islands was obliged to declare complete independence unilaterally on 6 July 1975.

Since independence the island has witnessed two coups. The first was carried out by 'Ali Salih whose orientation, as described by world news agencies, was rightist and dictatorial. He swept away President Ahmad Abdallah who went into exile in France. This took place in August 1975. However, after nearly 3 years, the president in exile Ahmad Abdallah 'Abd al-Rahman was able to topple the regime of 'Ali Salih and he returned to assume responsibility in running the government in his country.

Arabic

Arabic is the official language in the country along with French. The local language is close to Swahili, and Arabic words make up 40 percent of its vocabulary.

Since independence the Comoro Islands have been trying to radically cure the backwardness which has afflicted its Arab and Islamic culture during the last 2 centuries. It is working to strengthen and concentrate on Arab culture, and to consolidate relations with Arab countries, in the forefront of which is Kuwait.

Economic Conditions

Average per capita income is $160 per year, a very low average. The problem of the republic is the limited agricultural land which does not supply the needs of the country. Official organs are trying to obtain aid and loans from world organizations, nations sympathetic to the Republic, and Arab countries in order to achieve the following:

1. Develop the production and diversification of foodstuffs in order to become self-sufficient.

2. Improve products for export and organize their marketing abroad.

3. Develop and improve the level of education and technical training and improve the standard of health services in the country.

The Comoro Islands Republic feels the urgent need to complete services projects, especially roads, ports, airports and radio communications. Several Arab and international finance institutions are participating in offering aid and loans. JOINT COMMUNIQUE WITH ARGENTINA PUBLISHED

Libreville L'UNION in French 24 Oct 80 p 4

[Text] His Excellency Raul Cura, under secretary of state for international economic relations to the Minister of Foreign Affairs and Worship of the Republic of Argentina, paid a working visit to Gabon from 21 to 23 October 1980 at the head of a large delegation made up principally of:
Minister Mario Quadri Castillo, deputy director general of science and technology.
His Excellency Norberto Auge, Argentine ambassador to Gabon;
Ramon Villagra Delgado, embassy secretary;
Eduardo Blanche, embassy secretary;
Miguel Angel Almada, national director of bilateral trade negotiations; and Simon Vullo, chief of department for international agreements and organizations of the Central Bank.

This visit follows the various Argentine technical missions which have gone to Gabon since the official visit which the chief of state made to Argentina in October 1977.

During its visit, the Argentine delegation had important talks with a counterpart Gabonese delegation headed by Her Excellency Honorine Dossou-Naki, secretary of state to the minister of foreign affairs and cooperation.

This delegation was made up as follows;
Simon Edou-Eyene, secretary general of the ministry of foreign affairs and cooperation;
Fabien Owono-Essono, economic and financial counselor to the presidency of the republic;
Samuel Nze-Obame, special counselor of the president of the republic, responsible for American affairs;
Paul Biyoghe-Mba, deputy secretary general to the presidency of the republic, responsible for commercial relations and participations;
Maurice Bouma, director of higher education (MESRSEPN [Ministry of Higher Education, Scientific Research and Environmental Protection]);
His Excellency Jean-Bernard Eyi Nkoumou, Gabonese ambassador to Argentina;
Jean-Baptiste Moussavou, director of scientific and technical cooperation (MESRSEPN);
Jean-Paul Leyimangoye, national director of the Central Bank;
Guy-Fidele Mbadibouckat, director of livestock raising (Ministry of Agriculture); Henry Walker Deemin, counselor to the president of the Chamber of Commerce; and several high officials.

His Excellency Raul Cura was received in an audience by His Excellency El Hadj Omar Bongo and talked with several Gabonese officials.

At the beginning of the working session, the head of the Gabonese delegation, after having recalled that Gabon was not the private hunting preserve of anyone and that it continued to be open to everyone, provided its free will is respected, emphasized that the present visit fell within the framework of cooperation which is called upon to be intensified by diversification in all sectors in which Argentina's experience can serve as an example to Gabon.

In his reply, the head of the Argentine delegation paid tribute to President Bongo, the first African chief of state to have visited Argentina, for the spectacular progress realized by Gabon since his last visit in 1978 to this country under Bongo's wise and enlightened leadership.

During their working session, the two delegations examined questions of cooperation between the two countries, namely:
Review of the trade agreement--scientific and technical agreement--the balance sheet of commercial exchanges--Argentine participation in various projects--teaching personnel assistance--training of cadres--scholarships and trainee programs.

Examination of these questions gave the two delegations an opportunity to congratulate one another for the positive balance sheet of the application of the trade agreement signed in Buenos Aires in 1977.

The delegations are determined to continue their efforts to find ways of promoting the intensification and diversification of cooperation in all sectors of mutual interest.

At the end of the visit, the two heads of delegation adopted and signed a scientific and technical cooperation agreement and placed their signatures on the minutes approving the work done.

Talks between the two delegations took place in an ambience of understanding, frankness and mutual cordiality.

His Excellency Raul Cura, in the name of the delegation accompanying him, asked Her Excellency Honorine Dossou-Naki to be kind enough to convey to the Gabonese authorities, in particular to His Excellency El Hadj Omar Bongo. president of the republic, his respectful expression of appreciation for the excellent arrangements made for this working session and for the warm welcome accorded the Argentine delegation during its stay in Gabon.

The two delegations agreed to hold the first meeting of the joint commission in Buenos Aires (Argentina) during the first 6 months of 1981 at a date to be set by mutual agreement.

Argentine Official Interviewed

Libreville L'UNION in French 25-26 Oct 80 p 4

[Interview with Raul Cura, Argentine under secretary of state for economic and international relations, by Obame Emane, in Libreville, date not given]

[Text] Raul Cura, under secretary of state, opened his conference with the national press by emphasizing the importance Argentina places on relations with the developing countries of Africa. In this regard, Argentina is aware of the preponderant role Gabon can play in the rapprochement of Argentina and Africa. In fact, in 1977 Omar Bongo was one of the first African chiefs of state to pay an official visit to Buenos Aires. That visit permitted the defining of the framework of cooperation which from then on was to unite the two countries in the sectors of science, technology, commerce and culture.

Col Raul Cura also said that Argentina has an intermediate technology in the sectors of agriculture, livestock raising and medium-size industries which it can make available to Gabon. Thus Gabon will be able equip itself with credits granted by Buenos Aires.

Raul Cura also said that the project involving construction by Argentina of cold storage rooms for the CODEV [expansion unknown] warehouse was taken up during the talk he had with President Omar Bongo. He stated that the Argentine side is eager to complete this project and that the chief of state wants this kind of equipment to be installed in Libreville and the interior of the country. Raul Cura went on to say that Argentina, therefore, intends to contribute to the development of Gabon through the agricultural sector. In this regard, Argentine aid can be individual or integrated, through credits granted by certain international organizations such as the UNDP, FAO, FAD, etc.

Speaking of commercial exchanges between the two countries, Under Secretary of State Raul Cura recalled that his country has been buying Gabonese oil since 1978. Because of certain economic conditions, these imports have decreased since last year. In this connection, we note that purchases of Gabonese crude by Buenos Aires in 1978 totaled $100 million. However, the under secretary of state emphasized, such purchases will go back to their previous level and might even be increased.

Argentina also buys our timber and exports foodstuffs, including 10 percent of the rice consumed in Gabon. Other products imported by Gabon to meet its needs could be found in Argentina. That is the case with wheat flour and dried fish. In this regard and with emphasis on the complementariness of the Gabonese and Argentine economies, Raul Cura said that his country hopes moreover to buy Gabonese raw materials and stressed the many sectors of cooperation existing between the two countries, particularly cement, cellulose, fishing and port construction.

In reply to a question about changes which will soon take place at the leadership level of his country between Generals Videla and Viola, Raul Cura said that these changes dictated by the military junta in power in Buenos Aires will not have any harmful impact on Argentin's domestic and foreign policies.

LOW TURNOUT FOR ELECTIONS REPORTED

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 p 2334, 2335

[Text] Although the turn out was very low — estimated at about 30 per cent — the first round of the legislative elections in Ivory Coast has already indicated that the next National Assembly will be much changed in content.

It is thought that about two-thirds of the deputies elected to the National Assembly will be newcomers.

Only 14 sitting deputies were re-elected outright. 27 were beaten and 39 have to go through a second round of voting on November 23.

For the first time voters were offered a free choice of candidates within the single party system. In the event there were 650 candidates for 147 seats (the size of the Assembly had been increased from 120 to 147 seats).

Only six ministers stood for re-election — many others not being prepared to risk a likely defeat. The Minister of Mines, M. Paul Gui Dibo, was returned, as was the President of the National Assembly, M. Philippe Yace, representing Jacqueville. M. Henri Konan Bedie, who gave up his position at the World Bank, was also elected, marking his return to active politics. Other ministers returned include M. Kouadio M'Bahia Ble (Defence) and M. Ibrahima Kone (Tourism).

Early reports suggest that voting went off fairly smoothly, though in the Abidjan suburb of Koumassi, about 4,000 foreign voters, mainly from Upper Volta, Mali and Niger, were unable to vote because the authorities had not issued them with the necessary ballot papers.

A correspondent from Abidjan adds: 74 candidates were elected deputies of the Ivory Coast National Assembly when final returns came in yesterday; 73 more seats will be contested on Sunday, November 23 as the candidates did not secure the required majority. Of the 74 elected candidates only 14 are former deputies. Three present Government ministers were elected and three of their ministerial colleagues will go through the second rounds of the elections. Among those elected were also five former Government ministers including former Minister of Finance Konan Bedie who had the highest number of votes, over 15,000 in an election with very poor voting returns. Only one out of about 20 women, some former deputies, was elected. Many of the women were defeated and few will enter for second rounds of elections. Former Secretary General of ruling Ivorian Democratic Party and President of National Assembly, Phillipe Yace, won the elections.

Out of three million registered voters between 20 and 30 per cent voted in many areas. For example in one of Abidjan's most populous constituencies about 45,000 votes were registered and a little over 9,000 actually cast their votes. In a constituency with very poor returns a candidate secured only four votes.

These poor returns were due to two main reasons, all rooted in administrative incompetence and plain confusion. Before the elections, special programmes were carried by Ivorian television on conduct of elections which clearly made the following two points.

First, voters need only to present their registered voting cards to cast their ballots and that no identity card was needed. Second, if you misplaced your voting card go to the polling station with your identity card and with it your name will be checked on the voters lists and if there you will be allowed to cast your ballots. What actually happened was the reverse. Several thousand voters were turned away when they showed up at polling stations with their voting cards because they did not carry also their identity cards. Those who turned up with only their identity cards because they misplaced their voting cards were also sent away and many never came back again. Worse still many with both documents did nothing to publicize or popularize elections, and educate the masses on the mechanics of elections. Many voters went from one polling station to another because they did not know at which polling station to cast their votes. Many got tired wandering around under blazing tropical heat that they returned without voting. A rather sad postscript to the election concerns the women's liberation movement.

In a western constituency, the father of one of the leading Ivorian female deputies entered the election against his daughter, a former deputy. Reason: it was outrageous for a woman, even his daughter, to represent his constituency in the National Assembly; the proper place for women is their home and kitchen. Several deputations failed to persuade him to step down. He contested the elections and defeated his daughter, which dealt a crushing blow to women's liberation in this country. About 10 women were deputies all nominated by the Ivorian President. But in the present elections they would be lucky to get five seats.

BOOK ON HOUPHOUET'S AFRICAN POLICY REVIEWED

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 pp 2309, 2311, 2312

[Text] La Politique Africaine d'Houphouet-Boigny
by Jacques Baulin (Editions Eurafor-Press, 12 rue de Miromesnil, Paris, no price given)

THE CHANCES are that the importance of M. Baulin's book will only be appreciated by the fairly limited circle of afficionados of Ivorian and West African diplomacy. Certainly, President Houphouet-Boigny is very pleased that a former adviser of his during the crucial years (1963-1970) of Ivorian diplomatic activism should set about revealing rather unflatteringly the story of this period. The sale of the book is not encouraged in Abidjan and when I was last there one of the talking points among senior cadres in Ivorian foreign policy circles was whether anyone had the book; and if they did they were asked to pass it on but make sure not to mention the fact to anyone else.

M. Baulin's main thesis is that almost all of President Houphouet-Boigny's objectives in his African policies failed in the long run. "President Houphouet-Boigny's prestige" he writes, "reached its zenith in early 1966 with the elimination of Osagyefo from the Ghanaian scene and the coup in Nigeria which presaged, it seemed to him, the disintegration of the Nigerian giant."

Four years later, as M. Baulin reminds us vividly, Houphouet-Boigny was diplomatically isolated. Osagyefo had indeed fallen, but his great ally and Houphouet-Boigny's other anathema, Sékou Touré, was still very much in power, sustained by an atmosphere of oppressive but permanent insecurity for which the Ivorian leader must accept a good deal of the responsibility. The civil war in Nigeria was over and the giant was still united. Perhaps the most important section of the book concerns the implicit allegation of the author that the Ivorian lead played an even more important role than had been thought in prolonging the Biafran secession in the ostensible cause of humanitarianism. By 1970, The Conseil de l'Entente, Houphouet-Boigny's answer to other attempts to establish some form of unity in the Francophone states and also coalisce opposition to Nigeria, existed only in form. Upper Volta had not followed Ivory Coast in recognising Biafra, nor had Hamani Diori, Niger, who had his Hausa population to consider, and the changing regimes in Dahomey thought the idea of supporting Biafra was preposterous, to say the least. De Gaulle was no longer in office, and Pompidou's interest and devotion to Africa would have rapidly declined had it not been for the influence of the ubiquitous Jacques Foccart and his network.

M. Baulin defends the publication of his thesis (for which he was awarded his doctorate in Paris) because he feels that there has been a "deplorable tendency to rewrite history in Ivory Coast." The story he tells opens up a proverbial can of worms. But the interpretations and impression he gives of Houphouet-Boigny's African policy are of great significance.

The Ivorian President has always been and still is a nationalist in the strictest sense of the word. M. Baulin makes the important observation that the very existence of a unified Nigeria preyed on Houphouet-Boigny's mind because it gave the lie to his own antipathy to federations in Africa which limited membership to African countries, as did the more nebulous African unity proposed by Nkrumah and Sékou Touré — in the defeat of which he played an important role. He wanted to live down the reputation of being the "balkaniser" of the AOF. It was an intensely economic view of the leader of the economic élite of the wealthiest of the French West African colonies.

He was and still is avowedly anti-communist. This explains his antagonism to Nkrumah and Sékou Touré. In both cases, especially that of Nkrumah, there were other issues, such as the Ghanaian support of Sanwi separatism, the protection of Djibo Bakary's Sawaba, especially when Sawaba claimed responsibility for the attempt in 1965 on the life of Hamani Diori. There was the OAU and then Nkrumah's involvement in the Congo Leopoldville conflict.

This nationalism, and anti-communism, prompts M. Baulin to the third, and crucially important observation: that Houphouet-Boigny's relations with France, which he did everything possible to maintain, were more a convergence of interests rather than a reflection of Houphouet-Boigny's "alienation". To use one example that is not so well known now, Ivory Coast, through its manipulation of the Francophone groupings, notably the nascent OCAM, was able to serve French interests as well as his own by helping to attract Congo Leopoldville, and in particular Tshombe, into the Francophone orbit. The move failed because Kasavubu eventually sacked Tshombe, and Mobutu, considered at the time as the Americans' man, came into power. Houphouet-Boigny's opposition to purely African federation or unity was counter-balanced in the late fifties, prior to independence, by his attempt to set up a federation including France and African countries.

The clichés about Houphouet-Boigny's apparently Francophile policies — the suggestions that he is and was subservient to France — are effectively rejected by M. Baulin. There is an autonomy to Ivory Coast's — that is Houphouet-Boigny's — foreign policy that is central to a proper appreciation of the diplomatic history of West Africa and of Ivory Coast. This interpretation has one rather painful consequence: it lays the responsibility for a number of policies squarely on President Houphouet-Boigny. M. Baulin believes that it was the Ivorian President who persuaded de Gaulle to intensify his material support for the Biafran secession in 1968. He believes that Foccart and Houphouet played a very important part in the resumption of French assistance, which was then flowing through Libreville, in 1969, just when it seemed that the war might be over. It was disagreement over this policy which eventually led M. Baulin to resign from the service of the Ivory Coast.

He also believes that M. Houphouet-Boigny's many flirtations with regional organisations were entirely functional. His interest in the Conseil de l'Entente, in OCAM, as we see, depended on the specific diplomatic conjuncture at a given time.

It is a story of the most remarkable diplomatic skill which finally tripped over its obsession with itself and the immediate. We receive a vivid and somewhat unpleasant picture of Maurice Yameogo, the Voltaic leader who at times appeared to be little more than President Houphouet-Boigny's diplomatic factotum. M. Baulin believes that the excessively close identity of Yameogo with Abidjan was to a certain extent responsible for his fall in 1966.

The seventies, with which M. Baulin does not concern himself, tell a different story. What is striking though is that a man whose personal diplomacy failed, quite resoundingly at times, should enjoy such power and veneration in his country in 1980. In a sense President Houphouet-Boigny retracted his diplomatic claws after 1970. His attempt to persuade African leaders to participate in a dialogue with South Africa was a last and very unsuccessful foray in continental diplomacy.

Since 1970 the President has reasserted himself domestically. In fact, the two principal occasions on which he had to face opposition concerned foreign policy: the attempt to introduce dual nationality in the Conseil de l'Etente, which was frustrated by the bitter opposition of Ivorian cadres, and the slight delay in the recognition of Biafra, where some voices were raised at the top levels of the party. He has become a wary, but for the moment reasonably enthusiastic member of CEAO, the Francophone regional grouping, it suits Ivorian economic interests for the moment, giving Ivorian industry a much-needed market which it does not have domestically. He also finally agreed to join ECOWAS the current state of relations with France are parlous within the Franco-Ivorian terms of reference. And while the convergence of interests has led to some inextricable links, not least Ivorian financial dependence, the stand over the world cocoa market prices has been viewed as a welcome blow from a moderate in Africa.

It is worth noting perhaps what President Houphouet-Boigny said in 1975 after he had been to sign the ECOWAS Treaty in Lagos, where he had been asked about fears that Nigeria would dominate the Community: "Nigeria has put us at ease in that, despite her size and population, she has not kept us in the dark about her development projects. The fact that Nigeria has been sincere to us about her wealth gives the basis for mutual trust which is the most essential ingredient any successful grouping requires." The concerns were the same as in the sixties but the attitude to them had changed substantially.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENDS SOVIET ASSISTANCE

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 10 Nov 80 pp 1, 6, 7

[Excerpt]

The expanding friendship and cooperation between Liberia and the Soviet Union does not in any way "compromise or erode our relations with other Governments," Foreign Minister Gabriel Baccus Matthews has noted.

He pointed out that this was simply recognizing the fact that it is "our natural interest to work together for the benefit of our two peoples and world peace."

Minister Matthews was speaking last weekend at the Soviet ambassador's residence on Payne Avenue here on the occasion of the 63rd anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution (USSR), on Friday.

He said Liberia was committed to maintain friendly relations with all peace loving nations and said the PRC Government intends to encourage full and genuine cooperation with all friendly embassies accredited here in the discharge of their legitimate functions.

He commended the Soviet Government for providing assistance to Liberia in the areas of health and education and for the air services agreement signed between the two nations in Moscow recently.

Minister Matthews said the Liberian Government hail these achievements and hoped to increasingly work with the Soviet Government in other areas of cooperation for the mutual benefit of their two nations.

LPRC EVICTING PIPELINE SQUATTERS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 14 Nov 80 p 6

[Text]

The Liberia Petroleum Refinery Company (LPRC) has embarked on a crusade to have squatters evicted off its pipelines.

According to company officials, verbal requests made, to the squatters have gone unheeded.

Appeals were made to the Monrovia City Corporation (MCC) during the past and present regimes for its intervention, but nothing was done in this regard, officials said.

Observers are however baffled as to whether the Monrovia City Corporation has any jurisdiction over areas in the Free Way.

Officials believed squatters lodgings, mostly shacks, are causing stresses on the pipes.

Those structures, along with debris, notably carcasses of automobiles, are also upsetting the cathodic coating placed upon the pipes to prevent rust and subsequent lerkage, officials said.

POTABLE WATER TO BE PROVIDED TO CITIES LACKING IT

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 13 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

PLANS are underway to install modern reservoirs and pumping facilities in all Liberian cities that do not have portable water, Head of State M/Sgt. Samuel K. Doe said here on Tuesday.

He said it was the responsibility of government to provide safe and adequate water supplies in every part of the country.

M/Sgt. Doe made the statement in a message declaring Liberia's commitment to observe the United Nations' Water and Sanitation Decade 1981-1990.

Head of State Doe said government would support the United Nations to implement the goals and objectives of the water and sanitation decade.

He commended the UN for placing emphasis on water and sanitation which he said were important factors in the lives of mankind.

Sgt. Doe regretted that about half of the world's population did not have "reasonable" access to safe and adequate water supply.

M/Sgt. Doe said, Government was not satisfied with the used primitive methods the masses of the people obtain water in the rural areas.

Realizing that the success of the program depended on technical assistance from friendly countries, the Head of State said: "We through commitment and dedication, can play our role in providing pure water for our people before the end of this decade".

He thanked the Federal Republic of Germany and the United States of America and other countries that have assisted to improve water supply in Liberia.

M/Sgt. Doe called on the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare to continue to provide wells in towns and villages.

"We urge that intensive campaigns be launched by that Ministry to improve the sanitary conditions of drinking water in all parts of the country," Head of State Doe concluded. — LINA

A representative of the European Investment Bank (EIB), a member of the above-mentioned mission, according to a communique published yesterday, said, "The bank was taking note of the Malian Government's intention of presenting projects to it, particularly in their industry sector, including agriculture-industry and mining research."

The Malian Government's delegation and the EEC mission, the communique adds, have had exchanges of views "on regional cooperation to which end funds amounting to between 70 and 88 billion Malian francs (between 35 and 44 billion CFA francs) will be reserved for the financing of regional projects in West Africa."

The agreement was signed by the Malian minister of planning, Ahmed Mohamed Ag Hamani, the chief of mission of the European Communities' commission and the representative of the European Investment Bank.

REPORTS ON SWAPO POSITION, NUJOMA ASSESSED

SWAPO's Present Position

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 21 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Salisbury--In an interview with Zimbabwe television filmed in Zambia, SWAPO President Sam Nujoma said that the military wing of SWAPO has occupied and brought under control large parts of SWA/Namibia, and is now expanding its operations to the south. Nujoma stated that his guerrillas are operating in the northwestern, central and northeastern parts of the country. He added: "Right now, our forces are beginning military operations in the central and southern parts of our country." Nujoma quoted a report by the South African radio on guerrilla activities in Outjo, and he pointed out that this report contradicted the statement by the South African armed forces that the operations of SWAPO forces are limited to the border areas with Angola and Zambia.

When asked to comment on these reports, a spokesman of the South African military headquarters in Pretoria said: "This is obviously an attempt to belittle the humiliating defeats which SWAPO suffered in the past months at the hands of security forces in SWA/Namibia." In the past 10 months, SWAPO has lost at least 100 terrorists per month in skirmishes with security forces.

Nujoma Assesses UN Position

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 20 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Lusaka--SWAPO President Sam Nujoma said in Lusaka that SWAPO believes that the United Nations is supporting the liberation struggle of Namibia. At a press conference on the SWA/Namibia situation he warned that because of the attitude of the South Africans the population of Namibia is more determined than ever to fight an extended guerrilla war and win true independence for Namibia.

"The continuing maneuvers by South Africa to delay the independence of SWA/Namibia" have now led to a "very critical political and military situation in SWA/Namibia," said Nujoma. In addition to continuing the armed struggle, SWAPO is also ready for any kind of democratic elections or independence under UN supervision.

UN Official on Sam Nujoma

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG/DER WOCHENSPIEGEL in German 17 Oct 80 p 18

[Text] New York--Within a short time, SWAPO Chief Sam Nujoma will meet for the fourth time with FRG Foreign Minister Genscher--this time in Bonn at the invitation of the FRG Government. This official invitation must be considered as an upgrading of Nujoma and his organization. But what is the 51-year old Ovambo, who increasingly rules with Politburo methods in his headquarters in Lusaka, Zambia, really like?

On the one hand, rebellious elements inside SWAPO are causing troubles for Nujoma, but with the protection of the Soviet ambassador in Lusaka, Vassiliy Solodownikov, he has been able to make these rebellious comrades disappear in prisons of the border countries Zambia and Tanzania...

But Nujoma's friends in the frontier states have no easy time with him, either. Each time they believe they have made progress in talks with the five Western powers and through them with South Africa, Nujoma stalls because--as a Zambian UN delegate says--"he has a talent for crying 'victory' at the wrong time."

What both friends and enemies complain about most is the lack of intelligence of this guerrilla leader who is always dressed in military uniform but shuns direct fighting in the bush and instead prefers a luxurious life style. "We are saddled with a man whom nobody really likes," says a high UN official.

And so Western circles are afraid that neither Foreign Minister Genscher nor any other one of his Western colleagues will succeed in influencing Nujoma in the same way as the Marxist leader of Zimbabwe, Robert Mugabe. "Unfortunately, we are not dealing here with the intelligence and pragmatism characteristic of Mugabe," said the UN official.

REPORTS ON NAMIBIA NEGOTIATIONS IN PRETORIA

Talks Begin

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 21 Oct 80 pp 1, 3

[Text] Informed circles speculate that the new round of negotiations in the SWA/Namibia discussions between the South African Government and the UN delegation could collapse before it has even really begun. Joint discussions began yesterday afternoon in the Union Building of Pretoria with the primary purpose of clarifying the agenda and the status of the talks, as our correspondent Leon Kok reports. The real negotiations began this morning, and the UN team made it clear to the South African Government that it wished to return to New York with something concrete, specifically with a date for the ceasefire. But South Africa does not want to discuss firm dates before all differences have been clarified, such as UN partiality and the demilitarized zone.

In Windhoek, meanwhile, SWA/Namibian parties are getting ready for discussions with the UN delegation. Johan Fick, a representative of the South African Foreign Ministry in SWA/Namibia, confirmed yesterday that his ministry has been officially authorized by the United Nations to invite political parties and groups from SWA/Namibia to Pretoria. Most political leaders have expressed their readiness to participate in talks with the UN delegation in order to clarify questions on participation, purpose and voting eligibility at an all-party conference. On the basis of a telex poll conducted by the UN delegation in order to establish a suitable time for the talks with the United Nations, Mrs Abrams, spokeswoman of the NIP, will fly to Pretoria with concrete proposals for a kind of Lancaster House conference.

Andreas Shipanga, SWAPO-D representative, told the AZ [ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG] that his party would not appear before the United Nations as beggars. An invitation to the negotiations would have to come directly from the United Nations and not by detour of the South African Government. The UN would also have to pay all expenses if it is interested in talks with SWAPO-D.

The NNF asked the UN delegation by telegram to send an official invitation as well as plane tickets. The NNF has not yet decided who its representative will be if the UN meets these requests. Norah Chase told the AZ this morning that the NNF did not wish to participate as one of the internal democratic organizations.

Namibian Participation

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 12 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] The question of the participation by SWA/Namibian parties in the negotiations has not yet been clarified. The delegation under the leadership of Brian Urquhart is expected to arrive in Pretoria during the weekend, and negotiations are to begin on Monday. When the visit of the delegation was first announced, it was stated that the talks would last about 7 days.

There are no indications yet that after the talks the UN delegation will come to Windhoek in order to talk with the internal parties. The leaders of the SWA/Namibian parties might still be invited to Pretoria, but not all of them are willing to negotiate with the United Nations on South African soil. "This would be the same as recognition of South African authority in Namibia," as one source put it. SWAPO-D and the NNF would prefer talks with the UN delegation in Windhoek, as they were held in the past.

Meanwhile, DTA and other political parties and alliances insist on obtaining the same status as SWAPO in talks with UN representatives. South Africa, too, is anxious to have political groups of SWA/Namibia as well as the Council of Ministers recognized as negotiation partners in matters of the UN solution plan.

In the talks between the UN delegation and SWA/Namibian parties observers believe that the following points will receive prominent attention:

--the practical implementation of UN supervised elections in agreement with Security Council resolution 435;

--the serious objections by South Africa and the Council of Ministers that the UN is prejudiced in favor of SWAPO;

--the practical consequences that would result from the establishment of a demilitarized zone between SWA and Namibia;

--the position of Martti Ahtisaari, UN commissioner for Namibia and, at the same time, the special representative of the UN secretary general for SWA/Namibia.

According to latest reports, the UN team has indicated its willingness to talk with groups from SWA/Namibia. Preparations are already in progress to fly politicians and reporters from local newspapers to Pretoria.

DIOURBEL REGION PEASANTS WORRIED ABOUT RAINFALL

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 3 Nov 80 p 5

[Article by Moustapha Toure]

[Text] Sheikh Ndiaye, regional controller of the Seed Service, was visited last Tuesday in Diourbel by Mr Delbosc, technical counselor in the National Seed Service Directorate. Mr Delbosc's visit to the region was for the purpose of obtaining an on-site picture, with the help of local technicians, of crop development in general and seed stock crops in particular.

Accompanied by Sheikh Ndiaye, and departmental and local controllers of the region and with the cooperation of public employees, Delbosc was able to tour all three departments and was thus able to get a get a feeling for the status of the crops. The technicians were able to conduct a maturity survey which consisted in determining the degree of crop maturity in the departments of Bambey, Dourbel and Mbacke, with a view to time projection for organizing the harvesting of selected seed peanuts for the 1980-1981 season.

Drawing conclusions from this tour, Sheikh Ndiaye said that they had come to the realization during this inspection that crop maturity was more advanced in some regions than in others, with account taken of the date of planting. During this tour, the technicians of the seed service persuaded the peasants to refrain from uprooting the seed peanuts in areas where the vegetation is still green. This will permit the seed peanuts to become heavier and of better seed quality.

Instructions were also given to agencies of the Seed Service to conduct surveys of yield in order to better evaluate results.

Preservation of Products

During this tour for the purpose of determining the state of crop development, technicians of the Seed Service held discussions with the peasants particularly in the peanut sectors of uprooting, harvesting, preserving of products in the fields, collecting, etc.

In Bambey department, the technicians, in the company of Delbosc, visited the regions of Dangalma, Peyngoye, Baba-Garage, Ndioudiouf. In the department of Dourbel, checks were made of the Tenefoul, Tourebond, Yongo and Ndind regions. As for the department of Mbacke where the technicians ended their tour, the regions of Missirah, Mbacke and Dalla were visited.

We note that these regions are made up of several villages whose peasents willingly responded to questions asked by Seed Service agents.

The finishing tasks remain to be done on site; i.e., statistics, as the agents conducted surveys to determine the yields of harvests still in progress. On the whole, crops with a short growing season (90-100 days) have been productive, depending upon their planting dates. As for crops with a long growing cycle, these have produced almost nothing. These are specific findings discovered on site.

Because of the very poor rainfall cycle, these long cycle crops were unable to correctly complete their vegetation cycle. The last recorded rainfall was 313.5 mm for Bambey, 346.9 mm for Biourbel and 419.5 mm for Mbacke. This worries the peasants, according to Ndiaye, regional seed controller.

Production Affected

The peasants' worries are quite justifiable, as it has rained in the area only 2 months in the period from August to September. This had a clear impact on production. Rainfall was recorded only in a few localized areas.

As for the production of seed stock, this year such production was geared to the peanut, with the program of the other crops being handled by the SODEVA [Agricultural Development and Popularization Company]. Thus for Bambey department, distribution was made of 576.4 tons of selected seed for seed stock purposes; 555.5 tons of selected seed for popularizaton [vulgarisation] and 4,660.38 tons for ordinary plantings.

For Dourbel department, distribution was made of 413.75 tons of selected seed for seed stock purposes; 180 tons of selected seed for popularization; and 4,499.98 tons for ordinary plantings.

Finally, for Mbacke department, distribution was made of 484.77 tons of selected seed for seed stock purposes; 369 tons of selected seed for popularization; and 6,229,86 tons for ordinary plantings.

For crop protection, the seed stock operation consists in preserving seed stock crop production which is treated with a 10 percent solution of HCH [expansion unknown]. We note that no signs of parasitism have been reported, but millet is harvested as is the bean crop.

FRENCH INFLUENCE, COOPERATION DETAILED

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 15 Oct 80 p 5

[Article: "Sierra-Sierra Wants to Go Beyond Linguistic Borders"]

[Text] President Siaka Stevens, nicknamed Shaki by the Sierra Leoneans, is now universally known. Chief of state of three and one-half million baiscally anglophone inhabitants, Stevens just spoke a few days ago in the name of the OAU [Organization of African Unity] to the United Nations in energetic and forward-looking terms.

Stevens, who has already visited Valery Giscard d' Estaing in France in 1979, will pay an official visit to London on 5 November. After leaving France in 1979, Stevens returned in 1980 for the Franco-African summit in Nice before becoming president of the OAU. He was the only anglophone leader present at the Nice summit, where he emphasized that Africa should go "beyond linguistic borders."

Stevens also invited Giscard to come to Freetown, which is a very much awaited visit for this cordial country.

Sierra Leone, three-quarters bordered by Guinea-Conakry, welcomes one-half million francophone Guineans. French is the only obligatory language after English.

Two French-Sierra Leonean teaching centers are energetically operating in the capital, as well as at Bo, the country's second largest city. These recent organizations are jointly directed by a Sierra Leonean and a Frenchman. In Bo a charming aborigine woman has just been named teaching adviser in French. The cultural adviser of the French Embassy, Claude Berenger, who is also responsible for technical cooperation, dynamically coordinates all of these activities, which are not limited to teaching French.

Thus, at the University of Njala -- the second in the country after that in Fourah Bay -- in the midst of the Sierra Leonean bush, a young French engineer, Hugues Vermeghe, has put agriculture into operation.

This thousand-year-old method in Europe had only slightly made its entry into Africa. However, the small local oxen, broad-backed, hardy, yoked in pairs, can multiply a man's yield twenty-fold and allow developing food growing. Moreover, their musculature, increased by ploughing, would provide a much greater amount of meat than what is produced at the present time. The appropriate ploughs have been used and manufactured for a long time in Senegal and are slightly used in Guinea.

Thus we have a concrete and useful example of French-Sierra Leonean cooperation, capably and effectively developed by the French ambassador, his excellence Victor Gares, who is both an Anglicist and distinguished Africanist, assisted by a dynamic team of young diplomats and civil service volunteers.

Gares' chancellory also represents seven French-speaking African countries: Central Africa, Djibouti, Gabon, Mauritania, Chad, Togo and Upper Volta.

The French-speaking people of the south, as well as of the north by way of France and the ACP (African, Caribbean and Pacific Countries)-EEC agreement therefore represents an opening to the world and a hope of progress for the Sierra Leoneans.

SOVIET WOMEN'S DELEGATION VISITS TOGO

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 22 Oct 80 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] A delegation of two Soviet women has been in our country since Monday.

Upon their arrival by road, Marguerita Emilianova, vice minister of Social Security, and Elena Kotova editor of the newspaper SOVIET WOMEN, were greeted at the border post of Hillah Condji by members of the national bureau of the UNFT (National Union of Togolese Women) and of the Aneho regional bureau.

This 1-week friendship visit falls within the framework of relations existing between Togolese women and their sisters of the Soviet Union. Yesterday, morning, the Soviet delegation, accompanied by members of the RPT [Rally of the Togolese People], Abra Amedome, minister of social affairs and women's status, and Massan Dagadzi, secretary of state to the presidency of the republic, responsible for liaison with parliament, respectively president general and secretary of the UNFT, paid a courtesy visit to Ayite Gachin Mivedor, permanent director of the RPT.

Greeting his guests, Mivedor said that he was pleased by their visit which once again consolidates the cooperation existing between our two countries.

Togo and the Soviet Union

In her response, Marguerita Emilianova first expressed the feelings of friendship of the peoples of the Soviet Union for the Togolese people.

She said that she was gratified by the warm welcome she had received and stated that this visit will be one more stage in the development of the fruitful relations already existing between our two countries.

Very impressed by the climate of peace prevailing in Togo, Miss Emilianova said, "We are aware of the fact that without peace, women and children can do nothing. The participation of Togolese women in national construction, in all sectors, shows the efforts made by the government to improve their condition."

Earlier, Miss Emilianova had given a brief summary of the Revolution in the Soviet Union and of the preponderant role played by women in both the political and social-cultural sectors.

SALISBURY, BULAWAYO ELECTIONS POSTPONED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] Local government elections in the former township areas of Salisbury and Bulawayo had been postponed indefinitely, the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, announced yesterday.

The postponement also affects the Chitungwiza Urban Council election. The elections in the former white areas of Salisbury and Bulawayo will go ahead as planned on November 22.

Mr Zvobgo told a Press conference in Salisbury that while he was satisfied the security situation was firmly under control, he believed it was prudent to avoid the risk of unrest by rescheduling the elections "until further notice".

"I am also mindful of the need for candidates in local authority elections to be able to campaign without restriction or fear of any form of interference."

The Minister said recent incidents in Bulawayo had been partly responsible for the postponement.

"When you get more than 50 people killed by hooligans and political malcontents then it is evident that the Government ought to be as circumspect as possible and ensure the safety of all the citizens of local government areas."

Mr Zvobgo said the necessary statutory instruments to give effect to the postponement would be published in a Government Gazette next week.

The existing councils in the former local government areas in Salisbury, Bulawayo, and Chitungwiza would continue in office until further notice.

The new councillors elected on November 22 in Salisbury's Wards 1 to 13 and Bulawayo's Wards 1 to 8 would take office only after the elections in the other wards had taken place.

Asked how soon the elections could take place, Mr Zvobgo said it depended on the Government's assessment of the security situation.

Elections could be held before the end of the year in Salisbury, but in Bulawayo they could take place only after the curfew in the former townships had been lifted, and this was a defence matter.

Mr Zvobgo said he was also looking into the question of whether new candidates could be nominated for the rescheduled elections.

Amendable

"If we are going to postpone the elections . . . then I am quite amenable to allowing new candidates to be nominated in these wards and these wards only."

At an earlier Press conference Mr E. Malandu, Patriotic Front secretary of the local government elections committee called for a postponement of elections in Victoria province because of alleged harassment of PF candidates by ZANU (PF) members.

He also called for the appointment of a commission of inquiry to investigate and report on the situation in Fort Victoria.

He said the PF was afraid of contesting in Umtali and Chitungwiza because of the activities of other parties. There were discrepancies in the registered voters' roll in Marandellas, and all these things had to be looked into.

Mr Zvobgo said in reply that there was a clear difference between a desire to have elections postponed because a particular party was afraid of losing and the desire to postpone them in the interests of the public.

'Foolish'

Replying to a claim on Thursday by the Mayor of Bulawayo, Mr Mike Constandinos, that the recent wave of violence in the western suburbs of the city was a direct result of electioneering by ZANU (PF) Cabinet Ministers, Mr Zvobgo said the Mayor had been foolish and naive in his statements.

"I want to be on record as stating that in the past the Mayor of Bulawayo has made stupid and ill-advised statements."

He said Mr Constandinos was incapable of keeping to himself matters that Government officials discussed with him in confidence.

"Now I notice here he is attributing the violence in Bulawayo to the mere presence of Government Ministers in that city," he said. "With due respect to the Mayor, this is unfounded and untrue. He should be more prudent in what he says."

Mr Zvobgo said it was clear from security evidence that the atrocities in Bulawayo had been caused by "rabble-rousers and political malcontents who are still licking their wounds as a result of having lost in the election earlier this year".

Government Ministers had a duty to continue to do their work in every town in the country and their mere presence in a city was not sufficient provocation for people to take the law into their own hands, he said.

KANGAI ADMONISHES WORKERS' COMMITTEES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] WORKERS' committees should refrain from complicated and binding constitutions and rather represent and air the grievances of employees, the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said last night.

The Minister was addressing workers' committees of the almost 12-year-old Transport and General Workers' Union in Salisbury.

Workers asked Mr Kangai to clarify various issues.

About 500 workers listened to Mr Kangai for about two hours.

He explained that the Government's aim in setting up workers' committees was to have increased worker participation in industry.

"The causes of strikes are that there is no communication between workers and management within the company," Mr Kangai said.

Other reasons he touched on were: continued racial discrimination, different salaries for people with the same qualifications, not enough Africans in management, and workers having to listen to people on their committees whom they had not elected.

"Workers' committees should be chosen by the workers and not by management," the Minister said.

"These committees should air the grievances of the workers with management after consultation.

"The committee executive should approach management and if no agreement is reached should consult the nearest associated trade union.

"From there the public relations officer should be informed and if nothing happens then you come to the Ministry to help further negotiations."

Mr Kangai then said: "If the Ministry cannot solve your problem through negotiation, the chap can be deported."

Workers were demanding that Minister Kangai deport the Salisbury United Omnibus Company's general manager, Mr Peter Hornblow, and his associates.

PRESIDENT CALLS FOR SHAKE-UP IN COMPANIES' JOB POLICIES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] PRESIDENT Banana yesterday called for a radical restructuring of private firms in Zimbabwe and accused some of them of still practicing discrimination in promotions, grading and allocation of pay scales.

Some companies even went to the extent of having two separate employment policies "corresponding with racial division", the President said when he opened the new Chibuku brewery in Salisbury.

He described the practices as being "anachronistic to the new social climate".

He called for total integration saying that promotions, grading and salary scales should be based on qualifications and relevant experience rather than on the colour of one's skin

Private firms must not over - emphasise profit maximisation at the total exclusion of their employees, said the President.

"Workers should be viewed as human beings and not just exploitable objects," he said.

Employers should ensure their workers have decent homes, medical and educational facilities and enhance wider participation in their concerns.

The President said workers should have a stake in industry and commerce through shareholding. This would bring about a strong sense of belonging and ensure security and high productivity.

He said firms should make it their priority to provide money for training Zimbabweans in skills to curtail dependence on expatriate manpower.

"Indigenisation of management should be a priority of all firms.

"Private companies should also seek to promote non-racialism within their own ranks," said the President.

"What I have said might amount to enunciating a radical restructuring of private firms in Zimbabwe. The real question at issue is that every organisation should seek to mirror the progressive policies of the Government."

LABOR UNION LEADER SLAMS STATE 'INTERFERENCE'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] THE President of the African Trade Union Congress (ATUC) and General Secretary of the United Textile Workers' Union (UTWU), Mr Phineas Sithole, has appealed to the Organisation of African Trade Union Unity to make representation to the Government of Zimbabwe about what he termed Government interference in trade union matters.

Mr Sithole said his action was caused by the recent appointment by the Government of Mr H. Soko and Mr J. Mutemi to represent the ATUC on the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions' interim committee and to the ATUC as representatives of the UTWU.

The appointment of the two men was made by the Government chief labour relations officer, Mr I. T. Chigwendere, in a letter dated November 10 with a copy sent to Mr Sithole.

Mr Sithole said yesterday: "The appointment by the Government of these two men to the two organisations is intended to colonise the ATUC and the UTWU as political instruments of ZANU (PF) to be used to promote the party's one-party state ideology."

Mr Sithole said the Government officer was convening a meeting "in the name of the UTWU" at Gatooma this weekend to introduce the two appointees.

"The meeting has been engineered by the Government to push me and my colleagues out of the labour movement. It is an open plot to hijack the labour movement in the political interests of ZANU (PF) and is being carried out in complete disregard of the wishes of the textile workers.

"Soko and Mutemi lack credibility among the textile workers, and because of their being Government appointees, they cannot speak for or be removed by the workers."

RUBBER STAMP

He said meetings of this type, called at the directive of the Government could be held only to rubber-stamp the wishes of ZANU (PF).

"I, representing the ATUC and the UTWU, am opposed to this flagrant injustice and interference in trade union matters by the Government, and call upon the Organisation of African Trade Union Unity in Addis Ababa to make representations to the Government and to defend the independence and freedom of trade unions."

Mr Sithole said he wished to remind the Government to respect its international undertakings and commitments to preserve and promote the independent role of trade unions and to facilitate the right of workers to elect their own leadership.

MANPOWER MINISTER ON IMPORTANCE OF SELF-SUFFICIENCY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] It was of "paramount importance" that Zimbabwe become self-sufficient in training staff for skilled jobs, the Secretary for Manpower Planning and Development, Dr Herbert Murerwa, said yesterday.

Addressing a lunchtime meeting of a Salisbury Rotary Club, Dr Murerwa said the Government intended to set up a national vocational training centre to co-ordinate vocational training especially in the technical field.

"The Ministry is also working simultaneously to improve the capacity of existing technical training colleges," he said.

Dr Murerwa appealed to businessmen to play their part in career training.

"We are in this business together. You know what your needs are, you have the institutions, you have the know-how. Go ahead and take up the challenge," he said.

Dr Murerwa said his Ministry would co-ordinate such training to ensure that it was meaningful and that it was meeting a national need.

He would also be in a position to help with the training of instructors and the development of teaching and instruction material.

"In this regard the Ministry will need to work closely with industry to ensure that national priorities are properly determined and implemented."

Dr Murerwa said human resources were the wealth of Zimbabwe, and it was important to ensure that the trained cadres in management and industry did not become "frustrated and alienated."

The Ministry was planning a manpower survey to determine the national goals required of the training effort, he said.

Preliminary studies were already under way and should give a basis for a national manpower plan, he said, but in fields where scarcities were already apparent, such as technology, industry and other training organisations should provide skills as soon as possible.

BINDURA PICKETS NOT EMPLOYEES SAYS BLOOMFIELD

[Text] MEN armed with pick-handles and hoes were yesterday picketing the Trojan Nickel Mine, Bindura, where the entire labour force of almost 2 000 have been on strike since Saturday.

Mr Howard Bloomfield, president of the Associated Mineworkers' Union said in Salisbury yesterday that union officials at the mine had reported to him that the pickets were not mine employees.

Mr Bloomfield said that on Friday a member of the workers' committee had been dismissed and another warned after meetings of employees had been held during working hours.

On Saturday the mine was visited by an appointee of the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kangai, said Mr Bloomfield.

The appointee is a member of the co-ordinating committee involved in the unification of the trade union movement.

"Within two hours of this man's arrival the strike had started," said Mr Bloomfield.

"The management refused to speak to him and he was turned off the property.

"An offer by the union to intervene and negotiate for the reinstatement of the dismissed man was turned down.

"The workers' committee told union officials that it was no longer a case of reinstatement only, because the workers were demanding the dismissal and deportation of certain management officials," said Mr Bloomfield.

Mr Bloomfield said his officials had been told that the workers would stay on strike until Mr Kangai visited the mine as it was now a matter for the Minister to settle.

"We feel that strong pressure should be brought to bear on people, especially appointees of the Minister, to stop interfering in disputes and get on with the job of the unification of the trade union movement," he said.

"Here we have people saying they are going to start up another organisation and telling the workers that they will be their representatives.

"I can only say God help us if this is so," said Mr Bloomfield.

He warned that where a trade union was established workers' committees should confine themselves to domestic issues.

"The problem is that political influence is being used by these committees," he said.

"The trade unions should be allowed to get on with their job and the politicians should get on with theirs.

"No country can afford the luxury of stoppages when it is trying to get its economy moving. No one will invest money while we have wildcat strikes going on.

"But the trade unions cannot be held responsible when we have workers' committees trying to do the job of the unions," said Mr Bloomfield.

Last night the chairman of the mine's workers' committee, Mr Frederick Mugwagwa, said their demands would have to be met before the workers went back.

FORMER ZIPRA COMMANDER JAILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] A FORMER ZIPRA commander was jailed for seven years when he and another man were found guilty at the Regional Court, Bulawayo on Friday of robbing a Plumtree store of $12 300.

The two men, John Nhomo and George Ncube, first appeared before the court on October 24 charged with robbing Mr C. P. Patel at his store on October 13. Both pleaded guilty.

Because Nhomo and Ncube said they did not know how much money they had stolen the case was adjourned for Mr Patel to give evidence.

When the case resumed on October 31 both accused applied through Advocate K. Sibanda, to change their pleas to not guilty on the grounds that Mr Patel had organized the robbery as an insurance swindle.

The magistrate, Mr I. R. Carlisle, refused to allow the change of plea but reserved the right to do so if he felt future evidence warranted it.

Mr Patel produced his passport on Thursday to show he was in Zambia on the days Nhomo and Ncube said they conspired with him to arrange the swindle.

But on Friday both accused maintained the robbery was committed in collusion with Mr Patel.

In evidence Nhomo said: "Mr Patel has been our friend since 1965. Our friendship started with dealing in foreign currency. We were good friends and I trusted him.

"We were good friends until we were arrested in connection with the exchange control regulations. I was a State witness against Mr Patel.

"When I was in custody I was approached by Mr Patel who asked me to testify that he was not involved. But after he was involved he offered me money. He was acquitted because of the lies I told in court."

Nhomo said the robbery was arranged by Mr Patel and he, Ncube and a third man went to the Plumtree store at about 7 p.m. to carry out the plan.

"I took the money which was in a cardboard box. This was pre-arranged. Inside the safe I left a lot of money. I think the money in there was about $15 000 in another cardboard box. In another box there was a lot of foreign currency, pulas and rands.

"There is a simple reason why he did not report to police until the next day. They (the police) would have caught us within seconds and his plan would not have materialised," said Nhomo.

The prosecutor, Mr Ashley Shaw-Ward, told Nhomo: "You have used your fertile imagination since your arrest to resort to one excuse after another."

Ncube, the former ZIPRA commander in Plumtree gave a detailed description of the alleged conspiracy, saying the plan was to frighten Mr Patel's wife, who would be unaware of the plan.

Ncube said he and the third man went into Mr Patel's home with a gun while Nhomo waited outside by the store.

"Patel was in his kitchen and there was a girl who worked there too. Patel waved us back so the girl would not see us."

Ncube said after the girl left, he and the other man threatened Mr Patel's wife with the firearm, which he alleged, had been provided by Mr Patel.

"We asked his wife for a key. As arranged, she gave the key to the other man and they went off. Patel and I remained. We laughed, having seen how frightened his wife had been."

Later Ncube said: "The reason for the commission of this offence lies with the Government. I have toiled for 14 years in the bush and yet had no money.

"Had I been adequately paid by the Government I would not have committed the offence. The Government should shoulder the responsibility."

Mr Carlisle rejected the tale of conspiracy. He said: "I am satisfied that you were both lying."

He said whatever the previous relationship between the two accused and Mr Patel, "he was certainly not party to a conspiracy to rob himself.

"In the circumstances I am satisfied there was $12 300 stolen and that there was no collusion with Mr Patel."

Mr Carlisle said the original pleas of guilty would stand and be accepted.

He jailed Ncube for seven years and remanded Nhomo to January 5 for sentence after hearing he had a "long record".

FIVE KILLED IN CHITUNGWIZA INCIDENTS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] FIVE people were killed in violent incidents in Chitungwiza on Monday night and yesterday afternoon, Salisbury police said yesterday.

A police statement said four people were killed and several others hurt in a series of assaults in Chitungwiza on Monday night.

At 2.40 p.m. yesterday a grenade was thrown into a crowd of about 500 at a business centre in the township. One man was killed and six others — four men and two youths — were injured.

None of the victims was named.

A joint police and National Army patrol saw the grenades being thrown and arrested one of the alleged attackers. The other tried to run away and was shot and wounded by the patrol, the statement said.

A police source said last night that police patrols had been intensified and some units of the National Army were expected to be sent to Chitungwiza to help patrol the area.

Despite the police presence people were leaving Chitungwiza for their rural homes or going to join their relatives in other areas of Salisbury.

The grenade attack came only hours after the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, and the Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sydney Sekeramayi, addressed a crowd of about 1 000 near the Seke shopping centre.

The Ministers returned to the suburb last night with a member of the ZANLA High Command.

After meeting senior police officials for about 15 minutes they toured the area for about an hour.

Last night the shopping centre and the residential area between the new police post and the ZIPRA camp were deserted. Patients at a nearby clinic had to be moved to St Mary's.

Monday night's violence occurred mainly in the N, O and P sections of Chitungwiza, according to eyewitnesses.

Two men were stoned to death.

A woman said her husband was attacked and killed in the National section of Seke.

Mr Sydney Chirimuta, of No. 1117, Seke, said one of his lodgers was among the dead. Another lodger suffered a broken arm after a grenade was thrown into his house, Mr Chirimuta said.

His house was badly damaged in the attack, in which bricks were also used.

The crowd that was attacked by grenades yesterday afternoon had been waiting for the Ministers to return.

Mr Peter Garira (18), a student, said he was about to get off a bus near the Electricity Supply Commission offices when two grenades were thrown at the group.

He was injured on the back and on his left thigh and his clothes were covered in blood. He said he did not see the attackers.

The Ministers arrived at Chitungwiza yesterday afternoon from a Cabinet meeting to be met by a crowd of about 1 000. About 100 of them had fled their homes on Monday night after stonings and assaults.

Some had spent the night at Chitungwiza police station.

Mr Zvobgo told the crowd he and Mr Sekeramayi had been sent by the Prime Minister to find out what was wrong in Chitungwiza.

Grievances

When the Minister asked the people to voice their grievances, one speaker after another demanded the immediate removal of ZIPRA guerillas from Chitungwiza.

The people also complained that the National Army "was not patrolling" the area to protect them.

There were shouts of disapproval from the angry crowd after the Minister said that while the Government understood their demands for the removal of ZIPRA from Chitungwiza, this could not be done right away.

He appealed to the people to return to their homes and give "the Prime Minister and the Government time to find a lasting solution"

The people demanded that the Government find them a safer place to spend the night.

The two Ministers left saying they were to brief the Prime Minister on the situation and would return later in the afternoon.

OFFICIALS' REACTION TO INCREASED VIOLENCE REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

Nkomo Defends ZIPRA's Loyalty

THE Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday told a Press conference at his Pelandaba house here that he felt "very, very uncertain" about whether he and the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, were telling each other the truth about the need for national reconciliation, unity and co-operation.

Dr Nkomo was commenting on the November 9-10 inter-party violence in Bulawayo that left nearly 60 people dead and many more injured in the city's western areas.

He also spoke about Saturday's search by the police of his Umguza River farm where he is preparing to open a girls' technical college, and is running several agricultural projects.

Talking about the inter-party clashes, he said: "I refrained from saying anything at the height of the violence apart from playing my part to defuse it through normal Government channels and my own political party machinery.

"I expected the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, to play a vital role to stop the unnecessary bloodshed and to establish an impartial machinery to look into the causes of the disturbances with a view to solving the problem once and for all so as not to have a recurrence of it in our country.

"Instead of doing that, the Prime Minister attempted to blame my party, the Patriotic Front, and ZIPRA for the disturbances.

"He said absolutely nothing about the irresponsible, inflammatory and dangerous statements by Ministers who are his party's senior members."

The Minister said it was mischievous to suggest that ZIPRA was disloyal to the Government.

"We have nine brigades in the country, six of which are under ZIPRA leadership," Dr Nkomo said.

He said he had thought he and Mr Mugabe were working together smoothly until Mr Mugabe made remarks at Mount Darwin saying ZIPRA was disloyal to the Government.

He said it was dangerous to the nation for a national leader to accuse one section of the population of disloyalty or of having been the first to fire guns.

On the Saturday police search, he said: "The Prime Minister knows very well the PF has no weapons on its farms, but that arms are found in ZANU (PF) camps like those near Salisbury where there are between 400 and 800 people carrying guns.

"I have not said these things before because I wanted to maintain and promote peace and national unity as I have called for one army since the Lancaster House conference in London.

"But instead of saying and doing the same thing, the Prime Minister and his party shout such diverse slogans as 'pamberi neZANLA, pamberi neZANU (PF)'."

He alleged that criticism of the police force by ZANU (PF) Ministers was meant to stop the force from reporting incidents committed by ZANU (PF) throughout the country.

"They want to create suspicion about the police force and its work so that no report about their actions are made."

Asked if he would pull out of the Government because of the recent happenings, Dr Nkomo replied: "I will not pull out of the Government because I have a duty to the people of this country to make the present Government work, and I will do my best to see that it works until it has been made absolutely impossible for me to continue."

He said in that event, it would be up to those "responsible for his pulling out to explain the consequences".

Call To Get 'Bad Element' Out of Police

BAD elements in the Zimbabwe Republic Police should be removed and the entire force reorientated to serve the interests of the people, the Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Robson Manyika, said yesterday.

Addressing a political rally at Prupajena Stadium, Hartley, Mr Manyika said he would not rest until this had been done.

"This is a serious matter. We have never said we don't want the police. I don't hate the police, but some bad elements in the force," he told about 2 000 cheering supporters.

The Minister, however, urged ZANU (PF) militants to apprehend political malcontents and hand them over to the police and warned them against dealing with those they arrested on their own.

His remarks came after the Minister had produced to the crowd three people who were alleged to have been intimidating people and preventing them from attending the rally.

Before the men were handed over to plain-clothes policemen, two said they were members of ZIPRA and one said he was a ZANU (PF) supporter.

Mr Manyika said ZIPRA supporters had been deployed throughout the country to intimidate people. Some had been planted in bars, hotels and other public places for the same purpose.

The recent troubles in Bulawayo were not confined to that city, he said. "The Bulawayo affair did not end there. It is spreading all over the country."

But Mr Manyika stressed repeatedly to the crowd that ZANU (PF) members should not take the law into their own hands. He urged moderation and non-violence in dealing with opponents and political malcontents.

The meeting was also addressed by Mrs Julia Zvobgo, a Member of Parliament for Midlands, who urged women to work hard towards strengthening the ZANU (PF) Women's League.

Back the Law--Muzenda At Rally

GWELO.

THE Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Simon Muzenda, yesterday made an impassioned call to all citizens to work with the police force, irrespective of their party affiliation.

Speaking to more than 3 000 ZANU (PF) supporters at a rally at Ascot stadium here, Mr Muzenda also told his audience they would be classified as murderers if they went about assaulting and killing other people.

During his speech he drew a lot of shouts from the crowd when he said Dr Joshua Nkomo was merely a Minister in the National Government and the police did not belong to him.

"Note it, the police force is a Government hand for law and order and Dr Nkomo is just the Minister in charge of them as Mr Hove is in charge of the public service."

He warned that more chaos would be caused if people retaliated.

"You only help to spread chaos and violence if you say the police belong to Dr Nkomo and we should take them off from your areas.

"If the police belonged to Dr Nkomo as you claim, why then did they search his hotel on Saturday without warning him of the search?

"Police are a Government instrument and they will search Dr Nkomo's house if they believe arms are illegally kept there and so will they even on Muzenda's house and they will certainly question me on possession of arms illegally," said Mr Muzenda.

The Deputy Prime Minister also repeated his call for an end to kangaroo courts.

"Give the Minister of Public Services the chance to see whether the present judiciary system and courts administer justice," he said.

Also present at the rally were six Midlands provincial party officials, Mr Fred Shava, Government chief whip, the Minister of Lands Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sydney Sekeremayi, the Minister of the Public Service, Mr Richard Hove, and the Minister of Transport and Power, Mr Ernest Kadungure.

The party candidates for the coming local government elections were introduced to the crowd by Mr Shava.

Mr Hove told the rally that the stability of the national Government lay in the stability of the local government.

"If you choose a wrong party to be the local governors then all they will do is mess up the town management and pass the blame on to the national Government," he said.

SEMINAR ON POVERTY, RESOURCES, DEVELOPMENT SUCCESSFUL

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] THE one-day seminar on poverty, human resources and development and implications for economic growth and development held at the University of Zimbabwe this week, made a breakthrough in the understanding of problems facing emerging nations and Third World countries, said the president of the Zimbabwe Economic Society, Dr Timothy Musondo.

"There was great interest in the problems of poverty, human resources and economic development. We exchanged views to see if we can have a united approach to the problems," he said.

The seminar which was opened by President Banana was organised by Zimbabwe Economic Society in association with the World Bank.

According to Dr Musondo, emphasis was placed on the need to develop resources of women because of their vital role in improving conditions for children.

The seminar looked at the high education costs in Africa compared to other countries in the world.

It was generally agreed that research be conducted into methods of reaching the average costs of education.

The delegates agreed that there was need to find educational technology which could be extended to reach the poor masses in the rural areas.

It was also noted that Zimbabwe's rural population was among the poorest in the world because of lack of infrastructure.

The seminar was attended by government ministers, ambassadors, secretaries to ministries and leading businessmen.

NKALA CALLS FOR WAR ON POVERTY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] SENATOR Enos Nkala has called on all Zimbabweans to stop gun-running and to fight an economic war so that wealth can pass to indigenous citizens.

Speaking to thousands of ZANU (PF) supporters in Chinhoyi Stadium, Sinoia, yesterday, he said the Government had intensified the economic war in a bid to improve the lives of all Zimbabweans.

"That is the war we want so that wealth in the country can be in the hands of indigenous people." Senator Nkala, the Minister of Finance, was accompanied by his deputy, Dr Oliver Munyaradzi.

Senator Nkala urged people in urban areas without useful occupation to go home and start farming. "We have a new war of liberation from poverty."

Wealth did not come "like rain" but through hard work. "If you have no jobs in towns, please go home and then come back after harvest to continue looking for employment."

Mr Nkala said there was [illegible] for another liberation war because the country was free. "The war we must fight is against poverty, disease, ignorance and hunger."

He told the gathering, which was soaked by heavy rain, that the Government had increased the producer price of maize and that those who produced more would be rich. "You will not even come back to look for work."

OPPRESSED

Dr Munyaradzi said Zimbabwe would not be absolutely free if it continued importing food from South Africa. "We cannot say we are independent when we import food from South Africa where our brothers are oppressed."

The Government wanted to see massive agricultural production to meet both local and exports demands. "We have some friendly neighbouring African states who haven't enough food where we can export the surplus."

Dr Munyaradzi said ZANU (PF) leaders who were not prepared to listen to the people's problems should resign. "A good ZANU (PF) leader should listen to the people or offer suggestions in solving their problems."

MUGABE PROMISES PROTECTION OF FARMERS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] EVERY farmer who wanted to stay in the country had the opportunity to do so and had to have the necessary protection of his family and property, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said in Marandellas at the weekend.

Farmers would receive support, not only by way of incentives but in the determination to ensure that law and order were maintained.

Referring to reported loss of morale among certain farmers, the Prime Minister appealed to the farming community not to consider incidents of lawlessness in isolation. They were not the only ones to have suffered.

"There are also a number of other unannounced deaths that have occurred in a number of places because of the lawlessness we have inherited," he said.

He said there was greater peace in the country than there was lawlessness.

Mr Mugabe pledged that Government was taking steps to see that the assembly places were "obliterated altogether".

He assured his audience that the National Army was working to disarm all the inmates of the camps.

He said it was a few people armed with rifles "who will create out of the incidents they commit the general impression that the country lacks peace".

These incidents were highlighted by journalists and given prominence abroad, he said.

Mr Mugabe said the Government's desire and commitment to having a National Army was borne out in Bulawayo. Integrated units of the National Army had been used as an instrument against unintegrated units at loggerheads with each other.

"So you have, on the one hand, elements who are unintegrated still regarding one another as opponents or enemies; and those who are integrated now having to some extent transformed, and accepted that over and above their political affiliations," national unity was a greater loyalty than loyalty to their parties.

Commenting on the minimum wage for farm labourers, Mr Mugabe said the Government was dismayed that some farmers had retrenched labour.

He said farmers did have provision, in cases of hardship, to appeal to the Minister of Labour for a review of their position.

On the question of land, Mr Mugabe said his Government had a commitment to find land for the peasant sector.

He said land that was under - utilised, under absentee ownership or in a sector of farms that have been abandoned, must be "found by the Government, acquired and provided to the people in the TTLs".

This was necessary to provide people with land to "establish a home, land which they can regard as a source of income, and land they can develop through assistance the State can provide".

FUNDS

Mr Mugabe said the Government was now in a predicament in which the funds promised by Britain and the United States were not available. This meant that land was not available because there were no funds to rely on for payment.

A plan was being worked out, however, which would be acceptable to farmers and the Government, for the acquisition of land.

Farmers were under a moral, not a legal, obligation to help people in the TTLs by lending them tractors and agricultural implements. He emphasised that the farming sectors, black, white and peasant, should be one.

"It is our responsibility, therefore, together to give assistance to farmers in those areas where assistance is really needed," Mr Mugabe concluded.

MUZENDA: 'BELGIUM SHARES OUR AIMS'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 15 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] ZIMBABWE expected that Belgium "can view our present situation of reconciliation and reconstruction with great sympathy", the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Simon Muzenda, said yesterday.

He said this should be the case especially since both countries had diverse populations who needed to work together to ensure stability and prosperity for all.

The Minister was speaking at a reception at the Salisbury residence of the Belgian Charge d'Affaires, Mr Dominique Struye de Swielande, to mark Belgium's 150th independence anniversary.

Among the guests were Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, Public Service Minister Mr Richard Hove, other Government officials, the Mayor, Councillor Jack Whiting, and members of the diplomatic corps.

Earlier, Mr de Swielande drew a parallel between the colonial experiences of his country and Zimbabwe.

He noted that although Belgium had been independent since 1830 it had still not evolved a harmonious political system to satisfy all its people.

But because of the length of its independence, he said, Belgium regarded itself as "the elder brother" of Zimbabwe.

The Charge d'Affaires said his country and other countries belonging to the European Economic Community "wished" to develop special relations with Zimbabwe.

Mr Muzenda said: "Zimbabwe will strive to develop all areas of common interest in consultation and co-operation with our Belgian friends and we hope that the promising foundations already laid will be constructively built on to the benefit of both our peoples."

● Our Umtali correspondent reports Mr Simon Muzenda has hinted the Soviet Union was to blame for the lack of ambassadorial relations between the two countries.

Replying to a question after he had addressed a National Affairs Association meeting in Umtali this week he said he had met members of the Soviet delegation to Zimbabwe's independence celebrations and discussed the issue with them.

The understanding between the two had to be discussed.

"We either have to establish a relationship from governmental or from party level.

"Now in a country like our own where there is a multiplicity of parties, you would not allow other countries to come and say we want both relationships from governmental level and also from the party level. Those things have to be worked out."

The Russian visitors due to meet Mr Muzenda again left the country and then at a later stage sent someone from Zambia. He, too, left after one meeting "so we are just still waiting for them", he told the audience.

DOMESTIC FUNDS FOR INVESTMENT NEEDED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] ZIMBABWE'S long-term economic problem was not one of making available adequate amounts of domestic funds for investment.

Rather, it was essential to ensure that these funds were invested in critical productive activities designed to restructure the national economy.

Facts presented by Dr Ann Seidman at this week's Zimbabwe Economic Society Seminar on development issues suggested that the country's economy — without foreign aid — could finance major investment.

Dr Seidman, author of several books and currently a reader in the Department of Economics at the University of Zimbabwe, told the seminar that if Zimbabwe could mobilise about 25 percent of its gross domestic product for investment, it could invest almost $600 million in a national development plan.

In the country's last "good" year, 1975, it invested 23.7 percent of its national product, $467 million, in capital formation. This proportion subsequently dropped as the war spread and recession engulfed the economy, causing private investors to fear risking further capital.

Even in 1978, though only 14.3 percent of the national product went into capital formation, a total of $330 million was invested.

The public sector provided almost half — 41.2 percent — of that amount.

The long-term problem for Zimbabwe was therefore not one of making available adequate amounts of domestic funds for investment, but rather one of wisely investing available domestic funds in appropriate projects once the country overcame its current financial difficulties.

IGNORED

Several facts, Dr Seidman said, indicated the importance of redirecting Zimbabwe's investable surpluses to more appropriate productive activities:

- Of all funds invested in capital formation in recent years, even in 1975, about 10 percent went to finance residential housing — almost all for the "narrow high income minority," while ignoring the masses' needs.
- About 25 percent of gross capital formation in 1975 took place in manufacturing.

Evidence showed, however, that the manufacturing sector failed to contribute to the spread of productive employment opportunities and rising living standards.

- Commercial agriculture, which accumulated annually about 25 percent of the nation's gross operating profits, invested each year only about 10 percent of total capital formation over the last decade.

Yet commercial agriculture paid less than 10 percent of the nation's income taxes.

These factors suggested a need for fundamental institutional changes through state intervention.

Indeed, the previous government did intervene extensively in the investment of surpluses through parastatals.

These parastatals drew heavily on investable surpluses accumulated domestically by insurance firms and pension funds to finance new ventures — even those of foreign affiliates.

A "small clique" of locally-based Europeans — many with close ties to the top civil service and politicians — controlled the boards of directors of these parastatals and focused their activities on profitable enterprises in the private sector, she added.

As a matter of priority, Zimbabwean planners needed to immediately explore how the Government may reorganise this inherited structure of state intervention to create a more balanced, integrated national economy, Dr Seidman said.

MINERS' STRIKE HALTS PRODUCTION AT WANKIE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

[Text] THE four-day-old strike by nearly 4 000 workers at Wankie Colliery is showing no sign of ending and violence between workers has added a new dimension to the problem at Zimbabwe's only productive coal mine.

During Monday night about 50 houses in No. 2 Colliery village had windows smashed by stones and bricks and several people were injured in assaults believed to have been carried out by other colliery workers.

At least two people were detained at Wankie hospital with serious injuries. No arrests have been made.

Most of the houses damaged in the outbreak of violence, which began at 11 p.m on Monday, belonged either to higher-paid workers or to the few at No. 2 Colliery who had gone back to work at the request of management.

ANGRY

Mr Matthew Moyo, chairman of the workers' committee at No. 2 Colliery, said the violence was a direct result of the news that the Minister of Labour, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, had cancelled a planned visit.

"They were angry and they were drinking beer all evening. I was afraid there would be trouble," he said yesterday.

Mr Kenneth Ncube, chairman of the workers' committee in No. 3 Colliery, where the strike started on Friday, said: "The only thing that can save us now is if Mr Kangai comes here.

"The workers have said they will not go back to work unless the Minister comes and brings them their money."

The strike is over pension fund deductions. The workers say Mr Kangai told them these deductions would stop and they could have past payments refunded.

Management sources have confirmed that Anglo American is not empowered to scrap the pension scheme without intervention by the Ministry of Labour.

SERVICING

Coal production at Wankie has been at a complete halt since Friday evening.

Although a skeleton staff has kept part of the coal processing operation going at No. 2 Colliery, underground and open-cast mining at collieries three and four is not operating.

Only the power station and servicing operation at No. 1 Colliery are still functioning.

After a pay strike which stopped production at Wankie in May, the company estimated the cost to the country was about $30 000 a day in foreign currency.

Strikes Deplored

ZIMBABWE is again being plagued by a series of wildcat strikes, the most serious of which is the stoppage at Wankie Colliery where 3 000 workers were out yesterday and where coal production had virtually ceased.

Post-independence euphoria was the reason behind most of the strikes in April and May as the workers eagerly sought tangible proof of their freedom. Although the strikes were to be deplored, the reasons behind them were at least understandable.

The same cannot be said of the current wave of unrest. The Minister of Labour, Mr Kangai, has been extremely active in his field urging the setting up of workers' committees, calling for responsible trade union participation and liaison and generally trying to better the lot of employees.

A veteran mining trade unionist, Mr Howard Bloomfield, has warned that continued unrest and halted production in his industry will deter foreign investors who "above all are looking for a stable labour force".

He claims that the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions set up by the Government in August is causing unrest rather than settling it.

Mr Kangai says that the ZCTU is just an umbrella body and not a union as such, but there have been widespread complaints about the actions of some of its members. These are serious allegations which the Minister will no doubt be investigating.

The economy cannot afford wildcat strikes; nor for that matter can the workers.

GOVERNMENT AIMS TO DEVELOP LOCAL ENERGY

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] THE Government is seriously considering measures to reduce dependence on imported fuel by developing indigenous energy resources, the newly-appointed energy resources liaison officer, Dr Mufaro Hove said this week.

He said the Government was actively looking at problems of energy because of the soaring cost of fuel.

The Government was also looking at all possible ways of conserving fuel in the country. "We will consider how practical the measures are without undue destruction of the system", Dr Hove said in an interview.

Although he could not disclose the national fuel import bill, it is believed to be running in millions of dollars a year.

Dr Hove said his main task was to bring about a co-ordinated approach to energy matters.

"There must be some co-ordination if we are going to have a national sense of our energy situation. We have to develop a national energy policy and plan." he said.

Some of the measures to be considered include increased use of ethanol, coal, wood fuel and electrification of the transport system.

ENOUGH

Dr Hove noted that OPEC countries would not increase their production and as a result, fuel prices would continue to rise.

On the possible shortage of fuel, Dr Hove said: "I have no reason to doubt that we have enough fuel at the moment."

Efficient ways would be found to utilise coal and wood fuel in a bid to reduce the fuel import bill.

Dr Hove said a number of organisations in the country were involved in the development of solar energy and the exercise was still continuing.

TEA PRODUCERS GATHER IN SALISBURY

[Text] TEA producers from all over the world gather in Salisbury next week in an attempt to reach an international price agreement and to sort out the complex problem of export quotas.

At the last meeting of tea exporting countries in Bandung, Indonesia, in May, attempts to reach an agreement on export quotas ended in deadlock as expanding producers did not want restraints put on the growth of their exports.

Financed by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (Unctad) and arranged in conjunction with the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, the meeting starts at a Salisbury hotel on Monday.

About 50 delegates are expected to attend the meeting, representing Argentina, Bangladesh, China, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Malawi, Mozambique, Sri Lanka, Tanzania and Turkey. A Zimbabwean delegation will also attend.

Although Zimbabwe is only a small-scale producer with an estimated production for 1981 of about 12 000 tonnes, it exports almost 80 percent of its total production and would welcome the establishment of an international price agreement, says Mr Brian Gill, chairman of the Zimbabwe Tea Growers' Association.

The local industry, which employs about 10 000 people mainly in the Eastern Highlands, sustained an overall loss of $500 000 in 1978/79 and only just managed to break even in 1979/80.

An international agreement on prices and export quotas, therefore, is equally important for the export orientated Zimbabwe industry as it is for the world's larger producers.

Profit margins for tea producers have declined in recent years and many tea plantations throughout the world are now operating at a loss.

Production, transport and other input costs have risen steadily while tea prices have actually dropped, although the quantity of tea on the world market has continued to grow.

At the Bandung meeting, producers pushed for a price level of about $1,70 per kg, but according to Unctad, actual prices fell below the mark.

Last year, tea prices averaged between $1,20 and $1,30 per kg and this year the prices have dropped below the $1,30 mark, while costs have risen by 15 percent or more.

Delegates at the meeting agreed that here was a need to stop further erosion of profitability in the industry and to curb the continuing decline in the purchasing power of earnings from tea exports.

The question of quotas was the most complex topic at the meeting and African producers led by Kenya were reluctant to agree to limits on their exports.

Kenya exports about 65 000 tonnes per year, but expects to reach 100 000 tonnes by the end of the decade.

Zimbabwe, however, is unlikely to be affected by quota restrictions as it exports account for less than 2 percent of the tea on the world market.

Total world black tea exports amounted to 758 000 tonnes last year and Unctad forecasts that the quantity of tea available for export in 1980 will rise to about 770 000 tonnes.

If supply is not to outstrip demand completely and prices become even further depressed, agreement between producers in Salisbury is essential for Zimbabwe's tea industry as well as for the tea giants of Asia.

SALISBURY BECOMING AIR CARGO 'HUB'

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] IMPORTS by air are beginning to outstrip exports due to the large-scale importation of high value/low bulk goods from Europe, say Affretair, the national cargo airline.

This is a different situation to the same time last year when there were virtually no imports by air into the country, says Affretair's commercial co-ordinator and liaison officer, Mr Alan Taylor.

With three regular flights from Amsterdam every week, each carrying about 38 tonnes of cargo, the airline handles more than 100 tonnes of imports from Europe each week.

These imports consist mainly of technical and mechanical equipment not available in Zimbabwe due to manufacturing limitations, but also include diverse items such as vaccines, clothing and racehorses.

In September last year, imports by the airline amounted to 50 tonnes, but the figure for September this year exceeded 330 tonnes and should reach about 600 tonnes by the end of November.

Exports reached their peak in October last year at about 1 750 tonnes but they have now gone right down to less than 700 tonnes.

Air-freight is becoming more and more popular as a means for transporting goods to and from the country, said Mr Taylor, particularly with the congestion in South African ports and the long delays it involved.

Salisbury is fast becoming a "hub" for the delivery of goods from Europe, destined for other African countries, and Affretair is either transporting goods to their final destination or providing handling facilities for goods on arrival in this country.

The airline's handling facilities include a cold-room with a capacity of 150 tonnes and a high loader which can lift a load of up to 40 tonnes.

It also has storage space for goods that are in transit or are waiting to be collected.

Although flights are conducted from Amsterdam to Salisbury three times a week, Affretair controls its European activities from London, where it has an office.

Goods from Britain, West Germany, Italy and Belgium are all sent to Schiphol airport, Amsterdam, however, for transportation to Zimbabwe.

FOODSTUFFS

The airline is now considering the introduction of a regular flight between New York and Salisbury.

Exports consist mainly of low value, high bulk goods such as foodstuffs for delivery to neighbouring states and overseas, says Mr Chris Nelson, Affretair's traffic superintendent, who pointed out a consignment of Zimbabwean beef waiting to be transported later in the week.

At a basic rate of $1.80 per kg between Amsterdam and Salisbury, imports amounting to about 450 tonnes a month from Europe come to more than $800 000 in transport costs alone.

IATA rates from London to Salisbury come to more than $5 per kg as its members are principally passenger carriers.

Affretair is able to transport goods from London at less than half that cost, said Mr Nelson.

Apart from its services to and from Europe, the airline also runs a regular service to Malawi and provides charter flights to various places in Africa.

Trucking services are also provided to Zaire and Botswana.

Inefficient road systems and long delays at many African airports has contributed to Zimbabwe's emergence as a transport "hub" for Central Africa, says Mr Taylor.

SURVEY SHOWS FERUKA REFINERY IN GOOD CONDITION

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] TECHNICAL advisers brought in by the owners of the Feruka Refinery at Umtali, CAPREF, to investigate and assess the condition of the plant said this week that it is in a remarkably good state of repair.

Both the project leader, Mr Dick Brinkhuis of the Netherlands-based Shell Internationale Petroleum Maatschappij B.V., and Mr Alf Eklund of Fluor Constructors Inc of the US, thought that after 18 years of lying in mothballs the whole complex showed few signs of deterioration.

"It was like a well preserved museum when we arrived.

"Having inspected it over the last five weeks it is fair to say that the reason it is in such good condition is due to the high altitude of the site, dry weather and a very competent maintenance team," said Mr Eklund, during a tour of the plant this week.

Walking around Feruka was not exactly like discovering the Marie Celeste, more a case of being suspended in time.

The huge towers stood silent as did 150 pumps, 260 electric motors, 130 heat exchangers, 4 500 valves.

The 40 storage tanks have lain idle since early 1966.

The 3 500 instruments, gauges, recorders and control valves in the control room and around the plant haven't moved since then either.

"Although we knew the refinery was in a good state of preservation it has proved to be in excellent condition, far better than we thought.

"But this does not take away the fact that it will take some time to bring it back into full operation. Here we are talking about 1982," said SIPM's Mr Brinkhuis.

Every single piece of equipment will have to be tested and cleaned, in some cases by hand. Steam, high pressure water or blasting hot air will be used as means of cleaning the seemingly endless maze of pipes.

The instrumentation is said to be in perfect condition, but this too will have to be cleaned, adjusted and recalibrated.

Since 1966 there have, of course, been major developments in refining technology and safety. However, Mr Brinkhuis thought it unlikely that any major changes or modifications would be necessary at Feruka.

A new fire safety system, on the other hand, is necessary as a result of higher safety requirements demanded by Shell and other international oil companies.

"There is nothing here that is difficult to fix. Given the time and money we could fix anything," quipped Mr Eklund.

Although it was considered to be an advanced refinery at the time it was built, Feruka today is not considered to be such a sophisticated plant by modern standards.

Yet Mr Brinkhuis thought there would be no difficulty in finding replacement parts if they should be needed. If those parts were not available he said they could be substituted by more up-to-date equipment.

But for Mr Brinkhuis, Mr Eklund and his team of investigators the job could have been a real headache had it not been for the maintenance team under the control of operations manager Mr Harry Tinney.

The eight-man team has treated the refinery as though it were a labour of love throughout every working day during the last 15 years.

Curiously, the refinery remained untouched throughout the hostilities.

Perhaps its crucial importance to Zimbabwe's economy today and in the future was the reason.

COCHRANES MERGER WITH U. K. FIRM REPORTED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] COCHRANES Holdings of Zimbabwe and Northern Engineering Industries, a large British engineering firm, have merged to form a joint venture in Zimbabwe.

The new company, will be operated on an equal partnership basis and will be known as NEI Cochrane Engineering.

Established in 1955, Cochranes is the country's largest manufacturer of boilers and pressure vessels and has generated a lot of overseas interest in its production of industrial gasifiers.

The merger will be used to develop the complementary range of NEI and Cochrane products in Central Africa and the new company will expand its manufacturing range on NEI technology, says Mr J. R. Cochrane, the company's financial director.

Its facilities in Zimbabwe would be expanded, he said, for the manufacture and component supply of power station and industrial watertube boilers.

NEI, one of Britain's largest engineering companies, has an annual turnover of about $750 million and employs more than 30 000 people in various parts of the world.

"We obtained license to use NEI boiler technology about 15 years ago," said Mr Cochrane.

"They (NEI) are now showing that they have confidence in the future of Zimbabwe by entering into partnership with us."

NEI is also re-grouping its existing operations in Zambia and Zimbabwe to form a new organisation which will co-ordinate with NEI Cochrane Engineering.

This organisation will continue to produce NEI electrical and mechanical equipment with particular emphasis on the mining industry.

The company intends to further develop its 4 ha site outside Salisbury and will be concentrating on the local market before looking for export markets to the north.

The executive of the new company will be led by Mr E. D. Cochrane as chairman, Mr W. T. Cochrane as managing director and Mr J. R. Cochrane as financial director.

MANGULA COMMISSIONING NEW ELECTROLYTIC REFINERY

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] MTD (Mangula) Ltd, the largest producer of copper in the country, has begun commissioning its new $5.2m. electrolytic refinery.

The plant should be in full operation by April next year.

The refinery has been built in line with the smelter at Alaska and will have a capacity of 20 000 tonnes per annum, said a group spokesman.

"Up until now we have produced copper cake, with a 99,5 percent copper content, and then exported it to be refined overseas.

"This, however, was a costly exercise, hence the decision to build the refinery," he added.

The electrolytic process produces copper cathodes 99,99 percent pure. During the refining a sludge is produced containing traces of gold, silver, nickel and other elements.

MTD has yet to decide whether to extract these minerals by building another refinery.

PUBLIC COMPANY

MTD (Mangula) is a public company quoted on the London, Zimbabwe and Johannesburg stock exchanges, but controlled by the South African-based Messina (Transvaal) Development Company Ltd.

The company which owns the smelter at Alaska, Lomagundi Smelting and Mining (Pvt.) Ltd., is 65 percent owned by Messina, 25 percent by MTD (Mangula) and 10 percent by the Anglo American Corporation.

Furthermore, Anglo American group companies own around 18 percent of the South African company.

TOBACCO MARKET RALLY REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 14 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] FLUE-CURED tobacco sales ended at the two Salisbury auction floors yesterday morning.

The beginning of the season saw poor prices—which almost precipitated a crisis in the industry—but the market rallied to become quite buoyant.

Mr Bert Palmer, president of the Zimbabwe Tobacco Growers' Association, said there had been a lack of buyer confidence due to a slow and cautious manufactur response to the type of tobacco produced.

"Prices dropped from an opening average of 84c/kg to 69c/kg in the first 12 weeks of sales," he said.

The collapse of the industry had appeared imminent. It had been necessary for the association to instigate, with the Government, a scheme to guarantee the amount of money which would be obtained from the private sector.

The scheme — involving about $27 million — took about five weeks to take effect and the downward trend of prices was reversed i. the 13th week of sales.

The improved order position and the 70 million kg restriction on the 1981 crop resulted in buyers taking grades at prices 80 percent higher Mr Palmer said.

There was something wrong with the market and the association would make an in-depth study of tobacco marketing methods

DESTROYED

This was particularly in view of the bales of tobacco — about 1 000 — which were destroyed as being unsaleable on one auction floor in July because there had been no bids from merchants.

"Six weeks later, the same type of tobacco was sold at 50c a kg," Mr Palmer said.

On the last day of sales yesterday, 443 336 kg of flue-cured tobacco were sold at an average price of 69.5c/kg.

For the season a total of 122 571 366 kg of tobacco was sold at an average price of 79.5c a kg, a spokesman for the Tobacco Marketing Board said yesterday.

However, these figures are still subject to audit.

The lowest price was 9c a kg and the highest above the $2.67 a kg which was paid for a bale belonging to Mr Ken Saywood, a Karoi farmer.

Mr Palmer said the overall average price was still 4½c a kg under cost of production.

"The burden of this loss falls on 60 percent of the growers who will not meet production costs," he added.

BRIEFS

ZDP WANTS GUERILLAS DISARMED--The Zimbabwe Democratic Party yesterday called on the Government to take "fast and positive steps to disarm guerillas". The party's publicity secretary, Mr Claudius Kasema, said in Salisbury: "If possible a suitable place should be found for these people. They should not be among the ordinary civilians. "Life at Chitungwiza for an ordinary peace-loving civilian is becoming intolerable and if this situation is not rectified we might find ourselves in a civil war." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Nov 80 p 2]

FRENCH AID TALKS--Negotiations began in Salisbury yesterday between Zimbabwe and France about a soft loan for development projects, the French Ambassador, Mr Gabriel Bellescize, said. The discussions, in which the head of external relations in the French Treasury Mr Philippe Lagayette, is taking part, are due to end today after projects and conditions for the loan have been agreed. Mr Bellescize expects a full agreement to be signed by the Finance Ministers of both countries either in Salisbury or Paris after the protocol agreement expected from the talks has been studied by the Governments. The French negotiating team of three officials arrived in Salisbury on Tuesday and spent the following day visiting Wankie colliery. It is due to leave Zimbabwe tomorrow. GOVERNMENT URGED TO RESIGN--The UANC has called on the Government to resign because of its "failure" to control violence in the country. In a statement issued yesterday, the party's secretary for publicity and information, Mr Chris Sakala accused the Government of indirectly "legalising murder because of their failure to disarm ex-guerillas and control the arms of war lying about every inch of this country". The UANC was equally disturbed by the "implied" statement by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, that he did not think there was need for an inquiry into the Bulawayo massacre. "We call for an immediate resignation of the Government because of its failure to maintain law and order in the country or to hand over the reins of power to people who are capable of bringing about peace and stability in the country," he said. Mr Sakala said the Government had not brought the promised peace and had only transferred the war from the TTLs to African suburbs. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 19 Nov 80 p 9]

ELECTION DELAY HIT--The Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, has been accused of using "cheap tactics and political gimmicks" in postponing the local government elections in Bulawayo, Salisbury and Chitungwiza. In a statement yesterday UANC publicity secretary Mr Chris Sakala said: "It would appear that if other parties enjoy the support of the masses, ZANU (PF) will always interpret it as intimidation." Mr Sakala said ZANU (PF) had previously ignored suggestions that the elections should be called off as the party had the "misconception" that it enjoyed massive nationwide support. "Already ZANU (PF) is aware that it has lost a number of seats to the Patriotic Front and the UANC candidates who have been returned unopposed even before the elections start." The Mayor of Salisbury, Counsillor Jack Whiting, yesterday declined to comment. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 17 Nov 80 p 2]

CONTAINER CONTRACT--Freight Forwarders of Zimbabwe (Pvt.) Ltd, a Salisbury based company, have been appointed agents for Sea Containers Atlantic Ltd of London, one of the world's leading leasing corporations. Sea Containers Atlantic has available an extensive inventory of general purpose and specialised containers, handling equipment, specialised container vehicles and vessels which are leased in the main to shipping lines and other container vessel operators. With this appointment a spokesman for Freight Forwarders of Zimbabwe said that the company was in a position to offer locally this range of equipment to service all and any container requirements that may face local commerce and industry. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 4]

JULY TRADE FIGURES GOOD--Zimbabwe's trade figures moved back into the black in July after the previous month's disappointing performance to reveal a surplus of $11,3m. The monthly Digest of Statistics published this week shows that total exports amounted to $75 569 000, a rise on June of 13,6 percent, whereas imports fell 1,9 percent to $62 254 000. While these figures are seen as encouraging they are obscured by the effects of unofficial strikes earlier this year in the mining industry and rail transport problems in South Africa. The strikes badly affected exports of asbestos, copper and chrome, all key foreign currency earners, sales of the latter two commodities were down 70 percent. Taking the average monthly sales of these three mainstays of mining exports the resultant loss amounted in July to over $11,3 million. This loss, however, was offset by a 58,4 percent in gold sales amounting to $13 596 000. The drop in imports was largely due to the fall of petroleum supplies into the country. Costs fell from $15,6 million in June to $6,9 million, stemming from bottlenecks in the rail routes from South African ports. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 6 Nov 80 p 1]

QADHDHAFI'S INTENTIONS IN CHAD SAID TO BE UNCLEAR

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 p 2276

[Text] IT WOULD be rash to attempt an explanation of Colonel Gaddafi's motives. The accusations of subversive Libyan behaviour in The Gambia and Senegal and the confirmation of the intervention of a substantial number of Libyan troops in Chad lends weight to the view that Colonel Gaddafi has grandiose, though self-contradictory and perverse, sub-Saharan designs.

His acts have also included support for Iran against Arab Iraq, support for Ethiopians against Muslim Somalis, the encouragement of turbulence in Sudan, with Libyan students occupying the Libyan Embassy in Khartoum last week, a speech three weeks ago which was tantamount to incitement to rebellion among the Tuareg tribes in Mali and Niger and, of course, the support given to Idi Amin.

What is one to make of this? Is the colonel the fifth column, as some will have it, of a long-term Soviet plan for Africa? Is he a radical religious zealot fighting his own Jihad with baffling opportunism but well protected by the wealth at his country's disposal?

Colonel Gaddafi has acquitted himself well domestically. He has seen to the improvements badly needed in the material life of Libyans. He is devout, and, as his Green book shows, an evangelist. It is true to say that his Pan-Arab ambitions have been frustrated. This is given as the reason for his interest in Africa. But there is nothing new to that interest. Colonel Gaddafi has been dispensing goodwill and aid in many parts of West Africa for a number of years. He was at the forefront of the campaign to entice certain states to break diplomatic relations with Israel.

President Senghor has accused him of being a racialist and of wanting to set up a Sahelian state which would stretch from the Atlantic through to Sudan, including the nomadic populations of this region. President Senghor has also been at the forefront of the campaign against Libya's activities in Chad.

The problem of Chad is a more serious affair than the other Gaddafi adventures. For almost nine months, since the eruption of fighting in March, Goukhouni Weddei's camp, which includes the Libyan protégé, Ahmat Acyl, has seemed to have the better of Hissen Habre's Forces Armées du Nord, who are undoubtedly supported by Egypt. But Habre has managed to hold off the pressure. This year alone has cost at least 5,000 lives.

It is reported that Colonel Gaddafi accompanied President Weddei on a tour of Faya Largeau, which Habre claimed had been in his control last week. It is not clear whether the Libyan units that have penetrated into Chad intend to approach or enter N'Djamena. If they do so the FROLINAT — as the Goukhouni camp still refers to itself — will have received a considerable boost for its objective of eliminating Habre. If the end result is the unity of the Chadian state — something which has never occurred since independence — then a first step to a solution in Chad will have been taken.

Regardless of Libya's intentions in Chad, one thing that is certain is that the civil war in Chad was caused and has been continued by foreign interference. To criticise Libya alone is either ignorant or hypothetical.

As to the future, secession of the south is unlikely. No one in Africa will permit this, least of all Chad's neighbours. The question in most minds is whether a victory of an alliance patronised by Libya will result in Libyan control of whatever future regime emerges in Chad. The country has a vital strategic position in Africa and this increases the fears of Libya using Chad as a springboard for southern penetration into Africa. One can be sure that Lagos is dealing with this delicate issue already; Tripoli is well aware that it must balance the Nigerian desire not to sour relations with Libya with Nigeria's immediate regional interests.

The judgement on Colonel Gaddafi's intentions in Chad must be postponed. His annexation of the Aouzou strip in northern Chad will be a test case for any future Chadian regime.

CONFUSION OVER EXTENT OF LIBYAN INVOLVEMENT IN CHAD NOTED

LD261141 Paris LE MONDE in French 23-24 Nov 80 p 26

[Unattributed report: "Controversy Over the Size of the Libyan Intervention in the Battle for N'Djamena"]

[Text] A controversy is developing about the presence of Libyan troops in the Chadian capital where fighting is still going on between supporters of northern armed forces [FAN] leader Hissein Habre and of Goukouni Oueddei, president of the National Union Transition Government [GUNT], head of state and leader of the People's Armed Forces [FAP] which are now fighting in close cooperation with the Chadian Armed Forces under GUNT Vice President Lieutenant Colonal Kamougue.

On Friday, 21 November, FAP circles denied any direct involvement by the Libyan army although the FAN camp was still asserting that it has "irrefutable proof of Libyan presence alongside the FAP."

For their part several Western journalists who were able to visit N'Djamena from the Cameroonian city of Kousseri said on Friday that they had received no confirmation in N'Djamena of the presence of Libyan troops despite the reports recently cited by the Pentagon on the presence of 3,000 to 4,000 Libyan soldiers in Chad. It is true that FAP did not allow these journalists to visit the battle zone. However, they were able to observe almost daily attacks by a Soviet-made Tupolev 22 bomber apparently belonging to the Libyan Air Force and the presence in Chadian air space of a Libyan U.S.-made Chinook-type helicopter.

While making a brief stopover in Paris GUNT spokesman (Thiam Tidjani) said that his government "has appealed to Libya for help in putting down the uprising" and denied that the Tripoli leaders wish to "destabilize the countries in the Sahel area." Mr Tidjani added: "If any country but Libya had intervened in Chad, some governments would not have reacted unfavorably."

The Foreign Ministry, which is reiterating the remarks made recently by [French Foreign Minister] Jean Francois-Poncet who said that France "is following very closely" developments in the Chad situation, stated that it is not in a position to confirm the presence of as big an expeditionary force outside N'Djamena as the Pentagon has indicated. In addition, French experts on African questions are showing skepticism about Libya's ability to send a expeditionary force representing almost one-tenth of the regular army so far away from its home bases at a time when major concentrations of Libyan troops are also being reported on the Tunisian and Egyptian borders.

PROBLEMS IN SENEGALESE, GAMBIAN RELATIONS NOTED

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 pp 2278-2280

[Text] AT THE HEART of the latest incidents in The Gambia lies the issue of relations between Banjul and Dakar. This central problem has been obscured somewhat by allegations of subversion brought against Libya by the Senegalese leader, President Seghor, and the Gambian Government, which broke off relations with Libya on October 29, the day before 150 Senegalese troops suddenly appeared in Banjul. Some 40 of these troops landed unexpectedly in MacCarthy Square on Friday, October 31, during the funeral procession of Commander Eku Mahoney, Deputy Commander of the Field Forces, while the rest of the Senegalese were deployed to neutralise the airport at Yundum and the Field Forces garrison at Baku, 15 kilometres from the capital.

Events were precipitated by the shooting of Commander Mahoney. The version of his death put out by the Gambian authorities was that the commander had caught a constable, Mustapha Danso, on duty smoking cannabis and was shot by Danso. Sources in Dakar maintain that his death occurred when disagreements arose among a group of plotters. There was contact, it is alleged, between the plotters and the staff of the inordinately large Libyan Embassy in Banjul.

The Gambia broke off relations with Libya because it alleged that young Gambians were being trained in Libya for subversive activities in The Gambia "or the sub-region". On July 15, the Gambian Government had sent an official protest to Tripoli complaining of the treatment of Gambians who, the government alleged, were being forcibly taken into military training. The recruiter in The Gambia was Sheikh Ahmet Niasse, who has already acquired a certain notoriety in Senegal for his claim that he will lead Islamic forces in Senegal to create an Islamic republic. The government release on the break of diplomatic relations with Libya repeated the allegations that embassy staff in Banjul had been "collaborating with subversive clandestine groups in The Gambia," according to The Gambia Information News Services.

The first release about the arrival of the Senegalese troops issued two days after they came, rather mysteriously referred to "combined manoeuvres" between the two countries forces.

The following day two small radical opposition parties were banned: MOJA, the Gambian namesake of the Liberian Movement for Justice in Africa, which has existed since late 1979, and the Gambian Socialist Revolutionary Party. Both were outlawed and had most of their leaders arrested, among them Mr. Koro Sall, the MOJA leader.

By the following weekend the Senegalese troops were due to leave and whatever tension there was in Banjul had been dispelled, largely as a result of the surprise effect of the arrival of the Senegalese.

Behind these straightforward facts lie a series of questions that remain unanswered. What was the role of Sheikh Ahmet Niasse, the "Ayatollah of Kaolack", as he is derisively known in Senegal? Was it the Gambians who invited the Senegalese of their own accord or did the Senegalese persuaded the Gambians of some Libyan involvement, and therefore of the need for Senegalese protection? Why the delay and contradiction in some of the communiques concerning the presence of the Senegalese troops in The Gambia? Lastly, to what extent is the Libyan question, however real, little more than a diversion from the real question of Gambian/Senegalese relations, which have never been of the happiest?

Those well acquainted with Gambian and Senegalese affairs are not altogether convinced of the significance of Sheikh Ahmet Niasse. He acquired a certain notoriety in Senegal when he emerged in Paris last year proclaiming that he would turn Senegal into an Islamic republic and subsequently smuggled some cassettes of his speeches and thoughts into Senegal, through The Gambia. They were intended for his home region of Kaolack. He then found refuge in Libya. Niasse, however, is not taken very seriously in Senegal. He lost ground when his own patron, M. Babacar Ba, ceased to be foreign minister. M. Babacar Ba had previously been the finance minister and had deployed substantial effort to Kaolack, where he built-up an important political base.

Now Sheikh Ahmet Niasse is being put forward as an agent of Libyan expansionism. Senegal broke off relations with Libya earlier this year for reasons identical to The Gambia's. It has now been suggested, though it seems somewhat far-fetched, that the Gambian imbroglio was to be a diversion while Libya penetrated into Chad.

What remains unclear is the Gambian reason for taking the momentous diplomatic step of permitting Senegalese troops to be sent to Banjul to ensure the security of the government. The convoluted and self-contradictory communique's that were issued following the Senegalese intervention testify to a degree of apprehension in Banjul. The Senegalese Government, for its part, issued a statement saying that 150 Senegalese troops had been sent to Banjul at the invitation of the Gambian Government and in accordance with a defence pact signed in 1967. As far as Dakar was concerned the Gambian talk of "combined manoeuvres" appeared too much like Gambian reluctance to admit the fact that it had invited the Senegalese to send troops. President Senghor, who is on a visit to France, has repeated his allegation that Libya is preparing to destabilise all the Sahelian countries, namely Senegal, The Gambia, Mali, Niger and Chad, by training an army of mixed nationals in Libya.

In the early sixties the Senegalese had seen the existence of The Gambia, then still a British colony, as a thorn in their side. The Gambia used to be referred to by Senegalese as "our Quebec". Before Gambian independence in 1965 protracted negotiations took place, following a UN report on the possibility of some close link between the two countries, to see if some formal relationship could be established. Union, for which the Senegalese pressed was rejected by the Gambian representatives. Some looser federated relationship met with Senegalese disapproval after their recent and unhappy problems with Mali — the Soudan Fédération between Mali and Senegal broke up.

In 1965, on the occasion of The Gambia independence an editorial appeared in these columns which highlighted the concerns which must prey on the minds of Gambian authorities today: "It is supposed by some that independence will be followed soon by union with Senegal, which surrounds The Gambia on all but her Atlantic side . . . Now it is quite certain that the union will not come soon, and it may never come at all . . . If independence should prove burdensome to the people of The Gambia, it will be the British and the French who are entirely to blame. They created it [and] in this case the creation, even if it has come to stay, has been a grave disservice to the peoples on either side of the frontiers.

"These frontiers are the result of the British supposition, since entirely disproved, that if Britain controlled strips of land alongside the Gambia River she would, in this way, attract to her own port of Bathurst the trade from surrounding Senegal . . . (The Gambia's) political worries are likely to be external, or at any rate to arise from her external relations. One cannot, for example, exclude the possibility that if union does not come soon, causes of conflict between The Gambia and Senegal may arise, either because of smuggling from The Gambia into Senegal, or because Senegal political exiles find refuge in The Gambia". (West Africa, February 13, 1965).

President Senghor and President Jawara later established a good personnel relationship and Senegal accepted that an independent The Gambia would continue to exist. Nevertheless, Senegalese domestic politics, as one in the case of Sheikh Ahmet Niasse, and smuggling have both been areas of deep concern to those who are responsible for relations between the two countries. Senegal is currently going through a period of high tension domestically, and the fact that Casamance, the southern region south of The Gambia, is almost cut off from the capital, adds to the problems. Casamançais are still known to say when they leave Ziguinchor for Dakar that they "are going to Senegal". Smuggling into The Gambia has contributed substantially to the Gambian economy. Banjul is a port that has lower tariffs than Dakar and thus goods, especially luxury goods, find their way from Banjul into Dakar and other Senegalese centres.

The recent focal point of contention between the two countries has, however, been the Gambia River Development Organisation, OMVG. Differences over plans for a bridge and a dam on the Gambia River remain, practically speaking, unresolved. Earlier this year, the two governments finally agreed to the construction of a bridge, but the work has been delayed. The existence of such a bridge would facilitate Senegalese contact with Casamance, but would reduce the effectiveness of the boundaries of The Gambia.

The Gambia's initial concern had been to have a downstream barrage to desalinate the river. They have now agreed to a dam further up river which will provide more substantial irrigation facilities and with which goes a road over the dam. Work on the dam is at the earliest stages yet and the road must wait.

Such issues form the substance of relations between Senegal and The Gambia. Until recently one could describe the Gambian position towards Senegal as being successfully avoiding Senegalese encroachment, while trying to apply some economic flesh to formal sovereignty. This means that the presence of Senegalese troops in Banjul is of great significance. For the first time, Banjul has had to have recourse to Dakar for domestic political security. With this the Senegalese have acquired a vital lever for future negotiations with the Gambian Government. The next step may be pressure from Senegal to establish some form of customs union between the two countries.

VISITING ANGOLA MPLA DELEGATION DEPARTS CONGO, COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

AB271846 Brazzaville Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 27 Nov 80

[Text] The delegation of the MPLA-Workers Party led by Comrade (Jisula Laman) left Brazzaville late this morning following a 48-hour visit to the People's Republic of the Congo. The discussions between the MPLA delegation with the Congolese Labor Party ended this morning at the general secretariat of the party's Central Committee. The following is an excerpt from the communique issued at the end of the meeting:

During their discussions, the two delegations noted with satisfaction that the relations between the two parties have continued to develop and to be strengthened on the basis of their firm attachment to the principles of peace, militant solidarity and proletarian internationalism. The two delegations, which always remember the revolutionary commitments of the immortal Marien Ngouabi and Antonio Agostinho Neto, reaffirmed their firm determination to give more dynamism to the cooperation between both parties and develop the contacts between their respective mass organizations in order to ensure better harmonization of their common activities. The two delegations, therefore, agreed to actively search for ways and means of ensuring constant and harmonious development of the cooperation between the People's Republic of the Congo and the People's Republic of Angola by working firmly in a spirit of complementarity.

After a thorough examination of problems relating to the defense and security of the Congolese and Angolan revolutions, the two delegations undertook to increase their cooperation in this field in order to strengthen the defense and security of their common borders. After a large exchange of views on the experiences of the Congolese Labor Party and the MPLA-Workers Party, the two delegations reaffirmed their unanimous determination to work for a rational harmonization of their positions on all problems relating to the total liberation of the continent, the consolidation of African unity and the strengthening of unity, solidarity and cooperation among all the progressive countries of the world.

The delegation of the MPLA-Workers Party expressed happiness over the progress made by the Congolese Labor Party in the affirmation of the country's sovereignty in all fields and especially in the field of the construction of an independent national economy for the establishment of a socialist society in the People's Republic of the Congo. The delegation of the Congolese Labor Party expressed great appreciation for the achievements of the MPLA-Workers Party in the political and economic fields which constitute the bases for the consolidation of the national independence and the affirmation of a socialist society in Angola as envisaged by the program and resolutions of the first constituent congress of the MPLA-Workers Party. The delegation of the Congolese Labor Party hails the (?establishment) of the popular authorities and the constitution of the People's Assembly in the People's Republic of Angola. The two delegations expressed complete satisfaction about the quality of their discussions which took place in a spirit of friendship, frankness, [words indistinct] and revolutionary warmth.

During the meeting, the two delegations also examined the international situation and expressed concern about the development of certain international problems which endanger the freedom of people and their right to dignity and progress and which constitute, therefore, a threat to international peace and security. Concerning Namibia, the two delegations condemned the illegal occupation of this territory as well as South Africa's delaying tactics aimed at hindering the implementation of the United Nations plan. They declared support for the UN plan and the application of resolution No 435 calling for the immediate independence of Namibia and reiterated their lasting solidarity with the SWAPO which is the only legitimate and authentic representative of the Namibian people. The two delegations strongly condemned the acts of aggression and barbarity perpetrated by the racist South African regime against the People's Republic of Angola and the front line countries. They expressed concern about the situation prevailing in South Africa and reaffirmed their moral support for the people of South Africa who are struggling against the odious and reactionary system of apartheid.

The two delegations congratulated the Saharan people for the brilliant victories achieved in the political, diplomatic and military fields under the leadership of the Polisario Front. They expressed their active solidarity and unreserved support for the heroic struggle of this brotherly people.

Concerning the Middle East situation, the two delegations reiterated their firm condemnation of the Camp David agreements and again assured the Palestine Liberation Organization of their lasting support for the right of the Palestine people to an independent and soverign state.

After analyzing the Chadian tragedy, the two delegations expressed great concern about the situation and declared firm support for the resolution on Chad adopted during the 17th OAU summit conference of heads of state and government held in Freetown from 1 to 4 July 1980 as well as their support for the transitional national union government headed by President Goukouni Oueddei. The two delegations expressed deep concern about the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq and hoped these two brotherly countries will meet rapidly to solve the conflict through negotiations.

PATASSE FREED FROM PRISON--Bangui, 24 Nov (AFP)--Mr Ange Patasse, the leader of the Central African People's Liberation Movement (MLPC), was provisionally set free by the Central African authorities, it was learned on Monday in Bangui. Mr Ange Patasse, whose health deteriorated 3 weeks ago, was admitted to the National Hospital in Bangui for medical care. Mr Patasse, who is convalescent, is living among his family in his residence located in a suburb north of Bangui, where he has been receiving relatives and friends for 2 days. Mr Patasse was arrested in October 1979 while he was trying to flee and he was kept in detention at the Ngaragba jail. He was notably accused of staging popular demonstrations in Bangui. BOKASSA AIDES' DEATH SENTENCES--Bangui, 27 Nov (AFP)--The Central African Republic Supreme Court Wednesday confirmed death sentences meted out to five accomplices of ousted dictator Emperor Jean-Bedel Bokassa for their part in the massacre of schoolchildren during demonstrations here in January and April 1979. Former General Josephat Ma-Yomokola, former Captain Joseph Mokoa, soldiers Joseph Baissa and Pierre Koba and former minister to the imperial court Robert Boukende were sentenced by the criminal court on September 19 after being found guilty of murder, complicity to murder and disposal of dead bodies. President David Dacko, through a presidential clemency order, is their only remaining hope of avoiding execution. Delay over the trials of members of the ousted regime and the absence of any clarification over the situation of the ex-emperor, who is in exile in the Ivory Coast, are seen as a major cause of unease in this former French colony. Many of the families of the 100 or so schoolchildren who were murdered by members of Bokassa's imperial guard believe that Mr Dacko has slowed down the pace of the trials and hung back from ordering execution of sentences already imposed because of his links with most of the accused. Mr Dacko himself, speaking a few days ago, said that if the supreme court confirmed the death sentences he wanted to take the matter to a seminar of national reflection which is scheduled to meet between December 8 and 14. The seminar, part of a bid to bring about national reconciliation in the wake of the ravages of the Bokassa era, should consider this serious problem, the solution of which ought not to weigh on the conscience of one person alone, he added. 'NO URGENT NEED' FOR ELECTION--Colonel Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbazogo, president of Equatorial Guinea, who ended his official working visit to Paris on Monday, 17 November, welcomed the increased cooperation between the two countries. "We have obtained French aid," he indicated during a press conference, "for constructing the port of Malabo, developing small-scale fishing and improving the capital's electricity network. France is also going to open a cultural center in Malabo in addition to the one already operating in Bata." Francesco Macias Nguema's successor also stated that there is "no urgent need" to organize elections in his country, since the "most important task is rebuilding the nation." DROUGHT HAVING CATASTROPHIC EFFECTS ON ECONOMY

[Text] THE GREAT Sahelian drought is having catastrophic effects on the Gambian economy. For the past twelve years, the state of the economy has gradually deteriorated. Agricultural production, the backbone of the economy, has been crippled by drought. This sharp decline is also having adverse effects on other sectors of the economy, as can be seen from all economic indicators. Consequently, there has been a depreciation in the country's foreign assets.

According to the 1980 Budget Speech, the gross domestic product has fallen from D251.4m. in 1978/79 to D200.1m. in 1979/80. The per capita income estimated at D440.42 has decreased compared with D526.09 in 1978/79.

Economic activity was rather sluggish during the past year. Barely 71,120 tonnes of groundnuts were bought by the licensed buying agents. This is about sixty per cent of the tonnage delivered in the previous year and hit earnings of the Gambia Produce Marketing Board which also had to contend with low world prices.

External trade is currently estimated at D402m., a rise of 27.6 per cent over last year's figures. Exports increased thanks to the rise in the value of fish which rose by about 56 per cent. The value of visible imports has also risen to about D2.96m., a 34.2 per cent increase compared to last year. This rise is much higher than that for exports.

Working from the consumer price index, the rate of inflation fell to 5 per cent as compared with 7.5 per cent in 1978/79. The increase in the prices of locally produced commodities accounted for 73 per cent of the total rise in the consumer price index during 1979/80.

During the last financial year, the deficit in visible trade was estimated at about D190m. compared with D127m. in 1978/79. One reason for this is the deterioration in the terms of trade during the past three years. But, in March, 1979 the country received D9.2m. under the Stabex Scheme of the Lome Convention in order to remedy the harmful effects of the instability of export earnings.

Money supply reached the peak of D63.8m. by the end of January 1980. This was below the level of D80.3m. reached at the end of January 1979. The decline was due mainly to the fall in the country's foreign assets and the low groundnut crop of the 1979/80 season. To limit further loss in foreign reserves, government adopted certain austerity measures. The interest rate for lending and depositing in commercial banks was increased. The Central Bank of The Gambia raised its lending rate to banks from 6 — 8 per cent per annum with effect from 15th January, 1980. Commercial banks have followed suit with similar increases in the lending rates to their clients.

The problems of the Gambian economy are still basically that of a one crop country. In order to diversify and alleviate this dependency on a single cash crop, government has introduced cotton cultivation in the Upper River and MacCarthy Island Divisions. The project, financed by the African Development Bank has seen some progress following initial setbacks. The average yields of 907 kilograms per hectare, as well as the overall total production for the year just ended, have been greater than that of the previous year.

Self-sufficiency in rice, the staple diet, is one of the main objectives of the Gambia government: 2234 hectares have been under irrigated cultivation during this past dry season and it is anticipated that 11,000 tonnes of paddy rice will be harvested as a results. This represents about a third of current imports.

The contribution of the export of fish, lobsters, shrimps and palm kernel, which is one of the country's natural resources with great potential for development, seems to fluctuate. The smoked bonga, which used to dominate exports has now been surpassed by the export of frozen sardinella. The export of shrimps and lobsters have also increased significantly because of the advent of the industrial infrastructures in Banjul, namely the ice plant, cold storage and freezers. Shark fins and bladders are exported to the Far East and United Kingdom. Some cattle are exported to Ghana.

Tourism, which is a major earner of foreign exchange, witnessed a fall during 1979/80 season. A total of 24,821 tourists visited the Gambia compared with 25,907 during 1978/79 season. This has been attributed to a reduction in the number of Scandinavian tourists. However, in order to overcome inadequate accommodation which has been a major constraint, there are plans for additional bed facilities. A total of 3,280 beds would be available by the end of this year when Kombo Beach Hotel, Casino Hotel and Atlantic Hotel extension become operational.

The discovery of one million tons of heavy minerals such as ilmenite, zircon and rutile in Sanyang, Batakunku and Kartong area have so far brought no respite to the country since world prices are still considered too low to make the proposed processing plant for rutile and zircon a viable enterprise.

However, the development of fire bricks for the building industry has reached an advanced stage. A feasibility study on setting up a semi-mechanised fire brick plant has been completed by China.

When this becomes operational it would reduce gross imports of cement, and so a favourable impact on the general trade balance.

The first national plan has been infrastucture-oriented. During the last financial year, projects such as the Soma/Yorroberikunda road project progressed, the Buniadu/Albreda as well as the Kiang West roads were commenced. Yundum Airport Phase III was completed and the Chinese-sponsored multi-purpose stadium was begun.

The level of employment during 1979 increased considerably as a result of the implementation of development projects. Construction activity has been very productive both in the private and public sectors. Employment level rose by 13 per cent in the private and 8 per cent in the public sectors. Therefore the total number of employees increased by 9 per cent in 1979 when compared with 1978 figures. This has consequently alleviated the unemployment problem.

The expansion of the irrigation system and use of improved farm implements can alleviate dependency on rainfed agriculture and so contribute towards the development of the state of the country's economy, a priority consideration for all sahelian countries now.

Priority is also being given to the construction of the bridge/barrage at the Trans-Gambia crossing. When this is completed, 24,240 hectares of land will be available for cultivation compared with the 2,666 hectares currently being utilized.

If all this irrigated land is available to the farmer, together with the farm implements, the Gambia will be sufficiently equipped to combat the drought and find self-sufficiency in food.

MOJA MEMBER DISCUSSES POST-COUP CHANGES

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 pp 2291,2294

[Text] It is now seven months since President William Tolbert was overthrown by a military coup lead by Master-Sergeant Samuel K. Doe. Several of the initial problems still hold the attention of the ruling People's Redemption Council, including army indiscipline and economic depression. While in the US last month, Professor Amos Sawyer, of the University of Liberia, a leading member of MOJA (the Movement for Justice in Africa) and a former mayoral candidate in Monrovia spoke with Africa News about the changes since April.

Question: It seems that the workings of the People's Redemption Council (PRC) administration are poorly understood. Are the various groups and individuals within the coalition government co-operating successfully?

Answer: The military brought in certain civilian technicians to assist them in getting the job done. The technicians come from various organisational backgrounds, but they did not come to government as organisational representatives with bargaining powers and so forth. So actually we can't really call it a "coalition government."

After the coup and the formation of the government, there was a co-ordination problem for a while, a problem of getting the Cabinet, the various ministries and the PRC all operating within the same terms of reference. Now I think this has improved, following meetings between the Cabinet and the PRC at which some ground rules were laid. There have also been an increased number of Cabinet meetings.

Q: What role does your organisation, MOJA see itself playing?

A: MOJA's people are in the government. They bring to it not only their skills but a high level of discipline and a set of aspirations that they continue to hold for society. As you well know, ours has been a struggle for social justice, and this means that even within government circles now we continue to plug this point of view. We insist on some degree of economic and political discipline, and we are fighting the tendency to pomposity that could seep into any government if one isn't careful about it. There's something about an office: Once you hold an office and everyone is saying "yes, sir" all the time — it can swell one's head. MOJA keeps ringing the bell all the time.

Q: So even though MOJA has a very definite role in the administrative machinery, it's still keeping up its organising efforts and deals with people in the countryside?

A: MOJA's overtly political activities were suspended when the Constitution was suspended. However, there were other things like the literacy programme and the SUSUKUU agricultural programme — all of these are still going.

Q: Earlier this year, before the coup, you were running for the office of mayor of Monrovia as a MOJA candidate. Is there any prospect for such local elections in the near future?

A: The suspension of the Constitution and political activity means that all elections are indefinitely postponed. I think they will have to wait until the formal return to civilian rule, . . . which is a very necessary step.

Q: Is there any way to predict when that will take place?

A: The idea of 1983 as a target date has been floating around, but all this is unofficial, really. What we are concerned about is that the process leading to civilian rule needs to be well-established. The constitutional review of the electoral process has to be very carefully looked at. This is one of the contributions we were trying to make with my mayoral campaign.

We have several generations of Liberians who do not know how to vote — who have never experienced it. So we need to look at the entire system, which previously included property clauses and a poorly-monitored process of voter registration.

Q: Turning our attention to the economy, has the general situation improved since the coup?

A: The economy is not in very good shape. As you know, right after the coup, credit lines were frozen: The EEC froze its own co-operative activities with the Liberian government, and many of the bilateral aid doners were moving cautiously. To a larger degree, most of these assistance channels have been unclogged now, but there is still a 'wait and see' approach to the Liberian situation.

I think now the major problem is from the commercial banks. The World Bank has come through, the EEC has come through, and bilateral relationships with West Germany, France, and others all have come unplugged. But the stiff lending conditions of the commercial banks, which affect directly the day-to-day business transactions of merchants and other people, still pose a major hurdle.

Q: Wages have been raised in the civil service and army, and we understand that there is pressure as well for pay increases in the private sector. But what about the people in the countryside? Have they felt any positive changes from the coup?

A: Yes, I think a major development has taken place — the abolition of the hut taxes.

The income level of people in the interior is about $70-74 per year. Out of this money, subsistence farmers were forced to pay something like $10-15 in hut taxes. Also there were other indirect and informal taxes like gifts to officials — for things like alleged development projects that never came through. So you can see that the abolition of the hut taxes makes a significant difference.

In addition, beyond the tax's monetary impact, people were always disturbed from their farming during the collection period. Officials coming through would manhandle people, catch women and tie them up until their husbands showed up to pay the tax, etc. The whole quality of rural life was always affected by this tax collection process. Therefore, you see, both socially and economically, it's an improvement.

Q: So you feel that the April coup has laid the basis for real progress throughout Liberian society?

A: The major change is the breaking of a century-old alienation for the masses of the people. If you were in Monrovia now, you would see in spite of the economic crunch that there is an air of liberation. Go to the nightclubs and around the city and you'll see that the common person on the street has a new dignity. In essence this is the major development that cannot be reversed. With this new sense of dignity the people are prepared to work hard to safeguard the revolution and make the sacrifices necessary to move ahead — as long as the leadership is willing to point the way.

Q: What about the criticism that Sergeant Doe and the PRC really haven't brought enough tangible benefits to the people?

A: Let's face it: Doe and the PRC over the last six months have been learning jobs like anyone else. These are sergeants who formed themselves overnight into generals — they didn't come with a ready formula. Secondly, they did not have a clearcut ideological direction. Thirdly, they found themselves saddled with an undisciplined army — the problem of enforcing discipline there has been four or five months in the solving and fortunately now they're putting the tap on it. . . .

So i think the issue of order, of insuring day-to-day survival — economic and otherwise — had been the preoccupation of government. And it is only now, in planning the return to a two-year programme, that the questions of unemployment and the like can be dealt with.

Q: Liberia has been heavily influenced by the Western world in many spheres, and there has also been criticism that this continues unchecked. Will there be any changes in this direction?

A: Not yet. The character of the coup is such that it brings the common man to power, but it has not meaningfully changed the overall orientation of the country in relation to other states or other cultures. The next step is to return to the traditional African culture because, for one thing, the American culture that dominates the society is appreciated, understood and practised only by a small group.

MACHEL SEEN SUPPORTING USSR FOREIGN POLICY

Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Nov 80 p 5

[Article by Daniel Vernet]

[Excerpts] Moscow--The Soviet-Mozambique declaration issued on Sunday, 23 November 1980, following Samora Machel's official 1-week visit to the Soviet Union denotes a clear rapprochement between Maputo and Moscow, if not even an adherence by the Mozambican leaders to the Soviet positions. Of course, the USSR and the former Portuguese colony had signed a treaty of friendship and cooperation in 1977. However, Mozambique had, to-date, kept its distance vis-a-vis Soviet policy, notably by maintaining cordial relations with China, a country Machel had visited as recently as 1978. Mozambique had no embassy or a resident ambassador in Moscow until last September.

The rapprochement with the Soviet Union was also expressed through the unreserved support given to Soviet foreign policy.

In regard to Africa, the joint declaration expressed satisfaction about the "deepening anti-imperialist character of the national liberation struggle," but it did not disclose any details about the two principal subjects which apparently were at the core of the conversations between the two delegations: the Zimbabwe and Namibia issues.

The Soviets reportedly asked Machel to serve as their intermediary with Mugabe, whom they had ignored during the struggle for independence, supporting instead his rival Joshua N'Komo.

Machel's visit was marked by the signature of various economic agreements. The USSR will develop "certain priority sectors" of the Mozambican economy. An agreement was signed for the prospection and exploitation of pegmatite ore deposits and another for coal deposits; a third agreement was also signed for the prospection of natural gas and oil, to take effect in 1982. The Soviets will build five agricultural experimental stations. An intergovernmental economic, technical and commercial commission was established. Finally, the USSR will build a floating dock and a floating workshop to repair trawlers of up to 4,500 tons. It will also provide the necessary equipment and a training center.

PEOPLE SHOWING DESIRE FOR CHANGE

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 p 2274

[Text]

PRESIDENT SIAKA STEVENS last week returned to Sierra Leone after a most successful official visit to Britain (see page 2305) to find waiting for him some evidence of discontent with his government. This has displayed itself mostly in student protests but is widely thought to be more widely based. One general question that is raised is whether the present political arrangements in Sierra Leone are adequate to deal with discontent among the people about the way they are governed. This is a testing time for the whole theory of the one-party state.

It is a common pattern throughout the world at this time that peoples are displeased with their governments. The big factor is the world-wide recession and inflation. The people of America translated their feeling that President Carter was inadequate to the challenges facing him into a massive electoral victory for President-elect Reagan: they and the world may come to regret this. The people of Jamaica felt that Mr. Michael Manley was not dealing with the economic problems that beset them, and so voted him out of his office of Prime Minister. The people of Britain are on all sides vocally denouncing the economic policies of Mrs. Thatcher and (some of them) dreaming of the days when Mr. Michael Foot might take over. The people of India lost confidence in Mrs. Gandhi and removed her from office after a general election in 1978, and then regained confidence in her and restored her to office. Electorates are fickle and their favours do not necessarily reflect accurately the competence (and certainly not the honour) of the governments involved. But the point of the examples quoted above is that the wishes of the people were able to find expression in the political systems involved and change was brought about without disturbing the fabric of society.

In Nigeria and Ghana new party systems have been going for one year that include the organisation and expression of opposition to the government and which contemplate the possibility of change every four years. Perhaps Sierra Leone can learn from their experience. Change is often desirable in itself. The dictum about "Power corrupts" has an element of truth, both in the sense that continual and unchallenged power leads to financial chicanery and in the sense that it leads to inefficiency. A new broom is sometimes needed in the best-run households to ensure that piles of dust behind the furniture are dealt with. More important, the possibility of change coming in the future means that present discontents can be sublimated into electoral dreams and political work.

In Sierra Leone desire for change finds itself bottled up. It breaks forth in students stoning the car of Vice-President S. I. Koroma, in clashes with the police before State House (in which the Vice-Chancellor of Fourah Bay College, Professor Arthur Porter, a reportedly unwilling participant in the demonstration, was severely beaten by police), in the burning of cars that brought the Mayor of Freetown and the visiting Lord Mayor of Kingston upon Hull to Fourah Bay, in the formation of opposition parties by Sierra Leoneans overseas (see page 2337), and in much muttering under the breath in closed rooms. Opposition finds open expression in parts of the press, notably the Tablet, but that too is threatened by the new Press Bill, which is enacted but not yet enforced.

It is instructive to look back to May, 1978, and see what was said when the one-party system was introduced to Sierra Leone. "We are tired of fighting among ourselves," said President Stevens. "Those willing to work for peace and progress have nothing to fear under the APC government, for the new constitution makes provision for every Sierra Leonean." Dr. Conteh, the Foreign Minister, said the one-party system would put an end to disquiet, coups, counter-coups and martial law. The multi-party system was not suitable for developing countries. "The new constitution will put an end to tribalism, instability and other factional tendencies, and no more will brother rise against brother, or family against family."

The constitution was unable to guarantee that the people would not become discontented with the government and desire a change. Certain changes do and have taken place: the Minister of Finance was retired and a new candidate introduced, the Minster of Information was moved and the Vice-Presidents were shuffled. But this has not amounted to a change in direction. President Stevens has hinted that he may retire after his year as OAU Chairman, which would obviously mean major changes. He has refused to speculate on a successor, saying this would be presumptuous and improper. What would be proper would be to ensure that a method of succession was made clear — that the people were allowed some choice.

There is nothing treasonable about a wish for change. Patriotic, honourable men may differ on the best way to deal with economic malaise, the right priorities for educational expenditure, whether to invest more in new forms of diamond extraction, the importance of foreign policy, and much else. It is dangerous not to have a political system that recognises this.

UNCERTAINTY MARS FUTURE OF HIGHER EDUCATION

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 pp 2277-2278

[Text] ANYONE FAMILIAR with the distinguished academic traditions of Fourah Bay College (which with Njala University College constitutes the University of Sierra Leone) would have found the report of an exodus of academic staff from what was in former times regarded as the 'Athens of West Africa' depressing. (West Africa, October 13). The recent decision by these well-established non-expatriate academics to 'vote with their feet' is but another chapter in the long sad tale of the decline of standards at the university in recent years.

During the last six or seven years several academics have opted to leave rather than work under the intolerable conditions created by an ever increasing and menacing political control over the university. The exodus has led to a situation in which several faculties are now seriously understaffed while student numbers have been on the increase. This situation has now reached crisis proportions and the beginning of the current academic year in October saw university authorities searching frantically for possible recruits to fill the empty faculty offices. But what are the issues behind the crisis?

Low salaries and poor research facilities for academics, overcrowded classrooms and frequent breakdowns in basic services such as water and electricity on the campuses lie at the heart of the matter. At root therefore the problem is over government financial support for the university. The present regime has not proved as generous to the university as it has been to the army for instance or to the OAU, whose annual summit meeting it hosted in July at great expense.

Through the governing body of the university, the Court, the government exercises direct control over university policy. The president himself is the Chancellor and his is not merely a ceremonial role. Fourah Bay College with a tradition of questioning the policies and even the legitimacy of the nation's rulers (remember Albert Margai and the FBC dons in 1966/7 or the clash between the dons and the military rulers in 1968 or witness the role of the university in the vanguard of the opposition movement to the present regime) has understandably not ranked high in the government's conception of its financial priorities.

To arrest this tradition of critical thought, the regime has since it came into power in 1968 made it its strategy to 'incorporate' established and well respected dons into the ruling establishment. Several have been offered ambassadorships in key capitals. Others have been offered lucrative appointments in government or parastatal agencies. For those who have resisted 'incorporation' and have remained on the campuses, (or as one academic bluntly put it, those who have refused to 'lick arse') academic work has simply been made unrewarding. The low salaries and unsatisfactory conditions have had the net effect of weakening university faculties. The shortage of experienced personnel and money has led to the 'death' of some of the more respectable journals, such as Sierra Leone Studies and the Geographical Society Journal, which once linked the university to the global system of learning and research through its role as a vehicle of expression for academics and other writers in Sierra Leone.

Things have not stopped there. The regime has proved itself reluctant to finance the research of post graduate students, particularly in Arts and Social Science subjects which are regarded as the tools of critical activity. This contrasts with the opportunities for training and research in medicine, the agricultural sciences or the natural sciences. This policy hides behind rationalisations in terms of 'education relevant to the nation's basic needs'. The weekly programme, Forum, in which dons had the opportunity to discuss current issues and trends on national radio and television has been 'watered down' to a weak version of what it used to be. Now chaired by one of the regime's leading media men, it is noted for handpicking those academics or members of the general public who could be relied on to sing the government's praises.

The critical newspaper, the Tablet, itself the creation of some former FBC students who took a leading part in the 1977 demonstrations against the regime, is known to receive covert support from the dons and have become their mouthpiece. The rapid decline in the quality of Sierra Leone newspapers since 1968, for long lamented by this magazine, is indicative of the suppression of intellectual activity.

An expatriate academic at FBC recently remarked that the campus has become the sort of place a 'spent' academic might want to retire to. Contempt for the Vice-Chancellor and the Principals of the two constituent colleges on the campuses is high. They are increasingly regarded as the men who have collaborated or have appeared to have collaborated in the policies which have brought about the decline of what was once a distinguished power house of learning and research.

Meanwhile the exodus continues unabated. Nigeria, particularly, has become a favourite haven for Sierra Leonean dons because of the exciting opportunities which it offers at the present time. What then are the implications for the future of higher education in Sierra Leone? In the short term, it has created the pressing problem of an acute shortage of staff in the university faculties, which has inevitably led to a lowering of standards. At a time when other African universities are putting a lot of energy into indicative planning to reduce their dependency on the metropolitan centres, the present crisis is resoundingly ironic. It is the local university more than any outside institution which is best placed to study and assess the trends and developments in the society.

More immediately too, the tension between the regime and the university can only be exacerbated. The recent humiliation of the Mayor of Freetown on the campus of FBC by the burning of the cars in her motorcade (West Africa, November 1) indicates that there exists a virtual state of war between university students and the regime stemming from the frustrations which have been generated in an era of rising expectations.

In the longer term it is obvious that a hideous uncertainty hovers over the future of higher education in Sierra Leone. The Vice Chancellor, Professor Arthur Porter and the Principals of the two colleges, Professors Kamara and Eldred Jones are talented and resourceful men. They may not want to be remembered by a generation of Sierra Leoneans as the man who presided over the present state of affairs. They have considerable influence. It may not be too late to act. Action more than the 25 per cent salary increase of university staff which was recently announced is needed.

There was a running battle in Freetown on November 6 between police and students of Fourah Bay College, who had kidnapped the Vice-Chancellor, Professor Arthur Porter, and forced him to lead a demonstration from the college campus to State House.

The students were confronted by the Police who fired tear gas into the students, and arrested some of them, including Professor Porter, who was manhandled and taken to the Central Police station. Professor Porter was released when it was discovered that he had been made to lead the demonstration under duress.

The students were demonstrating against the lack of lectures because lecturers have been on strike since the end of October. Despite several meetings between the representatives of the Senior Staff Association of the University, and the government, led by Acting President, S. I. Koroma, there did not seem to be an end in sight to the strike.

The Government issued the following statement after the demonstration.

> Events leading to a sitdown strike in the University of Sierra Leone on the 26th of October 1980, reached a climax today the 6th of November when students of Fourah Bay College, led by the Vice-Chancellor of the University, apparently under duress, decided to march down to State House and other parts of the city in protest against the lecturers who were being asked by the students to resume lectures. Prior to this incident, a series of meetings between the Acting President and Senior Cabinet Ministers on the one hand, and members of the Senior Staff Association and the University Administration on the other, were held in the office of the President in order to iron out points of this agreement, while consideration is being given to the conditions of service of the Staff of the university.

At one stage members of the association, during discussions, requested transportation to Njala University and back, in order to consult with their counterparts at Njala College. This exercise was repeated a number of times without reaching a conclusion. Although the Acting President assisted by the Acting First Vice-President, the Acting Second Vice-President, the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice and the Minister of Education, had gone a great way towards appeasing senior staff members, the appeal appears to have fallen on deaf ears.

On the eve of Wednesday the 5th of November, a State House bus was sent to Njala at the request of the representatives of the Senior Staff Association so that it could travel overnight to collect staff and bring them down for a meeting which was scheduled to be held at State House at 1.30 pm today. Regrettably, the bus driver was physically attacked by the students at the Njala campus before they seized the bus and set it on fire. In addition to this unfortunate incident, four Police vehicles are reported to have been damaged beyond repair.

It will be recalled that prior to the submission of the university's request for the revision of salaries and conditions of service, other institutions in the public sector, such as the Judiciary, the Civil Service and the Medical and dental etc, had applied for salary increases and revision of conditions of service as far back as 1968. The insistence therefore of the senior staff of the University of Sierra Leone, that consideration of their request should be given priority over and above others, submitted before theirs, is without justification, bearing in mind that while they were advocating for improved conditions of service, a sub-committee of Cabinet was already meeting to consider their request together with others. Before he left, [on an official visit to Britain] His Excellency President Stevens had given written assurances that the conditions of the service of the university staff would be looked into, and the matter concluded by the end of November 1980.

At today's meeting, to which members of the Senior Staff Association were invited, the Hon. Attorney-General and Pro-Chancellor, launched a final appeal which was endorsed by the Hon. Minister of Education for the lecturers to resume work on the strength of the assurances given them by senior members of Cabinet. It is hoped that his final appeal will be heeded by members of the Senior Staff Association.

The National Union of Sierra Leone Students (NUSS) issued the following statement on November 7, the day after the demonstration during which Professor Porter was arrested.

The Interim Committee of the National Union of Sierra Leone Students (NUSS) condemns with vigour, the savage brutality perpetrated by the national police force on the Vice-Chancellor of the University and Students of Fourah Bay College during a peaceful match to the State House yesterday, November 6, 1980 to solicit Government's assistance in getting Lecturers of the University back to work.

The presence of the Vice-Chancellor was enough indication of the good intentions of the students, which the Police chose to ignore in their anxiety to brutalise them. It is significant to note that armed Police personnel have been camping at the foot of the Fourah Bay College Mount Aureol since October 24, 1980.

Reports reaching us indicate that about 15 students of Fourah Bay College have been detained at Pademba Road prison and subjected to torture and flogging.

We view this development with exceptional seriousness and repugnance, especially in the light of frequent Police intervention in College campuses throughout the country. Fourah Bay College in January, 1977; Njala University College in March, 1980; Bunumbu in April, 1980 etc. The brutality of the security forces . . . is still fresh in our minds.

While we eschew violence of any kind and from anywhere, there can be no justification for the over-reaction of security forces to an otherwise peaceful march creating an unstable situation among the already suffering masses.

We view the present disenchantment of young people as a direct result of the disparities inherent in our neo-colonial and selfish society but it is impossible to solve basic social problems by totalitarian measures.

The time has long past when partial, half-hearted reforms designed to solve individual problems of the moment and affecting only discrete parts of the functions and institutions of society, can respond to the whole of the turbulent stream of social transformations. Historical evidence is abundant to indicate that these problems can be solved only through broad-based, comprehensive, long-term programmes galvanising the people into determined, well-directed action.

Transformations of societies to benefit the broad masses of the people inevitably involve conflicts and confrontations and we call on the Government to recognise this reality.

We call for the immediate and unconditional release of the detained students.

In our authentic struggle for democracy and social progress, no menace, no brutality, will make us waver.

COMMENTARY ON U.S. ELECTION, CARTER AID PROMISE GIVEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorials]

[Text] America's Choice

The American people have delivered a resounding verdict in favour of conservatism.

Not only have they put Ronald Reagan high and dry into the White House: they have kicked out a number of leading liberal Democrats from the Senate and in the House of Representatives the Democrats only narrowly retained control.

It is a result that has made the professional pollsters look a bit silly and it will undoubtedly cause shock waves in some parts of the world.

Yet is Mr Reagan really the wild man he has been made out to be? He has certainly said some pretty wild things.

But most politicians find that the responsibilities and realities of office have a moderating effect on them. And there is no doubt that the President-elect has the capacity for moderation and good management. He proved this when he was Governor of California.

That being so, is there any reason why he should suddenly turn into a nuclear gunman who confuses brinkmanship with leadership when he becomes chairman of the Capitol Hill board in January?

Conservatism is, of course, something of a dirty word in many parts of Africa.

Yet it was the British Conservatives who brought peace to this country. And it was a Republican Secretary of State, Dr Kissinger, who broke the logjam and made progress towards majority rule here possible.

Carter's Aid Promise

Mr Reagan has not so far had much to say about Africa in general and Zimbabwe in particular.

Dr Chidzero has already raised the question of the substantial amount of aid that President Carter privately promised Mr Mugabe when he visited Washington in August. Will Mr Reagan feel obliged to honour that promise?

There must be hope that he will, even if he does so only as a form of financial confrontation with the Soviet Union. And with his conservative support he could undoubtedly gain Congress's approval far more easily than could Mr Carter.

Even Mr Reagan's policy towards South Africa could prove to be more constructive and productive than that of his predecessor.

Mr Reagan will almost certainly want to see meaningful change in that country. And he is better placed to apply quiet pressure to bring it about, for his is the party of big business.

The South Africans must also know that in Mr Reagan lies their best chance of achieving peaceful change and respectability. They are unlikely to get a better deal from any other President.

To achieve all this, Mr Reagan will have to display strong, positive and fair leadership. These are, of course, the qualities the American people expect to see in their President. We can only pray that he will not let them, and the world, down.

REPORTAGE ON LOCAL ELECTIONS

Polls Changed in Salisbury and Bulawayo

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 80 pp 1, 4

[Text] Tomorrow is polling day in all the major cities and towns in Zimbabwe for the local government elections.

In Salisbury and Bulawayo, however, elections will be held only in the former municipal areas, after it was announced last week that the polls had been postponed indefinitely in the former townships.

In Salisbury, where eight of the 13 former municipal wards are being contested, five were returned to the city council unopposed.

They are the Mayor, Councillor Jack Whiting (Avondale and Gun Hill), Dr Arthur Wilkins (Avenues), Mr John Aitcheson (Marlborough), Mr Clive Pusey (Borrowdale) and Mr Frank Mills (commercial and industrial area).

Six serving councillors have not stood for re-election. There are 22 candidates for the eight wards.

In Ward 2 (Mount Pleasant) there will be a four-way battle between three serving councillors — Mr John West, Mr Cornelius Knaggs and Mrs Susan Colquhoun — and Dr Ahrn Palley, a medical practitioner, advocate and politician.

Mrs Colquhoun said yesterday women had a great deal to contribute in the new councils.

"Remember that women are the home-builders," she said. "They run the homes and budget. The woman is fiercely territorial. She will protect what is hers."

Mrs Colquhoun said democracy would be one of the most important elements of the new council, "otherwise, you might just as well have a political commissariat."

Dr Palley said yesterday he saw a great future for Salisbury. It would develop into an international venue for conferences and gatherings, particularly in the fields of economics, culture and sport.

"For this development the incoming council will have to co-operate fully with the Government," he said. "There is bound to be a ZANU (PF) majority in the council reflecting the position in the country and this will make co-operation with the central Government easier."

Standing

Polling in this ward will take place at the Mount Pleasant Hall and the Baden Powell Scout Hall, Borrowdale Shopping Centre.

Elections start at 7 a.m. and close at 6.30 p.m. in all wards.

In Ward 4 (Highlands) serving councillor Dr Timothy Stamps is standing against Mr Lovemore Mbanga, a politician and businessman. Mr Mbanga is the UANC's national organising secretary and a former government chief whip.

"There is a third candidate in Ward 4," Councillor Stamps said yesterday.

"He is Mr A. Pathy. When people have finished their shopping on a Saturday afternoon and gone for a swim, they will be too tired to go and vote."

Mr Mbanga said he stood for the total exclusion of party politics from civic affairs and solely for the interests of the people in his ward.

His election victory in a predominantly white ward would be a victory for the country's national policy of reconciliation, he said.

He is not running on a UANC ticket.

Highlands voters will poll at Highlands District

Office and Baden Powell Scout Hall, Borrowdale Shopping Centre.

Two serving councillors are the candidates in Greendale (Ward 5). They are Mr John Evans, the sitting councillor and Mr Sam Levy. Polling will be at Greendale District Office and St Luke's Church Hall, Rhodesville.

Mr Evans warned yesterday that free expression of divergent opinions could be lost in a politically controlled local government environment.

"Some years ago the Rhodesian Front tried this and it was a dismal failure," he said.

He appreciated that ZANU (PF) had advocated this action but he believed that if the individualism which had sensibly prevailed in the council for so long was allowed to continue it would be in the best interests of all people.

Coloureds Angry at Venue Change

MEMBERS of the Coloured community last night strongly protested against the decision by the Salisbury City Council to transfer the polling booth for Ward 7 from Arcadia Community Centre to Braeside Scouts Hall and Rhodesville.

One of the candidates for the ward, Mrs Elaine Raftopoulos, told a campaign meeting in Arcadia that the council's decision was "the height of manipulation" designed to further the chances of her rival, Mr Ivor Pitch.

She alleged that "some people in the council" wanted to see the retention of Mr Pitch, "hence this decision against us".

A statement issued by the Arcadia, St Martins, Sunningdale and Ardbennie Residents' Association said:

"We would like it to be known that we are disappointed that the venue (for the elections) which we have used for the past 27 years, has been suddenly removed."

The statement added that despite the distance, "we shall all go and vote".

No comment from the council was available last night.

Big Turnout

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

VOTERS throughout Zimbabwe went to the polls in their tens of thousands yesterday to show that they thought the local government elections were important.

Voter turnout in some wards was more than double the usual 20-30 percent.

The elections were generally trouble-free.

The few reports of incidents included allegations of intimidation in Hartley and a man trying to impersonate someone else to vote.

In Salisbury Dr Timothy Stamps, who was re-elected to Salisbury's Highlands Ward 4, complained yesterday that several long-time residents had been accidentally disenfranchised.

He said he had received about a dozen reports.

"The trouble is that not all those on last year's voters' roll were transferred to the new roll."

He said the mix-up was probably caused by election officers being "overextended" trying to draw up rolls for the townships.

Blacks sang and danced as they formed massive queues outside polling booths.

And fears that whites would stay away proved unfounded when they went to vote in droves.

Umtali Mayor Councillor Max Phillips said: "They realised that they need good representation on the councils."

Candidates set up supporters' benches outside the booths to try to capture the backing of floating voters.

Voting in most former white municipal areas ended last night at 6.30 after 11½ hours of polling.

But most elections in the former townships continue today because of the large number of voters.

Nearly all the candidates in the municipal wards stood as independents — but most township candidates fought on party tickets.

The elections in the Salisbury and Bulawayo local government areas have been postponed because of political violence.

Election fever in Bulawayo was dampened by a torrential downpour of rain in the afternoon. But voting was still heavy.

The busiest polling stations were in ward 4, which was contested by the controversial Mayor, Councillor Mike Constandinos and long-serving councillor Mrs Esmay Scott.

Councillor Constandinos estimated that candidates for the four eastern seats had spent up to $1 000 each on campaigning.

Elections for the 15 western seats have been postponed because of political violence.

The Patriotic Front claimed yesterday afternoon that intimidation by ZANU (PF) was rife in Hartley, where voting continues today.

Party official Mr Gordon Simango, who is standing in Ward 5, said voters had been threatened with violence if they didn't support the ruling party.

"I've personally heard people threatened. It's not a free election in Hartley."

He said he had lodged a complaint with the town clerk.

The turnout was very heavy in the townships of Gwelo, Que Que and Redcliff.

Elections in all wards in Que Que, Fort Victoria, Redcliff and Selukwe finished last night.

In Gwelo, which now has 33 000 registered voters, voting in former municipal wards closed yesterday.

GATOOMA

Ward 9—Virendra Patel (unopposed). Ward 10: Elected—Alderman Chhagun Bhana (281), Mrs Ella Angles (204), Mr Carl Flannigan (182); unsuccessful—Mr Peter Bennet (67).

GWELO.

ZANU (PF) gained effective majorities in Fort Victoria, Que Que and Selukwe in the weekend's municipal elections.

The exception was Redcliff, which now has five white councillors and three black — two of them ZANU (PF) and one PF.

The elections in all wards were completed in Que Que, Fort Victoria, Redcliff and Selukwe on Saturday. Gwelo's elections in the former local government areas continued until 6 p.m. yesterday.

Saturday's elections in the former municipal area of Gwelo resulted in an overwhelming win in both wards for the serving councillor candidates, all six of whom were returned to office for four years.

The present mayor, Councillor Roy Futter, topped the poll with 974 votes. Former mayor, Councillor Ker Langford, came second with 955 and Councillor Ken Winsor was third with 941.

The counting of votes in Wards 3 to 12 did not start until after 8 p.m. yesterday.

Ward 4 at Que Que was won by Mr C. Mutwandwa, ZANU (PF), and not by Mr F. Mashavira, PF, as previously reported.

The new council will consist of eight blacks—seven ZANU (PF) and one PF—and four whites.

● ZANU (PF) won all five African seats in the wards representing the two former African townships of Sakubva and Dangamvura.

In Wards 1 and 2, representing Sakubva, the successful candidates were Mr Stanley Mnaka (who won by more than 1 000 votes) and Mr Davidson Janw.. In Wards 6, 7 and 8, representing Dangamvura, elected were Mr Joseph Monowenyu, Miss Maria Nyatsambo and Dr Godwin Gwisai.

The results in Ward 9 (the city residential area and Weirmouth and Fern Valley) were declared last night. The three retiring councillors — Mr Max Phillips, Alderman Doug Reed and Mr Roy Truscott — were elected.

In Wards 3, 4, 5 and 10 there was no election. The sole candidates were returned unopposed.

Ward 6 — C. Murove (ZANU-PF). Ward 7 — N. S. Mugabe (ZANU-PF).

In yesterday's Sunday Mail, it was incorrectly reported that Alderman Chhagun Bhana was elected for Ward 10 of Gatooma. This should have been Alderman Chhagun Bhana Kidia.

ZIMBABWE TEAM TO MAPUTO TALKS NAMED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

A TEAM of six Cabinet Ministers to represent Zimbabwe at this week's Southern African Development co-ordination Conference in Maputo was named yesterday.

Delegates from the nine African participating nations will hold a ministerial meeting before launching into a two-day-long "donor's aid" conference.

The nine nations have invited foreign governments, international organisations and banks to the conference to seek finance allowing them to cut their economic dependence on South Africa.

At "an economic summit in Lusaka in March it was stressed that transport and communications were the key sectors of co-operation among the nations affected.

The Zimbabwe delegates include the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Dr Bernard Chidzero; the Minister of Roads and Road Tr-"c, Posts and Te'ecommunications, Mr George Silundika, the Minister of Transport and Power, Mr Ernest Kadungure, the Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr David Smith; the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Mr Simbi Makoni, and the Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr Oliver Munyaradzi.

They leave for Maputo by special charter flight on Tuesday.

A team of top Government officials left Salisbury last night to help pave the way for the delegation's arrival.

It included the Deputy Secretary for Economic Planning and Development, Mr G. E. P. Mellier; Under-Secretary, Mr C. N. C. Mangwana; Deputy Chief Engineer (planning), Engineer P. C. REPORTAGE ON POSSIBILITY OF SOVIET DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATION

Appointments 'Cancelled'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] Why Russia Has No Ties--Muzenda

THERE were no special considerations delaying the establishment of diplomatic relations between Zimbabwe and the Soviet Union, the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Simon Muzenda, said yesterday.

Replying to questions in an interview, Mr Muzenda said he had repeated several times that Zimbabwe's foreign policy was one of non-alignment.

"What it means is that people who come to ask for diplomatic relations with us have to agree with this Government on a number of (aspects) of our relationship with them."

The Minister attributed the delay in setting up diplomatic links with Moscow to last-minute business engagements that led to the cancellation of appointments in Salisbury with Soviet envoys.

During the independence celebrations, he explained, a meeting had been arranged at a hotel between the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, and himself and the Soviet delegation.

"When I went to Meikles Hotel to find out whether they were ready to meet — the Prime Minister had taken another delegation to the airport — we found they had left.

"Later they sent someone from Lusaka to come and discuss with us the papers they had left and arrangements were made for him to meet me here (in the Minister's office).

"He came, but as he entered the door and we were about to sit down, I got an urgent call from the Prime Minister that he wanted to see me immediately. When I returned he had gone," said Mr Muzenda.

He denied the two countries could not agree on the conditions for mutual diplomatic relations, saying the Zimbabwe Government was not laying down any special conditions for the relationship.

Asked if the Soviet Union would be required to renounce political and diplomatic support for ZAPU when the two countries get down to discussing the nature of their relations, the Minister said:

"I think your question is a little disturbing. It also suggests in my mind that you are saying if we open diplomatic relations with a country, it should still give military support to a party within that country."

A country had only one government and the military set-up of any country belonged to that government. It did not belong to any party, he stressed.

USSR Seeks Cooperation

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Soviet Union stopped material assistance to ZAPU after the struggle for liberation and was now seeking co-operation with the Zimbabwean Government, the Soviet Ambassador to Zambia, Dr Vassili Solodovnikov, said in Salisbury yesterday.

Interviewed after a week of talks with officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the envoy said his country now had only a political relationship with Dr Joshua Nkomo's party.

Dr Solodovnikov said Moscow now wanted to establish relations with the Zimbabwe Government.

Asked if there was a desire to extend the relationship to political party level, he replied: "Yes, you may say it is our wish to have relations with both parties — ZAPU and ZANU."

The envoy was asked what Moscow's position would be in the event of a civil war in Zimbabwe. "I hope it will not happen," he said, "because, I think, the future of Zimbabwe is in the unity of the people.

"It would be very sad if it occurred and I think it would be a big advantage for the imperialists, especially South Africa."

Dr Solodovnikov, who arrived on Tuesday and is due to return to Lusaka today, said he had come to discuss establishing diplomatic relations between his country and Zimbabwe.

But he had not managed to meet the Foreign Minister, Mr Simon Muzenda. He only had meetings with civil servants in the Ministry, he said.

He described the talks as "very good, very honest and very fruitful", but said there were still some points to be ironed out.

Saying he believed relations would be established soon, the envoy indicated he might visit Salisbury again after consulting his Government.

He said he believed that "imperialist countries" were trying to keep the Soviet Union out of Zimbabwe.

However, in the talks this week, Zimbabwe and the Soviet Union had concluded there were many international issues on which they held identical views and had "practically agreed to establish relations".

Dr Solodovnikov said he was an academic attached for many years to the Soviet Academy of Science.

He is a father of two daughters and has five grandchildren.

REPORTAGE ON LABOR STRIKES, UNION ACTIONS

Order Ignored by 4000

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

ABOUT 4 000 striking pitmen at Wankie Colliery last night ignored an order by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kangai, to return to work by 10 p.m. or face "tough measures" to protect other workers.

Only 10 workers reported for night shift at No. 2 Colliery — the same number as every night since the strike began.

Late last night there had been no reports of any further violence among the strikers.

Telephone talks were held in the day between Mr Kangai in Salisbury and workers' committee officers at Wankie.

The Minister said he was prepared to visit Wankie today as originally planned, but only if the strikers returned to work.

If they did not return, Mr Kangai said, "tough measures" would be taken to protect those who wanted to work.

Superintendent John Joss, officer in charge of the Wankie police, confirmed last night that extra police patrols would be mounted in the colliery villages.

Mr Kangai said there would be police protection for individuals who wanted to work and for their homes and property.

The Minister's message was relayed to the workers at mass meetings held in the three colliery villages yesterday evening.

At the No. 2 Colliery village, a crowd of more than 300 — about one-sixth of the total workforce in the village — cheered loudly at much of the announcement and streamed off in disgust before the workers' committee chairman — said Sikhisi speaking — had finished speaking.

Soon afterwards, hundreds of copies of a full-page typed statement from Mr Kangai's Ministry were dropped from a helicopter.

The statement assured the strikers that the Minister was sympathetic to them and had intervened to the best of his ability to meet their wishes.

'Patience'

Mr Kangai repeated his call for people at Wankie to be patient about the pension and benefit funds, which they want terminated and contributions refunded.

It would take some time for the Government's pension policy to be worked out, the statement said.

"Minister Kangai wishes to emphasise that, until the law is altered, Wankie management cannot stop making the deductions from your wages in respect of the pension and benefit funds because they are prohibited from doing so by legislation," the statement said.

Later many workers maintained that Mr Kangai had set a date for the termination of their pension and benefit funds contributions and that he was now going back on his word.

Superintendent Joss said that "some arrests" were made during the day in connection with violence at No. 2 Colliery on Monday night.

In addition three people were arrested on Tuesday night when a house in No. 1 Colliery was damaged.

The strike is already making its effects felt on the National Railways of Zimbabwe, which announced yesterday that it had "been forced to reduce some services on certain routes."

A NRZ spokesman in Salisbury said the present daily rate of coal use in locomotives of 600 tonnes had to be cut.

Enough

The railways had enough coal to continue essential services on the north section of the line.

"However, a large proportion of the stocks carried are on the ground at Bulawayo and Gwelo and it will soon be necessary to reload wagons to supply Dett and Thompson Junction itself," he said.

Risco steelworks has enough stocks to last for another week.

"Should the strike extend beyond that we will be in a difficult position," said a spokesman.

The Minister of Transport and Power, Mr Ernest Kadungure, said he had no immediate plans to introduce emergency measures until after a week.

"Maybe it will be necessary to institute such measures if the strike stretches beyond tomorrow," he said.

Ultimatum Ignored, Strikers Arrested

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

NEGOTIATIONS between the 4 000 strikers at Wankie Colliery and the Government have reached deadlock.

Mr Kumbirai Kangai, Minister of Labour and Social Services, has issued an ultimatum that "tough action" will be taken against those who do not return to work.

But the response yesterday to the call was nil.

About 10 workers from the colliery villages are still helping to keep the vital coke ovens burning at No. 2 colliery, and about 75 percent of workers are reporting for their shifts at the No. 1 colliery power station.

But coal production has been at a complete halt for six days.

The three main colliery villages were quiet throughout yesterday. Police Support Unit patrols reported for their second night's duty in the evening.

The strikers still say they are waiting for Mr Kangai to make the next move. Speculation is rife as to what "tough action" the Minister will take to resolve the situation.

But reliable sources have suggested Mr Kangai himself may, after all, visit the colliery and attempt to explain why he cannot give the workers back their pension and benefit fund money.

He declined to comment yesterday.

Trojan Strike Pickets Held

THREE employees of Trojan Nickel Mine, which has been paralysed by a strike since Saturday, have been arrested.

A police spokesman in Salisbury said yesterday the men, arrested on Tuesday, would appear in court on a charge of obstructing traffic, an offence under the Miscellaneous Offences Act.

It is believed the men, who were arrested outside the mine, were pickets who stopped cars of employees still working.

Meanwhile, a bid to end the dispute — over the dismissal of a member of the workers' committee — failed yesterday.

Mr Howard Bloomfield, the president of the Associated Mineworkers' Union, said an inquiry into the man's dismissal was held before the mine manager in terms of the "code of discipline" agreement between the management and the union.

"However, there was no re-instatement as a result of the inquiry and the strike goes on," said Mr Bloomfield.

Trojan produces more than 1 000 tonnes a month of the world's purest nickel. Most of it is exported. Nickel is selling at about £2 635 a tonne.

The smelter and refinery are ticking over and once the dispute is settled they could quickly go back into production at an increased rate to make up losses caused by the strike.

● The work stoppage by 90-odd ice cream vendors at Lyons Brooke Bond in Bulawayo entered its fourth day yesterday, reports the Herald's Correspondent.

A company spokesman said: "The men are self-employed and if they choose not to work there is nothing we can do about it."

At Shangani nickel mine, where 800 workers have been on strike since Monday, the situation was also unchanged yesterday. It is believed the men want an all-round increase of $40 a month.

About 300 workers returned to their jobs at Consolidated Textiles, Bulawayo yesterday.

Legal Action Planned, Industry Hurt

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Nov 80 pp 1, 3

[Text]

THE Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said last night he would have "no alternative" but to take legal action against those promoting the illegal strike at Wankie Colliery.

It was obvious that the vast majority of workers, who he had reason to believe wanted to return to work, were still being intimidated to stay at home.

He would have no alternative but to ask the police to apprehend and prosecute, in terms of the Industrial Conciliation Act, those who were promoting the illegal strike.

He again called on workers to use normal channels to air grievances.

The Government was concerned with legitimate grievances, but it could not be held to ransom, as was the case in Wankie, he said.

Illegal strikes, particularly in key industries, were harmful to the whole nation, he said, and the Government was determined to take firm action to end them.

Mr Kangai said he hoped his warning that Government's patience was exhausted would be heeded and that this form of industrial action would now cease.

At Wankie yesterday, there was no sign that the 4 000 striking miners intended to return to work.

There have been no reports of violence for more than 48 hours in the colliery villages. The strikers "here passed their time in the beer gardens or at their homes.

Police support unit patrols were seen for the first time yesterday, but the atmosphere was calm enough for a football match between local police and the support unit.

The only serious violence was on Monday night when about 50 houses at No. 3 Colliery village had windows broken and two people were later arrested.

Superintendant John Joss, acting member in charge of Wankie Police, said that intimidation was not widespread and that the strike was in no way political.

Mr Kenneth Ncube, workers' committee chairman of No. 3 Colliery, said yesterday he did not know of a single man who wanted to go back to work.

"They are not striking against the Government. They are striking for their money. This has not been a political strike," he said.

Dunlop Zimbabwe chairman Mr Gordon Handover said in Bulawayo yesterday his company's stocks of coal would last only a few days. "When those supplies are finished, then that's it. We will probably have to cease production."

National Breweries in Bulawayo will be able to operate for a few weeks before the lack of coal will stop production.

Strikes Hurt Industry

BULAWAYO.

THE Confederation of Zimbabwe Industries was gravely concerned at the continuing labour strikes in the country, the president, Mr Reg Sampson, said here yesterday.

"They are undoubtedly adversely affecting the economic recovery of the country to which industry gives the major momentum."

However, the CZI was encouraged by clarifications given to industry by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, and the firm action he was taking to correct the situation, Mr Sampson said.

Meanwhile, about 1 000 mineworkers are still on strike at Shangani Nickel Mine. This was confirmed by a spokesman for the parent organisation, the Anglo-American Corporation. He would give no other details. The strike started on Monday.

A Government industrial relations officer, Mr Peter Cowan, said: "The mine management has explained to the strikers that as the mine is running at a loss, there will be no pay rises.

"Wages will be in accordance with the regulations, as in the past. This message was given to the men on a directive from the company's head office."

The men were asking for a rations allowance and for night-work pay, but they were already getting these, Mr Cowan said. Payment in lieu of rations was incorporated into their wages in June, in negotiations conducted through the industrial council.

They were demanding an additional $40 a month each.

"We are sending an official to the mine on Monday to explain these things to them, and to tell them that while they are on strike they will not be paid at all."

The 92 striking icecream vendors of Lyons Brooke Bond (Pvt.) Ltd in Bulawayo have had their contracts cancelled. The company has closed its vendor service.

In a statement, a spokesman said: "It is hoped that in the future new self-employed distributors will be available, and productivity renewed.

"The sooner we can commence normal trading the happier we will be."

The issue of whether the vendors are company employees, as they claim, and should receive the minimum wage, or whether they are self-employed contractors, is to be the subject of a test case in Bulawayo Magistrates' Court in February.

● Zisan reports that a strike is still on at Trojan Nickel Mine, Bindura, where about 2 000 workers have stopped work since Thursday.

Union Leaders Targeted

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 pp 3, 12

[Text]

A CAMPAIGN has been launched to topple Zimbabwe's three best-known trade union leaders.

The action is all part of the bitter struggle for the heart and soul of the labour movement.

The union leaders under attack are:

- Mr Howard Bloomfield, president of the Associated Mineworkers' Union and the Trades Union Congress of Zimbabwe.
- Mr Phineas Sithole, general secretary of the United Textile Workers' Union, president of the African Trade Union Congress and national chairman of ZANU.
- Mr David Chimusoro, general secretary of the General Engineering and Metal Workers' Union.

Mr Bloomfield is accused by a newly-formed rival union, the Zimbabwe Mineworkers' Union, of failing to represent the miners.

Mr Webster Gwekwerere, a ZANU (PF) activist, who is acting president of the new union, said: "Mr Bloomfield has only 16 000 members among 170 000 miners — that's less than 10 percent.

"He can't claim to be representative.

Mr Gwekwerere said Mr Bloomfield's union and the ZMU should merge and then hold free leadership elections.

"Bloomfield would be kicked out," he said.

Mr Gwekwerere — who admits to never having worked on a mine—said if the AMU refused to amalgamate, the ZMU would surge ahead, enlist most of the miners and make Mr Bloomfield "irrelevant".

"They will be so unrepresentative that they will be deregistered as a union," he added.

Clearly angry, Mr Bloomfield said he didn't recognise the new union.

"How can this man Gwekwerere claim to represent miners when he's never been on a mine?" he said.

"His claim that there are 170 000 miners in the country shows how little he knows.

"The real figure is 60 000 — about 6 500 of them are staff members who wouldn't belong to my union and 5 500 work on very small mines."

He said the AMU represented about one in three miners.

Mr Bloomfield scoffed at talk of a merger and leadership elections.

"Any voting will take place at our congress early next year—and that's got nothing to do with Gwekwerere," he said.

Mr Sithole, who was a ZANU MP in the Government of National Unity, is in the greatest danger of being ousted.

The national executive of his United Textile Workers' Union is expected to meet on Saturday to decide whether to sack him.

But it is believed that the decision is a foregone conclusion.

The national executive is furious at Mr Sithole's repeated allegations that the Government is trying to turn the labour movement into a ZANU (PF) puppet.

He has also spoken out strongly against the setting up of rival unions, the activities of "quasi-revolutionary" workers' committees and intimidation.

Mr Sithole has been invited to the national executive meeting—but is not expected to attend.

Another charge levelled at Mr Sithole, who has been in trade unionism all his life, is that he has failed to hold a national congress for three years.

Mr Gwekwerere is accused of backing the national executive in its bid to fire the union boss.

Mr Chimusoro is suffering the same problem as Mr Bloomfield.

A rival union, the Zimbabwe Engineering and Iron Workers' Union, has been set up and is trying to poach Mr Chimusoro's members.

"They want to have more members than my union," he said.

He added that a "handful of dissatisfied" people were trying to whip up opposition to his leadership.

Mr Chimusoro said he was spending most of his time going from factory to factory trying to weed out the "cockroaches".

"Much of this opposition comes from people not even in the engineering industry," he claimed.

Mr Gwekwerere, who returned to Zimbabwe in February after 14 years in Britain, said: "Chimusoro is in a lot of trouble.

"He recently signed a very foolish agreement. His members are very dissatisfied."

The campaign to fell the three union chiefs is part of the struggle being waged by the Zimbabwe Trades Union Congress for leadership of the workers.

Both the rival Zimbabwe Mineworkers' Union and Zimbabwe Engineering and Metal Workers' Union were formed by the ZTUC, which has been labelled by Mr Sithole as an arm of ZANU (PF).

ZTUC spokesmen have repeatedly professed their political independence.

Labour Minister Kumbirai Kangai has warned union men to keep out of politics.

Mr Bloomfield said: "I support this. I also think politicians should keep out of trade unionism."

Strikes May Be Against Workers' Interests

[Article by Muongororí]

THE phenomenon of strikes has a long and traumatic history. Significantly, the Russian proletariat revolution of 1917 was a turning point in the recognition of the power of the worker as a formidable force in shaping the destiny of any nation.

Over the years that power has grown increasingly awesome. In our world, largely dependent on industrialisation as the vehicle of advancement, the worker can no longer be regarded as a passive component of the state machinery, but presents the most volatile single entity with the undeniable capacity to build or cripple a nation.

Having said that, it goes without saying that when power of such magnitude is mishandled, or exploited irresponsibly, the consequences can be disastrous.

No doubt politicians are inspired by motives of the highest order when they make certain promises to their electorate. It is also true that when such promises prove untenable, those whose expectations are aroused by these promises feel cheated and become disgruntled.

Few would deny that for nearly a century of colonial rule, the black Zimbabwean worker was exploited by a system that stubbornly refused to acknowledge his personal ambitions and aspirations. It was for this very reason that Zimbabweans took up arms and decided to wage a liberation struggle — and, happily, that goal has been realised.

But as nature would have it, all deeply entrenched systems, even in the face of revolutionary change, always tend to perpetuate themselves. In other words, the process of change, such as that Zimbabwe must go through, is essentially a slow one.

The Prime Minister, Mr Robert Mugabe, has repeatedly acknowledged this fact in his numerous appeals to Zimbabweans at large to have patience while the Government takes the necessary measures to restructure the Civil Service and make it more compatible with the changed political situation.

A week ago, in Marandellas, Mr Mugabe did not mince his words when he told white commercial farmers that his Government was dismayed that some of them had resorted to retrenching their labourers in retaliation against the Government ruling on minimum wages.

He did not end there. Outlining reasons for the Government stand on the matter, the Prime Minister rightly pointed out the dangers of maintaining a dissatisfied work force in terms of productivity and loyalty to the employer.

Indeed, some of the grievances for which thousands of workers at Wankie Collieries, the Trojan Nickel Mine at Bindura and several other organisations that have suffered during the recent spate of wildcat strikes, could well be genuine and deserving of urgent attention.

But the question that must be asked is, whether by resorting to strike action the workers involved were convinced this to be in their best interests and those of the nation at large, or whether this blatant defiance of authority is a recourse to vindicate a system that most were told would disappear with the coming of independence.

In my opinion, probabilities seem to indicate the latter.

What should be realised however, is that strikes, wildcat or whatever, have a debilitating effect on any economy, and in Zimbabwe's situation, invariably stretch further the road to recovery.

Not only that. Strikes, however well intentioned, inevitably create the impression of industrial instability, and it needs no seer to predict what harm that could do to the country's foreign investment prospects.

Most pertinent were the remarks by the president of the Associated Mineworkers' Union, Mr Howard Bloomfield, when he stated that no country could afford the luxury of stoppages while at the same time trying to resuscitate an economy battered from all sides by the war and consequent hostility from the international community.

But perhaps at this time, when politics seem to be playing a hand in everything, this message would have carried more weight if it were the theme the pep talk given by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai to workers during his travels around the country.

The workers must be told that since the country is now in their hands, by striking and thereby weakening the country's economic base, it is they that stand to lose most. If Zimbabwe's economy collapses because of their irresponsible actions, the workers must be made aware that they, too, will fall along with it.

They must be made to appreciate that where grievances exist they should be expressed through appropriate administrative channels such as the newly established committees at places of work.

Only through telling the workers the truth can we hope to arrest the situation. That alone is an onerous challenge, and one that calls for tact, courage and honesty, and most of all, the godly quality of being able to appreciate the frailty of the human character.

Some End Strike, Unions Appeal

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

A RETURN to work by about one third of the striking miners at Wankie Colliery was expected to start at 6 a.m. today.

A meeting at midday yesterday of more than 200 workers at No. 2 Colliery village was unanimous that the strike should end.

A delegation of gang leaders approached the workers' committee yesterday about security and was assured that it was safe to go back to work.

The workers' committee chairman at No. 2 Colliery, Mr Matthew Moyo, said last night: "I am expecting everybody on the 6 a.m. shift who is in the compound to report for work.

"There are quite a number away in the TTLs and I have asked the management to be patient with them.

"Later in the week, every single worker at the colliery should be back at work."

Mr Moyo said "no intimidation whatever" was taking place in the village and he did not expect the return to work to be interfered with.

Yesterday about 70 workers, apart from the few who have worked throughout the strike, returned for the 6 a.m. shift at No. 2 Colliery — the same number as on Saturday.

DIFFERENT

About 30 of the strikers turned up on the afternoon shift for the first time.

Mr Moyo predicts this morning's shift will come quite close to the full complement of 500.

At Makwika, the No. 3 Colliery village, 500 strikers met for 2½ hours yesterday morning, but there the story was quite different.

None of the miners want to go back to work.

Workers' committee chairman Mr Kenneth Ncube said it was unlikely to make any difference if other workers at Wankie went back to work.

"The people have heard that Mr Kangai is talking about sending the police in," Mr Ncube said.

"The police can do what they like, people here are still after their money."

Mr Ncube thought people might return to work if the Minister of Labour, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, visited the colliery and explained the situation — even if they had to wait for the refund of their pension money.

There are about 1 500 workers at No. 3 Colliery and it is there that all underground mining takes place.

About the same number work at No. 2 Colliery. Almost another 1 000 strikers normally work in open-cast mines or in other parts of the colliery operation.

Unions Appeal to Minister

THE United Trade Unions of Zimbabwe has appealed to the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, to review the trade union situation in the light of the wave of strikes in various parts of Zimbabwe.

In a statement released after a meeting in a Salisbury hotel the delegates said: "We appeal to the Minister of Labour to review the situation as a top priority and make known that we are always ready to assist him in achieving an internationally recognised trade union centre, built on goodwill."

Members of the National African Trade Union Congress, the African Trade Union Congress, the Zimbabwe Federation of Labour, the Trade Union Congress of Zimbabwe and the Zimbabwe African Congress of Unions were represented at the meeting.

The "interim executive meeting" was called to discuss the unrest in industry and the position of the rival union, the Zimbabwe Trade Union Congress.

The statement accused the co-ordinating committee formed to set up the ZTUC of disregarding its terms of reference.

"To date this committee, which appears to operate without a quorum, has never at any time attempted to communicate with other trade union centres and their recognised umbrella body, the United Trade Unions of Zimbabwe," it said.

PRESIDENT'S VIEWS ON SOCIAL ROLE OF CHURCH REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 80 p 17

[Text]

PRESIDENT BANANA has had a long innings in the struggle for the social "transformation" of the church in Zimbabwe.

Since he assumed office the President has addressed many concerned church leaders on the need for change.

In an interview at his Government House office, President Banana discussed the force behind his motivation for encouraging the church to adapt to the needs of the majority of his country's people.

The President was as versatile in conversation as any diplomat, but still his philosophy clashed heavily with the atmosphere of the former colonial presidential residence.

Q: How well do you feel your message on the Gospel has been received until now, since you started on the path of "conscientising" the church to transform?

A: This question can best be answered by the churches themselves.

There are usual contradictions within the church with some elements who will respond to my call, but at the same time there will be those very conservatives who would probably feel my analysis of the role of the church in pre-and post-independence is perhaps too radical for their thinking.

INDIFFERENT

And there would be the third group, who would be indifferent.

Q: Tell us more about this message you have for the church in Zimbabwe in particular?

A: First of all, the church must take a fresh look at its historical involvement and its contribution to the advancement of our people in this land.

Secondly, it would have to come to terms with the demands of a changing situation, and adjust to the new social order.

I am criticising the church for its failure in the colonial era to be forthright against an iniquitous, racist and oppressive system that denied our people dignity and reduced them to nonentities and sub-humans.

So I believe the church should have taken a vanguard position.

It is not enough to preach and pray about the human situation.

One has to take positive an direct action to redress the social inequalities that are obtaining during our time.

SUPPORT

But, on the contrary, what one noticed over the years was the tacit support that most of the religious institutions gave to the successive minority regimes before our national independence.

All I am saying now is that the changed situation presents new circumstances.

We have created a situation where the important thing is the develoement of an African identity and the recognition of the African personality and experience.

Theology and the church must accommodate African experience and traditional religion. Also the national philosophy of the Government is to try and create a situation whereby economic imbalances of the past must give way to a new economic order.

Churches could be instruments in supporting this approach.

There is need for the church to shed and renounce its colonial image and accept the challenges of this new situation, so that the Gospel can be understood in the context of the African experience.

Q: Are people being alienated from the church more now than in the colonial past?

A: No. In the past our people did not feel the church belonged to them.

It was a foreign organisation.

Its failure to identify completely with the oppressed people and support the struggle for liberation rendered itself irrelevant and it was dubbed "the church of the status quo".

Our young people were leaving the church in greater numbers because they found no inspiration.

Now our people are giving the church the opportunity to prove itself, in its seriousness and commitment to the course of human rights and the uplifting of our people.

It is a chance for the church to participate in the process of reconciliation, reconstruction and redevelopment.

I said in the past that the church placed itself in an unnecessary dilemma by saying there were two sides to the coin, and arguing that "we cannot identify".

Whereas to me it was clear the Rhodesian forces were fighting to maintain an unjust social order and to defend an unjust system.

The liberation forces, however, were fighting to create a new and just order.

MASSES

So whatever Government programmes are initiated, it would be expressions of the aspirations of the broad masses of our people.

If the church identifies itself with these programmes it would be identifying with these aspirations of the masses of the people.

Q: Is this stand you take on the Christian religion rooted in the philosophy of liberation theology? What does this mean?

A: I don't see why people should fight against the idea of liberation or African theology.

Of necessity, one's own theological outlook has to find its basis from one's own background and experience.

This is the quarrel we have with the churches because their approaches have been motivated and influenced by their own culture as missionaries.

Christianity has been brought within the blanket of Western theology.

But my own religious outlook has been influenced by my Africanism and experience.

So my understanding of religion stems from the struggle to be free. Africa has for long been a colony of Western imperialism and capitalism.

Our people have far too long been victims of Western exploitation.

In order for them to understand what God is saying you have to look at their own oppressive situation before independence.

And if the church is to identify with the struggle for liberation, it will be understood very clearly by the African. Because this is what Jesus did.

He did not preach and pray only, but identified himself with the poor and suffering.

The church has to identify with the poor, suffering and oppressed and be seen to identify with the liberation struggles.

I believe through involvement in the liberation struggles one is able to experience the process of humanisation and appreciate the pressures that have characterised African life under oppression for several decades.

Religion has got to redeem man, not just spiritually, but his social, economic and political dimensions.

So if the church fails to do this and continues preaching its Gospel of "pie in the sky" it will be of no good to anybody.

Q: Now how do you see in practical ways the church attend to the physical needs of the people of Zimbabwe?

A: It must renounce its paternalistic posture and attitude.

It has to respect and accept the indigenous people and involve them in the decision making process.

We can never exaggerate the richness that one gets out of dialogue and sharing with the grassroots in political and religious terms.

This year has to become "the year of the peoples power" within the church.

Missionaries must not come with dry-cut solutions. They must come to their decisions through broad consultations with the people.

Q: How long do you think it will take the church to become one of the poor and underprivileged?

CONTENT

A: I don't control the church programmes. I could not possibly give them a time-table. It is entirely within the competence and jurisdiction of the churches themselves.

Much will depend on the content of the message of the church and its mode of operation.

If it continues to behave as the omniscience of our African interests I am afraid it will continue to be stagnant and will perhaps become more and more irrelevant.

Its influence will diminish. Membership will decrease and the church might even die a natural death.

Many churches don't really understand what is at stake. They profess to understand the African, but they don't.

Q: On the positive side, have any of the churches in Zimbabwe contributed to the uplifting of the colonised Africans and how did they do this?

A: Well, their pioneering spirit in the education and health fields was commendable.

This was against the policies of the regime, who tried to keep the African down.

The hospitals they put up in various parts of the country improved the health standards of the African people.

We appreciate the contributions of the church to these ends.

Q: What relation do you see between the role of the church in other areas of the Third World, such as Latin America, and its role in Zimbabwe?

A: We share in common with the Latin American people the exploitation, oppression and the denial of human rights and dignity.

The message of the church is universal in that it seeks to create a new mankind, a new social order throughout the world so there will not be oppression of one group by another.

Yet every situation is unique in itself. So the church really needs to express solidarity with oppressed and struggling people everywhere.

Solidarity like this will reassure these oppressed people that their cause is human and just and has the support of all progressive and peace-loving people the world over.

Q: What social order do you see the church supporting in the world today?

POVERTY

A: More than half the world is living in abject poverty. The main cause of that, I don't hesitate to say, is largely imperialism of the so-called big powers and Western capitalism that fosters the spirit of individualism and selfishness and thrives on exploitation.

It is exploiting the natural and human resources for the benefit of a handful of people.

The new social order envisaged is a situation of redressing and transforming the world economic order.

This means, of course, we have to attack the power centres and call for the redistribution of wealth, so that the broad masses of the people can benefit from the natural and human resources that God so kindly provided.

I think the churches can help identify these areas of the sources of oppression so that they can be declared common enemies of progressive mankind and be fought to the end.

Development is being controlled and tailored to benefit only a few individuals. This state of affairs has got to be redressed. It is a formidable problem.

Q: How do you think the church is challenged to assist in transforming structures that promote and perpetuate injustice and oppression, including those within its own ranks?

A: If the church was in opposition to the broad masses of our people it would lead to a confrontation. With a collision taking place, you know who will be crushed.

The freedom we created is for all to participate and help, but the church cannot do this if it hangs on to old structures.

Economic justice is the kingpin of what we are talking about here.

One is perturbed by the discrimination that still goes on in the church. It has to come to an end.

Most of our leading industrialists also claim to be, churchmen. So the church can have an influence in driving home the need for change and to end the exploitation of workers.

Many workers are still being exploited. I also know that some churches have shares in some companies.

These churches have to take a fresh look at this association with companies which are exploiting people.

The Government is trying to define a new economic policy.

I hope that we will not get shouts of "communists" or "marxists" because we cannot sit and watch the people bleed to death.

ATTACKED

Q: The editor of the Catholic newspaper for Southern Africa, the Southern Cross, recently attacked your stance on religion in an editorial which said you were making demands on the church that were made during the former regime's control and that it was also oppressive. What do you say to this?

A: I have not threatened anyone. Maybe this is what he is trying to suggest.

All I have done is to give them the challenge. We now have a new situation in Zimbabwe and they have to embark on an exodus from Rhodesia to Zimbabwe.

The church must accept this challenge and involvement and take positive action.

It's a great honour. He could have said after the Government came into power, "To hell with the churches".

Because they were part of the system that was oppressive, so they could have been told they should go.

DISCRIMINATED

Q: How could the church listen to the poor?

A: The reason why the church found itself within the same camp as succesive former repressive regimes was because it was dining with the devil.

It discriminated as much against people. The church despised the ordinary people because they believed these had nothing to contribute.

This was a tragedy. The church has got to identify with the grassroots.

Also this business of demarcation between what the church misguidedly calls "sacred" and "secular" must come to an end.

The church has got to go to the crossroads of life. Then they will understand what the people want and what their needs are.

Q: As President of Zimbabwe, what is your message to the people of your country on the Gospel of Jesus Christ? What does Christ tell them in their situation today?

A: The Prime Minister has appealed for all to combine efforts towards reconciliation, reconstruction and rebuilding from the devastations of the past and the damaged economy.

This rebuilding must be designed so that it benefits the broad masses and brings an end to economic exploitation.

Reconciliation is also a Christian message because in the past we have been divided into Coloured, black, white and Asian: rich and poor: and civilised and uncivilised. We were fighting each other.

Today we have to declare war on irreconciliation, tribalism, regionalism and classism.

BACKBONE

It is senseless having another physical war because we have our independence and should emerge as a united people.

If we achieve this, then we will have a Christian and human community.

This could be the backbone of all Southern African and even the whole of Africa.

Anyone who wants to disunite our people and undermine the Government of the people is declaring war on the whole of the people.

This would provoke the wrath of the people.

Q: Can you describe the politics of Jesus?

A: I have never spiritualised Jesus Christ. He came into a human situation very similar to our own. The Palestinians were being oppressed by the Romans.

We see this coming out in his very first address to the crowds at the Sermon on the Mount.

These were his first words on his purpose.

It was like the manifesto of Jesus Christ because he said there that he came into a situation of oppression and came to liberate.

He preached a Gospel of involvement and concern for the downtrodden.

IDENTIFY

Anyone who is party to the same faith cannot help but identify to strive for a more equitable system of wealth.

Q: Would Christ support the liberation struggles in the world today?

A: He has been and already has taken his position. When I look at a guerilla, I see Jesus Christ.

The Gospel says that "greater love has no man than this ... that he can lay down his life for his friends."

When I see a guerilla, I see this happening.

The guerilla says "I must give up my life for my country". He dies so that we may live.

There can be no Christian testimony greater than when a man lays down his life for the liberation of his people and country.

I cannot be convinced that these men were "devils" because had they not given up their lives then we would not have freedom today.

Support Liberation Movement in South Africa

THE church has to embark on a propaganda campaign to sell Zimbabwe to South Africa and Namibia, President Banana said this week.

It should tell them "what you thought was impossible is possible" he urged.

In a scathing attack on the South African Government, the President claimed this was the message to be spread to whites there "with their little minds" who were so "scared and frightened" of human dignity.

"The churches here have to lend their support to the liberation movements of South Africa and Namibia," President Banana said.

He warned that churches would be negating the message of the Gospel if they identified with the status quo rather than the masses of the South African peeople.

"This business of referring to the liberation movements as terrorists must come to an end," he said.

He said the church in South Africa, however, was "in the frying pan".

"Its voice in challenging the South African regime to renounce apartheid is important as a value judgment on the iniquitous system of apartheid."

While the church in South Africa had to learn from "our mistakes" it needed Zimbabwe's encouragement to continue to expose the "futility" of the South African system, he said.

The Gospel of "pie in the sky" was not going to bring redemption to either black or white in South Africa, according to President Banana.

He felt the liberation of the oppressed would result in the liberation of the whites.

Ironically, said the President, the most unliberated sections of that community are the whites.

"Psychologically their mentality has been damaged and polluted and they cannot be human until the black people are human enough," he said.

He warned whites from Zimbabwe "running like rats down south" because they thought there were greener pastures there.

"I think we must warn like-minded people that there is bound to be an explosion in South Africa," he said.

"It is not a safe sanctuary for all time.

"We have a strange situation of people with a propensity for globe trotting.

"When Africa north of the Zambezi got independence the whites ran to this country. They ran away from independence, majority rule, human rights and justice," the President said.

He warned: "Now, many more are being tempted to run to South Africa. But even in that country change will come."

The President was adamant that by running to South Africa, Christian whites of Zimbabwe were lending false support to a false stable situation.

The Clergy and the Communist Manifesto

PRESIDENT BANANA says he has no religious idols and is open-minded enough to read any literature regardless of whether he agrees with it or not.

He reads anything so that he can get to terms with particular concepts and the thinking of people "in the other camp".

The President said in an interview that he believed one should not be narrow and restrictive in one's choice of literature.

"To give an informed criticism of a situation you have to know that situation," he said.

During the interview, President Banana was reminded of an incident at a Bulawayo library when he looked for a copy of the communist manifesto.

A library official said to him: "Oh, I find it strange for a minister of religion to be reading literature of that sort!"

"What's wrong with it? How can he be so narrow?" the President asked.

President Banana said that the librarian probably wanted to read things that Mr Ian Smith had told him to read.

He mentioned as one of the tragedies of the past the censorship in this country which dictated what people should read almost to the extent of wanting to think for them.

AIR FORCE 'INFANTRY' FORMED

London WEST AFRICA in English 22 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THERE had been minor difficulties in amalgamating former members of ZANLA and ZIPRA into the Air Force of Zimbabwe, Air Marshal Frank Mussell said here yesterday.

But he was determined that no obstacles would stand in the way of the amalgamation exercise, he said.

Air Marshal Mussell was reviewing the passing-out parade of more than 100 recruits who have completed up to 12 months' training for service in the Air Force of Zimbabwe Regiment.

The unit was established about 18 months ago as an extension of the security branch of the air force to guard the service's installations and air bases.

They are the infantry of the air force and their existence was kept under wraps until yesterday when the fourth course passed out.

The plan is to bring the unit up to a strength of 1 100 and to train the men in guard duties, including anti-aircraft gunnery, for which the former guerillas are providing the weaponry.

The air force regiment recruits are trained at a base established about 18 months ago near the formerly top secret Fylde Air Base between Hartley and Gatooma.

Air Marshal Mussell said the air force and the Government intended to expand the regiment to a size where it could effectively defend all air force facilities.

More courses would follow, he said.

"This expansion is in conjunction with the national amalgamation exercises, and the air force has welcomed into its ranks former members of ZANLA and ZIPRA.

"The exercise has not been without minor difficulties, and is not yet complete.

"However, I am determined that no obstacles shall prevent a smooth, speedy and complete amalgamation taking place.

"In conjunction with the formation of Zimbabwe and the change of name of air force, we have embarked upon a programme of design and manufacture of new flags and uniform embellishments," he said.

He hoped that the need to use acting and temporary ranks and the interim devices to help the amalgamation exercise would soon fall away and that the Air Force of Zimbabwe could go into the future as an example to the rest of the nation.

"The sooner we forget our past loyalties and discard all those things which distinguish us the sooner we will be the efficient and reliable air force that our country has a right to expect of us."

Calling for unity, the air force chief said: "Few people, if any, will stand to benefit from division within the air force or the nation."

Everyone should forget political or racial loyalties and develop the best possible air force as the best way of serving the country.

The defence forces must be apolitical, he said, because they were tools for the defence of all the people of the nation.

"To this end the air force will continue to set and maintain high standards," Air Marshal Mussell said.

CONTROVERSIAL SHONA BIBLE EXAMINED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] A four-man committee has been set up to revise the controversial 1979 Shona Bible.

The revision will be made in light of comments and criticisms of the translation, which came under heavy attack from four of the 27 church denominations which had backed its publication.

A major criticism was that the translation had sacrificed originality for intelligibility and a seven-man committee was promptly set up to investigate errors and "dig out all the problems they could find".

Among other findings, the committee questioned the use of certain Shona words such as "svikiro" (Shona for spirit medium) and "Tenzi" (meaning master or lord), and the changes to the meaning of some verses, at the same time feeling concern over what they described as "serious flaws in the translation".

Universal

For example, they said, the word Jehovah had been translated "Tenzi". They felt that Jehovah should have been left as it was, being the personal name of the God of Israel, and because of its added universal acceptance and usage in the Shona language and among the Shona people.

Another controversial translation was that of the word "sacrifice" to "madiramhamba", which changed the whole meaning. Sacrifice involves killing, whereas a "diramhamba" does not necessarily mean killing, but merely dedication.

Another serious error had been the use of "tuku"--to describe Mary's condition while expecting Jesus. It implied that Mary was suddenly seen with a bulging stomach, a description not in keeping with the level of dignity attributed to the language of the Word of God, and to the Mother of God herself.

The paragraph was read to a group of schoolchildren who immediately burst out laughing when the term was read out to them.

Contradiction

Translating Cor: 7:36, the Shona Bible implied that premarital sex was not a sin, as long as the couple intended to marry.

This contradicted Christian teaching in the rest of the scriptures, the committee said in its report.

A member of the committee said the Bible Society of Zimbabwe conceded some of the criticisms were justified, and that more than a hundred omissions and errors would not have to be reviewed and edited by the new committee.

It was hoped the committee would complete its work in 12 to 15 months. It was hoped to start towards the end of next year.

There was no question however of withdrawing the 1979 version.

Sales of the 1979 Shona Bible in its present form would continue, he said, adding that of the 50 000 copies printed last year, 35 000 had been sold.

WIDEN MARKETS, URGES SWEDISH TRADE BODY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 80 p 4

[Text]

IT WOULD be in Zimbabwe's interests to diversify its economic and commercial relations to encompass more countries says the visiting director-general of the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA), Mr Anders Forsse.

He was responding to a suggestion that import limitations might have placed Sweden in an unfavourable trading position as the result of most-favoured-nation trade status, which other European countries enjoy with Zimbabwe.

In an interview Mr Forsse said: "I am confident that Swedish exporters will be treated on an equal footing with other exporters to this country.

"It is true that our trade relations with Zimbabwe are in a very fresh state. But the fact that Swedish companies were not among Rhodesia's trading partners during UDI should not be counted against us now that Zimbabwe is establishing industrial and commercial relations with many countries."

He said he was "very impressed" at the growing co-operation between many Third World countries and the European Community, of which Sweden is not a member.

"But we expect to co-operate in many instances with the signatories of the Lome Convention and we could also, as it were, compare notes when it comes to other countries who are not subject to Lome."

He hoped relations forged between Sweden and Zimbabwe in the field of rural development — to which Sweden has committed about $9 million in untied aid this year — would help foster commercial and industrial relations between the two countries.

"It is in the interests of both countries to develop such relations and, from the point of view which SIDA defends, it would certainly be in the interests of Zimbabwe to diversify its economic and commercial relations so that it encompasses more countries than at present."

Turning to his meetings with Government Ministers and officials Mr Forsse said: "We want to lend Zimbabwe a hand during its transitional difficulties. For a few years we are going to be as helpful as we can.

"Given the future stability of Zimbabwe, I do not feel there is the need for a very long term continuation of Swedish development aid in the conventional sense."

He said the bulk of Swedish overseas development assistance was directed towards the 25 poorest nations of the world. Zimbabwe was not among these.

"Indeed, there is every sign of rapid and fortunate social and economic development in Zimbabwe which is relatively well-endowed."

Commenting on the recent failure of the 11th special session of the United Nations General Assembly to reach agreement on a restructuring world economy, Mr Forsse confirmed that Sweden supported Third World demands for a bigger say in the decision-making processes of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

But he was not optimistic about the future outcome of such negotiations between the rich and poor countries. Britain, the United States and West Germany had consistently blocked underdeveloped countries' demands for a new international economic order.

"The rich countries do not see their own interests reflected in the NIEO (new order) despite the argument put forward by the Brandt Commission of a mutuality of interests between rich and poor countries.

Sweden, Mr Forsse said, had clearly recognised the concept of mutual interests between developed and underdeveloped countries. This was reflected in the fact that it was one of the very few industrialised countries to have met the U.N.'s recommended target of diverting 1 percent of the gross national product in aid to the Third World.

Britain and the United States were lagging far behind this target.

He confirmed that, because SIDA's main development thrust in this country was directed at the rural sector, it would be for private Swedish companies to launch job-training schemes and to provide employment if they were encouraged to become active here.

EFFORT TO UPGRADE POOR FOOD REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

A MASSIVE supplementary feeding programme to alleviate malnutrition was expected to be launched in Zimbabwe early next month, the head of the Bulawayo office of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, Mr Eugene Birrer, said here.

The programme, which will provide under-nourished children between the ages of one and five with one supplementary meal each day, comes after a survey of the country's malnutrition problem by the British welfare organisation, Oxfam.

The results of the survey, conducted a few months ago, show that in some parts of Zimbabwe up to 70 percent of young children suffer from malnutrition.

"The programme is being finalised, but already several overseas and local agencies have shown an interest in it and have offered to donate funds," said Mr Birrer.

"These include Christian Care, the Save the Children Fund, Freedom From Hunger, Unicef, the Catholic Commission for Social Services and Development, the Zimbabwe Red Cross and the UNHCR itself.

CENTRES

"The plan is to run the programme from December until the next harvest, probably in April next year. Feeding centres in badly-affected areas will be set up where mothers will be provided with extra food to cook for their children.

"One extra meal a day, consisting of maize meal, beans and groundnuts will be provided, giving a calorie count of 400 with 11.8 g of protein.

The scheme is to be administered by the Ministry of Health which will also be responsible for training ground workers at village level in the care of malnourished children.

"They will be shown how to identify a malnourished child by measuring the circumference of his arm. If it's less than 13 cm, this is a clear indication of malnutrition," said Mr Birrer.

"Since no other criteria will be used, every child with a problem will be treated on an equal basis."

According to the Oxfam survey, the areas most affected by malnutrition are along the Zambezi Valley, in the west of the country from Beitbridge to Wankie, and on the north-east border.

Where the problem is really serious, pilot schemes may be started before the whole programme gets under way.

No accurate estimate of the cost of the programme has yet been made.

'OPERATION SEED' DIFFICULTIES REPORTED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

OPERATION Seed, the ambitious rehabilitation programme to turn thousands of former guerillas into farmers, is being dogged by difficulties.

For the ZANLA and ZIPRA men are not easily settling into the farmers' life.

They see themselves as soldiers, not farmers.

But observers do not believe the scheme is on the verge of collapse.

Operation Seed — Soldiers Employed in Economic Development — was launched by Joint High Command in June to employ ex-guerillas.

Thousands of guerillas were organised into tack forces to work in three areas:

LITTLE DONE

At Mushumbi Pools ZIPRA men were set to clear an overgrown irrigation scheme. Little work appears to have been done.

Some of the men are believed to have been moved to Salisbury's Seke camp. They were previously based at Assembly Point Papa at Mana Pools until they were moved to Mushumbi Pools.

At Silalabuhwa ZIPRA forces were sent to prepare land at an irrigation scheme 30 km south of Filabusi. A little work has been done.

At Middle Sabi ZANLA ex-guerillas were sent to an irrigation scheme in the Lowveld to clear land for development. The work is believed to be under way.

Some men will be left on the sites to continue farming to meet Mr Mugabe's post-election appeal: "Beat your swords into ploughshares."

One reason given why the men are reluctant to work is the basic conditions at the sites.

The men live in tents, their food is prepared in the open and they have to clear rough bush with hand tools.

There is very little mechanised equipment.

Observers believe that if conditions improve radically production will step up.

BRIEFS

OVER-AGE CIVIL SERVANTS--Hundreds of over-age white civil servants will have a bleak Christmas knowing that they may be declared redundant early next year. The dismissals will be part of the Government's campaign to create jobs for blacks. Notices to quit by March 31 are expected to be sent out soon after the holiday. The Government is drawing up a list of all those set to be dismissed. The Public Service Commission has asked each Government department to provide the names and jobs of every employee who will be 60 by December 31. This list must reach the PSC by the end of this week. Another list--of workers considered "essential"--has to reach the PSC by December 15. Ministers have personally to ask for any pensioners to be kept on. A PSC spokesman said: "Anyone who can be replaced will go. Anyone who can't be replaced yet will stay. "There will not be any wholesale, indiscriminate sackings." The Public Services Association refused to comment yesterday. [Text] [Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 p 1]

YOUNG SOCIALIST LEAGUE PLANNED--A group of young men calling themselves young socialists, plans to form a Youth Socialist League to reorientate young Zimbabweans toward national development after the war. Mr Angus Baden Martens (24), of Salisbury, said yesterday that he and a colleague, Mr G. Masava, were initiating a scheme which would involve youth in voluntary work. Between 30 and 40 young socialists met in June in Salisbury to discuss the project and plans were still being worked out before the organisations could be registered. Mr Martens said the organisation would have nothing to do with party politics. It would seek to co-operate with various Government ministries, "so that we can unite Zimbabwean youths on a national basis to achieve progress in national development." He said the league could be useful in other fields such as voluntary assistance in educating the masses and in health programmes. An official at the Ministry of Sport, Youth and Recreation said the authorities were unaware of plans to set up the league. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Nov 80 p 7]

GUERRILLAS RELOCATED--A hundred armed guerillas from the ZANU (PF)-owned Grazeley Farm in Arcturus were transferred to Salisbury's Zengeza camp on Wednesday. The move was part of the strategy to reduce the number of ZANLA men and women on Grazeley and nearby Oasis farms from 1 800 to about 200--the number needed to work the land.--SMR. [Text] [Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 23 Nov 80 p 3]

INFLATION WARNING--Bulawayo--The Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe warns that with the recovery of the economy and the banking sector's high state of liquidity, there is an increasing danger of excessive demand becoming a major inflationary factor. In its first quarterly economic review since December 1965, the Bank says the gross domestic production may well be 5 percent higher than last year. Manufacturing production was up 14 percent in the first six months of this year--(the period covered by the review)--while the value of mining output was up 62 percent, and the value of retail turnover up 12 percent. After years of negative growth the farming sector is not expected to make any contribution to the gross domestic product this year. Almost all sectors of the manufacturing industry had higher output levels and, in mining, the sharp upturn in 1979 continued during the first six months of this year. In the building industry the value of building plans increased by 180 percent in real terms, and the major constraint on future growth of the industry will be the productive capacity and not demand, says the review. RF CANDIDATES--The standing committee of the Rhodesian Front meets today to select a panel of prospective candidates for the Highlands parliamentary seat vacated last month by Wing Commander Rob Gaunt. On Monday the panel will choose a candidate to contest the seat for the Rhodesian Front should a by-election become necessary, the party chairman, Mr Geoff Kluckow, said yesterday. He said the procedure of selecting Wing Commander Gaunt's successor was involved and democratic". By a proclamation in the Government Gazette last Friday, President Banana announced that nominations for the seat would be received on December 1. The President has fixed January 13 as polling day if more than one candidate comes forward and a by-election is necessary. The Registrar-General, Mr Brian Oliver, said he had not yet received official notice from Parliament that the seats occupied by Dr Ariston Chambati, the Ambassador to Bonn, and Mr Faral Masango, High Commissioner to Tanzania, had become vacant. Mr Oliver is expected to receive the notice after the Government has formally told Parliament of the official appointment of the two MPs to ambassadorial posts. Their seats will be filled by nominations submitted by their parties. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 80 p 1]

LABOR UNION MERGER DENIED--The president of the Building Workers' Trade Union, Mr B. Durand, yesterday denied his union had merged with the United Building and Allied Industrial Workers' Union. Earlier this week Mr Elias Chiwanza told the Herald he had been appointed administrative secretary of the new union and that Mr Edward Njekesa, leader of the BAIWU, would be president. Mr Chiwanza is a member of the BWTU, a registered union. "I categorically state that our Salisbury-based executive knew nothing about the so-called merger," Mr Durand said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Nov 80 p 3]

5,000 FAMILIES RESETTLED--More than 5,000 war-displaced families have been resettled on 87 farms acquired by the Zimbabwean Government since independence, the Deputy Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Movan Mahachi, said yesterday, reports Ziana. The Minister said in an interview that the acquisition of the farms, in the Umtali and Shamva areas, to give homeless people a new start was part of the overall resettlement programme introduced by the Government. This programme would be adhered to despite shortages of equipment caused when promised aid failed to materialise. Among items desperately needed for the exercise, he said, were tractors, bulldozers and expertise. Asked about vacant land and squatters, Mr Mahachi said the Government would not "chase away" people squatting on land owned by absent landlords. MORE AID FROM U.K.--London--Britain is to give a further £2 million to Zimbabwe to help train the country's army, the Foreign Office Minister, Mr Douglas Hurd, told Parliament yesterday. Britain has already pledged £75 million.--Ziana-Reuter. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 22 Nov 80 p 1]

TYNWALD SQUATTER HOUSES RAZED--Squatter houses had been destroyed in the Tynwald area, Salisbury City Council was told last night. The chairman of the health, housing and community services committee, Councillor Frank Mills, said that by yesterday 135 squatter families had been moved from their houses in Tynwald into hostels in Harare. The squatter camps were formed on two properties and the population had been estimated at 1 900 in a council report last month. The council also recommended last month that squatters could be accommodated at the Matapi hostels in Harare. It said a properly established squatter camp at Dzivaresekwa with ablutions and communal water supplies might house 792 families. The city engineer, Mr P. C. H. Houghton, said the main squatter problem had been in the Tynwald area. "We have destroyed and burnt all the squatters' accommodation," he said. All the families had been moved from one of the settlements, he said. In the other, all but eight had been moved. They had argued to stay because they worked in the area. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 80 p 1]

AIR FORCE TRAINEFS--More than 100 Air Force of Zimbabwe Regiment recruits ended their training course in a blaze of glory on Friday at their training base between Hartley and Gatooma. With torches on their rifles they marched past in a fiery formation which provided a spectacular display for the reviewing officer, air force commander, Air Marshal Frank Mussell. On Saturday half the recruits were sent to New Sarum in Salisbury and the other half to Thornhill in Gwelo and in accordance with the tradition started when the first course passed out about 12 month ago they have to walk to their bases. The training base is exactly halfway between New Sarum and Thornhill and all face a 150 km march. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 80 p 1]

QADHDHAFI INCREASINGLY REVEALING AFRICAN AMBITIONS

Paris LE MONDE in French 8 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] A subject of controversy for quite a while now, Libyan intervention in Chad is today beyond a doubt. The Tripoli government openly champions the Transitional National Union Government, GUNT, whose president is Goukouni Oueddei, head of a country which no longer exists except on paper. For several days now dispatches of the Libyan press agency have been emphasizing the Chadian president's official visit to Libya, and the round of inspections the two chiefs of state have just finished in Chad's northern territory, in the Borkou-Ennedi-Tibesti region.

Quite obviously confirmed by recent proposals made by both Qadhdhafi and Goukouni Oueddei, the alliance between GUNT and the Libyan Government has the West worried. On 7 November a spokesperson for the State Department in Washington said: "We are deeply concerned with the Libyan Army intervention and the effects it could have in Chad and in other African countries. All military engagements coming from outside the country can only complicate Chad's interior problems and prolong the tragedy of civil war." In Paris, despite the observance of an official silence, one is equally concerned.

The disintegration of Chad, former French possession in Central Africa, confirms the failure of the decolonization politics conducted in this part of the black continent. Not having known how to prevent tribal and regional clashes, of religious or political nature, France found itself caught up in a series of military interventions which solved nothing. Today, after the total retreat completed last May by the last French soldiers, Chad broke up into two distinct states, the whole southern part of the country living in a more or less autonomous fashion.

The deterioration of the situation in Chad threatens part of the neighboring countries with unstabilization: the Central African Republic, where President Dacko has not been able to assume former Emperor Bokassa's heritage; the Cameroon, where President Ahidjo constantly fears a revival of tensions between the diverse national communities, whose ethnic origin and religious persuasion recall somewhat those of the Chadian population; Niger, where a large Toubbou minority is found in the eastern part of its territory, a minority which is racially closely related to the Chadian Tibesti and the Libyan Fezzan peoples.

Colonel Qadhdhafi is already very interested in the Toubbous of Niger. He called on them to rebel 3 weeks ago, in a radio speech in which he criticized the government of Niamey for the repressive politics he feels are being conducted towards the Toubbous and the Touaregs living in its territory. Faced with this obvious provocation, Lieutenant Colonel Seyni Kountche abstained from all reaction, proof of his great sang-froid in these circumstances.

The Chadian imbroglio is simply one opportunity among others the Libyan president has seized upon to affirm the pan-Islamic vocation of his country and of the region south of the Sahara. Profiting from the awkwardness of the superpowers, or more simply their absenteeism, he has multiplied his interventions in the last couple of months: from Senegal and Gambia to Mali and the Central African Republic, not forgetting the Western Sahara. Trying more and more to relay Algeria to the Polisario, to which he does not cease to increase his military aid, President Qadhdhafi is revealing the vigor of his African ambitions to the northeast of the continent, to Chad and to others.

RESURGENCE OF COLD WAR IN AFRICA

Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Nov 80 p 4

[Article by Jean-Claude Pomonti]

[Text] It must have taken all the publicity surrounding the great show of the American elections for the Africans to ask themselves the question upon which they have hardly had the opportunity to reflect for 2 years: Will the Americans have an African policy, and if so, what will it be? For, after raising serious hopes at the beginning of his mandate, Mr Carter had ended up by disappointing many African leaders of the OAU [Organization of African Unity] without obtaining, for the rest, concessions from Pretoria.

Mr Kissinger had displayed only a tardy interest in the black continent, not only because his priorities were elsewhere (Vietnam, dialogue with Moscow and Beijing), but also because it took the Angola conflict in 1975, to have the black Third World enter the area of the East-West dialogue, with the intervention, on one side, of a South-African expeditionary corps, and on the other, Cuban troops supported by Soviet logistics. After President Nixon's resignation, the former Secretary of State visited Africa twice, in spring and summer 1976.

The second time, at the very moment when Mr Carter was conducting a rather brilliant electoral campaign, the American diplomat had been able to impose, on the occasion of a detour through Pretoria, a "Peace Plan" on Mr Smith in Rhodesia. This "Kissinger Plan" remained unheeded, since it was immediately denounced by the "Front Line" states (which then included Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia).

The memory which the Africans have retained of Mr Kissinger would be ambiguous, for the least. In the Angolan conflict, the United States had supported that UNITA-FNLA coalition, to whose help the South-Africans had come late in the day, a cause which could hardly be popular with the OAU. Mr Smith's "iron arm", from which he was the first to extort the principle of "Majority Rule," was only momentarily impressive; not only it remained short-lived, but the OAU soon suspected "dear Henry" of obtaining this very ephemeral success at the cost of discreet concessions to their main enemy, the South-African apartheid regime.

In any case, Mr Carter's assumption of office was to modify radically, at the beginning of 1977, the African view of the American Government. Mr Andrew Young, a black, ambassador to the United Nations and Cabinet Member, received from the American president a genuine delegation of powers with regard to Africa. Mr Young then appeared to be assigned the task of conveying to the Africans the message of liberty and racial equality, of which Mr Carter, who is, like him, a native of Georgia, had become the advocate. Visiting Africa frequently, Mr Young incarnated two refusals of American diplomacy: that of complaisance towards apartheid and that of the Soviet encroachments. Mr Young then had the merit of creating a wave of liking for his government on a continent which rarely stops at the strong language so often reproached to the American diplomat. He also had the merit of influencing to a considerable extent the American decision not to interfere, in 1977, on the side of Somalia in the armed conflict between Mogadiscio and Addis-Ababa, in spite of the reinforcement of at least three Cuban brigades and South Yemen units received by the Ethiopians.

But over the passing months, Mr Young found it increasingly difficult to convince the White House to maintain a definite African policy. The deterioration of the relations with Pretoria, which was to culminate on the occasion of a stormy interview in Vienna between Vice-President Mondale and the former South African prime minister, Mr Vorster, in May 1977, did not give Washington many benefits. The American initiatives for settling the Rhodesian conflict were all to fail. President Carter's African stop at Lagos, during a tour which was to lead him from Latin America to the Near East, in April 1978, will not leave behind an unforgettable memory, the "African speech" made on this occasion by the White House chief read more like a list of good intentions than the definition of a policy.

Muddled Diplomacy

Mr Young's mission would come to rather an abrupt end in August 1979, when the ambassador would resign his post so as not to embarrass any longer Mr Carter by his outspokenness. Since then, the Democratic administration, forgetting a little its initial principles, seems to have changed its attitude to a considerable extent. The Iranian revolution and the Afghan conflict, in particular, have led it to requesting the use of military installations in Kenya and especially in Somalia, although the latter has not ceased to support guerillas in the South-Ethiopian territory. Previously, during the second Shaba war in 1978, Washington had agreed to supply the necessary means of transportation for the legionnaire regiment rushed to the spot by the French Government. By the end of his mandate, Mr Carter did not appear to have any longer the time to study the African files, which have not made much progress during his presidency: the problem raised by the South African apartheid, the Namibian negotiations, the trade balance deficit with Nigeria (for whom the United States are the chief oil exporters).

His successor, Mr Reagan will have even less chances of enjoying a favorable bias on the part of the African black leaders since he incarnates in their eyes, a conservative American, not greatly concerned about the interests of its black minority, and which asserting its wish to "become strong once again" and to "be respected." The president-elect had also the poor taste in the view of the OAU, of sending to Pretoria during the campaign, one of his advisers, thus reminding them that priority would be given to the protection of American investments abroad.

The South African white population will no doubt rejoice at being free from a Democratic administration which, at least for a time, was most unpopular with them. In case the negotiations in the Nambian conflict were to be really dragging on,

Mr Reagan might be exposed to even greater pressures at the United Nations, in favor of economic sanctions against Pretoria. The advisers of the former governor of California can expect this. The South-Africans too have not such a short memory that they can forget that it was a conservative British Government which resolved at the end of 1979, the Rhodesian conflict by organizing elections, whose results displeased them very much.

The fact remains that the American diplomacy in Africa appears to be muddled enough, particularly for the past 2 years, for nobody to bet on serious changes, at least during the first months of Mr Reagan's presidency. The South-Africans will no doubt prove more attentive to a man who speaks a language of firmness close to their own. For the same reasons, certain countries of the OAU, will have the same reflex. Otherwise, Mr Reagan can hardly hope for a fund of favorable feelings. He can even expect hostile reactions. In 1976, the black continent was included in the geographic "cold war" area. Will Mr Reagan's presidency mean an intensification of this movement?

'SOUTH-SOUTH' COOPERATION TALKS OPEN

Tananarive MADAGASCAR MATIN in French 28 Oct 80 pp 1-2

/Text/ One seminar follows another in the capital, as we said in our last issue. In progress since yesterday at the Madagascar Hilton is an international seminar organized by BATA S.A. of Madagascar on the Anglo-Saxon theme of PRODEVMEET, which could be literally translated as development meeting. A dozen countries are participating. They are Zimbabwe, Uganda, Rwanda, Burundi, Kenya, Mauritius, Reunion, Malawi, and, of course, Madagascar.

Economy and Commerce Minister Justin Rarivoson, who officially opened the meeting yesterday morning, congratulated BATA Madagascar for such an initiative, but also for its contribution to the national economy. The minister took the occasion to reiterate the cherished wish of President Didier Ratsiraka concerning South-South cooperation, which must be initiated before the well-known North-South dialogue. It was an appropriate time to speak of this problem, in view of the presence, at this seminar on the shoe industry, of countries of the Indian Ocean littoral, among which important trade relationships should henceforth be established.

A Choice Place

Earlier, BATA Madagascar board chairman Strom Bohuslav explained to those present the merchandising policy and history of the company. General manager Raymond Gasser considered, in view of Minister Rarivoson's presence at the opening ceremony, that BATA has its place in the national economy, and that such presence encourages the great BATA family to persevere in its efforts for development."

The year 1980, at the threshhold of a new decade, is witnessing the very rapid development of BATA products. One needs only visit the mini-stands representing the national BATA production in each country represented. Throughout his visit, the minister asked questions--at times quite pertinent--concerning this or that product, its price, or the suitability of products shown to the financial situation of each buyer. It was then noted that the firm is striving to offer shoes for all tastes and pocketbooks.

The Malagasy stand, in particular, need not envy the others. At the BATA Italy stand, notably, there is a judicious and stylish selection of European summer 1981 styles. It is not impossible that BATA Madagascar will also conform to the reigning fashion. That, indeed, is one objective of a seminar such as this.

It is in fact vital, in a commerce such as footwear, to keep constantly informed on the latest market trends in terms not only of fashion, but of new materials or techniques. PRODEVMEET objectives are to exchange ideas, create new models, study jointly the evolution of needs, and learn to innovate and demonstrate ingenuity, as well as to utilize national products and improve the rate of integration.

New Ideas

Let us hope that from this meeting will spring many ideas so as to bring to consumers the products--and prices--they await; products which they need in their daily activities; sound quality products to ensure consumer satisfaction.

Members of BATA Madagascar management whose presence was noted at the morning opening session were Gaston Ramenason, Roland Randriambololona, and Marcel Gay as well as the entire group of company executives, including Roger Rahajarizafy, executive secretary, and Mr Andretseheno, chief of product development. The minister was accompanied by one of his technical advisers, Mrs Bodo Ramanoelina.

VISIT OF MMM DEPUTY REPORTED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR MATIN in French 29 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] Finlay Salesse, deputy of the Mauritian opposition group MMM, is in our midst in order, he says, "to maintain contact with the revolutionary powers in Madagascar." Mr Beranger's MMM party, as is known, enjoys excellent relations with our National Front for the Defense of the Revolution. Thus it is to extend those relations that Salesse is now in our capital.

Yesterday afternoon he had an interview with Interior Minister Ampy Portos. Nothing leaked from that meeting other than Salesse's satisfaction at learning, from the words of a member of the revolutionary government, "of the good progress of our revolution despite undermining maneuvers of all kinds which are directed against it, but to which the Malagasy are by now accustomed, and against which they have repeatedly been asked to remain vigilant."

In Mauritius the MMM, which obtained 39.6 percent of the votes in the general election of 1976, has not lost ground. Quite to the contrary, it is continuing the struggle on all fronts. In matters of foreign policy, for example, Salesse and his party approve all initiatives to make the Indian Ocean a zone of peace.

Diego Garcia

On that subject, he condemns the attitude of Premier Ramgoolam: "While at the UN," he says, "the Premier piously asks the return of Diego Garcia, his foreign minister declares before a session of Parliament 'We are in no hurry to see the Americans leave Diego Garcia.'"

And Salesse further recalled that since 1965, when Mauritius bartered its independence to the Americans for Diego Garcia, 426 families have left that island and have been "parked" in Mauritius. They are not yet integrated in Mauritian society, as was promised. Work, and housing, had indeed been promised them. . . Nothing has been done. These 'islanders', as we call them, on 21 September last declared a 4-day hunger strike. Only then did the government deign to show an interest in their fate."

Salesse does not hesitate to describe as "a huge hypocrisy" the demand for Diego Garcia's return to Mauritius. He sees in this attitude of the present government a clear preelection maneuver. General elections are approaching in the island, and in fact are planned for December of next year.

REUBEN KAMANGA CRITICIZES EFFORT TO REVIVE ANC

Legally 'Not Possible'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

CHAIRMAN of the Political Legal Constitutional Sub - Committee Mr Reuben Kamanga yesterday described as "wishful thinking" plans by veteran politician Mr Harry Nkumbula to revive his defunct African National Congress.

He was reacting to disclosures made by Mr Nkumbula that he had torn up the Choma Declaration which was made in June 1973 because it had not been "honoured by UNIP."

Mr Nkumbula, popularly known as the "Old Lion," said his party had never been banned. He charged that members of UNIP were for a change in the leadership of the country.

Party Secretary General Mr Mainza Chona declined to comment on Mr Nkumbula's statement and referred the issue to Mr Kamanga whom he said was "competent" to speak on the matter.

Mr Kamanga said: "It is not possible under the existing legislation that Mr Nkumbula can revive the African National Congress."

"Neither am I aware that the Choma Declaration has not been honoured by those of us who are in UNIP. His utterances are merely wishing thinking.

"I don't know what is worrying Mr Nkumbula. It may be old age. But in so far as Freedom House is concerned we have had no reports that the defunct ANC is being revived nor are we aware that some UNIP members intend to resign from the Party and join Mr Nkumbula." Mr Kamanga said.

During the interview with the Sunday Times Mr Nkumbula said he still harboured dreams to lead Zambia someday. Asked whether he hoped to be president, Mr Nkumbula replied:

"Indeed with great hope."

Asked how soon he would replace President Kaunda, Mr Nkumbula who is known for his amusing remarks on Zambia's political development said:

"I don't think it can be put forward for much ahead."

Mr Nkumbula stressed that he should not be linked with the recent coup plot against Dr Kaunda, army leaders and other top Party and Government officials.

He declined to comment on whether some of the alleged dissidents being held in detention were "loyal" to him.

"I don't want to commit them, but I know what I am doing," he said.

Speaking from his Libala home, Mr Nkumbula said we would soon seek a police permit to address a rally of his "supporters" in Lusaka at which he would outline his programme.

"I would not like to kid myself that people are coming to the ANC; but I am in good terms with UNIP officials, some of whom were members of the ANC. There is a feeling among these people that they have been taken along a garden path.

"UNIP can do whatever they want," he continued. "They can overthrow it or not. It is the people's natural feeling. If people in the Government don't want to reason they ought to be overthrown."

Mr Nkumbula has refused to recognise the fact that the country is now a one party state as a result of an act of Parliament. He charged during the interview that Parliament only passed a resolution, not an Act to that effect.

The "Old Lion" said he was happy with the growing discontent among Zambians against the Government.

And with news that the Sunday Times of Zambia had interviewed the "Old Lion" on the political situation, Freedom House sent an emissary to the newspaper office pledging that people should not take advantage of Mr Nkumbula's old age.

Interview Ridiculed

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE biggest joke this year came last weekend from none other than "Old Harry" Mr Nkumbula in an interview he gave to our sister newspaper the Sunday Times of Zambia.

It is not only a joke just because what "Old Harry" said in its entirety was senile but it was also so wish-washy that only people and if they are there in his group could believe it.

Anyway who in Zambia doesn't know Mr Nkumbula to need introduction? He is an old man and the least said about him the better for his health.

He will be honoured by Zambia for his political contribution, albeit in opposition and the 1973 Choma Declaration, if he behaves as, the old man that he is.

Lest recollection may become foggy for some people. The Choma Declaration was signed on June 27, 1973 at Mbabala.

The document was read publicly by no one else but Mr Nkumbula's former henchman and now Southern Province Central Committee member Mr Mungoni Liso.

It said in part: "We the former members of the outlawed ANC resolve that in order to participate fully in the political activities of Zambia hereby agree that all provincial, district and area branches should forthwith identify themselves with UNIP.

"We reiterate the provision of the Constitution that there should be no discimination based on past and political activities and that appointments to high office within the Party and its Government be open to all on merit."

The same year the UNIP Constitution was amended accordingly. The preamble and chapter one stress the supremacy of "the Party" as UNIP, nothing else.

Read together with the Republican Constitution, it is only a warped mind that can be left with doubt as to which is the "the party".

President Kaunda himself said at the Choma Declaration ceremony. "There are no victors, there are no vanquished". In short no one was to be victimised.

A prominent former leader of the ANC then Member of Parliament for Choma Mr Peter Muunga was quoted as saying on July 15, 1973 in Livingstone:

"We have come into UNIP not as liabilities but as assets. We are not coming into UNIP to be looked at as museums. We have come to work and we shall work".

So can Mr Nkumbula say he is a museum to be referred to only for history? Since he and his flock were welcomed back into the fold, UNIP has lived up to the letter and spirit of Choma.

There are thousands of former ANC men and women who are now in the Party and its Government as leaders from the Central Committee to the lowest rung.

In fact there are grumbles from some quarters that former ANC men are taking over everywhere, sometimes in areas where they should not have dared to tread.

DETAILS OF ETHIOPIAN-SOMALI BATTLE OF WARDER

Paris AFRIQUE DEFENSE in French Nov 80 p 61

[Excerpts] The partially burned remains of three T-54 Somalian tanks manufactured in the USSR and a skeleton are lying on the ocher-colored sands of the Ogaden. They were destroyed by Soviet grenade-throwers of the Ethiopian army during the "battle of Warder," which took place over a period of 52 days, from the end of May to mid-July, opposing Somalian and Ethiopian forces. It was the most important battle since the 1977-78 Ogaden war.

Today, Warder--which numbers 5,000 inhabitants--is calm. It is at the center of a triangle which juts into Somalian territory. Col Getaneh Haile, commandant of the Ogaden division, retraces on a map the encirclement maneuvers conducted around Warder and the neighboring village of Welmel.

According to the colonel, 14,000 regular soldiers of the Somali army were engaged in the battle, during which 1,356 died and 2,096 were wounded. A total of 18 men were taken prisoners. The colonel also disclosed for the first time that the Ethiopian army had suffered losses of 282 dead and 210 wounded. He maintains that the Ethiopian army is now in control of the region, but admits that there still may be some "scattered enemy groups" around.

The arms captured during the battle are exhibited, and they form an impressive international bazaar: Soviet and American grenades, French and Chinese rockets, French and Soviet mines, U.S. Jeeps that came to Somalia via Pakistan, machine guns of Egyptian manufacture, Italian troop transports, etc. In Dire-Dawa, Col Worku Chernet introduces a group of Somalian prisoners and notes that the army engages in operations "at least 3 times a month." However, he maintains that the Western Somalia Liberation Front (WSLF) does not exist, and that the skirmishes are provoked by the regular Somali army.

During our visit to the Ogaden, a military operation was taking place to liberate Togochale, a locality astride the border, 80 kms from Jijiga. We continued a short distance in the direction of the north, to the Lafa Issa camp, where there are 3,500 refugees from the war and the drought. Our convoy of Jeeps did not have a military escort, even though the border is only 20 kms away.

Veronica Forrester reports from Brussels on the latest development of aid under the Lomé Convention

NOW that the final allocations under the Stabex fund of the Lome I Convention have been settled, it is possible to draw up a balance sheet of the first five years in which the scheme has operated.

West African states have been the main beneficiaries of the Stabilisation of Export Earnings Scheme (Stabex). Under the Lome I Convention, West Africa received 65 per cent of the funds which the European Economic Community released from the fund. The Stabilisation Scheme was the principal innovation in the Lome Convention. It aimed at compensating the African, Caribbean and Pacific states for losses in export earnings in their trade, in certain products, with the Community.

In the case of a few particularly poor states, the scheme even goes as far as to compensate them for losses in earnings from their total export earnings. Stabex, as the EEC Development Commissioner Mr. Claude Cheysson said in 1975, is an insurance scheme. It is a safety net, so that if a drought or other natural calamity hits a country and export earnings fall, then compensation is available.

The fund also operates if the ACP country suffers a loss of earnings due to reduced demand for their products in Europe — this has been the case in particular with wood exports. The scheme aims to help countries which are extremely dependent on the export of certain products and hence whose economies can be drastically affected should a crop fail or demand fall.

Under the Lome I Convention, the Stabex fund stood at 380m. European Units of Account ($532m.). A total of $529m. has now been allocated — nearly all the funds available. Of this $529m. West Africa received $341m. or 64.5 per cent. The largest single beneficiary was Senegal which received $91m. to compensate for losses in earnings from groundnut oil and groundnut oil-cake in 1978. Indeed in that year Senegal received 40 per cent of the total Stabex allocation to the ACP States.

During the five year period in which the Stabex I fund operated, allocations varied very substantially. In 1975, the first year for which compensation was given, $112m. was released and West Africa received 68.9 per cent of the transfers. In 1976, the EEC released over $50m., 46.6 per cent of which went to West Africa. For 1977, the allocation was $45.3m. and West Africa received 59.8 per cent. Losses in earnings of the ACP States rose dramatically in 1978, and the Community released $229.6m., 81.7 per cent of which went to West Africa. (This was the year in which Senegal received $91m. and Mauritania $46.6m. for iron ore) then the only mineral covered by Stabex. In 1979, the Community has allocated $91m. and West Africa received 28 per cent. This was lower than the previous years' average due to a $39m. allocation to the Sudan.

Over 45 per cent of the Stabex aid allocated to West Africa went to compensate for losses in earnings from groundnuts, $154.5m. over the five years. Wood was the second most important product for which losses were incurred. During the five year period West Africa received $53.6m. in compensation.

Senegal and Mauritania were the principal West Africa beneficiaries of the Stabex I scheme.

Total allocations per country over the five year period were as follows: Benin $27.4m; Cameroon $5.6m; Central African Republic $10.6m; Cape Verde $1.5m; Chad $10m; Congo $10.2m; Gabon $9.3m; The Gambia $10m; Ghana $7.1m; Guinea Bissau $11m; Ivory Coast $21m; Liberia $10.5m; Mali $12m; Mauritania $51.6m; Niger $31.3m; Senegal $91m; Sierra Leone $5.4m; Togo $4.9m. and Upper Volta $10m.

To qualify for a Stabex transfer a country had to show that the product in question represented at least 7.5 per cent of total export earnings (2.5 per cent in the case of the least developed) and that earnings were 7.5 per cent down (2.5 per cent in the case of the least developed states) on the previous four years' average.

West African States received transfer for losses in earnings from groundnuts, cocoa, coffee, cotton, palm nuts and oil, wood, raw hides and skins, bananas and iron ore.

The Gambia and Senegal

ALTHOUGH 1980 has not yet ended the EEC has already approved advanced Stabex payments to Senegal and The Gambia for losses in export earnings from groundnuts. In June the Community agreed to release EUA 25m. ($35m.) to Senegal and at the end of October approved the release of EUA 4.65m. ($6.5m.) to The Gambia. Both allocations are made under the Lome II Stabex fund. Under the Lome II agreement which has not yet entered into force, a total of EUA 550m. ($770m.) will be available for the Stabex scheme. Stabex II covers 44 products — 10 more than under the Lome I Convention.

Reduced EEC Tarrifs

THE EEC has opened preferential tariff quotas for imports of tomatoes, carrots and onions from the African, Caribbean and Pacific states. Senegal will be the main beneficiary of these measures.

Between November 15, 1980 and April 30, 1981, the Community can import up to 2,000 tonnes of tomatoes from the ACP States with a 60 per cent reduction in normal duties. This means a 4.4 per cent duty on ACP tomatoes.

For carrots, there will be a reduced duty of 10.2 per cent on imports of up to 500 tonnes from the ACP States between January 1, 1981 and March 31, 1981.

For onions the Community will grant a 60 per cent reduction in normal tarriffs on imports of up to 500 tonnes between February 15 and May 15, 1981. These tariff reductions are in line with the trade provisions of the Lome II Convention.

EEC Aid to West Africa

The EEC has approved the release of a further $43m. to certain West African countries under the Lome I aid package.

Niger receives a total of $14.1m. to carry out further improvements to the Niamey-Zinder axis road. Improvements and maintenance work will be carried out on the section of road between Birni-N'Konni and Guidam-Roumdji. The EEC has already provided a substantial amount to improve the Niamey-Zinder highway. In 1972 it provided $30m. and in 1976 a further $6.5m.

Guinea receives $8.1m. mainly as a special loan to finance the overhauling of the Soguiplast plastics factory. The factory will produce 2,100 tonnes a year and serve the local market.

Cape Verde receives a grant of $1.6m. to carry out urgently needed improvements to the town of Priaia's water supply and sewage systems. The Community will provide the necessary pipes, tools and general equipment needed for the project and also the necessary technical assistance. The project should be completed in eight months time.

Benin receives a grant of $900,000 for further technical studies on planned improvements to the road linking Dassa to Parakou. The grant will cover the cost of the final technical studies to be carried out by two engineering firms and also the drawing up of the invitations to tender documents.

Zaire receives a grant of $6.7m. to extend the market gardening area in Kinshasa. The project aims at increasing production in the three small valleys on the eastern outskirts of the capital. The project area covers 3,000 hectares and will be used for fish farming, vegetable and fruit production. When fully operational, the project should result in the production of 60 tonnes of fish, 8,000 tonnes of vegetables and 2,500 tonnes of fruit per year.

Zaire also receives a further $10.7m. to boost cotton production. Following the dramatic fall in cotton seed production to around 16,000 tonnes in 1978 (compared with a previous average of 56,000 tonnes), the Zairean government has taken steps to boost production. The EEC has been asked to help certain parts of the scheme and will therefore provide $4.3m. for improving rural tracks and other transport schemes; a further $3m will be used to buy tools and equipment for farmers and $3.4m. for spare parts and chemicals needed for the spinning mills.

Sierra Leone receives an additional $700,000 to finance a training programme — in particular to provide grants to students at the University of Sierra Leone.

Regional scheme: The Banque de Development des Etats de l'Afrique Centrale receives $700,000 to help train senior staff. This project is a regional scheme put forward by Cameroon, the Central African Republic, Congo, Gabon and Chad.

NATIONS PLAN TO REDUCE TRAFFIC THROUGH SA

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

MAPUTO.

ZIMBABWE and Zambia aim to eliminate their import and export traffic through South Africa within 10 years, according to sources at the nine-nation conference here on reducing economic dependence on Pretoria.

All except two of the black states trading through South Africa have set target dates for re-routing this traffic through other ports, the sources say.

The exceptions are Botswana and Lesotho, whose geographic position makes it especially difficult to find alternative trade routes.

Zimbabwe at present exports about 1,5 million tonnes and imports about 1 million tonnes of goods through South Africa annually.

About 150 000 tonnes of Zambia's exports and 300 000 tonnes of its imports go through South Africa.

Botswana's exports and imports through South Africa are about 75 000 tonnes and 200 000 tonnes respectively and is expected to reduce these to about 60 000 and 175 000 tonnes.

Today the conference is to present a shopping list to the international community in the hope of getting gifts or attracting investments for a number of development projects they need before they can cut trade relations with South Africa.

The nine nations held a Ministerial meeting in the Mozambican capital yesterday and agreed on the order of priority for the projects for which finance is being sought.

The nine African countries taking part in the Conference here are Mozambique, Zimbabwe, Zambia, Angola, Tanzania, Malawi, Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland.

According to conference sources, the Ministerial meeting yesterday decided that the improvement of the ports at Beira, Maputo, Nacala and Lobito were priority number one.

The electrification of the railway line between Gwelo in Zimbabwe and Beira was also of major importance, the meeting decided.

Zimbabwe feels it cannot increase its traffic on the Beira route because of steep gradients inside Mozambique which make it difficult for locomotives to pull too many wagons.

Included in the shopping bag is the improvements to the Malawi to Nacala port railway line.

This would help relieve congestion on the Beira line, the Ministers here have decided.

The Mozambicans, on the other hand want Nacala to be the biggest port in their country because it has a natural deep harbour and would be able to handle traffic from Zambia and Malawi.

Apparently the Malawians want the addition of a section of a line in Malawi to link it to the Tazam railway line.

According to sources, the Zambians are not too happy about this as it might also congest their line through to Dar es Salaam.

At today's meeting the donors will also be told of the need to improve the road from Botswana to Zambia through Kazungula.

The maintenance of the road from Salisbury to Beira is also on the list of top priorities, according to the sources here.

"There are a couple of things we would like to get off the ground right away, save for the lack of money. We feel we could run our own shipping line and goods could move easily between the member countries that have a shoreline," said one source.

Yesterday the head of the U.S. delegation to the conference, Mr Joseph Wheeler, said the United States Government would like to co-operate with the nine nations to improve transport and agriculture in the region.

Mr Wheeler is the deputy director of the United States Government Agency for International Development.

MAPUTO TALKS VITAL, SAYS CHIDZERO

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE MEETING in Maputo of Ministers from the nine-nation Southern African Development Co-ordinating Committee and donor countries would be of "critical importance" the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, Dr Bernard Chidzero, said yesterday.

Speaking in Salisbury before he led a delegation of six Ministers which flew to Maputo yesterday, Dr Chidzero said:

"The main objective of the conference is to present to donor countries and organisations concrete projects requiring international financing to supplement our own self-reliance efforts."

The meeting — to give priority to transport and communications—was also important in that it would link SADCC countries together to create infrastructure and a base for increased economic co-operation and increased trade, Dr Chidzero said.

At previous conferences of the nine-member group — it includes Zimbabwe, Zambia, Angola, Mozambique, Tanzania, Malawi, Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland — the need to improve the ports of Maputo and Beira and road and rail communications were discussed.

Dr Chidzero said SADCC would also present to the donors projects in other fields such as food production and food security.

Indications would be made of the projects concerned which would include the fight against foot-and-mouth disease, research in agriculture in semi-desert countries, Manpower Development and other areas.

The SADCC countries have allocated themselves projects to work on in the bid for closer economic ties.

Zimbabwe is responsible for the food security of the nine countries and Dr Chidzero said the country had "identified" areas that needed to be tackled.

These included collection of statistics and other data on population growth, harmonising policies and other aspects — and "we will require more money for this".

Turning to the Maputo conference, he said its "real significance is, of course, to enhance and increase co-operation with a view to improving the standard of living of our peoples and forming a strong economic unit".

"In this way we can make more realistic our desire and determination to reduce the very high degree of dependence on South Africa which characterise some (of the nine) countries.

"We also feel that together we can make an impact on world opinion and thereby reduce diverse forces against us," the Minister said.

Those accompanying him yesterday were: The Minister of Roads, Road Traffic, Posts and Telecommunications, Mr George Silundika; the Minister of Transport and Power, Mr Ernest Kadungure; the Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr David Smith; the Deputy Minister of Finance, Dr Oliver Munyaradzi and the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Mr Simbi Makoni.

CHIDZERO URGES TEA MEN TO GET TOGETHER

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

A DEVELOPING country such as Zimbabwe had to get profitable and stable prices for its exports if it was to support development programmes and raise the living standards of its people, Senator Bernard Chidzero said yesterday.

Dr Chidzero, the Minister of Economic Planning and Development, was opening an international tea conference in Salisbury.

About 50 delegates from various tea exporting countries including India, Sri Lanka and Kenya are attending the week-long meeting which is being organised by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Ministry of Commerce and Industry.

Although Zimbabwe was only a small tea producer, it was as keen to establish an international price and quota agreement as larger producers in other parts of the world, Dr Chidzero said.

The growing problem of lower prices and higher production costs had to be effectively tackled if the tea industry was to recover and prosper.

"I am hopeful that this meeting will bring about an agreement on prices and quotas, thereby ensuring a healthy tea industry in the future," he said.

The Minister urged producers to bury their differences and to unite in establishing a solid producer body.

After the official opening, the meeting went into closed session in an attempt to thrash out an international price agreement by the end of the week.

INDIFFERENCE TO ZIMBABWEAN AFFILIATES REPORTED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Nov 80 p 26

[Text]

BECAUSE of the over capacity reached in many Zimbabwean factories, investment specialists are concerned over the lack of interest shown towards local companies by their South African parents.

Most Zimbabwean companies have already hit their capacity limits and, unless modern machinery and capital equipment can be introduced soon, industrial growth will stop, according to one leading investment analyst.

With no indication that there will be an improvement in the situation, representatives from Zimbabwe's investment circles left the investment conference held in Johannesburg last week, more depressed than when they came.

While they said that there was no indication of increased South African participation by companies with Zimbabwean attachments, official comments from those companies took a different line.

Metal Box's deputy managing financial director, Peter Campbell, said his company would support justifiable expansion anywhere in the world. Funds, he said, would be made available by whatever means, although there was already high liquidity in Metal Box's Zimbabwean company.

Far from writing Zimbabwe off, said Lonrho group's consulting engineer Ian Hussy, Lonrho is spending vast amounts on capital expenditure and in-house training schemes.

Lonrho is represented in Zimbabwe by Coronation Syndicate, which controls a number of gold mines.

"In fact, we are even starting up new mines," said Mr Hussy, adding that "a shortage of skilled labour remains the problem."

A spokesman for Plate Glass said the company was interested in all its Zimbabwean connections, while Gerald Backley, divisional director of Abercom said the company had never stopped putting money into its Zimbabwe interest — formerly Rho-Abercom. Rho-Abercom has a lot of spare capacity because of the war situation and this can be fully utilised on existing resources, he said.

'KINGSWAY' TO BE RENAMED TO HONOR NYERERE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

KINGSWAY in Salisbury is to be renamed Julius Nyerere Street on Tuesday next week to coincide with the State visit to Zimbabwe by the Tanzanian President.

The near-unanimous decision was reached last night by Salisbury's City Council after a 35-minute debate about a letter from the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo.

The Mayor, Councillor Jack Whiting, told a special meeting before the debate the Minister had indicated in his letter that since President Nyerere was visiting Salisbury soon it had been decided by the Government that a street in the city should be renamed in his honour.

Kingsway had been suggested.

The Minister's letter, dated November 19, had been discussed by the council's town planning and works committee which decided the Mayor should convene a special meeting.

The committee recommended the Government should be responsible for the costs of the name change and indemnify the city council against claims — arising from the change, it sought assurances on the points.

Three councillors—Mr J. Leach, Mrs Susan Colquhoun and Mr J. Cloete — voted against the name change. Councillors Leach and Cloete have not been re-elected to the council.

Councillor Leach said Kingsway had been named in honour of another occasion and changing names was not in line with the Government's policy of reconciliation.

Councillor Mrs Beryl Bealer said it was time all the councillors and the people in the country realised they were no longer in Rhodesia but in a new Zimbabwe.

"When a new country comes into being there are likely to be new names," she said to applause from fellow councillors.

Councillor Norman Henry said a great deal of confusion was being caused both inside and outside the council chambers by name changes. This was the second time the city council had been put in a position where it had no choice, he said. The first time was when Jameson Avenue was renamed Samora Machel Avenue.

In the spirit of co-operation he was prepared to accept the name changes but many people were confused, "and I believe a halt must be called."

The Government should not be seen to be flouting the wishes of the people, he said. He proposed an amendment that in future the Government should be asked to give the council enough time to deliberate the merits of name changes. The proposal was defeated 15-4.

Councillor H. Baker suggested that since the present council was only a "caretaker council" it was extremely important that it remain on good terms with the Government.

He did not stand in the last elections and the present council is serving an extended period until elections are held in Wards 14 to 26 — Salisbury's former townships.

Councillor Ronald Cowan said it was useless to oppose the Government which had made definite decisions on renaming streets.

The councillor who had the last word on the issue was Mr J. Willis. He said he watched a boxing match on television on Sunday evening in which the loser had decided wisely halfway through the fight to throw in the towel to avoid further punishment.

"He realised he was knocking his head against a brick wall," he said. "So I am going along with this recommendation."

MOZAMBIQUE-SOUTH AFRICA, INTERNATIONAL INTERDEPENDENCY STRESSED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 4 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] Paris (SAPA-Reuter)--In an interview which was published here Mozambique's Minister of Planning Mario de Graca Machungo stated yesterday that Mozambique expects that transportation business ties with South Africa will grow and that he welcomes foreign investments in agriculture.

"South Africa needs Maputo's harbor and it is a very good thing that it is using this harbor and we want that country to use it. We will not close it." This is what he told a monthly business publication in an interview.

He went on to say: "Mozambique is exporting electricity from the Cabora Bassa project to South Africa but it needs help in the development of its industries.

"South Africa is our neighbor and we cannot ignore this realistic fact. We do condemn the racist government in South Africa, but that is the problem of the people of South Africa."

Profits

The minister stated that foreign investors can grow wheat and corn in Mozambique and may be sure that they will be able to repatriate their profits. Foreign companies are also welcome to start tea plantations, livestock farms and cotton plantations.

"We need greater productivity and for this we need fertilizers, tractors and trucks and projects for producing these things. We also need to improve our construction capabilities so that we can build dams, roads and storage facilities for our harvests and develop other infrastructures."

'HAWKISH' U.S.-SOMALI AGREEMENT MUST BE CONDEMNED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 25 Sep 80 p 12

[Article by V. Rodrigues: "The 'Hawks' and the War..."]

[Text] When Jimmy Carter started his campaign for a new presidential mandate, the largest newspaper in Atlanta, THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION, stated clearly: "Since Vietnam, the United States has been paralyzed whenever direct action has to be taken outside its territory."

To a certain extent it is important to connect recent statements made about Africa by the American government with the polarization of political forces in the United States. This represents the big crisis of American capitalism that is intensifying and seeking solutions, using as support the entire press and television which are totally controlled by multinational companies, managed primarily by Jews residing in the United States. It is not by chance that the U.S. press, television and radio criticize Carter and his administration directly for their apparent apathy. Such a strategy is part of an old plan that the American "hawks" started implementing a long time ago.

After having gained access to Somali bases, United States took a further effective step in the militarization of the Indian Ocean which, according to a UN resolution, should be maintained as neutral territory.

The Somali bases of Berbera and Mogadishu will serve, as we all know before going any further, as an entrepot to facilitate U.S. rapid deployment forces to intervene in African and Middle Eastern affairs, namely, against national liberation movements and against Iran. In addition, the U.S.-Somali military agreement, by rearming the Somali forces, also constitutes a threat to peace in eastern Africa and the African Horn, knowing well, as we do, the expansionist ambitions of the government of Mogadishu that persists in contravening the principles of the OAU Charter, according to which the borders inherited from colonial times must be maintained for the time being.

The aggressive policy of Washington, evidenced in Africa once more by this agreement with Somalia, opposes essentially the will of independent Africa to settle by peaceful means the differences in the continent, stated Mengistu Haile Mariam, Ethiopian head of state, on the occasion of the sixth anniversary of the fall of the feudal regime in Ethiopia.

The signing of the U.S.-Somali agreement at a time when an OAU summit was taking place in Freetown therefore constituted an unforgivable provocation to the African countries which, at that exalted moment for the continent, underscored unequivocally that the Ogaden region is an integral part of Ethiopia and warned Somalia to put an end to its present territorial claims that, besides being prejudicial to the interests of the neighboring countries, are not in accord with the principles that guide the OAU. By assuming this new attitude, Washington showed once more its arrogance toward the OAU and to all Africa.

The opinion of the progressive people of the world must condemn the U.S.-Somali agreement that in effect endangers the security of the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf, and must support the position of Ethiopia that called for a peaceful settlement in the normalization of its relations with Somalia.

By taking such a position, the opinion of the progressive people of the world will not only help Africa to defend its sovereignty, now being threatened, but above all will also contribute to the easing of international tension which the imperialists persist in aggravating.

EXPLOITATION SKYROCKETS MARKET PRICES

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 25 Sep 80 p 2

[Editorial: "How Can This Exploitation Be Stopped?]

[Text] A stroll through the markets of Luanda shows clearly that the unbridled exploitation which characterizes those gathering centers of women vendors remains insensitive to the suffering of the workers.

As a matter of fact, no consideration is shown at those places by women vendors who can hardly wait for the right moment to charge a few more kwanzas to some worker who appears to be bragging that money fell from heaven right into his hands!...At the Prenda market, which attracted our attention, we saw some servant women complaining about the high prices of the products displayed there, but they spoke in low voices so that the market women could not hear them for fear that they might run the risk of being poorly served and then, when lunch time comes round...For, generally, menfolk at home care little about the skyrocketing prices of the market vendors; all they want is their meals on time!

Taking advantage of that indifferent attitude, the market vendors gradually in-increase the price of their products and when you least expect it you discover to your amazement that swordfish, which until recently cost 100 kwanzas, now costs three times as much and that some other type of fish has already jumped to more than 600 kwanzas!

It is clear that this runaway situation cannot go on. Much has been written and said about the Luanda markets but we have noted with dismay that those people who are answerable for what is happening either have not yet been questioned or close their ears to complaints.

We are entitled to ask: How long will this disgraceful situation last in the markets of the capital?

FIRST MPLA CONGRESS MAY HAVE SET OVERLY AMBITIOUS GOALS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 2 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial: "A Task for All the People"]

[Text] The realization of the teachings and of the last instructions willed to us by our late comrade, President Agostinho Neto, has remained an unchangeable factor in the directing activities carried out by the Central Committee of our party which remains faithful to the oath given on 17 September 1979 at the funeral of the Immortal Leader of the Angolan Revolution, Founder of the Nation and of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola-Workers Party.

Thus, along with the dynamism transmitted this year to the establishment of the agencies of People's Power—a process that will culminate next 11 November with the creation of the People's Assembly—preparatory work also continues gradually for the First Extraordinary Congress of the party that will take place in Luanda from 4 to 10 December.

While the establishment of agencies of People's Power is already making possible the broad participation of the working masses in the administration of the country—thus realizing one of the strategic objectives of our revolution—the First Extraordinary Congress of the MPLA-Workers Party consequently assumes intensified importance by right of the objectives that determine its realization.

In fact, it falls to the First Extraordinary Congress of our party to analyze and approve the basic guidelines for the economic and social development of our country for the 5-year period 1981-85, besides proceeding also to the completion of the Central Committee by electing new members. In this sense, the resolutions of the congress must be carried out within the next 5 years by the executive departments of the government already under the administration and the control of the working classes organized within the framework of the People's Power.

Today we are aware that the First MPLA Congress, that started as an experiment—albeit in its initial stage—of 2 years in power, and on the basis of economic and social data obtained from statistics from the last year of colonial rule, may have set overly ambitious goals for the National Reconstruction for the 3-year period 1978-80.

In 3 years, we have noted achievements and failures in the economic and social recuperation process of our country. Through our achievements and the mistakes made, we have already accumulated the necessary minimum experience to be able, on the one hand, to reflect critically on the current gaps and omissions in the basic guidelines for the economic and social development of the People's Republic of Angola for the period 1978-80, approved by the First Congress of the MPLA, and then, on the other hand, to draw, with our feet already firmly planted on the ground, the principal lines of the economic and social policy that will guide the party, the government and the working masses until the meeting of the Second Ordinary Congress of the MPLA-Workers Party, in 1985.

Consequently, the redefinition by the First Extraordinary Congress of economic and social guidelines, already strengthened by the establishment of the People's Assembly and of the provincial assemblies, will allow the party, with the enlistment of all its members and of all the people, to set up plans that will take several years during the 5-year period 1981-85 that will propel the People's Republic of Angola into taking the qualitative leap that is necessary to fulfill the wise teaching of our late and immortal leader: "The most important thing is to solve the problems of the people."

Within this perspective, the preparatory tasks of the First Extraordinary Congress of our party must not only enlist actively all its militants through the study, debate and enrichment of the basic documents to be submitted for study by the congress, but also mobilize the support of all the people by organizing cultural and sports events, voluntary work days and campaigns for the collection of funds.

Under the word of command: "From strength is unity to economic independence of our nation," we are going to make the First Extraordinary Congress a task for all the people.

The struggle goes on.

Victory is ours.

SEMINAR REVIEWS SITUATION IN JURIDICAL, JUSTICE FIELD

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 10 Oct 80 p 1

[Excerpts] The First National Conference on Justice and Juridical Work in the Government, which has been meeting since 6 October in the Museum of Natural History, ended its proceedings yesterday in a session chaired by Henrique Santos (Onambue), Central Committee secretary for legal affairs and alternate member of the Political Bureau of the MPLA-Labor Party.

Attending the closing ceremony were Lucio Lara, member of the Political Bureau; Afonso Van-Dunem (Mbinda), Roberto de Almeida and Indio Machado, all members of the Central Committee; Justice Minister Diogenes Boavida; Lientenant Colonel Kafuxi, prosecutor of the People's Revolutionary Court [TPR]; provincial delegates of the Ministry of Justice, popular advisors of the TPR and students of the Faculty of Law.

The proceedings, in plenary session, were organized around five topics: an accounting of the implementation of the basic guidelines of the first congress in the area of justice; the establishment of popular justice and the prospects for creation of a unified judicial system; the forms of civil, criminal and trial law; legal aspects of public administration; training of cadres and instruction in the law.

After a broad discussion of all the topics, an accounting of the achievements in the 3-year period from 1978 to 1980 and a look at the prospects for the period from 1980 to 1985, the participants concluded that "the guidelines of the First MPLA Congress for 1978-1980 have been generally implemented with the activation of the People's Revolutionary Court, constituting an important step in establishing a legal system for defense of the revolution, and the creation of district courts in almost all the provinces."

Unified System

An important step toward a unified system of justice was the creation of the Office of Attorney General of the Republic, a basic organ for law enforcement and public prosecution, under a unified system and encompassing all jurisdictions. In the area of labor justice, the participants concluded: "The guidelines were not met for elimination of the present labor courts and the partial transfer of their responsibilities to the labor commissions." According to the participants, this was because of "the delay in the drafting of the new labor legislation, which was only recently completed and has not yet been approved."

With respect to legal representation, the conclusions state: "It being imperative to put an end to the private practice of this activity, the participants noted the efforts of the Ministry of Justice to replace private practice through the training of public counselors, the first such course to be concluded next year."

Looking to the tasks for the 5-year period from 1980 to 1985, the participants noted as the major objective "the installation of a unified judicial system for popular justice, harmoniously integrated in the structure of the new popular and democratic state." The participants concluded that such a system implies the creation of the Supreme People's Court, encompassing various halls or chambers, namely, criminal, civil, military and state security. At lower levels there would be the provincial and municipal courts, specialized according to the existing legal action.

New System for Legal Counsel

The delegates at the First National Conference on Justice and Administration of the Law concluded that a new system for legal representation should be "installed immediately, to replace the private practice of this profession." The participants concluded that such a system would be based on the creation of public law offices, which would integrate, in an institutionalized form, existing attorneys, the future public counselors, those licensed in the law who work in other government sectors, and also law students.

With respect to strengthening the legal system and disseminating the laws, the delegates noted the relevance of creating and generalizing social awareness of the need that all government agencies, directors and officials and all citizens comply with the laws, striving to uphold socialist lawfulness as a basic principal in the activity of the popular and democratic state. In this area, the delegates also noted the importance of passage of the preventive arrest law; a basic tool in guaranteeing the defense of the citizens, its entry in force is urgent.

Regarding the establishment of a new penitentiary system, more precisely, penal reeducation, the delegates concluded that some steps have been taken in engaging prisoners in socially useful work, according to the capacity of the productive sector, and in planning political, educational, cultural and recreational activities.

REPORTAGE ON LWENA PILOT TRAINING CENTER

Juanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 10 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Pires Ferreira: "Training Men for the 'Wings of Progress'"]

[Excerpts] At the airport of the city of Lwena, it is normal to see planes taking off and landing constantly. They are not carrying passengers or goods, as one might think at first. This is not a busy airport in terms of passenger traffic. These are small red and white planes, and in their cockpits young men from all over the country are receiving flight instruction. This is the Aeronautical Training Center of Angola, a school which has trained 79 private pilots in about a year.

Initially, the center was to be inaugurated in September of last year. Owing to the untimely death of beloved President Agostinho Neto at that time, however, the center was inaugurated only in January of this year.

Pilot training has an important place in any country, because it is a valuable contribution to social and economic development.

For our young country it is even more necessary, because we are notoriously lacking in these cadres. The People's Republic of Angola is very weak in this area because our planes are largely flown by foreigners. It is in this context that the Aeronautical Training Center is of overriding importance for our development.

The 10 planes now in operation at the center were acquired from France in June 1979 and assembled in our country by Angolan technicians. The units were all assembled in Moxico Province.

The planes, which have been in constant operation since the school was founded, are guaranteed maintenance by TAAG (Air Transport of Angola).

The school is currently undergoing a rather significant transformation. It will stop training private pilots (PPA), and train commercial (professional) pilots exclusively. The alteration does not involve a replacement of planes, but only the type of cadres to come out of the school.

Operation of the Aeronautical Training Center

The first two courses designed for the Aeronautical Training Center of Angola were for the training of PPA and lasted 6 months. They were planned for candidates with an eighth-grade education. According to Jose Coutinho, director of the center, this level of schooling is inadequate for the pilots' course. A solid educational grounding is necessary if the students are to benefit from the classes, and the low level of education is the reason for the failures that have occurred, although they have been few. Jose Coutinho also told us that "for the pilots' course, a 10th-grade education is more suitable, since they must have a solid background for some of the more complex disciplines, such as aerodynamics, which is a branch of physics."

The school is currently equipped to handle 50 students in each course. Of 100 students in the 2 courses already administered, 79 pilots were trained in the PPA category. For this type of training, a pilot must log 40 hours of solo flight, after having flown with an instructor, naturally. At present, the practical classes are still taught by five cooperants. This will be the case until Angolan instructors have completed their course at the center. Subjects taught in the course for private pilots include aerodynamics, meteorology, aeronautics, air navigation, flight physiology and regulations.

Before the future pilots attend the practical courses, they are given a theoretical course. As the school was delayed somewhat in going into operation, the first course was administered by TAAG here in Luanda. The second one was taught in Lwena by Portuguese cooperants.

For the commercial course, in which the pilots must log 200 hours of solo flight during their instruction, each course will last 12 months. This course requires twice as much time. In addition to being more extensive, it covers more complex disciplines.

Currently, 18 students are taking the course, and another course, to be initiated soon, will be attended by 20 students. The latter course will be administered by Angolan instructors.

It is not hard to imagine how much is required for the full training of these pilots, so lacking in our country. For this reason, it is necessary that all the students attending the course be highly dedicated and prepared to pursue this career.

Food Greatest Student Problem

Aviation is a profession that saps a great deal of energy. Hence pilots must have a suitable diet so they will not contract any illness later as a result of poor nutrition. At the Aeronautical Training Center, food is a major problem; supplies at the school are inadequate and irregular.

To minimize this troubling problem, the school administration has decided to create an agricultural center and a 6-hectare vegetable garden, for which it has already acquired a tractor. In this way, the students will have their own supply of eggs, meat, vegetables and other products essential to a well-regulated diet.

In addition to films, the program will include discussion of general and specialized topics, study visits and direct discussion with oil officials in Angola. The conference, the first of this type held in our country, will give the participants an overview of the petroleum problem. Several agencies, companies and enterprises from the most varied sectors of activity have been invited to participate, and should register their representatives by 1200 hours on 13 October. The invited participants should register by topic, according to their specialties. These topics will be discussed by experts and technicians of SONANGOL and other international petroleum companies operating in Angola under existing contracts. The study visits will include trips to some of the most important production centers in the country, specifically in Zaire and the wells in the Kwanza Basin. CAUSES OF UNEMPLOYMENT--Since he beginning of this year, the Employment Center of the Ministry of Labor in Luanda has registered 7,594 Angolan citizens of both sexes and placed 2,886 individuals in some work centers in Luanda Province, we learned yesterday from Paulo Buta, director of the center. Buta also brought up other aspects related to the employment problem. Among the causes for the increasing number of unemployed, particularly in the nation's capital, Buta noted the great exodus of people from the rural areas, with little chance of employment, inasmuch as most of them are undistinguished, i.e., without a profession or literacy skills sought by work centers, which require qualified personnel. The director of the Labor Ministry agency also noted that many citizens who are denied employment join the ranks of the black marketeers who swarm through the city, transformed into the new exploiters of the working people. Because of the importance and depth of the problem, and also because it is urgent to find the solutions it demands, we plan to take up the matter again shortly, in a longer article. U.S. 'HUMAN RIGHTS' POLICY--The United States is the only country that supports the antipopular South Korean dictatorship. It was the United States that helped the South Korean puppet regime to drown in blood the popular revolt in Kwangju, authorizing the use of the Seoul regime troops under American command to "restore order." It was the United States, in fact, that invaded South Korea, which led to the government of Chun Du-Hwan, a pathological anticommunist. The question is unavoidable: How does Washington reconcile its support for the South Korean murderers with its own declarations of firm and steadfast fidelity to "human rights"?

The chief of the American administration answered the question himself. In fact, in one of his television speeches, Carter declared openly that "the United States cannot break relations with its allies and friends and abandon them to the Soviet influence, just because they do not observe our standards of human rights." The U.S. obligation to "guarantee the security" of the southern part of Korea "remains as firm as always," the president said. These declarations confirm once again that when Washington spouts off about human rights it employs a double standard; that is, it raises an incredible polemical outcry over nonexistent "democratic violations" and violations of "human rights" in other countries, seeking to profit in some way from this outcry. At the same time, it closes its eyes to real and flagrant violations of these rights when there are not, apparently, any political dividends to be gained. The facts would indicate that the bloody South Korean regime represents the exalted "American standard" that Washington seeks to impose on the world. The ceremony, conducted at the provincial command of that military unit in Ondjiva, was presided over by Jeronimo Sindima, deputy of the Central Committee and coordinator of the provincial committee of the party. The ceremony was also attended by some military leaders stationed in the province, members of the party and of the provincial government, as well as representatives of people's organization. Addressing the public during the proceedings Saraiva de Carvalho appealed to each person attached to the said organization to assume the responsibility of doing a better job within the spirit of cooperation and unity demanded in the People's Police Brigade. The prestige and the trust that the People's Police must cultivate from the public, and aspects related to the necessity of not confusing personal matters with the goal for which this government agency exists and serves, were other points emphasized by the director of the Angolan police. GENERAL CENSUS ONE YEAR LATER

Bujumbura LE RENOUVEAU DU BURUNDI in French 15 Aug 80 pp 1,2

[Article by Callixte Sinzinkayo]

[Text] The first anniversary of the general census was 16 August 1980. The census was important for Burundi because it provided some data needed to draw up economic and social development projects.

The director general of the Ministry of the Interior and head of the Central Census Bureau, Mr Audace Ngendakumana, discussed the incomplete analysis work and provided new perspectives.

"As you know, the main goal of our census was to determine the total number of people, their distribution by territorial unit, their demographic and economic structure, in other words, a breakdown of this population by sex, age, marital status, nationality, religion, level of education, profession and other factors.

To obtain all these results, the Central Census Bureau had to complete the second phase of the project which included:

-Verifying and coding the census documents;

-Placing the information on discs;

-Creating a computer program for the data and publishing statistical tables;

-Analyzing and publishing the final results.

It is true that a year has passed since the first general census in Burundi and this is what has been accomplished in the period:

All census documents have been consolidated and classified in one place. The first provisional conclusions obtained by manual sorting have already been published in a brochure on breakdown of the population by province, commune, village and sex. A section to verify and code the data has been set up. A work area to record the data on discs has been fixed up. About 40 people have been recruited and trained locally for these jobs.

The operations are now on schedule. More than half the provinces have been coded. Recording on discs is being carried out satisfactorily. We are now collaborating with CNI [National Data Processing Center] on trial runs to produce the first statistical tables on the provinces already recorded in the computer.

As you can tell, a census is not just counting people; it involves a long, methodical, scientific endeavor and requires substantial physical and technical resources and qualified personnel.

We hope the second phase of this project will be completed on time, to achieve the objectives of the government and the United Nations which constantly gave their support for the success of this census."

The Individual and the Registry Office

In addition to the general census, the Central Census Bureau has been working since the beginning of this year to improve the system of recording vital statistics.

Mr Ngendakumana explained the project:

"The study of the population is a complex subject which cannot be overlooked in the socioeconomic context. Vital statistics provide one of the principal sources of demographic information. Official records constitute an extremely complex, delicate area. Their usefulness for administration, the individual and demographic research is obvious.

Official records help the administration and the individual identify persons. The purpose of this institution is to record events in peoples' lives (live births, deaths, abortions) and learn about an individual's changes (marriages, divorces) as well as about the individual's behavior which may or may not directly affect his identify or another person's (name change, legal recognition, adoption, etc....)

Birth certificates legally prove the individual's identity and his legal situation. Indeed, society's growing complexity obliges a man to prove his right to his name and that of his parents, his age, the legitimacy of his birth, his citizenship in society, etc....

In contemporary life, it will soon be indispensable to produce a birth certificate for:

-school enrollment, an administrative file, insurance benefits, a passport, a driver's licence, inheritance rights, marriage, etc."

Reviewing the past 8 months, Mr Ngendakumana said the Ministry of the Interior passed Decree Law No 1/1 on 15 January 1980, establishing a new official records code for individuals and the family (chapter five.)

The Ministry of the Interior set up the National Registry Office at the central administration level and set up a registry office in each commune. Moreover, it trained officials and registrars at the central and provincial level. The officials have been appointed and the communal registrars recruited and hired.

The ministry drew up and printed registers and marriage documents in accordance with the legislation in effect; they are in Kirundi and French so every couple understands the rights and duties of the two spouses before they sign the documents.

Marriages not recorded by the registry official appointed in each commune will not be recognised under law.

For the moment, vital statistics only record three events: births, deaths and marriages. Later, other data will be gathered when the means are available.

Mr Ngendakumana then discussed the connection between the census and official records.

"The primary goal of official records is to update the overall data on the population obtained during the recent general census. It is done by continually adding the births and subtracting the deaths, which amounts to demographic bookkeeping. The data gathered from official records provide information on the rate of demographic growth, its evolution and behavior of the parts. They also provide information by means of a periodic totalization on the size, structure and geographic distribution of the population.

Studying these factors and the interaction of demographic, economic and social factors will help us determine probable birth, marriage and death rates; with certain information, we can make demographic projections.

In sum, official records provide one major basic demographic source. Statistics on marriages, number of children, marital status and economic activity help us determine the impact of the formation of new family units on economic life.

Moreover, with chronological series, we can do longitudinal studies on a woman's child-bearing years based on length of marriage and age at time of marriage.

Vital statistics can also be used in public health and medicine; for example, in studying mortality and mortality rates by age and sex. These related studies can be used directly in planning economic and social development."

INTENSIFICATION OF LIBYAN PRESENCE CONFIRMED

Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Nov 80 p 8

[Text] President Goukouni Oueddei, president of the Transitional National Union Government, has just made a 3-day visit to Libya as head of an important delegation, the Libyan press agency JANA announced on Thursday, 6 November. The communique indicates that Colonel Qadhdhafi and President Oueddei went to Faya-Largeau, the capital of northern Chad, on Tuesday 4 November.

This announcement confirms the rumors that have reached Yaounde about the difficulties the Northern Armed Forces (FAN) of Hissene Habre have encountered in the north. In fact, indications from the Cameroon capital are that the FAN has lost control of most of the localities which had rallied around it, and especially the city of Faya-Largeau.

These rumors have surfaced at the same time that Michel Gurdus, Israeli radio communications interception expert, affirmed on Tuesday that important elements of the regular Libyan Army have entered the northern regions of Chad during the last couple of days (LE MONDE 5 November). FAN has already complained, on several occasions, of Libyan military presence fighting alongside President Oueddei's People's Armed Forces (FAP).

On 18 October 3 unidentified airplanes bombed Faya-Largeau and combat was between Hissein's tropps and Libyan units, which were consequently pushed back, leaving around 30 dead in their wake. A Soviet-built Libyan bomber-chaser Tupolev 22 B had already bombed the African quarters of Ndjamena held by Hissein Habre's forces on 4 occasions in mid-October.

According to well-informed sources, the planes that bombed Faya-Largeau were the same kind. They came from the north of Chad and flew out in the same direction after dropping their bombs. According to FAN, these planes came from a base at Wour, operated by the Libyans in the extreme north of Tibesti, in Libyan occupied Chad territory.

Libyan troops, whose presence in Ndjamena had already been noted as early as April, were also pushed back by FAN around 20 October at the north exit of the Chad capital. At this time, 1 of the 5 Libyan military prisoners declared that he had arrived in Chad around the beginning of October, accompanied by 500 other soldiers, to "destroy Ndjamena." This master-sergeant affirmed that he had first gone to Dougia, a village about 80 km from Ndjamena, on the banks of the Chari, and that he had then been transferred by water routes to Farcha, where the command post of the coalition government forces is located, at the exit to Ndjamena.

The increase in fighting and the intensification of the Libyan presence come at a time when the subcommittee of the OAU on the conflict in Chad (Benin, the Congo, Guinea, Togo) is getting ready to meet President Oueddei and Habre again, to submit to them the final document of their work, which calls for a cease-fire on 15 November, the demilitarization of Ndjamena, as well as the dispatch of a neutral force and an observation commission to be set up there.

It is hard to see how, under the present circumstances, this document--which is based on the principal points of the Lagos agreements of August 1979--would be accepted and respected any better or any more than these previous agreements. "Negotiate with Hissein Habre means prepare for a new war. We will never negotiate with him" President Goukouni Oueddei told us last September. It seems that this declaration still holds true.

VISIT OF IRAQI PRESIDENT'S REPRESENTATIVE REPORTED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 18 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Article: "Saddam Hussein's Emissary Facing the Malagasy Press"]

[Text] An Iraqi delegation led by Akrawi Hashim arrived yesterday to relay a personal message to President Didier Ratsiraka from his counterpart in Baghdad, President Saddam Hussein. A ceremony to that effect took place at Ambohitsorohitra late yesterday morning, followed by a press conference in the evening at the Iraqi Embassy at Ambatonakanga where Akrawi Hashim, senior minister in the Iraqi Government, informed the press of the purpose of the trip of the delegation which he led to Antananarivo: "We summed up the situation of the Iraqi-Iranian conflict to the Malagasy president," he said; "we are happy to note that the chief of state of the RDM [Democratic Republic of Madagascar] has fully understood the Iraqi position."

Before replying to the questions of the numerous journalists who had come to the conference, the Iraqi senior minister insisted first on describing the beginning of the Iraqi-Iranian conflict. In fact, the cold war between the two countries was not at all a recent one; its history goes back even to the period of the Shah or Iran, "because of Iranian interference in the internal affairs of Iraq," according to the speaker. The Iraqi minister also did not fail to point out the fact that his government has continued to fight against imperialism in all its forms and in all areas: political, economic and sociocultural, with the single aim of jealously defending Iraqi sovereignty. We are against imperialism in practice, others are against imperialism verbally.

"We have made many efforts," he added, "to strengthen relations with other countries whatever their politics or their ideology. The expansion of cooperation with other countries consists mainly in maintaining a peaceful and friendly coexistence. Many times, the Baghdad government has done everything it could to improve relations between Teheran and Baghdad, but its efforts remain fruitless because the Iranian regime only continues to follow the policies of the Shah whom it pretends to denounce."

By Actions

The chief of the Iraqi delegation also took the opportunity to keep the press informed of Baghdad's policy with regard to education: an unrelenting fight against illiteracy resulting in compulsory education throughout the country, agrarian reform with a view to giving the peasants the maximum land enabling them to increase production, the creation of industrial centers for the development of the economy and, last but not least, giving autonomous status to the minority group.

To conclude his brief introduction, the Iraqi senior minister denounced Khomeyni's policies, stressing the fact "that it is not enough to pretend to fight against imperialism, one must prove by actions that one opposes imperialism at all costs."

Whereupon the delegation chief answered the journalists' questions, stating that the Iranians did not respect the agreement signed by the 2 parties in 1975, which is why Baghdad considers it null and void. Although the Iraqi Government had warned Teheran against the possible seriousness of its aggressive policy, it had turned a deaf ear, by daring to invade Iraqi territories, namely the three islands and Shatt-al-Arab.

"We do not want any bit of Iranian territory," affirmed Mr Hashim; "what is essential for us is to recover, at any price and regardless of the sacrifices, what should come back to us by right."

"It is the Iranians who began to attack Iraqi territory with their air force; therefore we are forced to retaliate with the sole intention of defending the sovereignty and the integrality of our country."

Ninety Notes Verbales

"I must remind you that despite the 90 notes verbales sent to Iran asking it to respect our sovereignty, it has not taken them into account; more than 287 Iranian attacks have been counted since June until today." The number of dead and wounded is not known, because war is war.

"We are ready to accept all possible solutions to this conflict from wherever they come, although it is our troops who are winning at the front."

Whereupon the minister recalled the interventions of Fidal Castro and of the Pakistani president in this connection, without failing to point out all that our president has done to bring the two parties to negotiate, with a view to stopping the war.

"We must thank the president of the RDM for his efforts aimed at seeking ways and means leading to peace," he stressed.

As to the taking of American hostages in Teheran, the Iraqi minister stated that an inhuman act was involved, which must be condemned without any political considerations. He was also anxious to assure his interlocutors that the Iraqi-Iranian war would not in any way lead Baghdad into the American orbit. Any foreign interference in this conflict would be considered the sole responsibility of Teheran, he continued, for Baghdad's unshakable position on the need for stopping the conflict is clear in the eyes of the whole world.

Petroleum

In other respects, the Iraqi delegation chief was anxious to correct certain information which appeared to distort the balance of power between the belligerents.

With regard to the export of petroleum abroad, Mr Hashin informed the journalists that this resupplying was interrupted because of the Shatt-al-Arab situation, where navigation proved to be completely impossible. "But Iraq will always respect its commitments."

With regard to the Damascus-Moscow axis, Iraq sees no drawback there, all the more since it also signed a treaty of friendship and cooperation with the USSR. Lastly, with regard to the nonaligned conference which should take place in Iraq in 1982, the Iraqi senior minister considered that in spite of the current war, Baghdad will be a position "most certainly" to organize, at that time, the nonaligned summit.

REPORT ON MFM-MFT REDS, EXPERTS MEETING

Tananarive MADAGASCAR MATIN in French 29 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] A promise kept. Such a balance could be struck on the dinner debate held last Friday at the Solimotel by the MFM-MFT Reds & Experts on the theme "Democracy and Efficiency in Business."

The MFM wished to make the evening a crossroads of opinion where each business participant explained the manner in which he deals with the problems and difficulties met by business concerns at the present stage of the revolution. It succeeded by means of a perfect material organization, a judicious choice of speakers to introduce the debate, and the courtesy, indeed the remarkable intellectual discipline shown by the participants despite the very delicate nature of the subjects approached, and despite their own very diverse origins. There were general managers, university professors, economic administrative officials, journalists, politicians, upper level business managers and, of course, the MFM-MFT Reds & Experts.

Five Main Points

The organizers oriented the debate on five major aspects of the subject, introduced respectively by a specialist.

A MFM-MFT political bureau spokesman, Germain Rakotonirainy, spoke of the legitimate place of managers in the new form of adaptation of business enterprises, coexistence of private and public enterprises, internal profitability, and quality of service performed.

A member of an enterprise management committee brought up the problems raised by filling upper managerial posts with Malagasy nationals, by the transition from the old legal system to the new charter system, by the difficulties encountered in setting up the management institutions provided by the charter, and by the necessity and obligation to succeed by avoiding groping and reverses.

A private enterprise leader spoke of the management-labor dialogue within his firm, of private sector efforts to follow the present metamorphosis of business, and of the manner of approaching present and future managerial difficulties.

A university economics teacher was concerned with the organization of business management and economics teaching in view of the demands of the new situation.

An official of the economic administration dealt with administration-business relations, and with business life as seen from the viewpoint of administrative authorities.

A Lively Debate

The debate, masterfully presided over by CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council] member Mamandafy Rakotonirina, was very lifely, and marked by sincerity throughout the 4 hours of a session planned for 2 hours by the organizers. The will to see clearly, find solutions, and question bureaucratic attitudes was dominant.

We salute this courageous initiative by the intellectuals and experts of MFM/MFT, who have put to shame a certain apprehension on the part of detractors. In the opinion of participants such meetings, inconceivable only a short time ago, are useful for pooling experience and for better preparing the future. Everyone knows that the MFM has assumed the task of rallying intellectuals and managers to the defense of the revolution, to which end the Reds & Experts are devoting themselves with success by means of successive seminars throughout the country.

MINISTER OUTLINES NATION'S POSITION ON COFFEE MARKET

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 6 Nov 80 p 1

/Communique from Minister of Economy and Commerce Justin Rarivoson to MADAGASCAR-MATIN director on country's position on coffee problem; date and place not given/

/Text/ Justin Rarivoson, the capable minister of economy and commerce of the Desire Rakotoarijaona government, left Tuesday evening for a 10-day trip to Europe. Before his departure, he sent us a communique in which he makes interesting observations on the coffee problem following an article from the NEW PRESS AGENCY (NAP) taken up by MADAGASCAR-MATIN on 29 October.

Coffee being a "rich" product whose importance as a source of revenue is beyond question, we are publishing herewith the letter from the minister to our director.

Dear Director:

I have read the article which you printed in your issue No 2541 of 29 October 1980 on the new agreement on coffee.

You state in that article that the Malagasy producers are contesting that agreement.

I should like in this communique to call your attention to the following points:

a) Certain producers belonging to the OAMCAF /African and Malagasy Coffee Organization/ have in fact contested the provisions of that agreement for reasons of their own which I consider valid.

b) Madagascar is not contesting the principle of the agreement but considers it only a palliative which will be completely effective only if there is a definite desire by all parties involved to arrive at a system which is more equitable and applicable to all raw material.

c) Madagascar deplores the present situation which is also the result of not always favorable action taken by certain producers.

d) The current situation can also be considered the result of the sales policy of certain countries which have placed far too much emphasis on a policy of utilizing the land rather than on that of the profitability of the operations over the medium and long term for the producers as a whole.

e) Madagascar deplores the fact that the farmers who produce the crop and the final consumers are the real victims of this persistent fluctuation in raw materials, for the former do not reap the just rewards of their labor and the latter the reality of the market price.

Please accept, Mr Director, the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

AREMA STRONGLY DENOUNCES RUMORMONGERS

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 3 Nov 80 p 2

/Text/ Tananarive--ANTA--A delegation from the national headquarters of AREMA /Malagasy Revolutionary Avant-garde/, led by Central Committee member Armand Ramambazafy and Paul Gilbert Raobelina, met last Saturday with AREMA militants from Mandrosoa in the Ankadikely-Ilafy Tananarive-Avaradrano "firaisana" for the opening of a sales fair organized by the Mandrosoa militants.

Raobelina reminded the militants that they should substantiate AREMA's position as avant-garde by diligent work.

Meanwhile, Ramambazafy stressed that our current struggle is being waged for the well-being of the great mass of production workers and our children, the builders of the future. He also emphasized that our intellectuals should take part in that struggle.

Ramambazafy then paid homage to the Mandrosoa militants who have already erected a "koparema," a production "tsenabe," a "fokontany" office and a Red Cross home. "Work is at the root of all these accomplishments," he said, "and the AREMA militants have not shirked their duties." The speaker then urged each one to do his best to see that justice and honesty prevail in the provisioning of the people, "for the revolution," he asserted, "requires militants who are conscientious and capable and not afraid to face up to their responsibilities."

Damage Caused by Rumors

The last subject brought up by the delegation from AREMA's national headquarters was that of the damage caused by the propagation of false rumors and poisoning maneuvers. "Actions have shown the speakers to be what they are" is one of the rumors spread by the enemies of our revolution to maintain an atmosphere of uncertainty and fear among the working class and, consequently, to impede our march toward socialism. "But let us not be taken in by such maneuvers," the delegation concluded, "and it is up to us to prove that our march toward a new society is irreversible."

AREMA Cell in Anosizato-East

Another delegation from AREMA's national headquarters, composed of Messrs Andriamanisa Samuelson, Central Committee member, and Rakotondratoandro, coordinator, and Mmes Ravololonirina and Noro Robinson, presided Saturday afternoon over a ceremony officially inaugurating the AREMA cell of Anosizato-East and an ideological discussion meeting.

The new cell was established on 5 July and its first secretary urged the militants to exemplify solidarity, the assumption of responsibility and tolerance, "for only at that price," he said, "shall we be able to achieve socialist paradise."

Mme Noro Robinson explained AREMA's salient features: "Our group is not a refuge for ill-intentioned individuals. On the contrary, it is open to all militants ready to pursue the path to socialism." She then spoke of the role and position of women as pillars of the revolution.

Andriamanisa Samuelson confined his remarks to the work methods and mentality which should inspire every revolutionary militant. "We must exclude all search for glory and personal prestige," he said, "for what matters most is to protect the interests of the people and the nation. Work makes the man," he concluded, "and work assures our unity. The people and country require a type of work which corresponds to our ideological orientations."

Cell in Morondava-Antehiroka

The Morondava-Antehiroka cell was also officially inaugurated last Saturday. The ceremony was conducted by a delegation from AREMA's national headquarters, composed of Paul Ernest Rakotomanana, Aime Rakotobe and Edmond Randriambolanoro. The three delegation members took this occasion to stress the important role of precooperatives as effective instruments in helping us assure the successful provisioning of the people and the failure of undermining maneuvers perpetrated by the enemies of our revolution.

ASSEMBLY HEAD COMMENTS ON NORTH KOREAN ASPIRATIONS

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 5 Nov 80 p 2

/Commentary by Lucien X. Michel Andrianarahinjaka, chairman of the National Popular Assembly, on North Korean aspirations/

/Text/ It is with great interest that we have taken note of the report presented by Comrade Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people, at the Sixth Congress of the Korean Labor Party.

This report is of considerable importance, for it answers the expectations and hopes of the peoples of the world and of the Korean people in particular by offering a definite solution to a crucial problem not only of Korea but of the contemporary world--namely, the problem of the peaceful reunification of Korea.

The basic aspirations of the Korean people and of all people who love peace and justice lie in the reunification of Korea falsely divided by the United States within the scope of the imperialist policy of domination and exploitation which, moreover, is being carried out in South Korea through oppression of the working class and by converting the government to a fascist regime.

The workers and people of South Korea are manifesting their opposition to a regime devoted to the interests of imperialism and the United States in particular and are struggling for a more harmonious life within the scope of a single Korea.

The propositions advanced by Comrade Kim Il-song provide a solution to this contradiction between the division of Korea imposed by American imperialism, on the one hand, and, on the other, the aspiration of the Korean people as a whole--both the North and the South--to see the Korean fatherland reunited.

The importance of the propositions advanced by Comrade Kim Il-song lies in the fact that they are not limited to declarations of principle on the unification of Korea and the need for the American forces stationed in South Korea to leave that territory to let the Korean people freely decide their own fate.

These propositions are very positive and constitute a big step in the search for a peaceful solution to the Korean problem, for:

1. They take into consideration the basic aspirations of all Korean people.

2. They take into consideration Korea's basic realities--namely, the existence of a North Korea and a South Korea differing in their political and social regimes and in their methods of governing society, the one predominantly related to production of the capitalist type, the other, socialist.

3. They take into consideration the international economic and political state of affairs.

In other words, the existence of the two different social formations making up present-day Korea is recognized as such. These propositions and the solutions advanced are not based on the absolute denial of South Korea's social structure but on the recognition of this reality which, dialectically opposed to that of North Korea, must be a factor in the evolution and development of reunified Korea.

Whence the proposition of the formation of a confederal republic based on the coexistence of two entities differing in their social structure, the level of economic and social development attained by each, and the like.

The farsightedness of the great leader, Kim Il-song, and his realism are also shown by the fact that he insists that the eventual conversion of reunified Korea into the Democratic Confederal Republic of Koryo must be carried out autonomously, with complete independence, and in the interest of the working people of the two Koreas, that is, within the scope of an overall policy of nonalinement, scientific, technical and commercial cooperation with all countries regardless of their political and social regime, the annulment of all military accords signed with this or that power, and the like.

In our opinion, the propositions advanced by the great leader, Kim Il-song, are very positive and are an important contribution to the search for a solution to the Korean problem in accordance with the aspirations of the workers of the two Koreas, and we support them all the more in that, by their implication, they are contributing to the establishment of lasting peace not only in this part of Asia but throughout the world.

FUTURE OF RAILWAYS EXAMINED

Tananarive MADAGASCAR MATIN in French 22 Oct 80 pp 1-2

/Article by S. J.: "Figures Forecast Future of Our Railways"/

/Text/ "If the railway did not exist, it would be urgent to invent it," we read on the cover of the magazine LE RAIL ET LE MONDE, which we leafed through yesterday while waiting to be received by Adolphe Rakotoarivony, general manager of the Malagasy National Railways System. Nowhere else in the world is that truth overlooked as it is among us. That is why we did not think it in vain to broach the question of our railways with the person most competent to discuss it.

"The problem is simple," Mr Rakotoarivony told us. "We designed a 10-year development plan for 1977-87. This plan provides for an investment program of equipment and right of way replacement based on data gathered from all users. That study points to a 5.2 percent yearly increase in freight traffic and a 6.5 percent rise in passenger traffic; to the acquisition of 16 locomotives, 180 freight cars, and 24 passenger coaches. So much for rolling stock. Complete renovation of right of way will be done at the rate of 40 km, and the project is now proceeding according to plan.

Twenty Billion

"The entire project is financed by the BNI /National Bank for Industrial Development/, the Central Economic Cooperation Fund, the World Bank, and by our own resources, for a total of $90 million, or nearly 20 billion of our francs. The first phase, extending to 1982, totals $45 million, or 10 billion Malagasy Fr. The second, to be completed in 1983-87, likewise totals $45 million."

We next touched, with our informant, on the disturbance to the social and economic life of the country brought about by the slightest difficulty met with by the rail transport system. A derailment or landslide suffices, for example, to affect supplies of fuel, cement, rice, etc.

Mr Rakotoarivony sees himself as between the hammer and the anvil.

Derailments

Speaking of landslides and derailments, he stressed that they have always existed, but that in the past their effects were less felt, for supplies of all goods then sufficed to meet normal consumption needs. Mr. Rakotoarivony cited 1971 as an example. There were 38 derailments for 30,000 trains operating in the system, without any direct repercussion on the social and economic life of the country. In 1979, 41 derailments were recorded for 29,000 trains in operation. We know their consequences, particularly on the supply situation. It should perhaps be pointed out that the last equipment renewal prior to the 10-year 1977-87 plan dates back to 1954.

At present our national rail net has 900 km of main line, and 1,100 including secondary lines. It employs 4,500 workers, and has 33 main line locomotives, 11 railcars, 1,141 freight cars, 180 service cars, and 80 passenger coaches.

"If the railway did not exist, it would be urgent to invent it," said Bernard de Fontgalland. We add: "If the railway shows its age, it is urgent to rejuvenate it." That is now in progress, and by 1987 our national system will have completed its rejuvenation cure. It too will then be able to get out on the road to revolution.

COUNTRY'S 'CHADIZATION' MUST BE AVOIDED AT ALL COSTS

Dakar AFRICA in French Nov 80 p 33

[Excerpts] Al-Qadhdhafi's designs on the African states of the Sahel are becoming clearer. Following the failure of the adventure in the direction of the Maghreb and of the union with Egypt, the union with Syria may be just a diversion. The main objective of Tripoli's master is the establishment in the Sub-Saharan region of an empire which would primarily include the countries of Chad, Niger, Senegal and Mali. Indeed, he has been present in Chad for a long time, and occupies a part of it. Is he awaiting the right moment to perfect his undertaking? Or--more plausibly--does he prefer to achieve his aim through a vassal?

Mali Considered

How about Mali...which is obviously the weakest link of the chain. Didi Demba's braggdocio had already caused uneasiness, the reason being, very simply, that the country's political, economic and social situation unfortunately makes it susceptible to any kind of adventurism. Having achieved their coup d'etat through such slogans as "financial and economic recovery" and "national reconciliation," the Malian military can only brag, 12 years later, of having divided their country, having taken it back at least 30 years and ruined its international prestige and of having condemned it to a slow but true agony.

Mali represents, above all, moral decadence. The situation is rotten.... Is it ripe for al-Qadhdhafi?

Approximately 50 Malian intellectual cadres are in Libya, as well as mercenaries. Everything seems ready. Only a political leader is lacking: a man projecting credibility both nationally and internationally. Despite the fact that Didi Demba claims Modibo Keita and his party as his former mentors, he is discredited. As a result, Modibo Keita's former companions who are now residing abroad are being solicited...but, of course, quite unsuccessfully. Is there really no way to make the masters of Bamako understand the situation? Al-Qadhdhafi's recent declarations on the fate of the Tuaregs in Mali and Niger are aimed more [illegible] conditioning them to turn into a fifth column of future "liberators" rather than at launching a secessionist uprising on their part.

If the former leaders of Modibo Keita's party are declining to participate in the adventure, other Malian partisans of "change at any cost" could well enter into it. History teaches us that the most despised causes often succeed in winning over the people when they are disappointed, humiliated and at the end of their rope; such is the case with the Malian people today.

Entire Region in Jeopardy

It is high time, for the sake of the men and women of Mali, as well as all the peoples in the region, for peace and stability in our common space, for Bamako to adopt solutions worthy of the Malian tradition, having finally realized how dramatic the situation is. Each of us should work towards it, because it concerns all of us equally. No one knows how far a fire provoked by al-Qadhdhafi could go. No one can foresee the consequences of a "Chadization" of this country for Senegal, Niger, Upper Volta and Mauritania.

USSR AMBASSADOR ON BILATERAL, ZIMBABWE RELATIONS

Beira NOTICIAS DA BEIRA in Portuguese 21 Oct 80 p 2

[Interview with Valentin Petrovich Vdovin, Soviet ambassador to Mozambique, in Beira, date not given]

> [Excerpts] Valentin Petrovich Vdovin, Soviet ambassador to Mozambique, returned yesterday afternoon to the capital, after a 3-day visit to Beira. During his stay in the capital of Sofala Province, the ambassador consulted with Minister-Resident Mariano Matsinhe and had various meetings with Soviet citizens working as cooperants in Mozambique. On Sunday the diplomat offered a film showing, with footage of the opening ceremony of the Olympic Games in Moscow.
> During the ambassador's stay here, we had an opportunity to exchange views on Mozambique-Soviet relations and on the international political situation. Following are some highlights of the interview.

USSR Relations With the PRM [People's Republic of Mozambique]

NOTICIAS DA BEIRA: How do relations stand currently between Mozambique and the Soviet Union?

Ambassador: We feel that relations between the Soviet Union and the RPM are at a high level. The relations encompass political, diplomatic, economic, cultural and other types of cooperation. The relations were established and consolidated during the armed struggle for the national liberation of Mozambique, led by FRELIMO, when the CPSU and the Soviet Union adopted a very firm stand on principle, in support of the Mozambican patriots, and we continue to follow this line. We will continue to follow it in the future.

Within the framework of this cooperation, many Soviet cooperants have come to work in the RPM. We are assisting your country in the resolution of various economic problems and in the training of cadres. We have broad cooperation in the areas of culture, information and sports, and we maintain extensive trade relations. The legal basis for this cooperation is the Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation signed in 1977 between the Soviet Union and the RPM.

The Soviet Union and the RPM cooperate actively in international affairs. With regard to international issues, our positions are identical, or very similar. We struggle together in the international arena for peace, demilitarization and disarmament; we struggle against colonialism, "apartheid" and racism. Ours is an honest and open cooperation between friends and comrades-in-arms, for noble ideals.

In the Soviet Union there is great respect for the policy of the Mozambican Government, and we feel that in pursuing this policy of principles, the RPM has won many friends in the world and enjoys very high international prestige.

NOTICIAS DA BEIRA: Our country is currently experiencing the political and organizational offensive, considered a Mozambican contribution to the enrichment of the Marxist-Leninist cause. How does the Soviet Union view this offensive?

Ambassador: The offensive was received favorably in the Soviet Union. We follow the activities of the FRELIMO Party with great attention and sympathy. In its last congress, the party adopted Marxism-Leninism as the basis for its principles. Between our parties--the CPSU and the FRELIMO Party--there are intensive relations of cooperation. Between our mass organizations--youth, women's and union organizations--there are close relations.

We can attest that the FRELIMO Party is also resolving many problems in the building of socialism. Great attention is given to relations pertaining to socialist construction. We understand that internal and foreign enemies oppose this line, and so we understand that an ideological and organizational party is very important.

We consider and view the political and organizational offensive from this standpoint, understanding that the main goal is to educate the Mozambican people on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and the creation of the socialist society.

We know from experience that it is impossible to build socialism unless there is a Marxist-Leninist party to lead the people, unless the party trains cadres for social and economic development, unless the country has a strong popular government and unless the party builds an army capable of defending the revolution.

Support To South African Patriots

NOTICIAS DA BEIRA: Would you comment on the current situation in southern Africa?

Ambassador: We know there is a reactionary regime in southern Africa, one of "apartheid" and oppression of the African people. This is a very great danger for Africa and for the world. For this reason, the Soviet Union takes a stand in support of the peace-loving and progressive forces of Africa and the world against this regime.

We think the progressive African countries will intensify their struggle against this regime. We are very pleased to see broader strata of the South African population rising up to struggle against this racist regime. More and more, the workers, youth, students and intellectuals are demonstrating against it. In South Africa, the struggle against the "apartheid" regime is increasingly broad.

We are pleased to point out that, in this struggle, the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of Mozambique and other African countries are in the same trenches. We wish the South African patriots the greatest success in their just struggle.

Soviet-Zimbabwean Relations

NOTICIAS DA BEIRA: Normally, when a people achieves national independence, particularly through an armed struggle, the Soviet Union is customarily one of the first countries to establish diplomatic relations. This has not been the case with the Republic of Zimbabwe. In the end, it was Prime Minister Mugabe who recently invited the Soviet Government to open an embassy in Salisbury. How does the Soviet Union explain this delay?

Ambassador: In the first place, we would like to point out that the Soviet Union actively supported the struggle of the Southern Rhodesian patriots, led by the Patriotic Front, for independence and freedom. We hailed the victory of the patriotic forces of this country and their rise to independence. We recognized the Government of Zimbabwe and immediately stated our wish to establish diplomatic relations and to open embassies.

Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's declaration that his government is prepared to establish diplomatic relations is an indication that the Zimbabwean party also favors a positive outcome in this matter. We are sure that the matter will soon be settled favorably, to the interest of the Soviet Union and Zimbabwe.

LONG-TERM MAPUTO, BEIRA PORT PLANS DISCUSSED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by David Linsell]

[Text]

THE cost of developing Maputo into a container port capable of handling a large slice of Zimbabwe's imports and exports would be U.S.$15 million (Z$9,4 million), according to Sir Ronald Swayne, chairman of the British-owned Overseas Containers Ltd.

He said that if the Mozambique Government was prepared to go ahead with the scheme then the new terminal could be in operation in mid-1982, provided orders for a gantry crane and other mobile equipment were placed soon with manufacturers.

As to financing he thought that banks in Britain, the Netherlands and West Germany would put up the funds backed by guarantees from their respective governments.

Since Mozambique has not joined the Lome Convention, finance through the European Economic Community would not be available, therefore, soft loans or grants have to be ruled out for the present.

Government sources and diplomats in Salisbury, however, are hoping that some kind of decision or commitment will come out of next week's Southern African Economic Development Co-ordinating Conference to be held in Maputo.

Yet it is still not clear what role Beira, the nearest port to Zimbabwe, will play.

The Prime Minister and his cabinet favour Beira as this country's main outlet, whereas the Mozambicans prefer to use this port for bulk cargoes. But in June officials spoke about constructing a large container terminal there.

DEVELOPMENTS

The picture may become clearer after the SADCC meets.

Meanwhile there have been other developments centering around Beira.

Recently representatives from a

Swiss/Greek/Arab company known as Petrola visited Salisbury and the Mozambique ports.

While nothing substantive has emerged from their talks with both governments it is understood the visitors were considering constructing an offshore terminal at Beira to handle oil and containers.

They are also known to have suggested building a new refinery at the port, should a lengthy legal wrangle ensue from the case currently being heard in London between the world's major oil companies, including Shell and BP — majority shareholders in the Feruka Refinery at Umtali — and Lonrho, which owns the pipeline.

One project under way is the electrification of the railway linking Beira with Malawi via Tete being handled by the Italians. When completed power from the Cabora Bassa Dam will be used by locomotives.

LONG TERM

The long-term ramifications of this scheme are significant to Zimbabwe as the line from Umtali to the coast could also be electrified, thereby allowing heavy loads to be carried to and from the port.

At present trains are limited to pulling a maximum of 800 tonnes at a time in order to negotiate the steep gradients on the line.

For members of the SAEDCC, in particular the landlocked countries such as Zimbabwe, Zambia, Zaire and Malawi, the lessening of dependence upon routes through South Africa is a crucial long term aim.

The timespan, however, may have to be shortened if the latest United Nations initiative on Namibia fails and sanctions are applied against the Republic.

On Monday the South African Foreign Minister, Mr Pik Botha, warned: "There are also other countries which will suffer as much as, or more damage than, South Africa from sanctions against us".

Observers in Salisbury were in no doubt this week that this was a veiled threat against countries to the north of the Limpopo.

BRIEFS

INCREASE IN AIR FARES--As of today, 22 October, LAM-Mozambique Airlines will raise freight and passenger fares on domestic and international flights by about 30 and 50 percent, respectively. The rate readjustment stipulated in three ministerial decrees is the first one since 1974, for domestic flights, and since 1978 for international flights. One of the directives establishes that tickets for international flights will now be paid in foreign exchange reserves, with the exception of fares of individuals traveling on missions for government agencies and enterprises or other national companies. In the last case, the travel must be authorized by the respective minister. Also excepted are fares of foreigners under contract to the Mozambican Government, according to the provisions of the contracts, and foreign residents of Mozambique who do not have transfer rights. Mozambican citizens may continue to pay in national currency, but only on routes served by the LAM. Up to now, LAM has had the lowest rates in the area. Also, starting today, foreign air carriers using Mozambican airports will pay for services at these airports with foreign exchange reserves. The new rates for these services will also be higher. FARMS TO PRIVATE ENTERPRISE--To date, the agricultural office of the Executive Council of the city of Beira has turned 11 abandoned and underused farms over to private and cooperative concerns. The process was initiated shortly after President Samora Machel delivered his historic address on 18 March in Maputo. According to data supplied by Vasco Antonio Sinoia, director of the agricultural office, four farms in Inhamizua district and three in the locale of Nhangau have been turned over to the private sector. In the airport zone, two farms have been authorized for exploitation, one of them going to the cooperative sector. Finally, in the Passagem de Nivel district, also known as "Chamba," the local party headquarters will operate a farm with collective labor by the people, and the remaining farm was turned over to a private individual. It is noted that, with proper management of these farms (which has not been the case since the mass exodus of their owners shortly after independence), the city of Beira will see a better supply of vegetables, eggs, small animals (chickens, ducks and rabbits), fruits and many other products that are currently scarce in our markets. U.S.'RACISM' SCORED--Terrorist campaigns against Negroes in the United States of America continue to be the dominant note in the racial "harmony" in this, one of the most developed countries in the world. Yesterday, a large bomb was exploded in broad daylight at a black educational center in the city of Atlanta, capital of the state of Georgia. The explosion killed 5 people and seriously injured another 100 people, including several children. The federal police chose to refer to this horrible crime as an "accident," however. Nonetheless, federal authorities have called for an investigation to clarify the causes of the tragic act. Recently, several racial "incidents" have occurred in the United States and, according to observers, they are assuming monstrous proportions. The local authorities not only tolerate acts of racial violence but often help to perpetrate them. Washington has ignored such situations, although hard information has proved the connection of some members of the U.S. police to fascist and racist groups, such as the neo-Nazis and the Ku Klux Klan. COOPERATION PUT IN PERSPECTIVE IN LIGHT OF LIBYAN CHARGES

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 25-26 Oct 80 pp 1,4

[Article by Babacar Sine: "Qadhdhafi, the Rest of Us and Arab-African Cooperation"]

[Text] Qadhdhafi has revealed the depth of his racist, quite eccentric thinking: white Touregs are being fiercely exploited by blacks!

Therefore, there must be a crusade to deliver them from the hands of the black dictatorship. The problem is badly stated. We do not believe this is a racial issue, much less a matter of domination of the black over the white communities. Black Africa could not be racist, especially not in that way. Too many reasons favor the rapprochement and solidarity of the Arab and African-Arab peoples, groups to which the Touregs and black Africans belong. Here are some reasons: in precolonial times, economic and cultural relations between Arabs and blacks were developed; in the colonial era, the colonial experience created similar situations and Islam, which was adopted and assimilated, has become part of some of our national cultures.

However, all this would not excuse us from clearing up a very persistent cultural misunderstanding. Continental Africa is truly divided into two cultural areas, black Africa and North Africa, whose cultural affinities and destiny link it with the Arab world.

Acknowledging this from the beginning is a lucid way and a prerequisite for understanding how they respond to each other in a dialog of solidarity. Must it be recalled that this misunderstanding occurred during the preparations of the Second World Festival of Black Arts? Should we recall how our late friend Alioune Diop, director of African Presence and secretary general of the festival, viewed the problem and how he reacted? In short, he believed black communities throughout the world have the right and must have the chance to speak out and express the unified conscience of their cultural identity. Moreover, the cultural and economic situation of black communities in the Arab world, in North Africa, Morocco, Algeria and Libya should be brought to mind and examined. Today, are they aware of their origin and membership in the black world? What cultural and economic ties do they have with the Arabs, etc?

Culturally, they have adopted Arabic and the Moslem religion, two pillars of the Arab cultural edifice. However, are they not exploited economically because of a series of historical factors? Indeed, have they been completely integrated into the Arab communities?

At the time, these questions aroused a public protest. We were termed racists, even reactionaries, in the name of Pan-African solidarity! We were talking about respect and dialog between the Arab-African and black African cultures. What, at first glance, could be a misunderstanding was only the hypocrisy of a segment of narrow-minded Arab opinion.

Qadhdhafi exacerbates this most when he wildly sows provocation, manipulating the amalgam technique, playing on two sensitive nerves, defense of his "Arab brothers" and the holy "anti-imperialist" cause. To tell the truth, he is motivated by a desire to destabilize and we have seen proof in the open aggression against Tunisia, whose innocent people paid the price. Why does he do this? Does he have a power complex? Is it uncontrollable hegemony or infantile behavior?

Beyond these follies, these regrettable gestures, the true goals must be set: development of the axis of solidarity with the Arab world, legitimate support for the cause of the Palestinian people, true cultural cooperation based on mutual respect for our different cultural identities, etc.

On that score, black Africa sets the example. It knows the Arab world better than the latter knows it. For example, Arabic is taught in our schools and universities and the Arab culture is studied in specialized research institutes like Senegal's. Islam, issued historically from this culture, is practiced fervently here; many black students attend various Arab training centers, etc.

Does a mutual exchange exist? It must be said it only barely exists. The big problem today is to solve these imbalances and distortions. We have mentioned this to our Arab friends, here and in their countries.

Moreover, are the famous petro-dollars, Arab investments and aid coming our way as much as they are going to Europe? Of course not!

These are the real problems we must formulate and solve. Qadhdhafi is fighting cardboard kings. His crusade for the "poor" Touregs has given us the opportunity to rectify, recenter and restore the axes of Arab-African cooperation to their true perspective.

NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE ENERGY POLICY STRESSED

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 24, 25-26, 27 Oct 80

[24 Oct 80 p 5]

[Excerpts] Let us sum up our examination of these various factors that determine the conditions of the world oil market: Beyond the relative circumstantial abundance of the oil supply, which results from speculative stocks, mild winters and transactions on the "free markets," a structural inadaptation is emerging between the supply and demand for oil, with demand tending to exceed the supply in the long run. This results in persistent tensions and a lasting trend toward higher prices on the market for this strategic raw material.

Growing inflation, the continued depreciation -- whether or not it is deliberate -- of the dollar, the currency in which energy transactions are conducted, and so many other reasons we have already brought up, will indubitably accentuate and prolong the trend. For all countries like our own, lacking in natural, technological and financial resources, alternative sources of energy will take a long time to reduce the increasingly intolerable burden of the oil bill.

In 1967, 1 ton of imported oil cost our country 4,041 CFA francs. Today, the same amount costs us 54,123 CFA francs! Moreover, it is certain that this price is already outdated, inasmuch as prices change so often -- upwards -- that a tanker's cargo may be hit by several increases between the straits of Bosporus and Gibraltar! A fit of caprice, most likely. Whatever the case, Senegal, like so many other countries, is now on the threshold of a difficult decade.

Long "Transitional Period for Senegalese Economy

The economies of countries highly dependent for their energy on heavy consumption of oil are all bewildered by the crisis that has now lasted for 10 years.

Whether or not they are developed, they are in distress. Their productivity and employment capacity deteriorate inexorably, along with their major balances. From east to west, the world economic machine has jammed; its purchasing power and standard of living are threatened.

It is in this difficult international environment that the Senegalese economy, already hard hit and penalized by various endogenous factors, faces the 1980's and 1990's and the end of the century. In all sectors, all domains, it will be seriously affected during this period of transition that will be very long.

1 -- First of all, the effects of the crisis on the economy in general will be increasingly upsetting. Let us recall a few facts and figures:

The price of oil has doubled over the last 12 months. The amount of our oil bill has increased 10 times over in less than 10 years, amounting to over 50 billion francs today. Even under the most favorable conditions -- a continuously adequate supply of oil with supplies guaranteed by governmental agreements and preferential prices -- even under such circumstances, the cost of our oil imports will continue to exercise growing pressure on the economy and upset the balances and mechanisms on which development depends.

With our energy dependency being what it is -- that is, heavy and lasting -- and with the price of oil following an upward trend, the economy will continue for a long time to suffer since more and more of the resources produced by our nation devoted to the purchase of oil. It is a veritable financial bloodletting!

Already, oil imports absorb as much as 40 percent of our export receipts. This rate will rapidly increase and consequently, nearly all of these receipts will soon be gobbled up by energy spending. Without being Cassandra, one can predict that in the relatively near future, the economy could be on the brink of stagnation, even paralysis, when imports of raw materials, semi-finished products and equipment indispensable for investment and growth will become increasingly problematical in the face of the accelerated exhaustion of our reserves and precisely when it is absolutely essential to have vital food imports to cover the country's apparently chronic food deficit. Naturally, our country is not alone and legitimately enjoys monetary and financial solidarity organized within the framework of the franc zone and UMOA [West African Monetary Union]. The peril is nevertheless real and the drawbacks inevitable and many, if only because our economic dependency risks becoming greater. Furthermore, with the rising cost of our supplies and imported inflation, the general price level will go up, with the well-known ill effects: social tension and injustice, a decline in the economy's ability to compete and other harmful results.

Far from being negligible, service on the foreign debt will have to be paid and the persistent world inflation will drive up the cost of financing our development projects. Many of these will consequently have to be abandoned for lack of suitable financing or profitability, especially those which, classified in the chemical, plastics, cement or shoe branches, for example, consume large amounts of oil both as energy and as a raw material derived from its by-products. We shall return to this subject.

Even if it escapes stagnation, our economy runs a strong risk of listlessly sliding into a period of very slow and shaky growth, with the inevitable questioning of our medium- and long-term development objectives.

[Text] The effects of the crisis are already harmful to Senegalese industry and will be even moreso. The reason, quite simply, is that it is the economic activity that consumes the largest amounts of oil or oil derivatives. We shall return to this topic in more detail later.

Our industrial exports to developed countries will definitely drop for at least two reasons: first of all, because of the growing recession and spreading unemployment, which create feelings of insecurity and give rise to protectionist reactions and restrictions on imports in industrialized countries.

Second, the cost of oil used by our industries will remain relatively higher than that borne by the industries in countries that are technologically and economically more advanced, which will result in a further disadvantage for our country in the areas of competitiveness and exports.

Finally -- and this is certainly even more serious for industries such as ours -- the industrialized countries have actively undertaken the study and utilization of more efficient technologies for energy and even more advanced industrial techniques. This means that these centers will export to our countries, the periphery, to paraphrase Samir Amin, just as they have often done elsewhere, their ill adapted and outdated technologies. The corollary is a widening of the technological gap between them and the developing countries.

In the main, albeit somewhat roughly, these are the origins, causes and effects of the energy crisis, seen in retrospect, and in perspective, these are the conditions of a difficult world environment for the coming decade, along with the threats and difficulties that await our country's economy. The analysis is without a doubt approximate and debatable on many points, for the subject is a vast and complex one. Nevertheless, with regard to the essential points, one will agree that the accelerated and steady growth which the world economy knew from the 1950's to the 1970's has definitely been finished for several years and that the era we are now beginning will be much more convulsive, difficult and uncertain.

Consequently, in a country such as ours, with such a fragile economy, we must face that future -- which is already before us -- with a new mental and intellectual framework, use more imagination and greater boldness in questioning certain aspects of our development policy so as to ensure the continuity of progress.

The reflections that follow concerning certain sectors and branches of activity of our economy are intended to be a modest step in that direction.

Ideas for Better Economic Choices

Guiding development under such unfavorable economic conditions and in such an unstable framework definitely demands systematic reflection on the orientations that will provide economic action with the maximum chance of success.

Our ambition here is much more limited. We wish modestly to participate in the reflection demanded by a particularly complex future. We shall do so, in the following paragraphs, by formulating ideas in the light of an examination of certain sectors, branches or production units of the national economy.

1 -- Senegalese agriculture is definitely the field of economic activity which is the least dependent on oil energy. And yet, it will increasingly feel the effects of the steadily rising cost of energy because it will have to use more as all lasting agricultural development eventually requires growing mechanization in order to obtain greater productivity. The country's agricultural policy has fortunately been committed to that path for a long time. According to the results of numerous research studies and experiments in the agronomic field, heavy mechanization is the most suitable for obtaining high yields within the framework of major development and agricultural operation programs such as those of SAED [Senegal River Land Development and Operations Company], SOMIVAC [expansion unknown], SODAGRI [expansion unknown], and the CSS [Senegalese Sugar Company], for example. It would therefore seem logical to continue its use in similar cases, while limiting it to them.

On the other hand, for small farms and operations under 5 hectares, for example, light mechanization would, in the opinion of specialists, be the most efficient. It uses less energy and can be combined with animal traction. Moreover, our agriculture has already made important progress in harness crops and especially in the synthesis of animal and plant production for agricultural mechanization.

But Senegalese agriculture will remain precarious for a long time to come, even if the energy problem finds a solution, first of all, because of the drought and the lack of rain which grow worse as desertification continues. Unfortunately, everything seems to indicate that it will not be viable and productive in any lasting way until there is large-scale irrigation that will come from the dams planned. The second structural weakness of agriculture is its dramatic dependency on the peanut "tyranny." It would certainly be inept to propose substituting other products for peanuts in a few years. The economy is and will remain based on peanut production for a long time to come.

But this situation should not be viewed fatalistically. Beyond the diversification of crops, already begun, it is important to undertake without further delay a specific program of research and experimentation in order to expand production of table peanuts, which are more profitable today and more competitive than peanuts for oil will be in the future. At any rate, self-sufficiency in food must remain what it is: an absolute priority.

2 -- Cottage fishing, some 70 percent of whose craft are already equipped with motors, makes up nearly 80 percent of the entire catch made by the subsector today. Unfortunately, the expenses of this important activity are heavy and are rapidly rising: some 50 percent in 1979, it would appear.

The motorization effort should be intensified and the subsidy granted for the fuel-oil used by the boats in order to lower the cost should be increased by the National Energy Fund.

3 -- Production of electricity and its use: For two essential reasons, this activity should be managed with maximum rationality. It is nearly totally dependent on fuelds derived from refined oil and assumes a vital role of supplying electric power to nearly all industries, homes and for public lighting. Its dependency is destined to last since the gas from Diam Nadio, already being used, is limited and other sources of hydraulic and nuclear energy are not yet available. Fuel, generally heavy, is supplied to SENELEC [Senegalese Electric Power Distribution Company] at subsidized prices. This is an excellent thing when one considers the priority nature of the industrial units and the growing burden of the cost of electric power in their operating expenses. Nevertheless, it is suitable to ensure that public lighting be subjected to the truth of prices so as to promote conservation in a field in which the agro-food industries such as the oil works should increase their aid with respect to lighting certain rural or urban zones.

4 -- The transportation of persons, whether collective or individual, and of goods, whether by air, rail or ship, is now totally dependent on oil and will remain so for a long time to come, at least in Senegal. Moreover, transportation plays a vital economic and social role. One must therefore welcome the fact that the study for the Master Energy Plan proposes to grant particular attention to it. For a long time, practically until 1978, the roads and road transportation, mainly of persons but of goods also, were wrongly subsidized. We know in fact that for a given amount of traffic, whether over medium or long distances, the railroad uses four to five times less energy than road transportation. The cost price per passenger/kilometer or per ton/kilometer is all the cheaper than road transportation because diesel fuel is less expensive than super, regular gasoline or even the fuel oil used in hauling. Consumption of super, even in volume, quadrupled from 1969 to 1979, while at the same time, that of industrial fuels scarcely doubled. The GNP increased at a much more modest rate at constant prices. In other words, until very recently, the government's policy on rates applied to and the taxation of oil products and the use of the different forms of transport has scarcely been inspired by rational economic principles. Maintaining the road system, modernizing the railroad and orienting long-distance passenger transportation and medium- and long-distance goods traffic by means of a consistent policy on oil prices and taxation, encouraging collective transportation and discouraging individual transportation and the purchase of large vehicles by means of the fiscal policy: These are a few points which the study for the Master Energy Plan should take up and evaluate.

5 -- For the past 20 years, industry has been the backbone of the Senegalese economy. It sustained the GNP since independence, despite the declining market it has had to face throughout many years of drought and the abrupt drops in agricultural production that have always resulted from it. Its share of the GNP has doubled since 1960, reaching nearly 28 percent today. It has created over 30,000 jobs and continues to create some 1,200 new jobs a year, with average annual investments of 25 billion and a 5-percent increase in production. These figures are known, often published or quoted. Above all, one must add that since agriculture is as we have described it elsewhere, the sertiary sector already plethoric and essentially dependent and the quaternary scarcely productive and only indirectly, industry will have to be sustained at least over the coming decade because it will remain the driving force of the economy. Its difficulties are numerous and will multiply. We have already spoken of them, but this is an additional reason for critical reflection and for making continuing efforts to strengthen its viability and competitiveness.

Such reflection should first of all take the form of an in-depth study of the monographic type, strengths, weaknesses and degree of viability of every industrial activity. The synthesis of such studies would make it possible to outline criteria that can clarify priorities and government intervention on behalf of a given industrial branch or unit. Here more than elsewhere, the need to act and the inadequacy of government resources require rational choices.

We are tempted to propose a number of criteria that might serve as suggestions, criteria that should be clarified and evaluated further if their use is anticipated: 1) the coefficient of labor, the capacity to create jobs and the added value of the industrial branch or unit; 2) productivity, competitive and export capacity; 3) the ability to upgrade national production and raw materials; and 4) the degree of energy dependency and energy efficiency (fuel, electricity, lubricants, and so on) based on oil. In connection with this last point, it is fitting to emphasize the importance and quality of the investigation which SONED [New Study and Development Company in Africa] made of certain industries in 1976 and which should be updated and continued.

In the light of these criteria, here are a number of suggestions for certain branches of industry. They are naturally debatable, as are the rest of the ideas or proposals formulated here.

The agro-food industries: oil works, CSS, rice mills, and so on, have priority in every respect. They upgrade agricultural production, export capacity and added value and the number of jobs created is high. Above all, they are autonomous or should become so with respect to energy. The example of the oil works is instructive. They are already helping supply electricity for activities or surrounding communities. Moreover, they should be encouraged and supported by the National Energy Fund in order to extend their action to public lighting.

For its part, the CSS' operating expenditures are still increased by the high cost of large amounts of fuel, diesel fuel and fuel oil consumed by its machinery and equipment, according to the few figures we were able to put together on this agro-industrial unit. Its importance to the economy based on the criteria set forth above and the efforts it is already making toward making the country self-sufficient in sugar and producing livestock feed and other products require that the government support it even more through the Fund, for example, so that gradually, the use of bagasse and agricultural waste in general as a source of energy will reduce its energy costs.

Returning to the subject of the oil works, one might wonder about the wisdom and rationality of increasing their grinding capacity to nearly a million tons with the imminent startup of a new unit when for several years and in a persistent manner, the volume of peanuts to be ground per year scarcely exceeds 500,000 tons! It is to be hoped that we are mistaken, as a result of our excessive pessimism and a lack of technical and economic data. Otherwise, this industrial branch could suffer greatly from increased per-unit operating costs stemming from excessive capacity. The industrial decentralization here is very timely and moreover, can no longer be changed. Consequently, it would appear that henceforth, priority should be given to the modernization and maintenance of existing units and expansion of storage capacities.

The chemical, shoe, building materials, artifacts, plastic items and equipment and other industries:

Generalizations are often risky and approximate, especially here, and yet, everything seems to indicate that many industrial units in the branches named will become increasingly vulnerable and will experience major difficulties, even if the number of jobs and added value they create are high. Actually, some of them depend heavily on oil products or by-products: The shoe, plastics and chemical industries in general use synthetic products and other materials mainly made from oil by-products. On the other hand, cement works, for example, consume enormous quantities of fuels and electricity. According to the SONED investigation already quoted, the cost of fuel and electricity consumed by SOCOCIM-Industries [West African Cement Company] represented over 70 percent of all operating costs in 1976 and this situation has grown considerably worse since! This should lead the Energy Fund to work with SOCOCIM in drafting a program to adapt procedures, processes and the equipment of the industrial unit, which is so essential to the economy, and to orient action toward the expansion and modernization of currently existing facilities or the establishment of small clinker crushing units in the regions rather than build a second large cement works whose profitability would be difficult, if not impossible, to ensure.

[Excerpt] To come back to the chemical, shoe and plastics industries, while adding the textile branch, there are other difficulties: excessive and anti-economic competition stemming from a proliferation of these industries, declining local market and purchasing power resulting from lower peanut harvests, reduced export markets occupied by the industries in the countries in question, uncontrolled imports and smuggling, obsolescent equipment, and so on. The situation has reached the point where some of the units in these industrial branches will increasingly look like "lame ducks" difficult to rescue, with enormous risks of closure and the loss of jobs. If some cannot be saved, the government should try to give more protection to those which have shown the greatest vigor, even if one has to fight appropriate incomes and monopolies by a rationalization of protection and industrial competition.

Naturally, our industry does have weaknesses and causes concern in a number of branches. It nevertheless remains vigorous and competitive in general and has considerable assets, particularly in the areas of mining and the agro-food industry. Light processing industries, those linked to fishing, service industries and many others remain profitable and viable. In addition, lacking peak industries, we can have industries of the future: in the field of services, as in the case of Dakar-Marine, in the area of ship repair, without any energy problem and with the creation of many jobs, foreign exchange and added value. In the chemical and mining processing branches also, the Senegalese Chemical Industries (ICS) promise to set an example. ICS should be for our phosphates what the oil works are for peanuts. Their activity will actually essentially consist of upgrading one of our most important raw materials locally: phosphates. They will first of all be made into sulfuric acid, then into phosphoric acid and various finished or granulated fertilizers for Senegalese agriculture and export. They will import new materials.

The study of the market seems to indicate that export markets and even sales contracts are already assured for phosphoric acid and certain types of fertilizers. They will be autonomous in electric power outside of a relatively small amount of high-tension electric power supplied by SENELEC for their generators. The project seems to have been the subject of a thorough technical, economic, commercial and financial study.

Given the many advantages expected (upgrading of local products with added value, jobs, foreign exchange, and so on), the problems that might face the ICS with regard to energy consumption (industrial fuels) should be one of the priorities in the action of the National Energy Fund.

We have asked a great deal of the Fund throughout this survey of the sectors of activity of the Senegalese economy. It therefore seems necessary to devote our final remarks to it. However, first we should speak about the Fund's role within the framework of the proposed Energy Master Plan and in view of a tax reform affecting oil products.

For all the reasons we have given, Senegal, like all energy-dependent nations, must formulate and follow an overall energy policy, not only in order to achieve energy savings and develop alternative forms of energy, but above all, in order to save the vital sectors of the economy such as the industrial sector, attenuating the harmful effects of the oil price increases and the resulting rising costs of operations.

The Energy Mastery Plan as currently conceived should be an appropriate framework for a coherent, long-term energy policy with the main objectives we have mentioned.

It is therefore fortunate that the drafting of the plan is underway, for it is a plan that will itself be integrated into the Development Plan. The structures for drafting policy, for reflection, coordination, orientation and decision making have also been set up, the National Energy Commission and Committee in particular.

The National Energy Fund: As set up, in the form of a special Treasury account, by the 1980-1981 Budget, the Fund completes the structures that we have already mentioned and should be an instrument for the formulation and execution of the government's energy policy as drafted within the framework of the National Energy Plan.

Government action on energy has been both incomplete and incoherent. The main organization for action has been the Fuel Price Equalization Fund. The resources of this Fund mainly come from positive equalizations involving prices of products such as super gasoline, regular gasoline, fuel oil, and so on, and from unearned increments of stocks resulting from increases in prices of these products to the consumers. While certain oil products obey the principle of truth in pricing, but others, such as butane gas for domestic consumption, kerosene, fuel oil and certain fuels used by a number of industries — particularly those supplied to SENELEC -- and the transport differential necessary to equalizes the price of fuel for automobiles throughout the country are the subject of a negative equalization, of a subsidy from the Fund, in other words.

As one can see, the role of the Fund is limited. Its resources are also, especially when the government is tempted to use part of them for other activities, although the proceeds from the specific tax on the consumption of oil products: some 2 million CFA francs, and from the refining tax: nearly 7 billion, directly supply the General Budget, with the exception of a deduction sometimes made — 3 billion this year -- on behalf of the Road Fund.

The Fund is now being called upon to perform new functions and to carry out missions, objectives and tasks in keeping with the ambitions and aims of a real national energy policy:

conducting, encouraging and organizing studies, experiments, administrative actions, tax measures and awareness campaigns aimed at bringing about energy savings in homes homes, transportation and industry; encouraging and supporting all research relating to the development and use of alternate forms of energy or adapted equipment by homes or industry: water heaters, solar energy pumps, the transformation of organic waste into energy: bagasse by the CSS, turning peanut cuttings into coal by SONACOS [National Oil Products Marketing Company] and the oil works, and so on;

helping priority industries that are large consumers of fossil fuels (for example, smale-scale fishing, cement works, mining industries, ICS projects, and so on) to study and adapt their procedures, processes or equipment and to give more subsidies to the fuels and electric power they consume;

initiating and participating in the monographic studies we have recommended for industrial units or branches and outlining criteria that might clarify tax policies or subsidies for different oil products based on the social or economic objectives pursued; studying the rational distribution of the different types of passenger and freight transport among the different means of transportation; and conducting cost-benefit studies to determine the timeliness of investing in adaptations of procedures or equipment in order to reduce energy consumption or permit the use of less expensive oil products. Example: a cost-benefit to determine whether in the long run it would be more advantageous to convert the entire government's vehicle pool to diesel instead of super or regular gasoline. We know that diesel fuel is approximately three times cheaper than super gasoline! The financial action of the Fund would assume several forms (see 1980-1981 Budget). For example: the financing of studies, experiments or projects, the granting of loans, subsidies or bonuses within the framework of its missions and objectives, and so on. The execution of such missions and tasks assuredly requires new financial means. It is therefore suitable to upgrade the Fund's resources, particularly through a reform of taxation and the use of tax receipts relating to petroleum products. The following are a few ideas:

ensuring that at any time, the Fund may make use of all or part of its resources and that it can act with rapidity and flexibility, with great maneuverability, unhindered by any administrative torpor at the level of the Treasury; seeing that the government no longer cuts down its own resources as we described above; modifying the amounts of the specific tax on the consumption of oil products, with the objective being heavier taxation of certain products, more exemptions or subsidies on behalf of others for economic and social purposes (industrial fuels, diesel fuel, small-scale fishing, and so on); working out the conditions for elimination of the refining tax now paid by distributors, replacing it with an added value tax (TVA) to be borne by the tax producer (the SAR (African Refining Company]), and therefore deductible at different rates depending on the economic, social or nonuse of the different products. The application of the principle of deduction, which characterizes the TVA and enables it to play an economic role, would permit a reduction in the cost of oil products consumed by the industries and consequently, lower operating costs and lower export prices. TVA experts who would make the preliminary study believe that the cost of industrial fuels would drop at least 100 francs per ton, which is far from a negligible sum when one is talking about several tens of thousands of tons consumed by industry over a long period.

The application of such a reform would surely require a modification of the cost price structure and the margins of the SAR as defined in the government-SAR agreement (in order to take the TVA to be borne by the SAR into account and continue to guarantee the company its contractual margins). The structure of prices from distributors to users would also be modified to bring about the reduction in prices on certain products called for by the transfer of the burden of the TVA from distributors to the SAR in order to bring the rule of deduction into play.

Finally, the last but most important measure is the gradual removal from the budget and transfer of proceeds from all taxes on oil products (specific tax, refining tax to be replaced by a TVA)), with the exception of the subsidies needed for the Road Fund, benefiting the National Energy Fund. By means of the annual approval of the budget, deductions would be made from the proceeds from the taxes considered and placed in the Fund so that in the end, the transfer of nearly all these resources of the general Fund budget will come about without upsetting the balance of the budget.

The proceeds from the two taxes mentioned above are an estimated 9 billion francs under the current budget. With a few years of budgetary strictness, the government should be able to do without these receipts that would enable the Fund to have substantial financial means to carry out its missions, particularly the revitalization and intensification of the competitiveness of Senegalese industry.

Having said this much, we close our remarks without drawing any conclusions because a great deal always remains to be said about this vast, always topical issue of the energy crisis which we certainly had no illusions about exhausting when LE SOLEIL asked us for our contribution.

PEANUT HARVEST EXPECTED TO BE MEDIOCRE

Paris LE MONDE in French 24 Oct 80 p 43

[Article by Pierre Biarnes: "Senegal Expects a Poor Peanut Harvest Again"]

[Text] Dakar--The peanut harvest that will be marketed starting in a few weeks will not be larger this year than the last, which was a quite average year. It is estimated that in the best of cases 300,000 tons of unshelled peanuts will be sold, against almost 1 million in a normal year, if the concept of normality retains any significance whatsoever after more than 10 years of almost uninterrupted miscalculations.

Once more the summer rains were not abundant enough and, more importantly were insufficiently spread out to allow the plants to mature, plants whose vegetative cycles last from 90 to 120 days depending on the varieties. Moreover, following previous poor harvest, seeds have not been of very good quality.

Discouraged by the bureaucratic exploitation to which they have been subjected for more than 2 decades, the peasants were inclined to decrease the areas devoted to peanut farming. They put more effort into farming food crops which, while failing to provide them with hypothetical monetary revenues, at least assure them that they will not die of hunger.

Finally sensitive to widespread criticism against the peasantry-straddling system that was implemented the day after independence and maintained against all odds, the government has become courageously involved these last few months in a different policy, one that offers considerable relief from that parasitic system. The system's centerpiece, the National Office of Cooperation and Assistance for Development [ONCAD], was dissolved, and it was decided that from now on the cooperatives will sell their harvests directly to the oil factories, which are all being nationalized.

Indubitably, all the observers agree that reevaluating the peasants' lot is good. Nevertheless, it is understood that these new provisions will not bring results overnight, nor will the farmers' distrust be disarmed soon. For now, the latter seem tempted to go back to the traditional system of self-sustenance, a system that is unfavorable to the progress of other sectors of the national economy.

LIBYA ACCUSED OF ZIONIST TENDENCIES

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 31 Oct 80 p 12

[Editorial]

[Text]

Qaddafi's recent statement vilifying King Khalid's policy towards Islam is irresponsible as it is extravagent.

It is very difficult to understand Qaddafi and he is very unpredictable indeed. His actions contradict his avowed principles. Was it not just last month that he was viocing support for the Jehad declared by the King of Saudi Arabia to liberate the Holy places occupied by Israel?

It is going beyond all bounds of decency to declare, this year's Haj as invalid, and to incriminate the Saudi Kingdom for that. Are we to believe Qaddafi or the Moslim world which everywhere had been preparing for the occasion for one complete year?

Qaddafi's conduct clearly manifests Zionist influences as King Khalid has said. As Jaalle Siad also has added in his message to the King, he is responsible for committing yet another crime. Qaddafi has been unabashedly aiding the colonial Abyssinian regime in its suppression of the national liberation movements of the Eritrean, Western Somali and Somali Abbo peoples, by giving it money and sending it armement as well as Libyan troops to fight their brothers.

The Qaddafi is undoubtedly an ally of Zionism and colonialism, and therefore the enemy of the Arab, the Muslim and the African peoples. Infact he is a danger to all freedom and peace loving peoples of the world and to all progressive humanity. He therefore deserves to be condemned from every corner of the world, and to be ostracized from Islam and the Arab world.

BOTHA TALKS ON AIMS OF CHANGES, CALLS FOR WORLD UNDERSTANDING

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 29 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] Blydeport--The creation of meaningful changes in South Africa ought to be vocational and not a struggle for survival. This is what Prime Minister P.W. Botha said here last night.

The prime minister, who delivered the opening speech at the annual congress of the South African Women's Federation, said that people are constantly asking when or by what date the changes, which are to benefit the country, can be expected.

His reply was that people must not ask when the meaningful changes are to come. They must be conscientious of their calling in the spirit of a love which conquers hate. "If we carry on the struggle for change more for the sake of goodness than for a struggle for survival, then we will be fighting with the knowledge that change will certainly come about." Before a packed hall the prime minister also dwelt on the following points:

If ever there was a time when people in South Africa must have an understanding of others, that time is now;

South Africa's greatest challenge is apparently in Africa and this country will help African countries threatened with complete collapse by sending them food, as it has done in the past. South Africa will also help them with technology;

If the world community refuses to understand South Africa's peaceful aims and distorts these aims wantonly, then South Africa will continue to produce weapons for its future requirements so that in the event of threats fomented by the United Nations against it, it will be able to fend them off, but will not use the arms for aggressive aims;

Ways and means must be found to reduce the shortcomings in the existence of South Africa's people.

The prime minister went on to say that the greatest danger for South Africa is going to be that things will be going so well that the spirit of looking out for its own good will tend to slacken.

The prime minister stated that there are forces inside and outside of South Africa whose intentions towards this nation are not good and they must be put on notice about our struggle. The struggle must not be directed merely on survival, it must have the drive for a calling. "We must have an inner vision to convince nations around us to collaborate."

He said that South Africa has a tradition of helpfulness and it is also willing to receive help from its neighboring countries on the continent of Africa. "But we hold our own. If a nation breaks away from its history it will be untrue to itself."

Afrikanerdom consists of a nation which draws strength from its history. South Africans must conquer doubts with faith and daring. Our pioneers had the capacity of making plans and finding solutions for problems and this spirit should never die in South Africa.

The prime minister said that South Africans have a tradition of coming up with plans for coping with the challenges of the future. "Father Kestell said once: 'A nation saves itself and, among other things, this means that a hungry man should preferably be taught to catch a fish rather than having a fish given unto him.'"

PRESIDENTIAL COUNCIL CALLED BRIDGE TO NEW ERA

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 20 Oct 80 p 13

[Text] Ermelo--In a statement he made here Saturday, Dr Dennis Worral predicted that when the Presidential Council gets going the interaction between this council and the rest of the central government will quickly become the most important focus of interest in the country's policy.

In his first public action as chairman of the Constitutional Committee of the Presidential Council, he addressed the Rotarians of Ermelo on the occasion of the organization's 20th commemoration in this town which is celebrating its centennial this year.

Dr Worral said that the Presidential Council was established for the purpose of developing a system of government which will be more acceptable to all population groups. This is a policy advisory body which will be concentrating on problems and reforms and which will be future oriented.

Although this is an advisory body the council has wide powers. In accordance with the constitution, it may examine any problem or group of problems, or any questions it regards as being in the interest of the country.

Recommendation to the state president must be tabled in parliament within 4 days.

It will therefore be preeminently a bridge-building body whose main task will be to oversee the transition of South Africa as we have known it to the South Africa of tomorrow. This is a conscientious and sincere effort at broadening participation in the government.

"There are people who criticize the present composition of the Presidential Council because representation in it is supposedly not broad enough. I can understand these feelings, but I am suggesting that one should not lose sight of the fact that in order to make it possible for democratic and representative institutions to work, there must be a meeting of the minds, a desire for a sense of communalism."

Dr Worral said that such a sense of communalism exists in older societies, but is usually lacking in newer countries and it cannot be developed overnight.

The Presidential Council fills a specific need, but even then it is not an undertaking without risks. Other forms must be worked out in order to fill other requirements.

"Only time will tell if the Presidential Council is going to work. This will also depend on the excellent men and women who will be working in it. But I predict that once the Presidential Council gets underway the interaction between the council and the central government will become the most important focus of interest in the country's policy," stated Dr Worral.

SCHLEBUSCH: PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL COULD CONSULT WITH BLACKS

'Commission of Inquiry' Role

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 22 Nov 80 p 7

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — Although Blacks would not sit on the President's Council there was nothing which prevented consultation between Blacks and the council, the Vice-State President and chairman of the council, Mr Alwyn Schlebusch, said in Cape Town yesterday.

Mr Schlebusch, who officially moved into the council's offices in the Cape Town Centre on the Foreshore, said the Act establishing the President's Council provided for such consultation.

At this stage it was impossible to say what form such consultation would take.

This would depend on the terms of reference of any enquiry or investigation submitted to the council or initiated by it.

Possible

Mr Schlebusch said it was possible that the council might ask Parliament for additional powers which were not prescribed in the Republic of South Africa Constitution Fifth Amendment Act in terms of which the council was established.

These powers were similar to those contained in the Commissions Act and the Powers and Privileges of Parliament Act.

The President's Council did not have the power to change its structure in order to accommodate Blacks. This could only be done by Parliament.

Mr Schlebusch said it was not possible to give any details of the procedures which would be followed by the council. The rules of procedure had still to be determined and at this stage it was impossible to say what part of the council's work would be open to the public and which would be in camera.

Commission

He again stressed that the council was not a parliament and that it should be seen as a commission of inquiry.

"The biggest and most important commission of inquiry but definitely not a parliament," he said.

The legislation establishing the council had provided only a skeleton — "it is now our task to give flesh to that skeleton. This we have been doing and we have progressed well. But I cannot now give details of the workings".

Mr Schlebusch hinted that evidence given before the commission could well be given in public unless the person or body giving such evidence requested otherwise.

The actual deliberations of the various standing committees would, however, be in camera, Mr Schlebusch indicated.

As chairman of the Schlebusch Commission he had tried to have as much evidence as possible given in public and if it were solely up to him he would like to follow a similar procedure.

Provision had been made for the public to attend sessions of the President's Council itself and Press facilities had also been provided.

The council's permanent seat would be in Cape Town and it would sit throughout the year.

It was expected that the various committees would report to the council as a whole at specified times.

The standing committees would submit reports, findings and recommendations to the President's Council which would after the necessary deliberation itself submit reports, recommendations and findings to Parliament together with those of the relevant committee.

Mr Schlebusch said he expected that a number of matters would have been submitted to the council by the time it started its work on February 3.

It was hoped that the first session of the council would be officially opened by the State President but this had still to be confirmed.

The opening would be as simple and dignified as possible.

"There will definitely be no pomp and ceremony."

Simple

No gowns or wigs would be worn by the presiding officers and the proceedings would be simple but dignified, Mr Schlebusch said.

The council's offices take up three floors of the Cape Town Centre.

Each councillor — no official name for members of the council has yet to be decided on — will have his or her own office.

The five chairmen have each been provided with a suite of offices including a large committee room in which up to 20 members could meet.

Catering facilities have also been provided. — Sapa

INFLATION RATE FOR YEAR LIKELY TO BE 16 PERCENT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Nov 80 p 20

[Article by Penelope Gracie]

[Text]

THE authorities are clearly losing the battle against inflation.

For the second month in succession the consumer price index has risen by an unacceptably large margin and economists are no longer hopeful that the inflation rate for the full year will be around 13 percent. A more likely figure now is 16 percent.

In October the CPI rocketed 1,91 percent to give a year-on-year like of 14,36 percent. And this follows the "horrific" 2,01 percent increase recorded in the previous month and a 12,77 percent rise in the year to September.

The index — which has a base of 100 for 1975 — rose to 186,3 points in October from the September level of 182,8 and the October 1979 figure of 162,9.

The runaway increase (24,1 percent in two months) in meat prices has been the main factor pushing up the rate of inflation. Of September's 2,01 percent increase in the CPI, 1,1 percent was directly attributable to higher meat prices and, last month, of the 1,91 percent hike in the index 1 percent was the meat price.

According to Louis Geldenhuys, Senbank economist, in the past two months the index has risen 3,96 percent, 2,19 percent or 55 percent of which was due to higher meat prices. The reason for this is that meat is given a 9,1 percent weighting factor in the compilation of the CPI.

Once again, because of the 4,77 percent escalation in the food only index, the lower income group was the hardest hit. Their index shot up 2,52 percent in October, reflecting a 17,17 percent rise for the year.

The middle income group sustained a 1,96 percent increase in prices in the month and their year-on-year figure is 15,22 percent; while at the top end of the market, the higher income group saw the prices of goods that they purchase rise 1,64 percent, to give a less frightening year-on-year increase of 13,11 percent.

Economists expected the CPI to accelerate when the oil price rise was eliminated from the annual comparisons but the rate at which prices have escalated in the past couple of months, has shocked most commentators.

As Mr Geldenhuys commented yesterday: "Even if one takes out the meat price increase, one finds that prices have been rising at 1 percent a month which gives 1,2 percent on a compound basis. And that's bad."

Current expectations are that by December the year-on-year increase in the consumer price index will be around 16 percent, a far cry from the 13 percent the authorities were hoping to achieve.

And if the 16 percent rate becomes a reality, there is grave concern that it will not be a balance of payments constraint that hampers economic growth, it will be the rate of inflation.

AMBASSADOR: U.K. WOULD NOT IMPOSE TRADE SANCTIONS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Article by Marilyn Cohen]

[Text] The British Government would not impose trade sanctions against South Africa, British ambassador, Mr John Leahy, said in Johannesburg yesterday.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the South Africa Britain Trade Association (Sabrita), Mr Leahy said the British government did not believe in the usefulness of economic sanctions in the solving of South Africa's internal problems.

"As far as investment and trade with South Africa is concerned, my Government's policy is to leave it to the business world to decide on the issue. We will not hinder trade links with this country," Mr Leahy said.

Commenting on reports that Britain might be willing to contravene the United Nations arms embargo on South Africa, Mr Leahy said these reports were probably untrue.

South African exports to Britain had increased by 59 percent on the 1979 export figure, while imports from Britain had risen by 36 percent, he said.

The Minister of Manpower Utilisation, Mr Fanie Botha, said trading links between the two countries should be maintained and extended.

"A trade embargo will harm the South African economy, although not as much as the proponents of this idea would like to believe," Mr Botha said.

Trade embargoes would result in a lower growth rate, which would lead to higher unemployment, especially among Blacks.

Similarly, continued foreign investment and contact was just as, if not much more important for Blacks in South Africa than for Whites.

Should Britain disinvest in South Africa, the consequences for that country could be "disastrous."

Mr Botha said the chairman of the United Kingdom-South Africa Trade Association, Mr P.P. Dunkley, had estimated in 1978 that the loss of South African trade would add anything from 70 000 to 250 000 to Britain's unemployment list.

"Foreign companies can, as do many local companies, play an important role in improving employment conditions of all employees. All companies should increase and improve the training programmes of all their employment," Mr Botha said.

Although the Wiehahn Commission had recommended that apprentices from all population groups be indentured, only 130 applications from Black apprentices had been received over the past nine months. This is "far too low a figure."

UNITED NATIONS' PARTIALITY TO SWAPO RESENTED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 30 Oct 80 p 18

[Editorial: "Partiality Confirmed"]

[Text] In the talks which were held a week ago in Pretoria between South Africa and the political parties of Southwest Africa on the one hand and United Nations emissaries on the other, it appeared that the United Nations' lack of impartiality and its clear preference for and support of SWAPO has become one of the most important blocks in the way of a peaceful arrangement. The actions of the UN officials have now made matters worse.

One of the parties concerned in the Southwest, the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, has registered strong objections to Dr Kurt Waldheim, because Dr Waldheim and the other UN officials which also included Martti Ahtisaari, the chairman of the Security Council, who was one of the UN emissaries to Pretoria, took part in "Solidarity Week." This is the week in which "solidarity with the people of Namibia and SWAPO, their liberation movement," is attested.

In light of the prevailing situations in the Southwest, it seems to us that this was a lawful objection. Seen from the background of the course of the Pretoria talks it is almost incredible that people such as Waldheim and Ahtisaari could side so openly with SWAPO knowing well the serious objections which South Africa and the other political parties of the Southwest have against UN fraternization with SWAPO. It is as though the objections were ignored in a defiant manner.

If such actions by UN officials is a reflection of their attitude with respect to the Southwest Africa question and SWAPO, it is difficult to see how a settlement in accordance with the UN plan could be carried out.

MUGABE'S TOUGH TALK AIMED AT CONCEALING PROBLEMS

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 27 Oct 80 p 10

[Editorial: "War Dance for the Sake of Appearance"]

[Text] Zimbabwe's Prime Minister Rober Mugabe has frequently been making noises which can hardly be regarded as a sign of goodwill toward South Africa.

He has just done it again in a newspaper interview by stating that if Africa can work out a system to defend Zimbabwe against military attacks from South Africa he will "certainly" allow the establishment of military bases on Zimbabwe's territory.

This hypothesis must be examined in light of South Africa's declared policy, reconfirmed by Foreign Minister Pik Botha, that South Africa is not going to permit subversion or terror to be planned or carried out against it from any of its neighbors.

Mugabe therefore knows what South Africa will do if he allows military bases in Zimbabwe and he knows quite well what South African soldiers, who are helping to defend Southwest Africa, have done to SWAPO bases from where aggression is being aimed against the inhabitants of the Southwest.

Mugabe is probably just as well aware of the fact that Africa can hardly fullfil his conditions for defense. Sufficient defense against South Africa's formidable military strength would have to involve such a mighty effort that probably it would be easier to get at South Africa rather directly.

But most likely Mugabe's talk is directed more at the militant element in and out of his country which has helped him to attain the position he now holds. He needs to convince them that his heart is still beating the right way, and, as it has been proven over and over again, the easiest way to succeed in Africa is to aim blows at South Africa. The war dance against South Africa has become a ritual just as in Idi Amin's Uganda, where mock attacks were conducted against the "Capetown" island: a lot of noise and nothing to show.

Most of all such war dances draw attention away from leaders who are having great and serious internal problems and Mugabe has more than enough of them.

Still the best way to surmount these problems is to collaborate with an economic community in sourthern Africa in which the role of South Africa, the strongest economic force in the subcontinent, cannot be denied.

But Mugabe is not about to do so; his military talking serves rather to bolster a self-frustrating process. He will be discovering this more and more.

SEBE DISCUSSES CISKEI INDEPENDENCE PROSPECTS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 15 Nov 80 p 12

[Text]

KING WILLIAM'S TOWN. — The incorporation of King William's Town into the Ciskei was part of the independence package deal negotiated with the South African Government, the Ciskei's Chief Minister, Chief Lennox Sebe, said on Thursday.

He added that if the town was not incorporated into the Ciskei, the South African Government would have to offer "something similar".

Chief Sebe was speaking at a Press conference in Zwelitsha, near King William's Town, in the wake of White protests about the move and conflicting statement that the incorporation was only a proposal.

He lashed out at some of the statements and said: "We have witnessed some insulting, irresponsible and even untruthful remarks," but added, "We need the Whites. We want them to stay and will convince them that they have a great future with us."

However, only Ciskeian citizens would be given full freehold title to agricultural land on condition that they used the land productively.

Chief Sebe also said the people and the Cabinet of Ciskei would have no objection to selected White schools remaining in the territory under the control of the Cape Education Department "for the foreseeable future".

The Ciskei would, however, establish its own multiracial school in King William's Town as soon as possible after independence.

In both King William's Town and Berlin the Ciskei government insisted on the natural development of a multiracial situation and no restrictions would be placed on Ciskeian citizens seeking business opportunities or from acquiring property in the two towns.

"I say these two towns, because they are still in the boiling pot."

Chief Sebe said he could not answer the question about what his government would do about independence if King William's Town was not in the end incorporated in the Ciskei, but he was sure it would happen just as the people who had reacted in the Press believed it would happen.

Asked what alternative there was to King William's Town and whether it could be East London, he said: "I am not worried. East London is not my worry. In fact, if we do not get East London it would be to our advantage." Asked why, he refused to elaborate.

He did, however, add: "What grieves me on the question of East London is the way people comment. They like to comment on issues which they do not know about and these issues can lead to their disadvantage." — Sapa.

VIEWS ON THE INCORPORATION OF KING WILLIAM'S TOWN INTO CISKEI

White Population Must Be Consulted

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 4 Nov 80 p 13

> [Text] Port Elizabeth--The city council of King William's Town and the Caffrarian Chamber of Commerce are opposed to the incorporation of King William's Town into the Ciskei and it is of the opinion it would be more advantageously treated as a collaboration area.

The agreement, in accordance to which King William's Town would be incorporated into Ciskei--as proposed by the Walt Commission, is to determine whether the majority of the whites will leave the town or will stay on, according to what the town's mayor, Mr Eric Weyer, said. The inhabitants still have not had the opportunity of voicing their opinions on the proposed incorporation.

According to Mr Weyer, he is going "to fight for the identity of the town's white people." He is of the opinion that it will be possible to come to an acceptable agreement in light of the assurances given to the whites by Ciskei's chief minister, Chieftain Lennox Sebe.

However, he doubts that the immediate incorporation of the town will be in the interest of King William's Town or of Ciskei.

Industrialists and business people are likewise supporting the idea of collaboration instead of incorporation. During various meetings on this matter they have spoken out against incorporation.

Social Meeting

Business people and inhabitants of the town voiced their concern about the financial implications of the planned incorporation in the course of a social meeting held in a local hotel.

According to a statement by Hennie van der Walt, the chairman of the Commission for Collaboration and Development, the incorporation of King William's Town will be handled in the same manner as in the case of Mafeking, which was recently incorporated into Bophuthatswana.

Mr Weyer is saying, however, that the case of King William's Town differs greatly from that of Mafeking, because the former has a much bigger white population (nearly 12,000) than the latter (now known as Mafikeng). Moreover there are also 5,000 coloreds in Mafikeng.

"These people must be recognized with respect to this matter. It's simply a matter of justice that they express their feelings. They should have at least been represented in the Greff-Committee, which is the southern district committee which examined the consolidation.

"The only whites who served in the Greff-Committee were officials of the Ciskei Government. Moreover this committee did not talk this matter over with the city council, the Caffrarian Chamber of Commerce, nor with the industrial leaders."

According to Mr Weyer the question of a possible incorporation will be discussed this evening during a city countil meeting.

Testimony

In his statement Mr Van der Walt said that testimony by those interested will be heard and additional information in this respect will be made known shortly.

An appropriate delineation of the territory, which according to the committee's recommendations will be added to Ciskei, will be presented to the Eastern Cape Agricultural Union. Upon request this will be made available to interested individuals and entities. This land area is, moreover, the 100,000 hectares which must still be purchased and turned over to Ciskei in line with the 1975 proposals.

According to the proposals 49,000 hectares in the Black Kei and Winterberg area will be added to Ciskei. Also added would be 36,000 hectares in the region encompassing the Waterdown Dam, Klipplaat and Hogsback; 13,000 hectares in the region of Pirie and Kubusi, 20,000 hectares at Kidd's Beach and Chalua and 19,500 hectares in the region encompassing Berlin and King William's Town. Altogether 600 hectares at the Gubu Dam and 1,000 hectares at the Peelton location are also being recommended for addition.

The commission is proposing that an inquiry be set up to look into the possibility of utilizing the East London harbor as a collaboration area.

Community leaders were cautiously optimistic with respect to the incorporation. Mr Max Phillips, chairman of the Border Region Development Association, said that the announcement is welcome because the development of the region has been held back because of the uncertainty which has existed.

Living Standard

"Our objective is the procurement of jobs and the improvement of the standard of living in the region. As far as East London is concerned, development can proceed as of now. Uncertainty has been eliminated."

A hotel manager of King William's Town, a Mr Jack Rosenberg, said that he is glad about the announcement. He thinks that not much will change if King William's Town is incorporated in Ciskei. The town will benefit economically from this and will progress.

Mr L.J. Badenhorst, who draws a pension, said that it is very wrong to incorporate the town into Ciskei, but he will not leave the town if this happens.

Economic Consideration, White Collaboration

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 4 Nc 80 p 16

[Editorial: "The Ciskei Plan"]

[Text] Perhaps the most encouraging aspect of the reaction of community leaders to the proposal that King William's Town be incorporated into the Ciskei, is the fact that they actually accept a priori that something must be done to get rid of the uncertainty which now prevails.

Where they differ is how this is to take place; but it is clear to everyone that the future of King William's Town, and other areas as well, is most closely tied to the future of Ciskei and that there is a communal interest which cannot be ignored.

In the debate over the consolidation proposals which must follow (those interested will get a chance to present their views) the thing which will evidently be discussed is the question of whether King William's Town must be incorporated into the black homeland or whether it must be handled as a collaboration area.

We are hoping that level-headed realism will prevail. In part this has to do with the economic realities of the area, but the political implications are likewise of considerable importance. The homelands which want to become independent must be helped in developing as viable a political system as possible, even though they may end up forming a portion of a greater economic entity.

Understandably the local white inhabitants are concerned about their vested interests and there will be a great deal of sympathy in this respect. Nobody will be taken amiss if these people insist that these rights be respected, but then this is a promise which has been given repeatedly by the government.

The important thing is that the whites must realize that their continued collaboration is indispensable for insuring success and development. The South African Government knows this and there are clear indications that the Ciskei government is aware of this reality as well.

Moreover the citizenship plan which is now under consideration may also benefit the whites. This serves as an additional assurance that they will not simply be left to their fate and that's the truth.

PROGRESSIVES IN DILEMMA OVER AGREEING WITH GOVERNMENT

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 27 Oct 80 p 10

[Editorial: "The Progressives' Dilemma"]

[Text] In the course of this weekend's Transvaal congress of the Progressive Federal Party, the party's leader, Dr Van Zyl Slabbert, again promised that he would give his support to the prime minister if the latter comes out with a "sincere desire" to negotiate with the leaders of all the population groups in South Africa on the constitutional matter.

He had said the same thing earlier this year during the parliamentary session, but he nevertheless fought against the formation of the Presidential Council and decided to boycott this body. Although he denies it, it is sufficiently clear that the boycott view of his party has done him great damage and this is also apparent from the results of the byelections in Simonstown and East-London-North.

Dr Slabbert's reiteration of the promise to support the prime minister's negotiations with all the population groups illustrates the dilemma in which he finds himself. On the one hand, he is of course in favor of this sort of negotiation, because this is really the foundation on which his party's policy rests. But, on the other hand, he is so bound to the idea of a national convention (where everybody sould be sitting simultaneously around a table) that he cannot and will not recognize the value of negotiations which take place in any other form.

When the prime minister excluded the blacks from the Presidential Council this did not sit well with the Progressives' plan of a national convention and this had to be rejected, even though this represents an important start in the process of negotiation. The thing which Dr Slabbert and his party are losing sight of is that P. W. Botha is at the same time (and more often than any other prime minister before him) consulting with the leaders of the black homelands and even with those of the independent national states about these consitutional matters.

Dr Slabbert's problem is that he cannot see the connection between the chicken and the egg, no matter which one comes first. Apparently what he worries about is the kind of incubator which will have to be used.

WHITE BOYCOTT OF OPEN SPORTS EVENT DECRIED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 3 Nov 80 p 10

[Editorial: "A Regrettable Incident"]

[Text] Last week Minister of National Education Gerrit Viljoen touched upon an important matter when, in the course of a meeting in Capetown, he asked whether sport is not the most effective instrument which can be used to promote good and healthy relations in South Africa. There is no doubt at all that sport is excellently suited for this goal. It builds new bridges of friendship, understanding and goodwill between the various groups of our population and this has also been proven ever since South Africa began to normalize sport several years ago by promoting multiracial sport.

However, this is a delicate matter which must be handled with a great deal of circumspection, because emotions over joint sports training unfortunately can be stirred up so easily in South Africa.

Under these circumstances it is regrettable that, while Dr Viljoen has been emphasizing the positive role which sport can play, a report comes from Pretoria to the effect that an athletic meet for lower schools, arranged by the Northern Transvaal Coaching Association, has been boycotted by certain entities and that apparently this was done because one of the participants happened to be an Indian athlete.

What makes this Pretorian action even less understandable is the fact that meets of this kind were held last year without any talk of boycott action.

Earlier this year there was also an unnecessary uproar about the participation of a colored youth in the Craven Rugby Week which, after the dust settled down, took place without any incidents or without anybody losing any identity.

Fortunately incidents such as the present one in Pretoria do not happen often but those who are responsible for this must realize that they are not doing any good service to sport and to their country's best interest by such actions. But there are many other important things which can keep them occupied.

SECRET FILM ON APARTHEID SHOWN TO U.K. VIEWERS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 15

[Text]

THE BBC on Monday night screened an hour-long documentary which attempted to portray South Africa's apartheid system through the eyes of several black women, including Mrs Winnie Mandela.

The documentary was one of four films shot secretly in South Africa last year by former South African journalist Chris Austin and a cameraman, reports Ziana.

"We could never have got the material we did if we had let the South African authorities know what we were up to," said Austin, who left South Africa nine years ago.

The documentary showed scenes in the Lebowa homeland, Soweto and the Crossroads shanty town near Cape Town.

The black women interviewed had a common theme in slating laws which they said separate' them from husbands and children.

Independently made (chiefly with German money), the documentary was screened in the BBC's Man Alive magazine programme.

Headed South Africa Belongs to Us, it introduces five women in turn — "None of whom lives where she wishes to live," says narrator Peggy Phango, a black South African actress now living in Britain.

Martha Zwane is shown in the desolate Lebowa Reserve looking after her six children and seven of her dead sister. They exist on the R40 a month her husband sends her from Johannesburg where he lives and works.

WATCH

When she has bought mealie meal, coal and soap, all the money has gone, she says. Her husband, Obed, is left with R16 for the month. His children see him once a year. They never know when he will be coming so they keep watch hopefully all the time.

What would make her happy? To be allowed to stay with and see her husband three months in the year.

A nursing sister from Soweto says "it makes her sick" that she passes all the examinations set for white nurses and still earns less than half than they do.

She has noticed an upward trend in teenage pregnancies in the township since the 1976 disturbances — "They feel they should replace the children shot in the riots."

She added: "The teenagers feel that we adults are not aggressive enough — not fighting enough. That we are not in the struggle."

But, she added, black women were more united now.

Mrs Ellen Khuzwayo, a member on Soweto's committee of 10, said: "We live not from day to day in Soweto, but from minute to minute."

The Government policy of isolating groups would never work, she added. "We are people of this country and no one can deny us this."

NGK PREACHER GIVES SERMON OPPOSING INTERRACIAL SERVICES

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by Dan Marais]

[Text]

CHURCH services should not be thrown open to all races, Dr H P Senekal of the Nederduitse Gereformeerde Kerk at Bronkhorstpruit said yesterday.

Conducting the Sunday morning service, he rapped liberal thinkers over the knuckles. He said: "Where separate suburbs for Whites Coloured and Blacks exist, we should not share the intimacy of our private lives with them.

"It follows then that we cannot be expected to share the intimacy of our religious services.

"I have my place and he has his," Dr Senekal told his congregation in a sermon lasting about one-and-a-half hours.

Dr Senekal said in an interview last night he opposed the views of Ds Lindo Pieters of Boshoff who reportedly favoured the attendance of all races at church meetings.

Conservative

"I'm conservative in my outlook and it is important that we should remain true to our traditions," Dr Senekal said.

He said he had worked for the past 12 years at Bronhorstspruit and his views were well known.

His sermon was well rceived by the members of hiscongregation and he had received at least 50 telephone calls congratulating him on his point of view.

Referring to a report which appeared in a Sunday newspaper yesterday he said neither Mr Tom Langley of the Nationalist Party nor Dr A P Treurnicht had any knowledge of the sermon.

NRP TRANSVAAL LEADER COMMENTS ON NP, ECONOMY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

A challenge to Dr A P Treurnicht, leader of the National Party in the Transvaal, has been issued by the leader and chairman of the New Republic Party in the Transvaal, Mr Alex Anderson.

Mr Anderson challenged Dr Treurnicht to state clearly where he and his party in the Transvaal stood in relation to the Prime Minister's announcement in Germiston recently.

Mr P W Botha had said that South Africa stood on the threshold of a new political deal where the Whites, Coloureds and Indians would have to decide together on matters of common importance and individually on matters affecting each particular group.

Mr Anderson was addressing the head committee of the NRP in the Transvaal at a function in Pretoria on Saturday.

"I challenge Dr Treurnicht to declare his position with regard to statements of this nature which the Prime Minister has issued.

"The differences of opinion within the Government party have been evident for some time and this must have the effect of detracting from the orderly and efficient process of government," he said.

Lagging

Mr Anderson also noted that many of the services required by commerce and industry appeared to be lagging way behind the current upsurge in economic activity.

"We as a country are losing millions of rand due to the railways' inability to cope with the volume of coal which has to be moved to the terminal at Richards Bay. We are losing around 10 percent of our annual coal exports due to this appalling situation.

"And who is not aware of a new business which has not been able to get a telephone service because the Post Office is lagging way behind in new installations?

Difficult

"A business cannot function efficiently without a telephone, yet the large numbers of new businesses spawned by the economic upsurge are having great difficulty in having their telephones installed.

"Some of us in South Africa are often very ready to criticise the poor efficiency of overseas services. Yet I believe we have a problem in this country which would not be tolerated by, for example, Britain."

CAPETOWN CONDUCTS CIVIL DEFENSE EXERCISE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] Cape Town.--The city's sophisticated multi million-Rand civil defence machine, including a crack police anti-terrorist squad, flexed its muscles today in one of the biggest civil defence exercises in South Africa. It was also the first using a multi-storey city centre tower block as its target.

After days of careful preparation, the exercise began on schedule at 9.30 am yesterday as two Alouette helicopters from 16 Squadron rose from the car park next to the Civic Centre and hovered above the roof of the 22-storey tower.

A team of municipal fire fighters and a police anti-terror squad dropped on to the roof from the helicopters.

Members of both teams in the trickiest part of the operation, dropped down the sheer side of the tower to enter through windows on the 19th floor.

The two helicopters, guided by smoke, made repeated trips to the top of the building and back to the car park carrying men and equipment.

On one trip a helicopter carried two firemen with a stretcher slung beneath the machine and in a few minutes, made the flight carrying a "casualty."

Cooperating in the exercise were the South African police, the South African air force, the South African Railways, Metro Control and the City Council's fire, traffic, civil defence, security, civil buildings and ambulance sections.

In use for the first time was the City Council's civil defence mobile control vehicle.

Designed by the Council's civil defence officer, Major RS Douglas, and the manager of the transport division, Mr A. Jansen, it is the first of its kind in South Africa.

The 1.5 ton four-wheel-drive vehicle has a self-contained power supply and is fitted with sophisticated radio equipment and rations which enables it to be operated in any terrain under any conditions for eight days.

Its main function is to act as a disaster site mini conference room to house a team of specialists to coordinate emergency and other services.--Sapa

DEFENSE MINISTER CALLS BRITISH FILM ON ARMS SUPPLY LIE

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 28 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] Pretoria--The holding back of information on alleged revelations made in a film shown in Britain, the subject of which is alleged illegal arms trade with South Africa, was not done for the purpose of holding back correct information from the South African public and taxpayers, the minister of defense, Gen Magnus Malan, said here yesterday.

He was commenting on reports in the foreign press dealing with a film presented by the Granada Television Network the subject of which was illegal arms trade with South Africa. The film was shown in Britain over the television network.

The statement read: "Publication in South Africa of the assertions and the alleged revelations shown in the film production has been prevented in accordance with the Act on Weapons Development and Procurement. I want to make it very clear that the purpose of this is not to withhold correct information from the South African public and taxpayers.

"Everybody in South Africa must note the fact that at the present time an arms boycott is being conducted against South Africa by the United Nations, and that various anti-South African organizations and groups have set as their goal the success of this boycott. The so-called revealing films, such as the one in question, contain facts which have been distorted and also untruths that are aimed at the heart of our country...namely, its capability for defense. An effort is being made in such programs to embarrass South Africa's many friends in the world, including companies in South Africa and abroad, and to expose them to intimidation.

"South Africa's accepted policy is not to reveal where it gets its weapons or to whom it supplies them. The publication of such so-called revelations, compiled by the anti-South African media, will henceforth be withheld in accordance with the measures in question, because divulging them would mean providing the South African public with false information and the government would be put in a position where, for reasons which are obvious, it could not tell its people what is true and which elements of information are false.

"The public must understand that KRYGKOR [ARMSCOR] and the armed forces will provide complete information to the public, with regard to what it must know and has the right to know, to the extent that this is possible within defense and security principles."

'LE MONDE'S' 'NOT SO BAD AFRIKANERS' COMMENT DISCUSSED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 28 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] Paris--The liberal French evening paper LE MONDE, in a series of three articles about the Afrikaner, came to the conclusion that despite his attachment to apartheid, he is not as bad as some times he would appear to be.

The first article of the series, written by special correspondent Jean-Claude Pomonti, appeared under the title: "At Home With the Afrikaner." Although the newspaper is known for its bitter opposition to apartheid, this article was in no way unsympathetic.

Pomonti, an experienced corresondent in black Africa, was clearly pleased with his visit to Hazyview in East Transvaal and his meeting with the local Afrikaners.

Pressure

One of them told him: "The West must continue to apply a certain measure of pressure on us, otherwise we will never do anything for the blacks. But be careful with the Afrikaners. When the pressure becomes too great you run the risk of counterreaction."

Hazyview fascinated the correspondent and he wrote about it in lyric style. "They find it hard to understand how and why their peaceful and comfortable life wil soon be affected by changes," noted Pomenti.

Evolution

He stated that opinions most often voiced were that "the Western press is negative; liberals are working for foreigners, and the Americans are jealous of our success." These ideas are being reinforced by organized Afrikaner tours abroad where, as uninformed tourists, they see only what they want to see.

He said that the "big subject at the moment is change." According to him the Afrikaners are of the opinion that they need a slow evolution, but not a revolution, because if the blacks were to gain control today they would ruin the country.

Pomonti praised Prime Minister P. W. Botha, saying that he has created order in the Afrikaner house. He did this through his own "technocrats," brought in after he got rid of "the old gang."

"The prime minister, slowly but surely, appointed his own people in key positions. Afrikaners who talk about their leader are calling his government 'a dictatorship in miniature.' In 18 months he has managed to increase his freedom of movement and to enforce his authority on his government, then upon the Nationalist Party and finally on the administration."

Dynamite

The correspondent conlcuded by quoting a warning from an Afrikaner: "You must not forget that the sharing of authority on a local level is dynamite."

LE MONDE has a circulation of more than one-half million and about 2 million people read this newspaper...most of them opinion formers in France It is one of the 10 most influential newspapers in the world. Pomonti's series is one of the most complete and penetrating ever published on the Afrikaner.

SOWETO RADICALS WANT TO SUBVERT BLACK MODERATE ACHIEVEMENTS

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 17 Oct 80 p 12

["Perspective" Column by Bert Ferreira: "A New Battleline in Relations Fight"]

[Text] The Soweto events of this week are bringing South Africa face to face with a far-reaching shift in emphasis in its relations policy.

A stage is now being established where the traditional opponents can no longer be divided into black or white categories.

The battleline is now being drawn between militant black radicals, on the one hand, and a white-black partnership on the other. In spite of the intensive struggle which can ensue from this, the prevailing promise is that of a mighty racial alliance which will dominate the South African scheme of things in an enduring manner.

Nobody can miss the fact that the Wednesday uproar was not so much directed against the minister of collaboration and development, Piet Koornhof, as against David Thebehali, the mayor of Soweto.

The increase in service charges in the city had already been used sometime ago to bring about a confrontation with Thebahali. The conferment of honorary citizenship on Dr Koornhof was an accidental and sad excuse for inciting action.

Even at this stage it is still unclear whether public opinion in Soweto is actually rejecting the present city administration. Whether or not the Thebehali council is actually unrepresentative will be determined in the next election.

Doubt

It is also doubtful whether the campaign against the higher service charges imposed on the inhabitants found much acceptance outside of the bands of youths, who wanted to bare their teeth yesterday, and the groups of women who were organizing protest demonstrations.

Nobody in Soweto welcomes higher charges, but nevertheless there is a fairly generalized realization that this is the price which must be paid for greater self-reliance and independence of management, besides the better facilities which are being set up.

The enmity against Thebehali is being spurred much rather by the increasing number of achievements he has attained: the electrification program, the infrastructural improvements, the growing number of new houses and all the other visible signs of rehabilitation and renewal in the city, the new short-term development plan costing 150 million rand and soon to be completed, Thebehali's own growing acceptance abroad and the promises of development capital from foreign sources.

Success of this kind is much harder to be accepted by his opponents, because of the fact that it is being achieved in close collaboration with the government. Naturally this is leading to vicious attacks based upon the "puppet" arguments. "Uncle Tom" is still the debasing cussword of militant awareness.

Perhaps it is ironical that the uproar in Soweto is directed against change, simply because black extremists tend to simply brush off any change which is not extorted by their own power. It would also be naive to assume that the protest is quickly going to lose force simply because, based on logic, it is unwarranted.

However, it is doubtful that it will gain any ground against the wave of reform which is establishing itself in the South African order of things.

Turning Point

After the announcement he made yesterday, no one can in all honesty cast doubt on Dr Koornhof's views expressed in Washington last year. "We are entering a period of complete reformation," he said. "We have reached a turning point in our history."

Besides what has already been done, the proposed three draft laws, which he announced in Soweto, entail such far-reaching changes in the framework of things that false critics will find it difficult to misjudge them.

These affect the national coexistence of all South Africa and are the first results of the inspiration which the establishment of six district councils last year have provided for urban populations.

This democratic principle is moreover being carried further by the timely publication of the draft legislation so that comments can be gotten from all concerned before it is presented to parliament.

Reforms

Among other things, the legislation envisages giving the status of full municipal councils to community councils, but it is considering giving them even broader powers on the basis of the Transvaal Ordinance on Local Government.

At the same time, consideration is being given to reconstructing into development councils those administrative councils which are regarded as controversial in many respects by black communities.

Interest is arising above all on the proposed draft legislation on black community development which must replace controversial laws such as the one on urban regions, black labor and a portion of the Act on the Development of Trust Areas.

The changes being proposed by this legislation, and which are based on the principle of direct advice and collaboration, simply cannot be rejected by the black people. It may also be expected that this will be attracting more people from the radical wing to the moderate group, because it is there that the new future for the black man will be unfolding.

It will ge betting more and more difficult to cast doubt on the credibility of the government in its new efforts for reform.

Thus it may be that between the noise and the tear gas throughout 15 October 1980 in Soweto the cornerstone of the much talked about new order of things in South Africa was layed down.

COLORED EDUCATORS ADVOCATE POLITICAL RIGHTS FOR ALL NONWHITES

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 28 Oct 80 p 19

[Text] The fact that the government has deprived nonwhites of political rights is the most important cause for the revolutionary spirit mentioned by Minister of Internal Affairs Chris Heunis.

This was the statement made by Franklin Sonn, the principal of the Peninsula Technicon, when he was asked to comment on the speech made by Minister Heunis last Friday at the area conference of 11 relations committees which took place in Beaufort-Wes.

What Minister Heunis said was that he could not accept the fact that 2.5 million colored South Africans had no political rights, or nearly none. He went on to say that the coloreds' participation in the country's authoritative bodies, at the various government levels, could no longer be put off.

Believe

Minister Heunis said that as of 1 January the coloreds will have a say at a high level through the Presidential Council. "All races must be brought into this in order to create a peaceful and stronger South Africa."

Sonn said that people would be glad to believe that the minister is serious about correcting this untenable situation before it is too late. However, this cannot take place in favor of a repressed group at the expense of another, said Sonn.

Does Not Know

Sonn stated that South Africa's solution of the problem lies in the granting of a real voice to all its people and not just to certain groups.

David Curry, national chairman of the Labor Party, said that he does not know what Minister Heunis means by political rights for "only the coloreds."

"Mr Heunis wants to draw the coloreds closer to him at the expense of the black people. The black people in this country must have the same rights as any other group in the country. It is wrong to grant these rights to certain groups.

"After I received an invitation from the government to serve in the Presidential Council, I wrote a letter to Minister Heunis in the name of the Labor Party and in it we asked the minister to conduct talks with us. The minister's office informed us that we should decide on a date as to when we could talk with him."

Dr Frank Quint, the chief inspector of colored education, who will be serving in the Presidential Council starting 1 January, said that he is very delighted with the statement made by Minister Heunis, but this right must not only be given to the coloreds.

"I would like to see all citizens who do not have a voice in a new political dispensation for South Africa included. We are not the only group," said Dr Quint.

VILJOEN SAYS SADF SHORT OF TRAINED OFFICERS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Nov 80 p 9

[Text]

BLOEMFONTEIN. — Only 53 percent of the Defence Force's officers can be utilised to the full. The remainder are inexperienced and require training, according to General Constand Viljoen, Chief of the SADF.

Gen Viljoen was speaking at a presentation of medals for loyal service to 33 members of the permanent force, the commandos and the citizen force at a parade in Bloemfontein on Monday.

Defence Force personnel lacked experience and training, he said, but progress was being made in overcoming the shortfall. Since 1980 there had been tremendous pressure on SADF personnel and this made experience vital.

Gen Viljoen said he would like to see men joining the commandos and citizen force after completing their national service.

South Africa was involved in a struggle it could not afford to lose. While politics played an important part, the role played by the military was crucial.

Without a sound military powerbase the peace necessary for political solutions to problems could not be maintained.

The Defence Force comprised of weapons and people, Gen Viljoen said — and of the two people were more important. — Sapa.

FULLER INFORMATION ON BORDER OPERATIONS URGED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 80 p 7

[Article by Tim Clarke]

[Text]

THE South African public should know far more about the country's war effort in the operational area in South West Africa, World War II hero Sir Douglas Bader said in Durban on Tuesday night.

Sir Douglas, who was guest of honour at a banquet held to raise funds for the Southern Cross border fund, told about 350 guests at the banquet that he was surprised that so little appeared in the local news media about South Africa's war effort.

When a country like South Africa was virtually at war too much secrecy, and not keeping the public informed, was a bad thing, he added.

After the banquet at which Sir Douglas was given a standing ovation he told The Citizen that there should be daily bulletins or communiqués on the state of the war in the operational areas.

He could see no reason for suppressing news of people who had been injured in combat. Also "the incredible bravery" of South African soldiers should be given more prominence to boost both the morale of the troops and their parents back home.

Sir Douglas said that he fully realised that much of the information of what was going on in the operational area was classified and could not be divulged. But if there was a brave exploit then it should be given prominence.

During the evening Mr E L Brivik, president of the F C Hollander Lodge of the Hebrew Order of David, who hosted the banquet, also made an earnest appeal to the Defence Force to tell the South African public more about the conflict on the border.

Mr Brivik said there was an apathy about South Africa's fight brought on by "the vacuum in which we live."

Addressing himself to Lieutenant-General G J J Boshoff, chief of staff personnel of the Defence Force, Mr Brivik said "take us into your confidence. Make us more aware of the threat that faces this beautiful country of ours."

IMPORTANT ROLE OF KWAZULU DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION DESCRIBED

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 9 Oct 80 p 10

[Text] Substantial progress was made during the past year in Kwazulu with the creation of capital, creation of jobs and with practical training plans.

In the first annual report ever published by a black region's development corporation, Kwazulu Development Corporation (KOK) chairman, Dr L.P. McCrystal, reports that Kwazulu's capital creation in the year up to 31 March has reached nearly 115 million rand as compared with an objective of 75 to 90 million rand.

A growth of 9 percent in Kwazulu's internal production therefore appears to be within reach.

The objective was also to create 7,000 jobs outside of the subsistence farming sector; nearly 6,000 of these were created; 18 percent were in market-oriented farming and business as well as other services, 35 percent in manufacturing and 11 percent in the government sector.

It is estimated that Kwazulu's economically active work force increased by 31,000 during the year. Thus only 19 percent of these people got jobs in Kwazulu outside the subsistence farming sector. The rest had to seek jobs either outside of Kwazulu or in the subsistence-farming sector.

The report says that even so, encouraging progress is being made in attaining government goals and also for attaining fast economic growth in the eighties.

The KOK contributed only 25 percent to the financial requirements of the Kwazulu small entrepreneur and this is an indication of his capability in enterprise. Up to 31 March of this year, KOK approved 150 loans for a total value of 6.9 million rand.

Of these, 111 were granted to businesses in the services sector, 25 to industrialists and 14 to farmers.

Because 58 percent of Kwazulu's economically active people are involved in agriculture, KOK established an agricultural department in May of last year in order to speed up the rate of agricultural development.

Tourism

Development of the tourist industry during this current year is high on the list of the KOK's new projects, while big new investments in agriculture and industry will also be made. The directors also look upon the progress in intermediary technology in small industries as an especially important new area.

During the year, KOK did something about the chronic shortage of adequate housing by financing 335 new homes on an economic basis and approving loans for new homes valued at 5.5 million rand.

Because many of the entrepreneurs cannot afford to put up their own buildings, KOK must also build rental buildings including factory units and shopping centers.

During the year under review, KOK's training division made rapid progress with its idea of inexpensive, informal training programs and on-the-job training connected with development projects.

During its first year, this division invested 225,000 rand and during the current year its budget has provisions for spending more than 1 million rand.

The KOK's total investment in the two years since its establishment as a corporation independent of the EOK [Economic Development Corporation] rose from 19 million to 49 million rand. Its fixed assets increased from 9 million to 16 million rand and its business and housing loans from 6 to 17 million rand.

AGRICULTURAL AID PROGRAM FOR LESOTHO BEGINS

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 16 Oct 80 p 4

[Article by Andre Potgieter: "South African Farmers Plow After Bridge Deliberations in Lesotho"]

[Text] Operation Plow, the result of the Peka Bridge deliberations between the South African and Lesotho prime ministers, got underway yesterday when altogether 42 tractors belonging to South African farmers crossed the border into Lesotho.

In accordance with the project undertaken by four Eastern Free State farm cooperatives, yesterday the tractors began ploughing 20,000 hectares of agricultural ground in Lesotho and to plant it with summer grains, mainly corn and sorghum, for the Basutos.

Yesterday morning, before daybreak, 30 Eastern Free State farmers crossed the Peka Bridge between Clocolan and Fiksburg.

The Peka Bridge

In August, South African Prime Minister P. W. Botha and his peer, Dr Leabua Jonathan, met for the first time as prime ministers of their respective countries at the Peka Bridge. Matters of common interest were discussed by the two prime ministers.

The project, which entails the plowing and planting of 20,000 hectares of land in Lesotho near the border of the Free State, is the result of the talks between the two prime ministers.

Yesterday a spokesman of Lesotho's information department, Dr J. Simba, characterized the South African help as "a new era of collaboration between the two countries."

In the meantime, a telegram has been dispatched to Minister of Police Louis le Grange by the livestock farmers of the vicinity of Ficksburg who are urgently drawing his attention to the increasing thefts of livestock along the Eastern Free State border with Lesotho.

Many farmers attended a meeting in Ficksburg yesterday to discuss the veritable wave of livestock thefts along the border; the meeting had been arranged with the permission of the South African police.

One of the most recent victims is Pierred de Villiers of Ficksburg, who this week was robbed of 120 sheep and 15 head of cattle valued at approximately 13,000 rand. The livestock was presumably chased to a distance of 20 kilometers inside the Lesotho border.

HUGE DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR NAMAKWALAND PROPOSED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 30 Oct 80 p 3

[Text] A comprehensive development plan for Namakwaland which includes two new irrigation systems from the Orange River, a new deep sea harbor at Buchubaai (Buchu Bay), a new railroad and road connections in the region, an international airport and the establishment of a new growth point, has been accepted by the Namakwaland Regional Development Committee. The plan, which will cost approximately 1 billion rand to carry it through, has been drawn up by a Cape Province engineering consulting firm and has been submitted to the government for consideration.

According to P.E. Niehaus, who submitted the report to the development committee, the present development potential of Namakwaland is mainly in agriculture and mining, or the primary sector, with little development in the processing or secondary sector. In order to stimulate economic growth in Namakwaland and to insure an optimum utilization of its resources, it will be desirable to develop the secondary sector through the creation of a new growth point where it will be possible to concentrate more on minerals processing, agriculture and food-related industries.

Namakwaland is an extensive grazing region and cattle farmers suffer heavy losses during periodic droughts when food must be imported at high prices. The region is also experiencing widespread depopulation because of the lack of job opportunities. It is hoped that with the new development plan these problems will be resolved and that growth will be brought about through industrial development and the economic utilization of water. This also has several strategic advantages.

The development plan for Namakwaland entails:

The construction of a dam on the Orange River at De Hoop about 165 kilometer upstream from the mouth of the river where 3 billion cubic meters of water can be collected. This dam will be nearly as big as the P.K. le Roux Dam and it will not be dependent upon the latter dam's flood outlet loss, the natural runoff and water which is released from the Orange River project in winter. A 500-kilometer channel system can make it possible to irrigate approximately 112,000 hectares of sandveld between the Orange River and Port Nolloth from this dam and a balancing dam. The project will cost about 231 million rand and water can be delivered for about 3 cents per cubic meter.

The construction of a deep sea harbor at Buchu Bay, which will be able to handle ore-transporting vessels of up to 250,000 tons, for the export of minerals from the region; industrial development, fishing industry and diamond recovery from the sea will also find advantage here. This project will cost about 292 million rand.

A 507-kilometer railroad must connect Buchu Bay with the Sishen-Saldanha railway at Melkbosch Vley to provide the necessary impetus for a growth point in the region. It is estimated that this link will cost about 276 million rand. It is being recommended that the entire project be connected with the Pretoria-Witwatersrand-Vereniging area (PWV-area) and the northern neighboring states by connecting the railroad from Sishen with the main line between Kimberly and Mafeking so as to obtain a sensible type of development for the new growth point. This will also offer a strategic advantage, because then goods can be transported by an alternative railroad from the PWV-area to an alternative harbor to or from western harbors.

A proposed coastal vehicular road must connect the new harbor and growth point at Buchu Bay with Bitterfontein and Southwest Africa at Sendelingsdrift. Other proposed road connections for the expansion of the Namakwaland economy are the roads linking the De Hoop dam area, Kleinsee with Springbck and Jakalswater over Witbank with the Aggeneis-mining complex. The cost for this road system is estimated at 73 million rand.

An airport at Buchu Bay which will be suitable for international flights will provide a direct route from South Africa to foreign countries over international waters.

In addition, a smaller irrigation project, by means of which about 9,000 hectares of land can be irrigated, is being envisaged for the government lands between Garganab and Abbasas at the cost of 13.5 million rand.

This plan will lay the foundation for a solid infrastructure upon which the development of the region must be founded. At the present time, the biggest deficiencies in the present infrastructure are the lack of water for agriculture, town development, industrial development and mining in many parts of the region, lack of an integrated transportation system, also a weak communication system, especially in the sandveld area, and a deficient power supply in the southern part of Namakwaland is also a factor for the currently poor infrastructure.

If a solid infrastructure can be created with this plan, Buchu Bay will be able to develop as a growth point with secondary industries. The refining of copper, zinc and lead could be done here.

The map shows the development plan for Namakwaland as accepted by the Namakwaland Regional Development Association.

SOWETO ELECTRICITY RATES INCREASE SHARPLY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Nov 80 p 7

[Text]

SOWETO's electricity charges have risen by 430 percent in the past five months and are likely to be increased again in the near future.

The increases have been made by the West Rand Administration Board without any public announcement.

The move is likely to discourage residents from having electricity installed in their homes.

The Soweto Council, a sub-agency which helps in the administration of Soweto, intends installing electricity in every Soweto home by 1983 and the project is already under way.

An area directly affected by the recent increases in electricity charges is Orlando, where all homes were electrified by the local authority some years ago.

In other areas residents who could afford it had installed electricity at their own expense.

Some monthly electricity accounts sent to residents by the West Rand Board this week amounted to between R35 and R90.

An official of the West Rand Board said yesterday that Soweto's electricity charges had been increased from 0,5c a unit to 2,17c a unit.

The charges were still lower than the rate paid by the board to the Johannesburg City Council and Escom for supplying the electricity, the spokesman said.

There is already dissatisfaction among Soweto residents over a recent rent increase of R8,70 and the prospect of a further increase of R4,35 on February 1 next year.

The Soweto Committee of Ten, led by Dr Harrison Motlana, which is opposed to the activities of the Soweto Council, is leading residents in objecting to the rent increases.

The Soweto Council is led by Mr David Thebehali.

This week both the council and the Committee of Ten took their disagreement over the rents issue to the public.

The Committee of Ten announced that its argument against the increased rents would be heard in the Rand Supreme Court next Tuesday.

The council countered this by issuing leaflets advising the residents to ignore the committee and to pay their rents.

The leaflets, issued by Mr Thebehali, warned residents that they could lose their homes if they did not pay their rent.

The leaflets also claimed that members of the Committee of Ten had paid their rents in advance.

ASSOCOM OPPOSES CONSUMER SPENDING CONTROLS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by Dick Epstein]

[Text]

A SEVEN-MAN delegation from the Associated Chambers of Commerce (ASSOCOM) has met the Governor of the Reserve Bank to make the point consumer spending should not be controlled at this stage. The delegation suggested a go-for-growth policy.

The Governor, Dr T W de Jongh had asked for the meeting because he wished to hear the views of organised commerce on the current economic situation.

The delegation consisted of Messrs: I J Pinshaw, deputy-president of Assocom, D G Paxton, W S Yeowart, J. Mellville Pels, I K Lamont R W K Parsons and G W Tyler.

It made the point that if properly handled the more stable economic level of economics could be sustained.

Inflation was a serious problem but it had to be tackled within the framework of growth, delegates said. Assocom was convinced that at this stage, inflation per se would not discourage investment but a change in the current growth policy would.

The delgation maintained that any steps taken to control consumer expenditure would undermine the confidence which was beginning to emerge in the retail trade and would, therefore, also undermine investment plans.

The delegation also claimed that the authorities today had superior techniques at their disposal to handle the current problems without having to resort to such instruments as import control or tampering with the consumer credit restrictions.

It said that as far as Assocom was concerned, the latter type of instrument was discriminatory and should be avoided wherever possible.

The governor thanked the delegations for its views and said that in spite of his concern about certain aspects, the South African economy still had a lot to be grateful for.

OPPENHEIMER DISCUSSES BUSINESS-GOVERNMENT RELATIONS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Nov 80 p 2

[Text]

LEADERS of the private sector and government representatives have described the present level of cooperation between the public and private sectors as seldom, if ever, better.

Speaking on the Springbok radio programme, "Top Level", to mark the first anniversary this weekend of the Carlton conference, the mining and industrial magnate, Mr Harry Oppenheimer, said cooperation was a good deal better than it had been before the conference, although there was still a feeling that some civil servants did not fully understand private enterprise.

The insurance chief and well-known Afrikaans businessman, Dr Andreas Wassenaar, said there had never been a period when such fruitful dialogue between the groups had been possible, since he became head of an insurance group in 1948.

The banker, Dr Frans Cronje, said cooperation was better than it had ever been and the Government was prepared to consult the private sector before introducing legislation which could affect it.

The past President of the Chamber of Mines, Mr Dennis Etheredge, said Ministers were taking the opportunity to talk to the private sector about planning and business leaders were being asked to serve on various committees.

The Reserve Bank governor designate, Dr Gerhard de Kock, also said cooperation was the best ever in his experience, and the country was in an exciting and optimistic period.

The Director General for Finance, Dr Joop de Loor, said the level of cooperation was constantly improving, and he was confident of a further improvement in future. — Sapa.

ECONOMIC RETALIATION WOULD BE USED ONLY IN EMERGENCY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 80 p 2

[Text]

ONLY in the utmost emergencies would the Government even consider resorting to tactics involving retaliation against international political and economic pressure by withholding its metals and minerals from certain markets, the Minister of Internal Affairs, Mr Chris Heunis, said in Johannesburg last night.

There had been much talk of South Africa retaliating in this way, he told the annual meeting of the South Africa-Israeli Chamber of Economic Relations.

However, up to the present South Africa had avoided any such action, as had been proved time and again.

"Furthermore, it is the honest intention of the Government to continue on this course in future. Only in the utmost emergencies will the South African Government even consider resorting to such tactics."

Double-edged

It was realised that sanctions and boycotts were like a double-edged sword cutting both ways and hurting both parties.

"South Africa has been subjected to actual and potential threats over many years," Mr Heunis said.

"It stands to reason that should sanctions be applied, the effects of such sanctions will, because of South Africa's particular position in Southern Africa, naturally also affect other countries in Southern Africa, countries which can hardly afford these effects because of their already unstable political and economic situations."

It must be "abundantly clear" that should sanctions be applied, South Africa would "have to retaliate and its capability in this regard must not be underestimated".

The Minister said much publicity had recently surrounded the fact that South Africa exported foodstuffs and other goods to neighbouring African countries such as Zambia, which were, "to say the least, not very well disposed towards us politically".

This was further evidence of South Africa's willingness to engage in international trade on a purely non-political basis, subject only to the proviso that such trade should be conducted on an economically viable basis.

Mr Heunis said there had been unprecedented expansion of trade between Israel and South Africa as well as formal co-operation in the economic, medical, technical and other fields.

The value of total trade between the two countries during the '70s had expanded at an average annual rate of 34 percent. South African exports to Israel had virtually doubled during 1978 and again during 1979. — Sapa.

MINISTER DISCUSSES HIGHWAY SPEED LIMIT, FUEL USE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text]

THE Cabinet has decided to continue to peg the present highway speed limit at 90 km/h against the background of a probable increase in the price of petrol.

The Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, Mr F W de Klerk, said in Pretoria yesterday the Cabinet had considered representations and pressure for an increase in the speed limit, but decided against it.

It was learnt in Pretoria yesterday that a petrol price increase — the country's 19th in the last 10 years, was inevitable before the year end.

The only good news emerging from Mr De Klerk's formal announcement yesterday, is that a feared embargo or limitation on diesel fuel is now unlikely.

Mr De Klerk said the Cabinet had decided to uphold the present 90 km/h limit because of the insecurity and variability of crude oil supplies, a situation still being experienced worldwide.

The Republic and other countries which were dependent on external oil sources continued to remain vulnerable.

There was the uncertainty over the Iran-Iraq conflict.

In addition, he said, earlier projections of fuel demand figures for the medium term had shown a potential petrol/diesel imbalance.

This situation had not materialised because of the economic boom, which had created an increased demand for petrol, a demand which had not been anticipated.

Service station owners had feared a clamp-down on diesel fuel supplies and Mr De Klerk's comment indicated that this was not likely.

They said there had been a big swing to diesel-powered units as a result of increasing prices. In order to produce more diesel fuel from crude oil, refineries had had to produce more petrol as well. This was the projected in imbalance referred to by the Minister. An imbalance had not developed, however, because more petrol was being used than originally expected.

The Government's decision to retain the 90 km/h speed limit was a disappointing, the Automobile Association's Publicity Director, Mr Hennie Kleynhans, told GREG SMITH last night.

"The Government must have based its decision on good information, but it is still a disappointment. We had hoped for a relaxation at least over the holiday period.

"The decision is especially disappointing because of the impression given by the former Minister of Energy Affairs, Dr Schalk van der Merwe, that South Africa's oil resources showed a favourable balance.

"On the other hand, the Government must be aware of the unstable situation in the Middle East, as well as the threat of boycotts.

"The Government has left the door slightly ajar, however. There is still hope, depending on how the Middle East and South West African situations work out."

Mr Kleynhans said the AA had not envisaged a return to the 120 km/h speed limit, but had hoped for something in between.

Mr Kleynhans said raising the price of petrol would be "unfair" and the AA would resist such a move.

"The motorist already doesn't get a fair proportion of his tax contributions and a further petrol price rise will push up prices and inflation."

TRADE WITH WEST GERMANY SHOWS RAPID INCREASE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 80 p 23

[Text]

WEST German exports to South Africa in the first nine months of this year soared by more than 47 percent to reach R1 312,6-million.

Three significant factors contributed to this upsurge in trade.

They are the strengthening of the rand, which improved by 15,75 percent in the period making German exports cheaper; the reliability of German export deliveries: and the low rate of inflation of 5,5 percent compared with those of South Africa's other major trading partners, the United States and Britain.

According to the South African-German Chamber of Trade and Industry, the biggest percentage growth was in agricultural machinery which rose by 216,8 percent. This was followed by pumps and pneumatics, up 103,2 percent; tool-making machinery, up 71,9 percent; and electro-technical equipment and motor vehicle components, up by 30,4 percent.

Conversely, South African exports to West Germany are suffering because of lower purchases of the Krugerrand in Germany since the introduction of the 13 percent value added tax at the beginning of 1980. This has meant a drop in earnings of over R100-million.

On an annualised basis this represents 42 percent of Krugerrand exports, and total South African exports to West Germany increased only 7,5 percent to total R989,7-million for the first nine months of the year.

In the traditional commodities such as foodstuffs, raw materials, semi-finished products and primary products, South Africa was able to increase exports.

In the primary products sector, exports climbed by nearly 50 percent, while semi-finished products like ferro-alloys and chrome rose by 43,5 percent.

COAL NEEDS OF SASOL PROJECTS REVIEWED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Nov 80 p 22

[Article by Errol Mannin]

[Text]

THE Sasol III plant, some 150 km south-east of Johannesburg, is now 35 percent complete.

And of the total investment of R6 000-million by the time Sasol III is complete and in full production in 1984 some 10 percent, or R600-million, will have been spent on pollution control alone.

The decision to position Sasol III next to Sasol II has saved the giant oil-from-coal converter R50-million, as the two complexes can share certain services. Not only that, the juxtaposition of the complexes will save 30 months in construction time.

Sasol II is now producing at 40 percent of its total capacity and Sasol III will be producing at a similar capacity in two years' time. To put the plants in perspective Sasol II will be 12 times the size of Sasol I when it is in full operation.

Sasol I marketed its first petrol in 1956 when the initial intention was to produce 247,5-million litres of petrol a year, plus a range of other products such as diesel oil, waxes and a range of hydrocarbons.

Today Sasol I produces some 120 different products, while its successor, Sasol II, will produce only 20 different chemicals, including petrol and diesel oil.

At Sasol I the initial planning required some 7 000 tons of coal a day for its power station and gasifiers, whereas the estimated 1980 production by Sasol's Sigma Colliery is thought to have risen to 135 000 tons a week.

Sasol II obtains its coal from the nearby Bosjesspruit Colliery, which is producing at a rate of 700 000 tons a month at present.

Once in full production it will produce 27-million tons of coal a year for both Sasol plants — II and III. Bosjesspruit will then be the largest colliery in the world.

Three modern longwall systems, each valued at R9-million, are already at work underground in the West and East shafts. Three more longwall systems will be established in time to come.

Apart from longwall two other mining methods are being employed at Bosjesspruit — bord and pillar and continuous mining. About 65 percent of the coal will be recovered by using these systems during the life of Bosjesspruit — expected to be about 70 years.

NEW DURBAN AIRPORT PLANNED FOR 1986, OTHER IMPROVEMENTS BY 1990

Johannesburg DIE TRANSVALER in Afrikaans 8 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Article by Sieg van Niekerk: "New Airports for Natal"]

[Text] Rustenburg—The Louis Botha Airport at Durban will be replaced with a new swank airport, La Mercy, which is now under construction at full speed north of the Natal airport city.

The La Mercy project which was undertaken a number of years ago and then stopped for lack of money is now on full steam ahead again.

This information was made known here yesterday by the Director General of Transportation, A. B. Eksteen, in the course of a report presented on the second day of the transportation conference of the S.A. Institute of Civil Engineers.

"The first phase of construction of the La Mercy Airport has already been awarded and, according to the current planning, it will be taken over by the Louis Botha Airport," according to Eksteen's statement.

"The present lack of space at the Louis Botha Airport made the interim expansion necessary. The expansions will be carried out mainly on the present departure building--as soon as the plans are in the hands of the Department of Public Works."

Runway

According to Eksteen the La Mercy Airport, which is situated 28 kilometers north of Durban along the northern coastal highway, meets all international requirements as far as technical aids, passenger facilities, etc. are concerned.

The runway will be 3,660 meters long and equipped with the most up-to-date navigational aids. In addition to this, provisions are being made for a second runway at La Mercy.

Eksteen also pointed out that the existing terminal buildings at the Jan Smuts Airport will be in use for several more years, since the plans for the new buildings have not yet been approved. These latter buildings will be built between the existing runway and the second one which was recently announced.

"In the meantime the existing terminal building will be renovated so as to improve the flow of passengers. More space and loading tunnels which will connect aircraft on the loading platform with the departure building should make things a lot easier.

"In the interim, other new buildings are to be built at Jan Smuts. Among other things, this is to include a new control tower and fire station--which to be sure are to be built between the two parallel runways. Air control and fire prevention will not be able to be carried out effectively from the existing buildings when the second runway is in use."

According to Eksteen the number of passengers on internal flights increased 19 percent at Jan Smuts and passengers for international flights by 4.5 percent.

"When the second runway becomes operational in December 1982 it will greatly improve the control of air traffic. Jan Smuts is experiencing congestions now, especially in morning hours and not all the flights can depart on time.

"Construction work on the new terminal buildings at the D. F. Malan Airport in Capetown started 3 months ago. The existing building will be redesigned for use for internal flights, while an entirely new international terminal building will be built.

"The latter building should be completed by 1983 and with the new extensions D. F. Malan should be able to effectively handle air traffic up until 1990. A new operations complex for air controllers, weather office and other technical functions have actually been already completed."

Yesterday Eksteen said that there are now 3,300 aircraft registered in South Africa and this number is expected to increase to 4,500 by 1990.

"It is therefore necessary that company lines choose the proper aviators, because the careless and reckless elements among them must be uprooted."

He also emphasized that the local authorities must see to it that they make available the appropriate airports for the growing airline business. The Department of Civil Aviation is providing a great deal of support in this connection...and under certain circumstances, even financial help.

Eksteen pointed out that the South African Air Lines are concentrating exclusively on the main routes, while there are now 83 unduplicated connecting routes operated by privately scheduled services with light aircraft.

BRIEFS

BOPHUTHATSWANA DEFENCE FORCE--Mmabatho--The BophuthaTswana Defence Force yesterday flexed its muscles near the Botswana border post of Ramotswa, about 30 km from Gaborone. But the BophuthaTswana Minister of Defence, Brigadier Hennie Riekert, told newsmen visiting the scene of Operation Kleigat, "We do not want Botswana to become apprehensive in any way. The area was chosen because it is ideal for practical exercises. We have no enemies except the insurgents found in our country. No country is hostile to us. We pray for peace, but are training for the eventuality of war," he said. The Head of the Defence Force, Brigade Commander Colonel H.S. Turner, said about 380 members of the force had already qualified for promotion to higher posts. There were 32 specialised courses they could choose from.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Nov 80 p 5]

BLACK JOURNALISTS STRIKE--Soweto News, a weekly advertiser's paper which is distributed in the townships by South African Associated Newspapers, was published yesterday for the first time since the strike by Black journalists began. This came after the appearance of the "townships" edition of the Sunday Times at the weekend. Most Black journalists in the Johannesburg area are still away from work although the strike by their colleagues at the Cape Herald ended on Wednesday when all the strikers went back to work. The three-week-old strike was organised by the Media Workers Association of South Africa but the association has never threatened strike-breakers. Originally, Mwasa members said they were striking in sympathy with their colleagues at the Cape Herald. But now that the Herald strike is over they are putting their own demands to their employers, the Argus Group and SA Associated Newspapers. They are demanding recognition of their association by the two managements and payment for the period they were on strike before returning to work. The last condition has been rejected by the Cape Herald management. But it is expected that POST, which has a majority of Black staff, will devise a means of publishing within the next two weeks to avoid losing its registration certificate for not publishing within 30 days as required by law. MAVI, COLLEAGUES' COURT CASE--The man who lead the Johannesburg-based Black Municipal Workers' Union at the time of the bus strike, Mr Joseph Mavi and two executive members of the union, appeared briefly in court yesterday and will stand trial next year. Mr Mavi, Mr Phillip Dlamini and Mr Gatsby Mazwi were arrested after the strike and provisionally charged with sabotage, according to the charge sheet. The magistrate, Mr A.G.A. du Toit remanded them to February 16 for trial. Bail of R1 000 was extended for Mr Dlamini, and R500 each for the other two. CAPETOWN COLORED HOUSING DEVELOPMENT--Cape Town--Thousands of prospective home-owners in Mitchells Plain, one of two mushrooming all-Coloured satellite cities in the Peninsula, are no longer eligible to buy houses there unless they live or work in the metropolitan area of Cape Town. Mr Sitaar Parker, financial manager of Mitchells Plain Housing Sales (Pty) Ltd, who handles all housing sales in Mitchells Plain on behalf of the City Council, yesterday confirmed the shock ruling. The council has also decided to make 9 000 houses now under construction available for rent. The council has allocated 9 000 homes proportionately to the Department of Community Development and to the council itself. Community Development will use 25 percent of the dwellings to rehouse people displaced by the group Areas Act, while the City Council will will use 37 percent to provide homes for people on the City Council Housing Department official waiting list--some have been on the list for 13 years--and 37 percent to house squatters. SOUTHERN AFRICA DEVELOPMENT BANK--Johannesburg--A development bank for Southern Africa will be established in the first half of next year. In an interview with the SABC, the Co-ordinator of Constellation affairs, Dr Gerhard de Kock, said good progress was being made with the establishment of the bank and agreement of the institution had already been reached with Transkei, Bophuthatswana, and Venda. The Director General of Finance, Dr Joop de Loor, said in the same programme there was a good chance of getting substantial foreign investments in the bank. Foreign bankers and financiers were very interested in the idea. He said the plan was to work from within South Africa, and then to make the bank attractive to other states of the country's borders.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Nov 80 p 3]

GOLD PRODUCTION FIGURES--South Africa's gold production rose fractionally in October to 56 932 kg (1,83-million ounces) from the September output figure of 55 852 kg. This was a mere 1,9 percent improvement on the September figure and reflects a 4 percent decline on the October 1979 output of 59 324 kg. Total gold output for the 10 months of the year now stands at 566 275 kg (18,21-million ounces) as against 588 962 kg in the same period a year ago. The 730 000 ounce decline in production this year when gold is valued at an average $600 an ounce means that South Africa's gold revenue is some R300-million below what it might have been. But it should be remembered that although gold production was higher last year, the average gold price in 1979 was only $308,16, half the average figure for this year. COAL BULK LOADING PLANT--Durban--Coal is to be loaded into a ship today for the first time through the Railways' new bulk loading plant at Richards Bay. A trial consignment of 24 500 tons destined for Korea is to be loaded by the bulk carrier "Snow White." If successful, and SAR decide to handle coal through the plant on a permanent basis, the transit time for coal from the mines in northern Natal to the point of loading will be reduced from between two and three days to only 10 or 12 hours. Pressure will also be relieved on the port of Durban through which the independent exporters ship at present. The assistant port manager of Richards Bay, Mr Eric Bentley, says the new plant is now fully computerised and loading minerals into ships at a rate of 650 tons per hour.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 80 p 15]

INDUSTRY LOANS INTEREST RATE--The Industrial Development Corporation (IDC) has decided to increase its interest rates for loans to normal industries as well as its export capacity loans. This follows the move by the IDC in August this year to cut the rates it charges for loans to small industries. Normal industries will have to pay 11 percent a year on loans in excess of R500 000 up to R2-million as against 10,5 percent, and for loans in excess of R2-million, the rate climbs from 10,5 percent to 11,5 percent a year. On the export capacity loan scheme, the maximum rate is increased from the current 10,5 percent to 11 percent, or 11,5 percent on the same basis as for normal industries. However, the minimum rate of 7 percent a year remains unchanged. The IDC notes that the amendments do not apply to loans to industrialists in decentralised areas where interest rates are determined by the Decentralisation Board and are sometimes substantially lower than the rates now applicable to "especially normal industries." The move by the ICS follows the pattern of rising interest rates in the system as liquidity dries up, and will not come as much of a surprise. DROUGHT EFFECT ON CROPS--Bloemfontein--A very poor wheat crop is expected in the Free State in spite of recent rains and farmers have only planted about 50 percent of the usual amount of mealies. The rain came after the planting season for mealies had passed. The drought in most parts of the Northern Cape and the Free State is taking on critical proportions and the chances or more rain before the end of November are not very good, according to predictions of the Department of Agriculture. Up to 37 mm of rain fell in some districts in the eastern Free State and chances of more rain in those areas are quite good.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 21 Nov 80 p 10]

MEHTA FAMILY'S DIFFICULTIES RESTARTING INDUSTRY DESCRIBED

Islamabad THE MUSLIM in English 17 Nov 80 p 5

[Article by Victoria Brittain: "Uganda's Entrepreneurs Try To Rebuild Prosperity"]

[Text]

AS DUSK falls, the peacocks on the lawns give a last screech and the floodlights go on over the badminton court where several dozen Indian engineers in immaculate whites play their nightly tournaments and forget for an hour that this is Lugazi, no Bombay.

Mehta and Madhvani, Uganda's two millionaire Asian families dispossessed by Amin, have returned with fresh blood to rebuild the shattered empires started by their grandfathers. The task is as Herculean today as the transformation of bush into waving acres of sugarcane, tea gardens, and small industrial empire was two generations ago.

EQUIVALENTS

The malaria, wild animals, and cannibals that took a toll of the early Mehtas have their equivalents today – gangs equipped with machine-guns have ambushed the managers, communications by phone and telex are no more likley to get through than the runner with the cleft stick was, and ingenuity and barter are again the only bases of commerce.

Lugazi is the Ugandan economy in microcosm – visible past prosperity in ruins, no government that will make the crucial decision to allocate foreign exchange which could restart a productive economy, and Ugandan morale so sapped that only outsiders start anything.

Lugazi is an English nineteenth century company town. The hospital and schools are run by the Mehta company, and on his first day back in March this year, Mahendra Mehta, the company chairman, stood on the cricket pitch watching the school children march in front of him in rags with tears in his eyes and immediately promised Pounds 35,000 for school uniforms. The school children are now the best-dressed people in Lugazi.

Before 1972, 15,000 people worked here on 22,000 acres of sugar and tea, in the sugar and tea factories and engineering and cable works.

Mahendra Mehta lost Pounds 25 million worth of assets and the house he was born in when Amin expelled him at 24 hours notice. But he was lucky. Amin ordered the big colonial bungalow on top of the hill kept for his personal use at weekends with girl friends. Amin's Muslim manager, Haji Doka, brought the peacocks and crested cranes to stalk between the gardenia bushes and left the Mehta family photographs and elephant tusks untouched by the Hindu shrine in the entrance hall.

After nearly nine months of negotiation with the then Uganda National Liberation Front (UNLF) Government, the Mehtas came back to Lugazi agreeing to shelve the issue of compensation indefinitely, to take a minority share–49 per cent–with the Government and to ask for no management fees.

MISUSE

Of the thousands of acres of sugar cane less than a quarter are usable, the factories have cobwebs the size of men hanging from great machines imported from England or India a generation ago. Many are ruined for ever by misuse, but in the three months since the Indian engineers began to arrive they have coaxed back to life some industrial antiques such as a 1924 turbine, and some 1936 boilers by cannibalising aged machines for spares,

Production of hoes, hand sugar-crushing machines, electricity wires in the engineering and cable factories has been tripled already, but supplies of raw materials have now virtually run out because no foreign exchange has been allocated in spite of successive governments earmarking industry as a priority and the offer of 180-day credit backed by Mehta International.

The chronic lack of raw materials and spare parts was initially matched by a shortage of workers, unskilled as well as skilled.

In the foundry the men are working with red-hot metal with neither shoes nor gloves to protect them. Such luxuries are nowhere to be found in Uganda. Their average wage has just been doubled to 700 shillings (pound 40) a month—enough to feed a family on the staple bananas) for about four days. Many workers walk about five miles to get to work, as a decade of neglect has left, the neat rows of workers' lodgings of the 1960's in ruins.

The key problem is that the official Ugandan exchange rate has become a fiction. Any foreign currency can be exchanged for between 12 and 18 times the official rate with a dozen men operating openly at the border with Kenya, or over the counter in shops in Kampala. Almost all prices are fixed with reference to the black market exchange rate so the workers at Lugazi (like policemen and civil servants can barely afford to work for a government wage).

THE ONLY ANSWER

Payment in kind, not cash, is the only answer. At Lugazi anyone who works for 20 days in a month gets a free 6lbs of sugar: in the cable factory, the Mehtas are selling maize, salt, and sugar at the controlled price to employees.

"We all work hard to make the Uganda shilling strong," says a big roughly chalked sign in the engineering works, but by now everyone in the factory knows that hard work is not enough without a dramatic change of political will in Kampala. — The Muslim-Guardian Service.

RIVER BLINDNESS RESETTLEMENT SCHEME IN TROUBLE

London WEST AFRICA in English 17 Nov 80 pp 2303-04

[Text] John Madeley describes difficulties that have arisen with an Upper Volta scheme connected with the eradication of river blindness.

AN INTERNATIONALLY supported scheme to resettle families in Upper Volta appears to be going seriously wrong. The families are being resettled in Volta Basin valleys which has been cleared of the disease carrying blackfly.

The costs of the scheme have now reached astronomical proportions, chiefly because of the complexity of the resettlement programme itself. Soaring costs are now making necessary a rethink of the entire programme. But whilst escalating costs are one factor, equally serious is that the scheme is not working out as it was intended.

Resettlement in the valleys has been made possible by the success of the first stage of the Onchocerciasis Control Programme. Set up in 1974, this £120 million programme is one of the most ambitious development schemes ever mounted. It aims to eliminate the blackfly which bites local people and causes onchocerciasis (river blindness).

For generations the disease has driven people from fertile valleys and it has long been recognised as a major constraint on economic development in the area.

Seven West African countries are involved in the programme — Upper Volta, Ghana, Ivory Coast, Niger, Togo, Benin and Mali. The World Health Organisation are co-ordinating the programme in conjunction with other international agencies and aid donor countries.

The OCP operates through helicopters which spray insecticides on the waterways of the region that are known to contain the breeding grounds of the blackfly. In total the OCP's zone covers 700,000 square kilometres in the Volta Basin.

Over the period 1974-1979, a dramatic reduction in blackfly was recorded. At one point on the Leraba River in the Volta Basin, the OCP monitoring team caught 114 flies over an 11 hour period in August 1975. In August 1979 the team caught only 4 flies at a similar 11 hour monitor. All the countries involved in the programme have reported a big decrease in blindness among young children.

Resettlement in the Upper Volta valleys began in 1979, several years ahead of schedule, with an FAO/World Bank/European Development Fund scheme in the Diebougou region. L'Amenagement des Vallees des Voltas (Volta Valleys Plan) was then launched and given overall responsibility for resettlement.

Extensive studies were first of all carried out by the sponsoring organisations to ensure that people were resettled on an economically viable basis. The sponsors felt that it was necessary to build an infrastructure that would allow for a sustained level of economic development. Roads were constructed, wells were dug, agricultural experts and training specialists were called in.

Resettled families were given subsidies to buy crops plus food aid. They were encouraged to grow cotton for sales to the market and maize and sorghum for their own use. Under the scheme each family resettled in the valleys is allocated around 6 hectares (nearly 15 acres) of land. But a huge problem has arisen because the authorities have been unable to stop families from resettling unofficially in the valleys and by-passing the official settlement scheme.

In theory unofficial settlement is illegal as the land is (technically) government owned.

But due to a long tradition of people living in the valleys, the government is reluctant to turn them off the land. Two different groups of people are therefore living uneasily side by side in the valleys, one officially, the other unofficially — much to the embarrassment of the authorities. Some of the difficulties have been caused by lack of consultation with families who formerly lived in the valleys and wanted to return. Whilst a vast sum of money has been spent on infrastructure, local people have not been asked for their views about the kind of resettlement they wanted. This has led to tensions and some people did not like the kind of crops they were being asked to grow under the official scheme.

Most of the unofficial settlers are living very frugally, although some are maintaining plots of land on the plains.

"The lesson of resettlement so far" said a senior UN official, "is that we need to ask and trust local people to do more themselves and provide less for them. After all they live here; we are just visitors".

Around 2,000 families have so far been officially resettled in the Upper Volta valleys. But costs of resettling families are now thought to have reached over $50 million or $25,000 per family. Costs are therefore running at over $4,000 per hectare of land. Such astronomically high costs are causing both the Upper Volta government and the international aid agencies involved to think again about the scale of infrastructure that is needed. The experience of neighbouring countries may serve as a useful guide for Upper Volta.

Togo is also resettling families who were driven from the valleys by river blindness. The Togo government have decided to cut down on their original resettlement schemes and mount instead a more modest programme with less infrastructure. One thousand families have been resettled in the valleys of Togo at a cost of around $12,000 per family.

In the Ivory Coast there was less exodus from the valleys because of river blindness and a more developed infrastructure already existed. This means that families are moving back at a lower cost. The Ivory Coast government appropriated land in some of the valleys cleared of blackfly to develop sugar, rice and cotton. Most of this new production is controlled by state owned companies.

The UN official admits that the resettlement scheme in the Upper Volta has become top heavy with international bureaucracy and that future schemes should be more simple and cost less. Resettlement is still in its early stages, both in Upper Volta and in neighbouring countries. Over a million people are thought to have been driven from the valleys in the seven OCP countries.

An aid agency official who spent several years in Upper Volta said that the resettlement programme was a "classic case of what seems to be a perfectly good and logical project going wrong. There is plenty of goodwill behind the project but you still have enormous problems. The sponsoring organisation have no doubt done their best. Part of the trouble is that the whole question of how resettlement takes place is so complex that it is difficult to work out all the different factors beforehand".

The programme sponsors are having doubts about the wisdom of encouraging cash crops such as cotton among communities that have no tradition of such agriculture. In the light of results so far it seems probable that people still awaiting resettlement will be consulted more and that spending on infrastructure will be lower.

Providing the sponsoring organisations learn from the experience of the first stages of the resettlement scheme, then later stages should be more successful.

COPPER DEPOSIT--Nearly 200,000 tons of high-grade copper ore have been discovered in Dikuluski, in northwest Shaba, where the SEREM [expansion unknown] company is prospecting, as agreed upon in 1979. The SOZACOM [Zairian Mineral Marketing Company] information bulletin which provided this information added that economic studies were being done to determine if the wealth of this deposit could compensate for the remote location. Other copper, lead and zinc deposits have been discovered by the Balcooma Cooper Prospecting Company. [Text] [Lubumbashi MJUMBE: LE QUOTIDIEN DU SHABA in French 10 Sep 80 pp 1,8] 9479

KAUNDA REVEALS PLANS TO MODERNIZE DEFENSE SYSTEM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA plans to modernise the defence system to make it one of the strongest in the sub-continent, President Kaunda revealed in Kabwe yesterday.

As a prelude to the modernisation process, he had decided to reorganise the Zambia national defence force by appointing separate commanders for the army and the air force; and a commandant to lead the Zambia National Service.

"We must now put more teeth into each of these military units of our defence. Our revolution must and will defend itself," the President said.

Dr Kaunda made these disclosures at the pass-out parade of the ninth intake of cadets at Kohima Barracks. He said the rationalisation of the armed forces would keep Zambia abreast of all the technological changes and tactics.

The modernisation programme would be costly and would require a great deal of sacrifice.

The President said all officers would have to learn to conserve resources at all times.

Dr Kaunda's announcement comes in the wake of a coup plot by some Zambian dissidents with the aid of former Katangese rebels and racist South Africa.

Referring to the plot, the President said the country's enemies were working to root out the system by overthrowing the entire Government and assassinating present leaders.

The sinister plot was foiled because the defence and security forces backed by the ordinary people rallied behind the leadership of the Party.

He told the cadets and senior military officers that a revolution which "cannot defend itself militarily is a paper one."

He stressed that an army which could not defend its national revolution was useless, adding that it was pointless keeping and maintaining such an army.

Dr Kaunda pointed out that since Zambia knew that it would face grave threats to its security it would be foolish not to prepare for that.

Zambia would and must continue to build up its defence.

He blamed exploitative international capitalism for the coup plot.

He said: "Exploitative international capitalism dies hard. It will never accept defeat even when it is being defeated.

"The recent coup plot in our country is our clear reminder to us all that having failed to divert us from a political line by direct military action, exploitative international capitalism is once again pursuing its avowed objective to destroy Zambia through sabotage and subversion.

"It is using as puppets those in our society who are dissatisfied with our chosen path of socialist transformation under the philosophy of Humanism."

The enemy was working hard to sow seeds of disunity and confusion in the country and was infiltrating some of the key institutions including the defence force and the labour movement.

"We have faced these threats to our existence before. Dissension and political disaffection have not been lacking.

"But at no time in all our history as an independent nation have we had to contend with greater disruptive pressures from these evil forces than now," he said.

The reason for this was "very clear," Dr Kaunda said, adding that this was because the nation was now seriously set to establish a programme of socialist-humanist transformation.

He said: "We now have the necessary social conditions to carry out this central task. We are gearing the Party, preparing legislations and indeed have already enacted some of the necessary laws."

On economy, Dr Kaunda said the independence of Zimbabwe had opened for Zambians a new page for development.

He said: "We must go all out to wage the war against poverty and its off-shoots of hunger, ignorance, disease, crime, corruption and exploitation of man by man."

People need food, shelter and clothing "today not tomorrow... They need prosperity, stability and peace in freedom, social justice and fair play — all based on genuine love and truth," he said.

The "lima" programme and the "operation food production" were a determined effort by the Party and its Government to make the lives of the people meaningful.

Negligence

On discipline, he said: "As Commander-in-Chief, it disturbs me to hear about any abuses, gross negligence, thefts and sales of military property," he said.

He directed the Secretary of State for Defence and Security Zulu, to ensure that all the organs of the Party responsible for defence and security took effective measures to stop immediately the flow of weapons to criminals.

● In the story we published on Wednesday in which Foreign Affairs Minister Mr Wilson Chakulya spoke at an Angola national day reception, a wrong impression was created that the mercenaries hired to topple the Zambian Government last month had also planned to overthrow the Angolan government.

What was actually meant was that the people who support those who plan the overthrow of the Zambian Government are the same people who support those who want to overthrow the Angolan government.

In other words both Angola and Zambia have a common enemy.

ZCTU LEADER URGES GOVERNMENT TO SETTLE DIFFERENCES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

THE Government should find a solution to the problems of the labour movement in the country to restore workers' confidence in their leaders, a labour leader said in Kitwe.

Zambia Congress of Trade Unions general-secretary, Mr Newstead Zimba, said: "A crisis of confidence between the Government, labour leaders and workers seems now to be ruling.

"We cannot work under such circumstances. Therefore, we need a positive solution to our differences and clear the air for a healthy atmosphere to prevail."

He appealed to Government security authorities probing the activities of the labour movement to speed up the process so that union leaders could speak to their members freely.

Mr Zimba said although the unionists had remained silent over various allegations by both Party and Government leaders, this did not mean consent.

"Our conscience is clear but disturbed because the labour movement in the history of this country is put in a state of suspicion," he said.

This was so because of the ZCTU's stand on what he called "issues that legitimately concern our status in both decision - making and administrative organisations."

He stressed that as a registered organisation under the law of the land with international resemblance they would continue to function and serve their members in all their endeavours according to trade union regulations.

Mr Zimba emphasised that "something had gone wrong somewhere" that has set the labour movement and Government authorities deliberately apart.

He called on the Government to solve "this imaginary impasse."

"We need to solve this problem for the good of the nation and the people we serve," he said.

Mr Zimba urged workers and trade union leaders to work extra hard to create a conducive working relationship in spite of the prevailing unfavourable conditions.

The ZCTU general-secretary denied that his organisation had connived with any gang to bring about disturbances.

On his passport impounded by the Government, Mr Zimba said this was a short-term setback to the International Labour Organisation to which the ZCTU was a member.

"But as long as the ZCTU exists others will be substituted to attend international commitments," he said.

In Mpika, governor Mr Alfonso Musuwa, called on the representatives of the ZCTU in his area to re-organise themselves and see to it that their organisation was not infiltrated by enemies.

The governor made the call when he addressed a meeting on Thursday.

He charged that enemies of the country had infiltrated the rank and file of the trade unions with a view to encouraging illegal strikes to paralyse the economy. — Zana.

COUP PLOTTERS TO BE TRIED SOON

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

INVESTIGATIONS into the recent abortive coup by mercenaries and Zambian elements, aided by South Africa, are almost complete and all those involved would soon be tried in courts of law, President Kaunda revealed yesterday.

The President said all that was left now was for the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) to give the State the greenlight to start prosecutions.

Dr. Kaunda pointed out that where the law was found wanting, it would be made stronger by Parliament so that the Zambian elements and mercenaries were dealt with accordingly.

He made the remarks when he addressed Zambian heads of missions abroad at a luncheon held at State House.

The President told the diplomats, who in the country after attending the recent 15th National Council, that the State would not punish those found innocent.

Zambia, he said, was building a society based on love, justice and fairplay and as such, had no room for metting out punishment to innocent citizens.

He said that all those who have been arrested or would be arrested by security forces, would be released if they were found innocent.

Briefing them on the scurity situation in the country following the attempted coup, the President said: "The investigations are almost over and as soon as the DPP is ready, cases of those of our countrymen and those who came from outside will go to courts of law."

"We won't punish the innocent, the law will take its course," he said, adding that those found to have been behind the plot would be tried in open courts.

The President warned the diplomats that their task was not an easy one because the country depended on them to provide knowledge of the world around them.

Their understanding of the countries to which they were accredited was of vital importance to the Zambian people, who through the philosophy of Humanism viewed man, whether from the East of West, as the guiding factor in all that they thought, said and did.

He at one point sent the diplomats roaring with laughter when he quipped: "I regret to announce that there will be no reshuffles in the foreign service."

Dr. Kaunda told the diplomats, who have been attending a seminar at Mulungushi Hall, that he hoped next time they will be in the country, they would meet a broader spectrum of the country's leadership.

And speaking on behalf of the deplomats, Dean of the Diplomatic Corps, Mr Albert Kalyati, said that as long as the Party remained strong under Dr. Kaunda's leadership, the nation's enemies would fail.

Later, the President met outgoing Bishop of the Anglican Church, Bishop Philemon Mataka and his wife, and presented him with a copper tray in recognition of his service to God.

Dr Kaunda told Bishop Mataka that the people of Zambia and their Party and its Government appreciated the work he had done for the country and would pray for him to continue helping his fellow Zambians.

Meanwhile, the President was informed that the ITT Supersonic factory in Livingstone is soon to start production of national products such as radios, tape recorders and fans.

ITT General Manager, Mr Krishna Venkateswaran, who was accompanied by two executives f m the Matsushita Electric Industrial Company, Mr Katsuo Chiba and Mr. Toshibumi Tanimoto also presented Dr. Kaunda with a National Video Cassette recorder and an ITT colour colour television.

REPORTAGE ON PARTY-MUZ CONFLICT

Leaders Maintain Silence

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 11 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia was yesterday tight-lipped on the order by the 15th UNIP National Council to reinstate 16 shop stewards sacked for taking part in the recent Party elections.

The National Council, which ended over the weekend, condemned the ultra-vires action by MUZ for punishing officials who exercised their legitimate rights in standing for Party elections.

At its bi-annual conference in Livingstone, the union resolved to sack officials who took part in the elections in opposition to the introduction of the decentralisation system.

So far 16 shopstewards have been stripped of their posts, six of them at Konkola mine in Chililabombwe and ten at the Rokana division in Kitwe.

The council called on the Party and its Government to reprimand the supreme council of MUZ for its action.

Opening the council, Dr Kaunda demanded an explanation from MUZ on their boycott of the elections "within the shortest time."

But yesterday MUZ national chairman, Mr David Mwila, said: "Since you have been writing a lot about the issue you should know what is happening better. I am sorry I am not going to comment."

But MUZ sources said the executive met briefly at their head office at Katilungu House and decided to maintain silence on the matter. It was understood instructions had been sent out to all the branch officials not to say anything.

Meanwhile, former general secretary of the Zambia National Union of Teachers Mr Shiyenge Kapini said in Lusaka yesterday that he would soon issue a statement making his position clear following reports that he had been asked to step down.

Acting general secretary, Mr Albert Chibale has said Mr Kapini was asked to step down at the union's recent executive council in Choma and that he had agreed to relinquish the post honourably.

But a few days later, Mr Kapini said he was still the ZNUT general secretary and he attended the National Council talks in that capacity.

Vice-chairman of the Elections and Publicity Sub-Committee of the Central Committee, Mr Fines Bulawayo, said Mr Kapini had been allowed to attend as a member of the ZNUT delegation because the Party had not been convinced the decision to remove him had been backed by the entire union executive.

Party Intervention

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Party in Kitwe has stepped into the controversial sacking of ten shop stewards at Rokana division of NCCM by the Mineworkers Union of Zambia, urging the sacked men to submit their dismissal letters to the UNIP regional office.

Regional youth and publicity secretary, Mr Fauston Mumba, confirmed yesterday that instructions had been sent to all shop stewards who were sacked for participating in the recent Party ward elections to take the letters to the regional office.

By Tuesday, some sacked shop stewards had handed the letters which were signed by officials of the Nkana branch of MUZ to Mr Mumba although he could not say exactly how many he had received.

Mr Mumba said he would pass them on to the governor, Mr Joseph Musonda for action.

MUZ decided to sack the officials who participated in the recent Party elections in compliance with a resolution passed at its bi-annual conference in Livingstone last month.

In its resolution, MUZ disagreed with the introduction of the decentralised local government system and vowed to sack from the leadership officials who participated in the elections.

So far, ten shop stewards have lost their posts at Rokana and another six at Konkola division in Chililabombwe.

Bitterness

Two of the sacked men at Rokana Division who asked not to be identified yesterday expressed bitterness at the action taken against them by the MUZ executive.

They said they did not understand why the union did not want them to participate in Party affairs when all of them, including the entire MUZ leadership, were card-carrying members of UNIP.

The men said they had not decided on any action to take following their dismissals, but were waiting to hear from the Party since it had stepped in.

The sacked men were not even invited to attend a three-day seminar for shop stewards which was jointly organised by MUZ and the Rokana mine management.

The 15th UNIP National Council directed MUZ to reinstate the officials, but the union has been tight-lipped on the matter.

President Kaunda demanded during the council meeting an explanation from MUZ why the union opposed the decentralised system.

MUZ Adamant

THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia has no plans of reinstating the shop stewards sacked for taking part in the Party elections, MUZ vice-chairman, Mr Timothy Walamba declared in Chililabombwe yesterday.

Mr Walamba said the union could not reinstate the officials since the decision to fire those who participated in the elections was reached at its bi-annual conference.

"If we are to reinstate these officials, it will mean calling for an emergency bi-annual conference and the union has no plans for that," he said.

The 15th UNIP National Council meeting in Lusaka last week called on MUZ to immediately reinstate the sacked officials.

It called on the Party and its Government to reprimand the Supreme Council of MUZ for its action.

The union vice-chairman stressed that as far as they were concerned the officials were no longer union leaders, adding: "We are prepared to be locked up for our stand."

Sixteen shop stewards have been sacked — six of them at Konkola mine in Chililabombwe and ten at Rokana division in Kitwe.

Meanwhile, MUZ has vetoed out-going chairman of the Rokana division works council, Mr Mubanga Chikwanka, and another councillor, Mr Andrew Kombe, from contesting the forthcoming council elections.

Mr Chikwanka confirmed in Kitwe that he had been barred from seeking re-election, although he had not been told why.

The decision to vetoe Mr Chikwanka and Mr Kombe was made by the MUZ Nkana branch at a meeting last Monday which was called to screen candidates for the elections to be held next Tuesday.

Mr Chikwanka complained that the move was unfair and demanded to be given reasons.

He contended that according to Section Four of the Industrial Relations Act MUZ officials had no powers to bar others from contesting elections.

The Rokana division electoral officer, Mr Bernard Mumba, said Mr Chikwanka was barred because, according to the Act, a person could only serve on the works council for two terms which the out-going chairman had done. Zana/Times Reporter.

Possible Meeting With Kaunda

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 18 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE labour movement is to send a delegation to State House for talks with President Kaunda to resolve strained relations with the Party and its Government.

Reliable sources in Kitwe said yesterday that the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions and the Mineworkers Union of Zambia were seeking an appointment with the President but it was not known when the labour delegation would leave for Lusaka.

The sources said the labour leaders were anxious to:

- Clear themselves from being associated with the coup plot foiled last month and
- Discuss the recent National Council resolution directing MUZ to re-instate shop stewards sacked by the union for taking part in the recent Party ward elections.

The MUZ has been holding consultations believed to centre on the National Council resolution.

The first meeting took place last Friday and was chaired by MUZ chairman Mr David Mwila who declined to discuss what transpired at the talks.

Yesterday another meeting was held lasting almost half the morning — but again MUZ officials were tight-lipped on the deliberations.

Last week, MUZ deputy chairman Mr Timothy Walamba said the union would not re-instate the sacked officials because the decision was made by the highest policy-making body of the union.

Southern Province member of the Central Committee Mr Mugoni Liso has meanwhile attacked the labour movement for allegedly acting like an opposition party on the decentralisation system of local government.

Addressing officials of the National Union of Public Service Workers at Livingstone museum yesterday, Mr Liso said it was wrong to use the labour movement as a substitute for an opposition party or a political platform.

The labour movement was not a forum for soliciting political popularity for an individual or group of persons in order to achieve selfish ends.

Workers, Mr Liso said, were not opposed to the decentralisation system of administration.

"It is merely those few in privileged positions who are opposed to surrender their powers to the new district councils," he said.

Mr Liso said while the labour movement was charged with the responsibility of looking after the needs and welfare of workers, the Party and its Government had a wider responsibility in that it looked after the well-being of both workers and the unemployed.

Party, MUZ Discussion

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia is to give Copperbelt Central Committee Member Mr Shadreck Soko, its decision on whether to reinstate the 16 sacked shop stewards who participated in last month's Party ward elections.

At a special meeting convened by Mr Soko in his office yesterday, six representatives of the union executive, led by the deputy chairman, Mr Timothy Walamba, both Mr Soko and Mr Walamba regretted the present strained relationship between the Party and MUZ.

Mr Soko summoned the union officials to discuss the strained relations, particularly the sacking of the shop stewards in Kitwe, Chililabombwe and Chingola.

Mr Soko said after the closed-door meeting that he had told the union leaders that in light of the mutual trust, confidence and cooperation that existed between the Party and MUZ since the struggle for independence, there was no cause for anxiety over the current issues.

Zana reports from Chingola that the seven shop stewards sacked in Nchanga have threatened to renounce their union membership.

A spokesman of the sacked officials, Mr Vincent Mulenga, said yesterday that those sacked wanted the MUZ to stop deducting K1 membership subscription from their salaries.

MOST MAYORS, DEPUTIES RETAIN POSTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

MOST mayors and their deputies yesterday retained their posts in the mayoral elections.

Apart from Kabwe mayor, those in Lusaka, Ndola, Kitwe and Livingstone won back their posts.

In Lusaka, Mr Simon Mwewa was retained unopposed, while his deputy Mr Philip Kalinda defeated councillor Joreck Chishika by 13 votes to 12.

In Kitwe, mayor Mr Sunday Chiluba and his deputy Mr Gordon Amatende were retained in a closely contested election.

There was tension in the council chamber as the councillors split into two rival camps.

Town clerk Mr Gilbert Zimba and acting district secretary Mr Goodwell Simwinga who was chairman had difficulty in controlling the councillors who were raising objections at random.

Ndola mayor Mr Julius Sakala and Mr John Mulenga were re-elected mayor and deputy mayor respectively.

And Livingstone mayor Mr Robinson Muchimba Sichala and his deputy, Mrs Margaret Mulenga Mbewe were declared unopposed.

Shouts

There were shouts of "unity is power," among councillors who spoke in Bemba and Lozi.

After the meeting which lasted less than five minutes, councillors left in jubilation shaking hands and hugging each other.

But Alderman John Nkhoma, who held the post of Kabwe mayor two times and his deputy, councillor Patrick Sikarwe, lost their posts.

Mr Nkhoma, 60, who was persuaded to contest the elections by fellow councillors, polled eight votes against 12 for Zambia Railways public relations manager, Mr Alex Lubinda who is also going to hold the post of mayor two times.

Mr Sikarwe lost to councillor Dick Nankulo by 11 votes to ten.

Councillor Musenge Katontoka was re-elected Mansa township council chairman for the third term of office.

Chipata township council chairman Mr Tyson Ngwane was also retained unopposed.

In Mufulira, Mr Mameturs Mwansa and his deputy Mr Sampson Kapumpa were retained unopposed.

TRADITIONAL CHIEFS COMPLAIN OF GOVERNMENT, PARTY NEGLECT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE chiefs are in the news again. Every time the House of Chiefs is in session, as it is now in Lusaka, Party and Government leaders address the chiefs at length.

The message is usually the same. The chiefs are requested, begged, cajoled and advised to do this or that to help in improving the quality of life of ordinary Zambians in the rural areas.

Yet the drift to the towns continues. Laziness is rampant. This gives the impression that in spite of all the cajoling chiefs are not doing what is expected of them.

That impression is false. Yesterday in a rare show of frankness the chiefs bitterly complained that they are being ignored by the Party and its Government.

They told the President that there was no feedback, favourable or unfavourable, to the numerous resolutions the House of Chiefs had passed since its creation.

Dr Kaunda noted the legitimate complaint and promised action to redress it.

His assurance underlined the fact that chiefs are a strong arm in Zambia's battle for economic revival. Dr Kaunda emphasised the point that the nation must now move from talking politics to working hard on the land.

The obvious task for the chiefs now should be to "ring bells" in the enforcement of a routine of regular work on everybody in every chief's area.

This means that productive work must be done daily by all without exception. In essence the pattern of life should maintain a firm position that makes work the first commandment for all.

In spite of the tremendous national progress made since independence, it is true that as individuals we still nurse an outlook which takes delight in living on the labours of others even for things we can do ourselves expertly.

In the hearts of practically all of us there still appears to be a little shrine at which we pray to the Lord to dispense "manna from heaven."

This mental illness will never depart from the nation unless, first and foremost, people are made to work for themselves.

Work should no longer be an option. It should not be a question of "you may work if you find a job." The law has to be that everyone in our villages has to work hard on agriculture.

So the dynamic objective of the chiefs in this respect should be to ensure that the "work bell" rings for everyone in the rural areas. Our Party sections and villages should go for regular work each day.

Once the people make a decision to work regularly they cannot fail to find something new to do. That is the key to the entire social and economic reconstruction of Zambia.

The House of Chiefs should have a "beer roll call." Any chief whose people will still drink during the week should be sacked and replaced by someone unwilling to be a "beer chief."

OUSTED ZNUT LEADER LAMENTS HIS FATE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

OUSTED general secretary of the Zambia National Union of Teachers [ZNUT], Mr Shiyenge Kapini, wept bitterly yesterday in the office he previously occupied when he formerly announced that he had stepped down from the union leadership.

Mr Kapini's removal follows a decision of the union's executive council in Choma about two months ago.

At an emotional Press conference at the union's headquarters in Lusaka, Mr. Kapini said his removal was the culmination of a protracted tribal and political campaign against him.

"In this country, your contributions are never recognised if you come from a small tribe." Mr Kapini said as he sobbed in the presence of union national chairman Mr Nelson Simatendele and acting general secretary Mr Albert Chibale.

He said he had broken his leg, was detained and dismissed from the teaching service in his efforts to better the lot of teachers in Zambia, "and yet this is the reward I reap."

Mr Kapini said he had no plans for the future and that the going will be tough for him because he had never secured anything for himself in the ten years he worked for the union because he had devoted all his time to his work.

"I had no cause of my own but that of the teachers only. I hope my trappers will be found out. My tomb is not in the grounds of the union. I will not ask anything from the union because I have not wronged it.

"My tomb is in the grounds of the nation. I look to the nation for protection and mercy. I look to the Party and its Government and all its agencies to accommodate me. May be the Party and its Government will wipe away my tears." Mr Kapini said as tears rolled down his cheeks.

In a four-page "resignation" statement, Mr Kapini charged that he knew the people who perpetrated a hate campaign against him and that some of these people were those he had helped in the belief that they were his genuine friends.

If he had wanted to, he would have stayed on in the union, but his decision to leave was final.

"Some people in very sensitive national positions have told me to stay on but I told them I believe in principles and I am going. I would have gone to court over this, but I am a man who has never suffered from a crisis of confidence or will power," he said.

Mr Kapini said he attended the recent National Council in Lusaka as ZNUT general secretary and that he had done so with the full knowledge of Mr Simatendele, Mr Chibale and Mr Newstead Zimba, general secretary of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions.

"The ZNUT had even paid my attendance allowance. There is no question therefore of people saying I attended the meeting without the knowledge of the labour movement," he said.

Mr Kapini said he was happy to leave at a time when the ZNUT had clinched higher salaries.

Commenting on Mr Kapini's statement, Mr Simatendele said the former general secretary was a man who had contributed a lot to the welfare of teachers.

Meanwhile, the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions has despatched high-powered teams of officials to urban areas to urge union leaders to be firm on matters Mr Zimba could not explain.

Mr Zimba said in Lusaka yesterday that he had arrived in the capital from his Kitwe headquarters "to instill confidence in our men."

Mr Zimba, who arrived in the capital two days ago, said he would be holding consultations with leaders of national unions until tomorrow.

NAMBOARD LAY-OFFS CONSIDERED EXPLOSIVE ISSUE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

TO forestall a potentially explosive political hot potato from erupting, the Government has reportedly not approved the sacking of more than 8,000 Namboard workers who would be affected by the re-organisation of the chronic loss-making parastatal company.

In addition to the Namboard workers, 2,500 workers from the Tobacco Board of Zambia and another 2,000 Zamhort employees are expected to be "out in the rain" in January when these parastatals are revamped bringing the total to 13,500 in the agricultural sector.

But labour commissioner, Mr Lufwendo Imasiku said his office was still processing the applications from Namboard and Zamhort which had been submitted through the Cabinet office for the Ministry of Labour and Social Services to give the two organisations the green light to sack the workers.

"As far as I can tell, no decision has yet been made on the matter and I cannot say how many workers will be laid off. That is if the Government gives the approval to Namboard's and Zamhort's intentions," said Mr Imasiku.

The Ministry of Labour and Social Services has received similar applications from the TBZ, whose re-organisation was recommended by a team of British experts who were recently in the country under the sponsorship of the World Bank to study the tobacco industry in Zambia.

President Kaunda announced in May, when he launched the multi-million Kwacha "operation food production" programme that Namboard would be revamped from next January and its functions taken over by provincial marketing unions.

In an interview this week, Minister of Agriculture and Water Development, Mr Unia Mwila said: "Namboard's re-organisation had become necessary following the unsatisfactory services which it gave to the nation."

Mr Mwila said the Government was determined to "overhaul" all institutions which would be involved in the 'Ilima' programme so that they could play their part effectively.

A tour

The minister, who was speaking before a tour of the Southern Province to inspect farms, acknowledged that Zamhort whose responsibility is marketing vegetable produce — had "very serious problems."

Asked about the fate of Zamhort, Namboard and TBZ workers Mr Mwila said:

"Some of them will be ing companies because of the absorbed in other Government departments and organisations."

Mr Mwila, whose ministry is responsible for the three organisations, declined to say how many workers would be re-assigned to other jobs.

The Government intended to streamline agricultural lending institutions such as the Agricultural Finance Company which would be eventually scrapped and replaced by the proposed Agricultural Development Bank (ADB).

SPECIAL YOUTH CENSUS UNDERWAY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 16 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

Sunday Times Reporter

THE Party will soon conduct a special census to determine the exact number of unemployed youths in the country so that effective plans can be worked out to help them and reduce unemployment.

This was disclosed yesterday by the chairman of the Youth and Sport sub-Committee of the Central Committee Mr Nakamino Mundia when he addressed the Southern Province provincial youth conference at Choma.

Mr Mundia said no political or economic revolution could succeed without the youth playing a leading role.

He said since independence the youth had been staunch allies of the Party's leadership and had been in the forefront of Zambia's transition from a capitalist to a socialist society.

Mr Mundia informed the conference which was attended by Southern Province member of the Central Committee Mr Mungeni Liso that the Party had made great efforts to provide schools and colleges at which young people could uplift themselves and become useful citizens.

"But in spite of our efforts and that we have done more than most underdeveloped countries, we still find ourselves with a number of youths who can neither find places in schools nor employment. The exact number of the unemployed youths after Grade 7 and Form Three in each district is not known. It is this task which the youth league with the help of youths in various provinces will try to solve next year."

Mr Mundia said the programme to be carried out soon will aim at:

- Ascertaining the number of youths who have completed Form Three.
- How many Grade Seven school leavers there are.
- Other youths who are Party members in the sections, branches and wards who are not in useful employment.

GOVERNMENT SIGNS AGREEMENT WITH MOBIL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] THE Government and Mobil Petroleum Company Inc yesterday signed an agreement to form a new organisation called "Lublend," for the production of lubricants in Zambia.

The reason for this new venture was to conserve the country's foreign exchange and the plant is expected to save about K8 million in imports cost of lubricants during the first two years.

Documents were signed in Lusaka by Mr James Mapoma, director-general of Zimco; Mr Patrick Chisanga, executive director for transport and energy; Mr Dancewell Bowa, managing director of Zambia National Energy Corporation and Mr William McCarthy, vice-president of Mobil South INC.

Explained

A Mobil Oil Zambia spokesman explained that the new plant would be in Ndola at Bwana Mkubwa and would produce about 100,000 barrels of lubricants a year.

The construction was expected to take about 18 months at an estimated cost of nearly K6 million.

"In addition to its share of investment capital, Mobil will contribute its sophisticated engineering and technological skills. The agreement calls for training of Zambians who will eventually operate the plant," said the spokesman.

According to the agreement Zimco will own 35 per cent, Zambia National Energy, 25 per cent while Mobil will have majority shares of 40 per cent.

Lubricants produced by the plant would be supplied to all oil companies in the country.

"This project reflects the growing confidence of private corporations in Zambia's investment climate," he added.

Speaking after a brief signing ceremony Mr Mapoma said: "I am pleased that the signing of the agreement to establish a Lublend company has come soon after President Kaunda has been emphasising the need to establish industries as opposed to purely retail enterprises."

Mr Mapoma added that it was his hope that the new company would explore vigorously export possibilities in neighbouring countries.

● The Commonwealth Development Corporation's present commitments in Zambia will not be affected by the slash in its budget next year, regional director Mr James Tuckett said in Lusaka yesterday.

Mr Tuckett who described the British government's decision to cut funds by 35 per cent as "unfortunate" said it was likely there would be no money for future investment.

DETAILS OF YOUTH MOVEMENT REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Nov 80 p 4

[Text]

THERE is one story which goes like this: One politician stood on the platform and as he was addressing the audience, he declared: "All you people are behind me."

As it turned out he did not realise that the people were not just behind him. They were far behind. That far, explains the problem of the politician who always kids himself that he has mass support, when in fact the masses are far, far behind.

To this we can tie the UNIP Youth League and benefit from the fact that in four weeks' time they will be holding their elections. An election presupposes one thing: Democracy.

The other affiliate body of the main Party, the Women's League, had elections early this year. When the show was over one aspirant, Mrs Esnat Mushiba, who is Ndola district political secretary complained.

"We discovered that the present executive does not want intellectuals in its midst and this was demonstrated during the elections in Lusaka."

Mrs Mushiba told a Press conference that regional secretaries, now retitled "district political secretaries," had held a secret meeting at which they decided to ban some candidates from contesting the elections.

"It was during this meeting when it was discussed that the positions of secretary for administration, treasurer and publicity should not be contested by any other candidate other than the incumbent holders."

Mrs Mushiba is a respected Party leader. If what she revealed is true, what evidence does the country have that other elections of the Party represent the democratic process which the leaders sing so much about? Or was it sour grapes?

What assurance do the youth of the nation have that the Youth League elections next month will be free and fair?

Already there are stories that during the last elections in December 1977 some Youth League executives took with them a list of candidates who they wanted to see go through. If that is true, then there were no elections.

Is the Youth League going to prepare another list this year to pre-choose leaders of the young of this nation? Or is it some other powers outside the Youth League that prepare the list?

There are allegations that the so-called executives of the Youth League are in reality just surrogates of the Youth and Sport sub-committee of the Central Committee. To the extent that they take their instructions, not from the youth of the nation, but from the members of the Central Committee.

If that is so, it means misdirection of accountability.

Where, then, is the youth's participation in the democratic process of the national body politik?

Or are the delegates going to be able to hold elections? Then there will be those who will say that if the present Youth League executives wish to be elected they should stand before the delegates and qualify their accomplishment during the last five years of their tenure in office.

It is further revealed that when the idea of the establishment of the youth league was first mooted, it was proposed that the Youth League executive should comprise the various leaders of known youth movements, especially at educational institutions.

It was in keeping with this line of thought that the five-year programme of action — 1978-82 — was prepared. According to this programme the Youth League should have had the following organs under its umbrella:

● Zambia Union of Pioneers, to comprise pupils in primary schools and children in nurseries.

● Zambia Union of Peasant Youth to cater for the youth in rural areas. These should implement the "back to the land policies".

● The Zambia Union of Working Youth, to cater for young men and women in gainful employment with the express aim of improving the property relations as the nation staggered along the path towards socialism en route to Humanism.

● The National Union of Unemployed Youth, for those in urban and rural areas.

When former chairman of the Youth and Sport sub-Committee Mr. Fine Liboma introduced the five-year programme, he said in the pamphlet's preface:

"It is an accepted fact that for any organisation to forge ahead effectively, there is need to have a programme to guide it. Such a programme must spell out the task of the organisation and some instruments of implementation."

Mr Liboma added: "It (the programme) must assist members to evaluate their successes, obstacles and failures when it expires."

Three years have now expired and how will the Youth League executive officials explain why none of the items in the programme has been accomplished?

On what ground will they seek a fresh mandate (assuming that they had a mandate before)?

Other people will note that at least the Zambia Union of Working Youth had been formed. The executive members of the union gathered every Sunday — not to read the Holy Bible — but to study Marxist-Leninism.

The union was banned, allegedly because it had become too hot and more veritable than the Youth League in its exemplification of the interests of the working youth.

So what programme does the Youth League stand for? Is it not just an addition of the administrative overheads the party is incurring at the cost to the tax payer.

There will be those who will say: You cannot Focus like that, the young men will be given a chance to explain themselves before the youth congress. If they have failed they will be thrown out.

And yet, still others will say that if the present youth leadership were handpicked and presented to the 1977 elections for "rubberstamping" then what guarantee does the nation have that there will be free and fair elections?

The best thing, apparently, is to wait and see — and keep vigil for any let-ups.

KAUNDA SAYS CHIEFS MUST SPEARHEAD FOOD DRIVE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] PRESIDENT Kaunda has urged chiefs to spearhead the "lima" programme in their respective areas.

The President said the nation was going through a historic turning point, moving from politics to a period of preoccupation with development.

This must be a new style of public and private life in Zambia, it must be the new style of life for institutions and for all individuals, he said yesterday when he opened the House of Chiefs' meeting in Lusaka's Mulungushi Hall.

"The House of Chiefs, therefore, should neither be an empty ceremonial expression nor a mere convenient but futile historical linkage of the aspirations of our people today," he said.

As the nation embarked on the present turning point he wanted chiefs to:

- Rally behind the national policies of the Party;
- Follow the development programmes of their own areas;
- Put the immense respect the people have for their communal leadership to the common development needs of their people;
- Summon the cultural values and traditions of their people to support a work programme in their areas to bring more production and material welfare to their people.

He directed that every chief must become concerned about food and clothing for his people.

"I want to see every chief concerned about houses for the people. I want to see them worrying and doing something about roads between villages and bridges linking them," he said.

As a modern state, Zambia must operate at a high social and political level and respond to complex development policies and programmes.

Every level

Leadership at every level of society called for capacity and high calibre. "This is a challenge which you as a national institution of the House of Chiefs have to face," Dr Kaunda said.

He said the Party did not and would never consider chiefs as mere museum pieces in their areas.

The chief should not be a dead relic of interest only to anthropologists and other academics of social systems and extinct institutions.

The President directed all chiefs to accept and apply the "lima" programme in their areas as personal programmes.

"Traditional rulers must put their full weight as well as cultural and social influence behind the "lima" programme of the Party."

Dr Kaunda pointed out that chiefs should feel proud if the people in their areas grew abundant food for themselves but should share the sense of shame if their people failed to grow enough food to feed their wives and children.

"The Party will be happy to see the great traditional influence of the chief in each area become an effective part of the country's economic extension service in mobilising the people for development using their own hands and local material," he stressed.

Earlier, chairman of the House of Chiefs, Chief Undi, said for sometime the House had not been satisfied with the response by the Party and its Government to its numerous resolutions.

Frustrating

"Even more frustrating has been the fact that in many cases, there never seems to be any form of feedback, negative or positive, to our resolutions. We are kept totally in the dark and we hereby beg for sympathetic attention from the authorities," he said.

The President assured the chiefs that the Party and its Government would in future take serious note of their resolutions with a view to implementing some of them.

On the "lima" programme, he said chiefs were geared to go out with their people to produce food for the nation, but delayed payment of farmers, late and insufficient deliveries of fertiliser and other agricultural requisites and late processing of agricultural loans should end if the programme was to succeed.

LARGE FERTILIZER SHIPMENT EXPECTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 19 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

ABOUT 8,000 tonnes of fertiliser are expected to arrive in the country from South Africa by railway towards the end of this month as part of this year's requirements, Zambia Railways public relations manager, Mr Alex Lubinda, announced in Kabwe.

The largest consignment of fertiliser was expected to come in through Dar es Salaam, Mr Lubinda said, but could not give figures as these have not yet been communicated to him.

"But the amount is quite considerable. In fact, it is the largest amount we are getting from Dar es Salaam this year," he said.

Mr Lubinda added that the fertiliser from South Africa had already been packed and was on its way to Zambia.

"All of it will be here by the end of this month," he said.

The fertiliser tonnage expected from South Africa this month would bring the total figure of fertiliser from this route to 40,000 tonnes.

In addition, Mr Lubinda said, 13,000 tonnes of fertiliser were expected to arrive in the country either late this year or early next year from Beira through Wankie in Zimbabwe.

The only problem on this route was that National Railways Zimbabwe had no extra capacity to transport their coal and coke together with Zambia's fertiliser and this would delay its arrival.

Meanwhile, a Luanshya-based company has started making irrigation and other farm implements as its contribution to the country's K400 million "operation food production" and the "lima" programme.

Acting general manager of Hume Zambia in Luanshya Mr Vivian Evans said yesterday the company had started manufacturing steel and concrete pipes, culverts, blocks, bricks and other products for irrigation, drainage and general farm use.

Both small and large-scale farmers were catered for with products from the company, Mr Evans said.

Since the company did not anticipate to go into the production of small diameter pipes that could be used for small-scale irrigation, efforts were being made to ensure that there was a constant flow of imported types which were currently in stock, he said.

FARMERS GIVEN TAX INCENTIVES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 14 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Government yesterday announced the long-awaited tax incentives to farmers aimed at boosting the agricultural industry.

The incentives were announced by President Kaunda when he launched the K400 million "operation food production" programme last May.

Launching the programme, Dr Kaunda announced the reduction in fertiliser prices and awarded incentives of 50n foreign exchange remittance for every extra 90 kg bag of maize, wheat or soya beans after exceeding 5,000 bags.

In fulfilling the presidential promise to farmers, the Government has decided to institute the tax incentives which would also boost agricultural production, especially maize which is the country's staple food.

The incentives, according to a Ministry of Finance spokesman yesterday include:

● An accelerated depreciation rate of farming machinery, equipment, implements and accessories. These items would now be depreciated over a period of only two years.

This means that, the recovery of the cost of these items would be over a period of only two years instead of over the number of years the items were in use for farming purposes;

● Farm income (as will be defined through appropriate legislation) would be taxed separately from other incomes at a concessionary maximum flat rate of 25 per cent of assessable income.

This rate of tax would apply to income derived from farming operations carried out by an individual or an incorporated limited company;

● Dividends derived from farm income would be exempt from tax for five years.

The spokesman reminded the nation that these measures were in addition to incentives already in existence.

A spokesman for the Commercial Farmers Bureau said if the proposals were accepted by Parliament the agricultural industry would make a positive turn for the better.

He congratulated the Ministry of Finance for putting forward "very important incentives" for the expansion of agriculture in the country.

He said: "Firstly, the accelerated depreciation rate on farm machinery will have a very positive impact on the replacement of old and worn out equipment.

"Secondly, the new income tax proposals are most welcome as it will now be possible for farmers to accumulate the capital to buy equipment which has been rising in price faster than the farmer could save to buy it.

"Up to now farmers have been forced to borrow more and more to meet the ever rising cost of machinery. Now they will be able to re-equip from their own resources."

On the 25 per cent flat rate proposed by the ministry, the spokesman said it would make it possible for farmers to weather bad years like the last three growing seasons.

He added that these far-ranging measures would encourage farmers to put more land under cultivation although it was probably too late for the proposals to have a significant impact on the present season.

Meanwhile, all banks in the country have been urged to pump more money into small-scale industries because of the significant role they play in economic development.

The call was made in Lusaka yesterday by an expatriate adviser in the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, Mr Karachur Nanjappa, when he addressed the local branch of the Institute of Bankers.

Mr Nanjappa is in the country to help in the implementation of the Small Industries Development Organisation (SIDO) as well as the Village Industry Service (VIS).

COPPERBELT TEACHERS DENOUNCE PARTY INTERFERENCE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 13 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

TEACHERS on the Copperbelt have accused the Party of favouritism and interference for disregarding the Zambia National Union of Teachers' decision to sack Mr Shiyengi Kapini from his post as general secretary.

Speaking in Kitwe on Tuesday, provincial chairman Mr Alick Bowa, deplored the action the Party took to admit the former general secretary to the 15th National Council as a representative of the teachers' union.

Mr Bowa was commenting on Lusaka Member of the Central Committee, Mr Finex Bulawayo's Press statement that Mr Kapini had been allowed to attend the National Council as a member of ZNUT delegation because the Party had not been convinced that the decision to remove him had been backed by the entire union executive.

The provincial chairman deplored Mr Bulawayo's statement because it "created suspicion and confusion among members of the union executive that met in Choma."

Mr Kapini was removed from his job through a vote of no confidence by the union's national executive council last month.

Mr Bowa said as teachers, they were wondering why the Party or Mr Bulawayo had decided to intervene and obstruct a decision taken by the union national council.

"The record before us indicates clearly that there is a reason why Mr Bulawayo has seen it fit to come in a case like this one," said Mr Bowa.

He gave as an example the case of a Mr Stephen Bwalya who was removed from his union post by the council. The Party never intervened to support him.

He also said Mr Kapini's predecessor, Mr Muletambo Mubita, was removed from the post by the union national council and there was no intervention from the Party. "What is special about Mr Kapini?" he asked.

The union leader challenged Mr Bulawayo to come out with a full report as to what led to the removal of Mr Kapini.

Mr Bulawayo should tell the nation how he arrived at the conclusion that it was not the entire executive that supported the decision. — Zana.

NATIONWIDE IRRIGATION SCHEME PLANNED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

THE Government will soon establish a nation-wide irrigation scheme aimed at alleviating grain problems and increasing food production.

Agriculture and Water Development Minister, Mr Unia Mwila, who announced this said the ministry would embark on a programme to boost the morale of farmers and improve the mobility of extension officers.

Speaking at a Press briefing in Lusaka yesterday, Mr Mwila said Member of the Central Committee, Mr Kapasa Makasa and ministry officials including him, would tour all provinces starting today for one week to boost the "lima" programme and "operation food production."

He said the ministry was geared to fully establish self-sufficiency in the nation and was taking drastic measures towards achieving this.

On the measures to be taken by the ministry to achieve surplus food production, Mr Mwila warned that unless Zambia stopped relying on rain in food production, food shortages would continue.

He said the only way to check this was to establish irrigation systems in all farms to ensure two harvests in a year. He added that rain should be a secondary source of water for agricultural purposes as it had proved to be unreliable in the past.

Other measures include the provision of 1,000 bicycles to make extension services men more mobile.

Another one was to ensure the issuing of seasonal loans to farmers, early arrival of fertiliser and other agricultural implements for farmers.

Explaining the reasons why the officials have embarked on the programme, Mr Mwila said:

"These weeks of preparation are very important to the farmer and we want to give him maximum support by ensuring that his needs are attended to promptly."

He said the campaign was aimed at seeing how farmers were geared to produce more food next year.

He said during his tour, he would meet heads of departments involved in the "lima" programme.

Mr Mwila said he and his two ministers of State Mr Joshua Mukando and Mr Noah Diamonu would find out whether fertiliser and agricultural extension services were satisfactory.

Farmers had responded well to the "lima" programme and the Government was optimistic it would be satisfactorily implemented, he said.

The task of rural development should not be left in the hands of farmers alone if Zambia was to attain self-sufficiency in livestock and food production, Southern Province permanent secretary, Mr Mwiche Siwale, has said.

Opening a workshop for rural information officers from Southern, North-Western and Lusaka provinces at Kanchomba Farm Institute in Choma on Monday, Mr Siwale said farmers must be assisted so that they knew what was good for their land. —Times Reporter/Zana.

KAUNDA'S MINING INDUSTRY DIRECTIVE SEEN FRUITFUL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

PRESIDENT Kaunda's directive to the mining industry three years ago to find cheaper means of production are still being followed by Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines, company public relations superintendent, Mr Indopu Kalaluka has said.

He was commenting on the approval by NCCM's Rokana Division to introduce a new system of blasting two years ago which he said was now saving the organisation thousands of Kwacha.

Rokana division underground manager, Mr Earnest Pfiula told a delegation of heads of Zambian missions abroad who visited the division yesterday that the newly - introduced system was much cheaper than the previous one.

Previously, he said, the company bought explosive powder at K32 per 25kg case while now it was buying K17 worth of the powder of the same weight which was capable of blasting the same size of rock from Kafironda explosives factory in Mufulira.

"The new system uses fertiliser with some explosive substance mixed with it at Kafironda. The company is saving a lot in this direction because of the difference in prices."

Ambassador to Yugoslavia Mr Albert Kalyati, who was leading the delegation, said the envoys were aware of the problems the mining industry in Zambia was facing. He praised miners for being one of the most disciplined group of workers in the country.

He said his team was impressed with the good relations the mining industry managements had maintained with the workers and especially the Mineworkers Union of Zambia and these must continue in the interest of the nation.

GOVERNMENT GIVES COPPER BUYERS AN ULTIMATUM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Nov 80 p 2

[Article by Arnold Raphael]

[Text]

ZAMBIA has issued an ultimatum to West German and British copper consumers — "agree to our terms or go without."

Metal Marketing Corporation managing director Mr Laurence Mutakasha informed the Times here on Monday. "I would like it to be clearly understood that we have given a deadline of November 14 to all our customers still sitting on the fence to sign their 1981 contracts. We are reluctant to adopt this action but it has been forced upon us."

Mr Mutakasha said the great majority of Zambia's international customers had agreed to next year's terms without any problem. The contracts included a £20 premium for wire bars, £10 XBR cathodes plus a freight increase contingency clause under which Zambia would absorb up to ten per cent of any rise — the balance falling on the importer.

While Japan, Italy, France and other consumers have raised no objection, the new terms have been strongly resisted by West Germany and some British interests.

Germans face far higher prices for Polish copper and although having invested millions in the industry there, they had long-term contracts for supplies far below market prices which the Poles are now objecting to.

West Germany and Britain account for 20 per cent of Zambia's exports and to the West Germans cheaper Zambian copper would offset higher prices for the Polish metal.

"If any customer thinks I am sitting here biting my fingernails contemplating an adjustment of our premiums they are going to get a very unpleasant surprise."

The Memaco boss leaves for Brazil on Wednesday on a sales mission confident Bonn and outstanding British contracts will be ready for signature by Friday.

"We have good reason to believe that West Germany is financing a carefully orchestrated campaign against us through the Press and the trade to persuade consumers to resist our terms.

"We know what they are up to and we know that they are employing a retired executive to go round telling everybody that our terms should not be accepted." Mr Mutakasha said.

He added: "We are taking a firm stand. We have told them that they have up to next Friday to make up their minds one way or another. I should emphasise that we will not lose a agwee should they decide to boycott us for we have contigency plans to sell the copper elsewhere."

Mr Mutakasha dec" ed to go into the reasoning shind the West German consumers campaign.

MOKAMBO MINE TO REOPEN NEXT YEAR

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 12 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

WORK at Mokambo mine near Mufulira will resume early next year, Minister of State for Finance Mr Jameson Kalaluka said in Lusaka yesterday.

The mine was closed five years ago because of low copper prices on the world market and flooding problems. It will now cost K3 million to re-open.

The resumption of operations follows the signing of a number of agreements between Zambia and Romania in Lusaka on Tuesday.

The agreement cover full participation of Romania into the "operation food programme," mine and geological fields.

Signing for Romania, first deputy minister of foreign trade and international economic cooperation, Mr Ion Nicoise, pledged his country's commitment to implementing the agreements without delay.

He said his eight-man delegation was highly impressed by the discussions they held with President Kaunda and other Party and Government officials which were aimed at strengthening co-operation and friendly relations between the two countries.

Mr Kalaluka said the agreements were a result of hard work by the two delegations with a view to strengthening and consolidating the economic and political relationship between the two countries.

"In the mining and geological fields the Government was happy to note that the two delegations agreed that work should resume at Mokambo mine early in 1981," he said.

Agreed

The minister assured Mr Nicoise that Zambian institutions concerned with the Mokambo mine project would ensure that resumption of work there became a reality.

The two sides agreed that the Romania Geomin branch in Lusaka should continue geological and hydrological drills and that Zambia would see to it that work got off the ground soon.

On agriculture, Mr Kalaluka expressed satisfaction that Romania agreed to expedite work on projects including the 20,000 hectares of land for the growing of cotton, maize and sunflower under the "operation food production" programme.

He said the Government would look forward to the coming of Romanian experts to Zambia before the end of this year to survey sites for the State farms.

Zambia would send top officials to Romania later this year to discuss government views regarding the feasibility studies and offers so far submitted in the industrial field.

ARMY CHIEF TELLS MALCONTENTS TO QUIT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 15 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

MEMBERS of the armed forces who do not adhere to the democratic principles of the Party and its Government must get out, Zambia Army Commander Lieutenant-General Malimba Masheke, said yesterday.

General Masheke, who was speaking at the pass-out parade, reminded all ranks of the defence forces that in a one party-participatory democracy like that of Zambia, the armed forces were an instrument of the Party and its Government for defending the nation, its policies and socialist values.

"Whoever joins it commits himself or herself to this principle, otherwise he or she should not even contemplate joining.

"If anyone in uniform does not accept this requirement, he or she should get out instead of being in opposition from within and tarnish the good name of our noble profession," he said.

Commander Masheke informed the President that the Zambia Army had adopted a defensive posture against the country's enemies which, through their behaviour against Zambia, had continually strengthened the country's defences.

"In this connection, we would like to dissociate ourselves from the behaviour of a few elements from our profession who are involved in the attempted coup d'etatl and who tried to tarnish our name," he said.

Gen Masheke added that since Zambia's independence, the defence force had suffered "a barrage of enemy propaganda, instigating them to misbehave in this country. The enemy failed and much to his shame, he will fail again."

General Masheke said the enemy had tried to drive a wedge between the people and their defence force.

But he had failed because "we are a people's defence force sharing the same fate and destiny with the people."

He said: "Let the enemy know that in times of rejoicing, we shall rejoice with the people and in times of difficulty, we shall resolutely stand firm with the people, our leadership, our Party and our Government to whom we, once again, pledge our loyalty and total support.

"We shall continue to be vigilant and in unison with the people, intensify our efforts to hunt for the remaining insurgents involved in the attempted coup d'etat until all of them are brought to book.

"We shall remain vigilant and ensure that malcontents determined to sow seeds of discord and confusion are rooted out ruthlessly." Gen Masheke saluted President Kaunda, the Party and its Government for using effective measures to foil the recent coup attempt.

He informed Dr Kaunda that the initial number of cadet officers on training was 321, divided into 147 from the Zambia Army, 107 from the airforce and 67 from the Zambia National Service.

But because of "pressing demands upon us," all ZAF cadets were withdrawn for training elsewhere. Out of the remaining group from the army and national service, 71 were discharged for failure to meet the required standards, General Masheke said.

The course, the general said, was aimed at producing mentally and physically fit, as well as well-balanced junior leaders, "imbued with a higher degree of sense of responsibility. It included all aspects of military proficiency, discipline, sense of duty and political consciousness".

BRIEFS

FARM TOOLS BAN--The Government has not lifted a ban on the importation of agricultural equipment which can be manufactured locally, Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr Remmy Chisupa, said in Kitwe yesterday. But Mr Chisupa admitted that his ministry had not discouraged importers from bringing the equipment into the country. The minister said this when Universal Spring Manufacturers general manager Mr Dennis Hughes complained that despite the ban imposed more than a year ago, some companies were still being given foreign exchange to import hoes and other farm implements which his company produced. The hoes produced by his company had been tested and found to be suitable and durable for peasant farmers in rural areas, he said. "By allowing local manufacturers to produce hoes, Zambia would save about 40 percent in foreign exchange. In fact, my company's production capacity is 200,000 hoes a year and this could be doubled if we were supported by the Government," he said. In Kasama, Northern Province member of the Central Committee, Mr. Alex Shapi, said yesterday there is a serious shortage of agricultural inputs and this would greatly reduce production next year. Mr Shapi said in a telephone interview that the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development had not sent a single tractor to the province for peasants to hire and, with heavy rains already started, it was getting late for planting. KAUNDA PRAISES N. KOREA--Zambians have admired how President Kim Il Sung of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea has led his country to prosperity, President Kaunda said yesterday. In a congratulatory message to President Kim on his re-election as secretary-general of the Korean Workers' Party, Dr Kaunda said this was a clear demonstration of the confidence the people of Korea had in their president's leadership which was derived from his wisdom and love for his country and people. He expressed sincere gratitude to President Kim for the warm and cordial reception accorded to a Zambian delegation during the sixth convention and the 35th anniversary of the founding of the Korean Workers' Party. He said: "It is our great wish and hope that your country will continue to benefit from your leadership for many more years to come, and we wish Your Excellency continued personal good health and long life." Dr Kaunda extended pleasure to President Kim and sincere and heartfelt congratulations. Meanwhile, President Kaunda will today officially open the House of Chiefs at Mulungushi Hall. Making the announcement, Minister of State for Decentralisation, Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula, asked invited guests to be seated by 09.30 hours in readiness for the ceremony which starts at 10.00 hours. BRIDGE RECONSTRUCTION--Prime Minister Mr Daniel Lisulo has said that reconstruction work on six bridges damaged by former rebel Rhodesian forces last year has been completed while work on the Chambeshi Bridge has also started. The prime minister, who was replying to a question from Liuwa member of parliament Mr (Nathan Nasachana), who asked about the estimated cost of rebuilding the infrastructure, said the only remaining bridge where work has not started was the one in Siavonga. He said this was because the site had not been cleared of landmines planted by the rebels. [Text] [LD261346 Lusaka Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 25 Nov 80 EA]

PRIME MINISTER MUGABE INTERVIEWED BY SFRY PAPER

AU271556 Ljubljana DELO in Slovene 15 Nov 80 p 23

[Interview with Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe by unidentified DELO correspondent--in early November in Salisbury]

[Excerpts] Salisbury, November--Half a year after the last British colony on African soil, Rhodesia, became the independent Republic of Zimbabwe, its people are making great efforts for postwar reconstruction and development. This is their second struggle for independence, for an economic independence, after they won their political independence at a price of 30,000 dead.

However, it appears that this struggle for the time being is enjoying less support than the first one, particularly from those who before independence promised substantial financial funds and who have now decided in favor of the tactic of waiting to see which road Zimbabwe will take. Zimbabwe will take its own road, replied Robert Mugabe, prime minister of Zimbabwe, who gave a special interview to DELO in his Salisbury office a few days ago.

DELO: Could you now, after the first 200 days of Zimbabwe's independence, sum up the first results; that is, could you tell us what successes you have achieved and what difficulties you have encountered?

Mugabe: As you know, the essence of independence is in the fact that people obtain their sovereign right to make decisions about themselves and to elect their government. Thus, we have achieved this independence; that is, political independence. Our people voted in accordance with the principle "one man, one vote." I believe that was a great landmark in our country's history, particularly after the long years of bitter struggle.

At the same time I believe that with this, our national struggle for sovereignty has not ended, but we must make efforts to realize other goals which are increasingly more closely connected with the people's personal life. These are the social, economic, cultural, educational and other goals. In other words, our struggle for independence must be transformed into a struggle to achieve those goals. Up to now we have tried to lay the foundations for realizing those goals and, in this connection, we had to take into consideration the existing socioeconomic infrastructure.

You must take into consideration that our economy suffered damage during the war, that roads in many rural areas were damaged and in some cases destroyed, and the same goes for hospitals and clinics. In addition, many people were separated. They suffered during the war, particularly in the rural areas where many people lost their property, their land. Now we must reintegrate them into normal life.

Naturally, all these programs of rehabilitation and reconstruction call for pretty large funds. And in this connection we have found ourselves in difficulties, because the British and Americans have not provided those substantial funds which they promised us for reconstruction and development of the economy. We have insufficient funds, but nonetheless with the available funds we have begun to realize our programs. We are reconstructing schools, hospitals and roads, and we are satisfied that much has already been done in this respect.

Land is still not accessible to all those farmers who need it. To ensure this land for them, we will need more funds. However, we do not have such funds and for this reason the government is studying other ways of obtaining land. Nonetheless, we hope that the British will realize that we need more funds to pay for the land which we intend to take away from the white farmers.

DELO: How is the consolidation of peace, in view of the fact that individual instances of violence still occur?

Mugabe: True, this is an area which causes concern to the government. There are still numerous dissidents who possess arms and who continue to cause isolated incidents, which evoke concern and fear among our rural population, particularly among the white farmers. However, if we were to compare the state of peace that prevailed earlier, during the war and after the elections, we could note that we have moved a long way toward a complete peace. In fact, our situation is not so bad as portrayed by the foreign press.

Also, if we compare the level of violence in our country and that in Great Britain, or rather in northern Ireland; or if we compare it to that in the United States, where no war is being waged but where, nonetheless, they have a high level of crime, we must conclude that there is much less crime in our country than in the United States. For this reason I do not see why the foreign press picked us as a target for slander. Nevertheless, I believe that in the field of establishing peace, we have still not carried out our task, and we will be able to do this only when we have a unified army, a unified command. I hope that we will achieve this soon.

DELO: During the liberation struggle you established a number of friendships, both in Africa and elsewhere in the world. How should these friendships develop in future?

Mugabe: It is true that we have established several firm relations with countries which were favorably disposed to the goals of our struggle. However, we did not have that many friends. If I do not mention the front-line and other countries in Africa, and restrict myself to the world outside Africa, then I must say that our best friends were China, Yugoslavia and Romania, then the DPRK and the socialist world, while in the West we had excellent relations with Sweden, Norway, Denmark and to some extent also with Finland and the Netherlands. In these Scandinavian countries and in the Netherlands we cooperated directly with the governments, whereas in other Western countries we did not encounter the favor of government, but developed good relation with various volunteer groups.

We had excellent relations with Yugoslavia, both politically and militarily. During our struggle we received significant military assistance from Yugoslavia, not only in the form of weapons but also training. Now, when our struggle is over, it is our desire to strengthen the relations with all our previous friends in those fields which we believe could be mutually useful.

DELO: Which fields of cooperation with Yugoslavia would be most useful for Zimbabwe at this moment?

Mugabe: As regards our future relations with Yugoslavia, I believe that we should, in addition to diplomatic relations, now develop cooperation in the economic, cultural and scientific-technical fields. I believe that we have already begun work to establish closer links in these fields. At the same time I believe that in realizing our programs we could gain much from Yugoslavia's experience. In this connection, I have in mind the agricultural development programs, the establishment of cooperatives in villages, and also the experiment which we intend to carry out: that is, the establishment of mixed enterprises between state and private enterprises. In this connection we are interested to learn how much we should allow the private sector of the economy to participate in the country's development. Then, there is the problem of the role of the state and the collectives.

Yugoslavia has had some experiences in this field and I believe that we could use them to advantage in realizing our programs; that is, to see what was done in Yugoslavia in circumstances similar to the ones now in our country. Naturally, it is always necessary to take into account that the experiences of others were gained in a specific environment, where different factors were at work. For this reason we should adapt those experiences to our own conditions.

We also know that in the years that followed the victory over fascism and Nazism, Yugoslavia reached a high level of knowledge, which we could use in our country in all those fields where a shortage of knowledge exists. The Yugoslav agricultural sector is rather highly developed. You produce numerous agricultural equipment which could be very useful for us. And, of course, there is also trade which could link us. At the same time we would also like to study the possibilities for military cooperation. We know that Yugoslavia produces military aircraft and other weapons, and for this reason we would like to examine the possibilities for cooperation in this field, too. Primarily, however, we would like to continue to feel that warmth and solidarity that we received from the Yugoslav people. On our party, we will respond with warmth in strengthening our mutual cooperation.

DELO: And what should your policy in Africa be, particularly toward your neighbors, including South Africa?

Mugabe: I believe that the same, that is the nonalined principles, will also guide us in Africa. We will not try to interfere in the internal affairs of our neighbors, but we will work for relations based on peaceful coexistence. For this reason, in relation to South Africa, we adopted the view that the people in that country should contribute themselves to changes in their own country. We will criticize them, of course, because the policy which we believe in rejects a harsh treatment of people, it rejects every form of fascism and Nazism that we have condemned in the past, as we now resolutely condemn the regime of racial differentiation in South Africa.

We also expect other countries around us to adopt the same policy toward us. For this reason we regret the fact and are concerned because South Africa did not pursue the same policy toward us as we did toward South Africa, but is still militarily training the men who were recruited in our country, Zambia and Mozambique with the intention of destabilizing the situation in our region.

DELO: One of the first results of your independence was the beginning of a closer cooperation with the nine countries of southern Africa which decided to expand their economic, trade, transport and other links. What are the further plans of this cooperation?

Mugabe: We have agreed to hold a summit conference in Maputo, Mozambique, on 24 November at which we should settle everything that was agreed on by the leaders of the nine countries in Lusaka, Zambia, and in September by the ministers of these countries in charge of various fields of cooperation. In Maputo, we will review the results of this cooperation. We are convinced that such a regional linkage is necessary, because if we are able to cooperate in this area, then we will also be able to cooperate successfully with other parts of the world. It is also very important to exchange our experiences in the economic field in order to exchange our scientific and technical attainments. Thus, we will work in the direction of our economic independence, which should also consolidate our political independence, and at the same time reduce our dependence on South Africa.

SOVIET ENVOY DISCUSSES MASTER PLAN FOR AFRICA

Liberation Plans Discussed

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 7

[Article entitled: "Solodovnikov: We Do Have a Plan for Africa"]

[Text] Russia's chief African envoy has agreed his country has a master plan to "liberate the whole of Africa from colonialism, racism and apartheid."

But in an interview in Salisbury at the weekend, Dr Vasily Solodovnikov claimed that although the Soviet Union supported the banned African National Congress (ANC), it had no plan to interfere in the internal affairs of South Africa.

Dr Solodovnikov, the Russian ambassador to Zambia and thought to be head of the Kremlin's KGB operations in Africa, said: "The people of South Africa have to liberate themselves just as the people of Zimbabwe have done."

The Russian diplomat, who cut short his lunch at a restaurant in Salisbury for the interview, was relaxed and jolly. He hardly gave the impression of the ruthless Russian mastermind.

Asked if white South Africa's fear of Russian intentions towards it was justified, he answered: "We are too far away from South Africa...and we don't plan anything in South Africa."

He emphasised: "We have no right to interfere in the internal affairs of a country outside our own." He said there were several ways open to "oppressed" people in South Africa to gain their freedom.

"There is a political way. We, as socialists, think that a political solution in South Africa is possible, but it's up to the people."

Dr Solodovnikov said the Soviet Union supported the ANC which it considered capable of deciding what course of action to take against the South African Government to liberate the oppressed people. "We do not impose our views on them. We support them," he said.

Asked if Moscow did not have an eye on the strategic importance of South Africa and Zimbabwe's vast mineral resources, Dr Solodovnikov sat up, smiled and said: "We are a socialist state and we don't control anything outside our own country."

When it was pointed out that the Soviet Union had definite economic interests outside its own borders, citing the recent case in Ethiopia in which the Government of Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam came under strong pressure to replace the country's commercial Boeing aircraft fleet with Ilyushin, he retorted: "It's business.

"We are ready to sell even to South Africa. It (the Soviet-made Ilyushin aircraft) is a good aircraft."

He later corrected himself explaining that it would be against his country's principles to do business with South Africa.

Dr Solodovnikov said he was not satisfied with efforts by the so-called Contact Group of the five Western countries to achieve a solution in Namibia. "They started this thing (the latest Western initiative) some time back.

"About four years have now passed and all they have done is just talk and talk."

Asked for his country's alternative proposal to end the Namibian deadlock, Dr Solodovnikov said: "Liberating the people by using whatever means possible. We believe that the people of Namibia have a right to their own state with sovereignty."

He pledged his Government's support for SWAPO.

Asked whether the Soviet Union did not now feel it had backed the wrong horse by supporting Dr Joshua Nkomo's ZAPU, Dr Solodovnikov reflected briefly before saying: "I don't think so. In any case, I don't think that the issue should be compared with horse racing. It's a much more serious matter."

He denied assertions that relations between the Soviet Union and Zimbabwe were strained. "We have very good relations with the Government of Zimbabwe."

The Russians and Zimbabweans agreed on several international issues, especially the fight against apartheid in South Africa, he said.

It depended on the two Governments to decide when to establish diplomatic links: "I can't say defnitely but we are going to open. Don't worry."

Nor did he agree that Moscow had been given conditions on which Zimbabwe's Government would allow them to open an embassy here. "No specific conditions were put to us," he claimed.

Dr Solodovnikov said the Soviet Union was no longer providing ZIPRA with training and arms. "The Soviet Union has stopped supporting ZAPU because Zimbabwe is now independent. We provide material assistance to any African liberation movement fighting for its independence but that ends once independence has been proclaimed."

Low-Key Visit

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 10

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE diplomatic mating dance with the Soviet Union is proving to be unusually prolonged.

Even the visit to Salisbury last week of the formidable Dr Vasily Solodovnikov does not appear to have brought any appreciable increase in the tempo.

The Soviet envoy's visit was a fairly low-key affair, and he says he did not even see the Foreign Minister, Mr Mugabe.

It all seems a bit odd, particularly as both Mr Solodovnikov and Mr Mugabe have indicated that no specific conditions have been set for the opening of a Soviet mission here.

What, then, is the trouble?

Since the Soviet Union was hardly an enthusiastic supporter of Mr Mugabe during the war years, there should be no surprise if the Government remains a little suspicious of Moscow's motives.

For its part, the Kremlin has had long and close ties with Dr Nkomo. It may be reluctant to renounce them.

At any rate, such differences as may exist cannot be all that serious. Let us hope that they will soon be overcome.

The Soviet Union is, after all, a socialist country and it is just about the only major nation that is not officially represented in Zimbabwe.

Its wholehearted diplomatic and financial support for Mr Mugabe's Government would be in the best traditions of socialist solidarity.

More important, such a genuine coming together could have a decisive effect on the efforts now being made to bring about reconciliation and a lasting peace to Zimbabwe.

UTUZ ATTACK ON ZCTU REPORTED

Minister's Instructions Ignored by TU

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

THE Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions had "completely ignored" a Minister's instructions and was trying to destroy registered and recognised trade unions, according to a statement yesterday by the rival United Trade Unions of Zimbabwe.

According to the statement released after a weekend meeting of the UTUZ interim executive committee, the ZCTU had established terms of reference in August for the co-ordination of the country's national trade union centres into one umbrella body.

A co-ordinating committee of 20 people was appointed. But of these, seven did not belong to any trade union, the UTUZ alleged.

This co-ordinating committee had "completely ignored the Minister's instructions to carry out the duties allocated to it, that is to say: to co-ordinate the present national trade union centres.

"To date this committee, which appears to operate without a quorum, has never at any time attempted to communicate with these centres and their umbrella body, the United Trade Unions of Zimbabwe in particular."

Instead, the statement said, the ZCTU had concentrated on forming works committees all over the country without consulting any trade union and, in many cases, without approval or consultation of the managements concerned.

Dues had been collected from many individuals without the approval of the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai.

"We are one in supporting the Minister's aim of establishing one national centre for all our trade unions in order to gain recognition at International Labour Organisation level, and with our counterparts all over the world.

"We give our assurance to the Government and the Minister (of Labour and Social Services) to support such an object providing it is a responsible and freely entered into organisation which has the approval of all free and unfettered trade unions who are abiding by the laws of the country, especially those of the Industrial Conciliation Act," the statement said.

Top-Level Review Needed

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 10

[Editorial]

[Text]

ALL is far from well within the trade union movement in Zimbabwe.

The movement has been characterised by rifts and divisions for a long time. But a year ago it seemed as if efforts to create one umbrella body were at last bearing fruit.

At that time it was announced that a new body, the United Trade Unions of Zimbabwe, would be formed after many months of negotiation by the major unions. It was to represent some 300 000 workers and politics were to be kept out.

However, in the aftermath of the elections which saw the new Government come to power this year, fresh attempts were started to form a single body representing all trade unions.

In July it was reported that four of the country's trade union groupings were rapidly merging into one powerful organisation — the UTUZ — but that one body, the ZTUC, was holding out.

But by the end of the month, a different picture had emerged. It was reported then that a new body, the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, was to come into being with the wholehearted support of the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kangai, and that the other organisations were being urged to dissolve.

Accusations soon followed of political manipulation of trade union affairs and last month a veteran unionist, Mr Phineas Sithole, resigned the vice-chairmanship accusing the ZCTU committee of being an arm of ZANU (PF).

This was denied by the chairman, Mr Makwarimba, who is also president of the ZTUC.

Since then there have been other accusations, among them that the co-ordinating committee of the ZCTU is organising splinter unions.

The UTUZ has now appealed to the Minister to review the situation urgently. There is general support for one representative body but clearly there is a good deal of concern about the way this objective is being pursued.

A top-level review might help to correct matters.

KANGAI: UNIONISTS MUST STAY OUT OF POLITICS

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 14 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THERE is no room in the trade union movement for unionists who have affiliations with political parties, says the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, Mr. Kumbirai Kangai.

In an interview, Mr. Kangai told The Gazette that one of the problems facing the trade union movement is that some trade union leaders are also officials of political parties.

"Without mentioning any names, you often hear that this man is the general secretary of a political party and so on", said the Minister.

"In due course, we will tell these people, 'make up your mind, either stay in politics or the trade unions, but you can't do both.' "

In the future, he said, all trade unions will have to function within the framework of the newly-established Zimbabwe Confederation of Trade Unions. Mr. Kangai was quite emphatic that the ZCTU is the only medium through which the various unions will make their representations to Government.

ZCTU

The Minister said he decided that the country needed an umbrella organisation like the ZCTU while attending the International Labour Organisation congress in Geneva in June. He took the initiative and appointed a number of trade unionists to the new body. Their task is to set up the machinery for future elections in which ZCTU officials will be elected from the trade unions. He hoped the exercise would not take too long, and was awaiting a report from the people he had appointed.

He added that, in a newly-formed body like the ZCTU there was bound to be a certain amount of rivalry, but the problem would be resolved with the elections.

Commenting on claims by some trade unions that the ZCTU was trying to usurp their authority by setting up rival organisations while claiming to represent ZANU(PF) and his Ministry, Mr. Kangai said he had no evidence that this was true.

"In any case, I've repeatedly said in the media that I don't want my name used in recruiting", he said. "I say to people, 'you know my position. If you see people doing that, tell them to stop'."

RIVALRY

One problem was than many unions only represented 15 to 20% of the work force in any particular industry. The rivalry between established unions and newer groups developed when the new organisations tried to organise the workers who had not been represented before.

Many established unions did not truly represent their members, and this was made very clear during the rash of strikes following the elections.

"Many of these strikes were due to lack of communication", he said. "The unions were very effective in collecting dues, but not at representing the workers."

The Minister did not attribute the latest wave of strikes to political reasons, or to dissatisfaction with union leadership, however, but rather to impatience on the part of workers who want the changes they have been promised immediately. But the Government has made it clear that these changes cannot take place overnight, and that proper channels must be used before a strike is called.

Other points touched on by the Minister included:

- There are no plans to make the Commission of Inquiry into Prices, Incomes and Conditions of Service a permanent feature in Zimbabwe.
- The present Industrial Conciliation Act was badly in need of an overhaul, and this would probably be done during the coming session of Parliament.
- Domestic workers would be included in the whole industrial conciliation machinery once the act has been overhauled.
- Employers were reacting positively to the creation of workers' committees, and were generally happy with the results.

UNION LEADER SITHOLE SLAMS 'INFORMALITY' AND ZCTU

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 11

[Text] Bulawayo--

AS long as Zimbabwe has a free enterprise system workers cannot give up their rights under the present industrial law, Mr Phineas Sithole, president of the African Trade Union Congress, said in Bulawayo yesterday.

He was addressing the luncheon meeting of the Bulawayo National Affairs Association.

Changes were coming, he said. If such changes were the result of an Act of Parliament he would support them wholeheartedly.

His quarrel was that the Government was allowing an "informal" trade unionism to be superimposed on the existing industrial system.

This was encouraging the spate of illegal strikes. There could be no doubt that "powerful leaders" were behind the creation of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, formed in August by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, he said.

He called this move a plot by ZANU (PF) to usurp the role of existing trade unions for political ends.

Mr Sithole was vice-chairman of the ZCTU when it started. He resigned after six weeks.

He said the new congress called no proper meetings, but sought authority for actions which divided unions.

"I refused to accept decisions made by ZANU (PF) secret caucus, and moves were taken to disorganise my union, the United Textile Workers' Union, in the name of ZANU (PF) and the Ministry of Labour," he said.

"I resigned rather than accept the plot to control and usurp the role of unions for political ends."

ZANU (PF) labour department introduced the informal industrial relations system based on workers' committees which in application undermined the official, formal system, he said.

Behind the new "informal system" were people who believed that stability promoted stagnation and perpetuated privilege, he said. Those people believed that "progressive change can only come by discrediting the formal system so that it will crumble and collapse, at no matter what cost to the country, for the greater good of an ideology".

There was no doubt that powerful leaders behind the creation of the ZCTU looked to illegal strikes to bring about change in society and justify radical departure from the present industrial relations system, Mr Sithole said.

"I solidly support orderly industrial relations based on the Industrial Conciliation Act only to the extent that it is at present the law.

"If Parliament should change the system (and there are many aspects of it I would like changed) I will support any such changes. Our present industrial relations system has many points to its credit, but also serious defects. It has failed to prevent the injustice and disruption of work and the inefficient use of manpower."

DOMESTIC LABOR PROBE TO START SOON

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

THE domestic workers board of inquiry will start work next month and hopes to make its recommendations to the Minister of Labour and Social Services on May 1 next year.

The head of the board, Mrs D. Masaya, said yesterday the inquiry team would visit all major cities and rural areas, and appealed to employers to give their workers time off to give evidence.

As many as 1 500 domestic workers are expected to be interviewed.

She said the members of the board would sit in full session in the cities and receive evidence from domestic workers before hearing employers.

In rural areas only two members will hear evidence.

Some of the aspects the board will look into are:

- Wages.
- Payment of overtime.
- Conversion of rates.
- Deductions.
- Accommodation or payment of housing allowance.
- Part-time conditions of service.
- Vacation leave.
- Provision of food and fuel.
- Sick benefits.
- Contract and notice.
- Gratuities on termination of service.

Community halls will be booked in various suburbs for the gathering of evidence, and the dates and venues of hearings will be advertised in the Press.

Mrs Masaya said that as many as 1 500 domestic workers and about 500 other workers not covered by existing legislation could be interviewed.

Suggesting that domestic workers form committees on a street basis, she said they could represent the collective grievances of workers in a given area and it would be more convenient to interview the representatives.

Mrs Masaya appealed to the public to co-operate and asked employers to give evidence to the board and to give their workers time off to attend the hearings.

She said the board was doing its task against the background of the Masters and Servants Act of 1952, which was the only legislation covering the conditions of employment of domestic workers.

"It is a colonial and racist Act which in the main is in the interest of the employer. This will be scrapped by the new Government."

She said domestic workers should enjoy the protection of the law and the dignity of labour enjoyed by other persons.

Mrs Masaya said some other issues the board had to consider were:

● Thousands of employers were not paying minimum wages to domestic and other workers;
● Thousands were employing relatives of employees and giving them little or no wages and terrible conditions of service;
● Conditions of service were varied and hours of work ranged from eight to 14 hours a day;
● Domestic workers were being sacked for trivial reasons. One woman had five employers in four months;
● Many domestic workers had no full day off a week and others were not entitled to national holidays;
● No overtime was paid to most domestic workers;
● After as many as 25 years' service no bonus was paid;
● Many domestic workers originally came from Malawi and Mozambique and had no "kumusha" to go to when they wished to retire;
● The children of domestic workers had no right to attend community or Government schools because their parents did not own or lease houses.

"The most important fact that we begin from is that we have inherited a colonial, capitalist economic structure and mode of production," said Mrs Masaya.

"It is the intended policy to dismantle this mode of production and to build socialism on the ruins of capitalism.

"Realising that this cannot be done overnight, boards of inquiry assist in digging out the facts of the present situation in regard to the plight of various strata of the working class.

"It is true to say that dismantling capitalism will not take a 100 years. The findings of this commission of inquiry, like that of others, are only part of the information used to help dismantle the existing capitalist system."

Calling the relationship between employer and employee "similar to that between master and slave", Mrs Masaya said: "It is not only the conditions of work that we are investigating, but the social relations between employer and employee."

NORMAN URGES FARM GROUPS' MERGER TALKS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

NEGOTIATIONS will take place soon on a possible merger between the Commercial Farmers' Union and the Zimbabwe National Farmers' Union, Senator Denis Norman, the Minister of Agriculture, said on Monday.

In an interview, he said he had written to the presidents of both unions and asked them for their views on a merger.

"Both have responded and, in the very near future — definitely before Christmas — we will be setting up a meeting with this Ministry and the two unions to see if we can work out some sort of basis on which I can take proposals through to Government," Senator Norman said.

He said he would prefer to see the two organisations agree at union level than to have anything imposed by the Government.

"Things are on their way. The sooner we get it off the ground the better for all concerned," he said.

Two weeks ago a spokesman for the CFU denied that it was holding back or hindering moves to merge with the ZNFU.

The spokesman was reacting to a ZBCTV interview in which Mr Gary Magadzire, president of the ZNFU, hinted that the commercial union was to blame for the lack of progress on merger talks.

"The CFU has willingly taken part in discussions and negotiations on the formation of one union for months now," the spokesman said.

About two months ago Mr Magadzire called for unity among farmers of all races.

He said with independence and the birth of a multiracial society, the agricultural sector should not continue to operate on a racial basis.

He said the existing division of European and African agriculture was incompatible with the change taking place in the country.

NKOMO PLANS TO BOLSTER STRENGTH OF ZRP

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] The Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, is planning to increase the strength of the Zimbabwe Republic Police and police patrols, he said yesterday.

Reviewing a passing out parade at Morris Depot, Salisbury, he urged patrol officer and constable recruits to exercise tact, restraint and patience when dealing with the civil disturbances.

He was pleased to see so many Africans among the patrol officer recruits, he said.

The Government had been calling on Africans to join the police and it was encouraging to see that the young people were responding. It was right the people should be well represented in the force.

Stressing the responsibilities of the police force, he said its first duty was to preserve peace.

"We are passing through an unsettled period in which, unfortunately, violent acts have been perpetrated by groups of people upon other groups of people; by individuals on other individuals.

"This is clearly wrong.

"We should be striving to bring peace to our country, for only in conditions of peace and tranquillity can we progress as a nation."

Policemen were in the forefront of the task to bring friendship and peace between the various groups of people in the country and between individuals.

Dealing with the prevention of crime he said: "I have, as one of my objectives for the police force, the increase in the membership of the force.

"This will improve the ratio of policemen and women to the population. This means there will be more police available to carry out the task of policing the country.

"The number of police patrols will thus increase."

Through the vigilance of the police, criminals would be discouraged from committing crimes.

On the protection of property, Dr Nkomo said people, if they were to be productive, needed to feel they were safe from threats against themselves and their property.

DETERRED

Human nature being what it was there would always be people who offended against their fellows.

These could be deterred from carrying out their crimes only by knowledge that they were certain to be found out and punished through the vigilance, efficiency and devotion to duty of the police.

On civil disturbance, he said the first call would be upon the police.

"Here the police are called upon to deal with numbers of people, sometimes small and sometimes large.

"These are circumstances where the police are called upon, more so than any other, to exercise tact, restraint and patience.

"Provocation can at times be great, but the exercise of the qualities I have just mentioned is necessary to defuse a situation and bring about normality.

Dr Nkomo repeated the need for a close relationship between the police and the public.

The vast majority of the population were good, law-abiding people, intent on living a peaceful life, secure in the knowledge that they and their property were safe.

"Treat people fairly, kindly, but firmly, and so establish good relations with them," he urged.

"Make them your friends and you will find that they will help you to carry out your heavy responsibilities."

MINERAL PRODUCTION HEADED FOR ALL-TIME RECORD

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 7 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWE'S mineral production is heading for an all-time record this year, with the value for the first eight months of the year reaching $275,4 million. The figure for the first eight months of 1979 was $185,1 million. Production during August reached $418 700, compared with $330 900 in August last year.

A major contributor to the country's record figures was gold. 243 000 ounces were mined during the first eight months of the year valued at $94 million. The effect of the rising price of gold has enhanced this year's production, which is in fact lower than the January/August, 1979, production of 257 000 ounces which earned $45,6 million. The August gold production figure of 30 000 ounces was worth $12 million. This figure is almost twice the value of the August, 1979, production of 32 000 ounces, worth at that time $6,6 million.

Due to enhanced prices, asbestos production during the first eight months of this year of 163 200 tons, was worth $45,4 million. The January/August, 1979, production was higher at 170 500 tons, but was worth less at $42,1 million.

Nickel production rose to 10 232 tons, worth $37,4 million. This compares with a production of 8 345 tons during January/August, 1979, worth $23,3 million.

Copper production during January/August, 1980, dropped slightly to 18 200 tons, worth $25,0 million. Production for the first eight months of 1979 was 19 700 tons, worth $21,7 million.

The recovery in the price of silver has increased the value by almost 200% since last year. In the first eight months of this year, 640 000 ounces were produced, valued at $9,3 million. In the first eight months of last year, a slightly higher production of 647 000 ounces was worth only $3,4 million.

Higher prices have also increased the value of iron-ore production, although output was up slightly on last year. This year 1,1 million tons, worth $10,8 million, was produced, compared with 677 000 tons during the first eight months of last year, worth $3,7 million. Chrome production during the first eight months of this year stood at 368 000 tons, worth $12,2 million; compared with 358 000 tons last year, worth $10,5 million.

If gold and base mineral prices continue to improve and production figures are maintained, Zimbabwe could well make an historic record figure of $400 million by the end of the year.

GOVERNMENT LAUNCHES ATTACK ON CURRENCY SMUGGLERS

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 7 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

ZIMBABWE'S currency, formerly worthless outside the country, is the newest item on smuggler's lists. Currency smuggling has reached such proportions that the Government has instituted a massive preventive exercise which includes 100% baggage checks and the use of a special "currency scanner."

Before Independence those leaving the country on holiday or emigrating relied on small, easily concealed valuables such as Krugerrand, gemstones and jewellery to get more out of the country than the Government allowed in foreign currency. This was because the currency was, and still is, non-convertible. Foreign banks would not handle Rhodesian dollars and the bank notes became so much worthless paper outside our borders.

It is rumoured, however, that overseas banks are now exchanging Zimbabwe currency. Whether this is out of ignorance, with foreign banks assuming that convertibility naturally followed Independence, or because of deliberate policy is not known. But whatever the cause, it is evident that the traffic in Zimbabwe dollars, both into the country and out, has grown appreciably.

Customs facilities, especially at the Salisbury airport, have had to be increased to cope with expected delays caused by more stringent searches. A spokesman for the Ministry of Finance has said that, "these and other measures will be intensified as more staff and facilities become available."

Travellers entering and leaving the country are permitted $20 in Zimbabwe currency. Any attempt to bring in or take out more than this amount constitutes an offence, which could result in the money being confiscated. Zimbabwe travellers are allowed $20 to meet incidental expenses on their return to the country. Those requiring more than $20 can obtain travellers' cheques, in Zimbabwe dollars, through commercial banks.

It is believed that a specially designed "currency scanner" is being used by customs men. This machine is said to pick up the metal strip in Zimbabwe dollars.

ZVOBOGO: HOUSING TO BE TOP PRIORITY NEXT YEAR

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE provision of housing was to be top priority for city and town councils in the New Year, the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, said at a Press conference in Salisbury yesterday.

As soon as arrangements could be made, possibly early next year, he was going to invite all the councillors in Zimbabwe to a meeting in Salisbury where various urgent matters were going to be discussed.

He said he had already visited towns and cities urging councillors to expedite their housing programmes.

"I am anxious to get the word to the new councillors that what the people want is action," he said.

"They should begin to address themselves to the question of low-cost housing, which is what this country needs."

Mr Zvobgo said the Government had developed a five-year housing scheme involving the spending of about $734 million.

When the plan was drawn up early this year it had been felt this amount, if it could be found, would place the Government in a better position to provide housing for the people.

Regrettably, he said, not enough money had been found to finance even the first year of the five-year scheme. About $70 million was required in the first year of the scheme, but only $60 million had been voted by Parliament.

Building costs were going up all the time, he said. Since March they had risen by more than 30 percent.

Expensive

Unless the housing scheme was started immediately it was going to be more expensive within the next two to three years, he said.

All councils had to move with speed to utilise the money that had been made available to them in July this year. He had been surprised, he said, to discover that some councils still had all of this money in the bank.

Speaking on last weekend's local government elections the Minister said he had been delighted they had been carried out peacefully. The elections were an enormous exercise involving a lot of work.

The Prime Minister was delighted the elections had been successfully held, and had even been more delighted by the results.

"We are all aware that ZANU (PF) won with overwhelming majorities in all cities and towns except in Victoria Falls, where our partners, the Patriotic Front, did very well by capturing all seven seats," he explained.

What this meant was that from now on the country would have organised Government in every city or town — "organised in the sense that ZANU (PF) will control every city or town council except in Victoria Falls".

This would facilitate the whole decision-making process, he said.

"There will still be, of course, debates and discussions in councils," Mr Zvobgo said. "But the mere fact that politics has been brought into local government and political parties have emerged in control of towns and cities, in our point of view, means that national policies will be carried out at the local level without friction."

The Minister said the question of elections in Salisbury and Bulawayo's former African areas was under active consideration in his Ministry.

He gave an assurance they would be held as soon as possible. The question of having new candidates nominated in Salisbury, Bulawayo and Chitungwiza was also under consideration, he said.

No request had been made by the Ministry of Defence for further accommodation for former guerillas, he said.

Accommodation which had already been made available was on a temporary basis and would revert to civilian occupation as soon as alternative accommodation was found for the former guerillas.

PURPOSE OF CULVERWELL TV APPEARANCE QUESTIONED

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 7 Nov 80 p 4

[Editorial]

[Text]

WHAT was the purpose of Senator Culverwell's recent appearance on television? Was he speaking for the Government, the party or himself?

Obviously the Senator disagreed strongly with the statements on universal suffrage expressed by Mr. Ian Smith in Canada recently. Others also disagreed with what Mr. Smith said — indeed they have done so for as many years as Mr. Culverwell. What is hard to understand is the motive behind the provision of television as a vehicle for the Senator's rebukes.

The programme seemed to have been a very last minute affair — if the unrehearsed performance of the Senator was a guide. The press representation also seemed sparse and the questions asked did not probe the reason for the press conference.

It seems that the call for the "same facilities for Mr. Smith as were extended to General Walls" was an attempt to threaten Mr. Smith into keeping his opinions to himself. If so, then surely using prime television time is rather like using a steam hammer to crack a peanut.

Does it matter what Mr. Smith says? As far as the Zimbabwean political scene is concerned, he is a spent force. Happily he no longer has the ability to provoke any action against the country's constitution. Mr. Smith is what the law calls a brutum fulmen — a harmless thunderbolt. Whatever he may say cannot alter the course the nation has embarked upon.

Was it then the purpose of the television programme to silence all who may disagree with the concept of one man one vote? Are all who speak out against a political concept to be threatened with banishment from Zimbabwe?

The Government and constitution have the support of the vast majority of the citizens of this country. It hardly seems necessary that they should heed the complaints of those who have lost the power they clung to for so long. The weight of Government and the powerful medium of television are not needed to show Mr. Smith the error of his ways.

A more positive response would be to disprove his archaic theories by example and progress.

CIVIL DEFENCE ORGANIZATION CHANGES NAME

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

SALISBURY's Civil Defence Organisation has changed its name to the Fire and Ambulance Volunteer Reserve, the chief security officer for the municipality, Mr Roger Turner, said yesterday.

Mr Turner said the organisation would carry out the same functions as before and, as its name implied, it would provide a back-up service for the existing fire and ambulance facilities in the city.

The number of volunteers in the organisation had dropped from about 700 last year to 150.

The organisation would be split into two sections; a paid section which would operate under the same lines as the Police 'A' Reserve, and a non-paid section which would be made up of volunteers.

He also envisaged setting up a paramedics team whose members should have minimum qualifications equivalent to those of army medics, he said.

This scheme still required the approval of the Minister of Health, and if approved, a recruiting drive would be launched to attract young men.

All members of the organisation would have to undergo a basic training course which would include fire-fighting, first aid and communications.

"We will be looking for quality not quantity," he said.

Volunteers for the paid section would have a medical examination.

FOOD HANDOUT SCHEME FUNDS DEPLETED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 2

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

DISTRIBUTION of food to needy people in rural areas has been suspended because so many were claiming the allowance that the cash available was overspent by more than $500 000 last month.

A kitty of $2 million a month for food, with an additional allowance for transport, had been budgeted for by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees and the Government.

But yesterday Mr Brian Beecroft, the Government's director of social services, confirmed that the number of people being fed had "risen to more than 500 000" and the cost involved approached $3 million a month.

Because of that, he said, distribution had been stopped to "evaluate, reassess and then award food where genuine need is arising".

A spokesman for the UNHCR said the demand on the feeding scheme had been steadily increasing and put the number of recipients last month at 800 000.

Mr Beecroft said: "This is a temporary halt in the food distribution. It will be resumed on Monday and those who are in genuine need will receive food."

A notice issued by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, explaining what the food allowance was for, was being distributed in rural areas throughout the country yesterday.

The notice, in Shona, Ndebele and English, said that many countries had given food or money to help people in rural areas, who were affected by the war, to prepare and plant their land.

"Until the harvest next year some assistance is also being given in the feeding of former displaced or returned persons in genuine need," says the notice.

"It is not a general issue nor is it a reward for the support given by so many of the people to the cause. The food is for those who otherwise would suffer hardship, and your help is requested in ensuring that only those people are assisted."

WANKIE COAL OUTPUT EXPECTED TO RESUME

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE strike by 4 000 workers at Wankie Colliery which brought coal production to a standstill ended yesterday morning with a total return to work, said a spokesman for the Anglo American Corporation.

It was expected production would quickly return to its normal daily levels of 8 000 tonnes of coal and 700 tonnes of coke, said the spokesman.

The strike, which lasted 10 days, was over pension and benefit fund contributions which the miners wanted terminated. They demanded that all previous contributions should be refunded.

That grievance has not been resolved despite the return to work.

Last week it was explained to the strikers by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, that to meet their demands a change in the law would be needed.

The strikers' resolve began to weaken last weekend as increasing numbers returned to work with each new shift.

It was expected that by yesterday only 1 900 workers at No. 3 Colliery would stay away. But they arrived for work, bringing the strike to its end.

News that Wankie Colliery was heading back to full production was a relief to Bulawayo businesses and organisations who rely on coal.

At Dunlop plans had been made to cutback production as supplies of coal dwindled. But yesterday company chairman, Mr Gordon Handover said: "We had some coal delivered today and do not expect any further problems."

At Risco steelworks a spokesman said: "By last Friday the lack of coal supplies was getting critical. But things have now improved."

During the Wankie strike Risco supplied some coke from their stocks to smaller foundries who did not carry large coke stocks of their own.

A National Railways spokesman said that as soon as the colliery requested empty trucks for coal distribution they would be sent.

"When the strike started we had a substantial coal stockpile which would have enabled us to continue running trains for considerably longer than the strike has lasted."

Bulawayo's City Electrical Engineer, Mr Bill Beesly, said: "We still have more than a month's supply of coal in stock for use at the power station."

● Strikers began to return to work yesterday at Bindura's Trojan Nickel Mine where production has been at a standstill for more than a week.

A spokesman said yesterday that the afternoon shift was up to strength.

"Progressively we expect a full return to work at the mine and adjoining smelter and refinery," he said.

Mr Howard Bloomfield, the president of the Associated Mineworkers' Union, said there had been no re-instatement of the works' committee member whose dismissal sparked off the dispute.

GOVERNMENT VIEWS PRIVATE SECTOR ROLE IN HEALTH PLAN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE GOVERNMENT was looking at the private sector for a positive response to its bid to ensure a comprehensive health service, and if this response was not forthcoming, people may regard the establishment of the Baines Avenue Clinic as the "end of an era", the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, said in Salisbury yesterday.

Dr Ushewokunze, who was unable to attend the foundation stone laying ceremony at the new clinic yesterday, was answering questions put to him by the Herald. He said he had allowed the project to proceed as a goodwill gesture to the sector.

He said also that it gave him the opportunity to restate some of the ideals and aims of the Government's health policy to a sector of the community who may have had the greatest difficulty in accepting change.

He said the more specialised type of care beyond the scope of customary health care had to be provided by the more central levels of the health service.

"It is the Government's intention, therefore, to create the full range of specialist services in its central hospitals and we look at the private sector to assist us in ensuring that our service is comprehensive.

"The response of the private sector will influence considerably Government's attitude to private practice," he said. "... If there is unwillingness to join Government in creating a service that is more humane and informed, a service based on the exercise of compassion, reason and social justice, then you may regard this clinic as marking the end of an era."

Dr Ushewokunze said the concept of primary health care was the cornerstone of the Government's socio-economic development policy.

He said its central aim was to make essential health care universally accessible to individuals and families in the community in an acceptable way and with their full participation.

He said the Government's vision for the future encompassed improvement in the quality of life and maximum health benefits to the greatest number of people. He said primary health care and social and economic development were mutually supportive.

"Thus, any person or organisation wishing to establish medical institutions in the future will only be permitted to do so if that institution is compatible with the philosophy I have outlined," he said.

● Concern by people over the Government's reluctance to encourage the establishment of private clinics was without foundation, the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze, said in Salisbury yesterday.

He said the Government would "look favourably" towards people who set up small specialist centres in the smaller towns and in rural areas where a "brain drain" had taken place.

Dr Masorodze was speaking on behalf of the Minister of Health, Dr Ushewokunze, when he laid the foundation stone at the new Baines Avenue Clinic. He said it was not the intention of the Government to stop projects such as the new clinic. Instead he urged the builders to get on with it, noting that the scaffolding on the foundations had become rusty.

Mr Harold Baeck, the architect, said Government approval had been given for the project in 1978, and work on it had begun later that year. However, because of the political uncertainty in the country, work had been halted last year.

He said the new Government had been approached and had given its blessing, so that work could now commence within the next two weeks.

Mr Reg Nield, a representative of the group of businessmen behind the project said the cost of the new clinic would run into millions of dollars.

He said originally the clinic was meant to be built as an investment by a consortium of businessmen, to be run on a profit-making basis. However, because of the requirements for additional health facilities in the country, it was decided to run the clinic as a non-profit-making institution.

He said it would be regarded as a service to employers for their employees.

Mr Baeck said the clinic was a gesture by a consortium of private companies who wanted to contribute to the national health facilities of the country.

Mr Nield said the new clinic would have 200 beds and would have surgical facilities as well as a casualty section, incorporating up-to-date concepts in hospital design. It would be operational by October next year, he said.

ZINATHA POWER ROW MUST END--MAZORODZE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

LEADERSHIP wrangling within the Zimbabwe National Traditional Healers' Association should stop at once so that its members "can get on with the work", the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze, said in Salisbury yesterday.

The Minister was reacting to reports of squabbling over who was the legitimate president of Zinatha.

A Salisbury herbalist, Dr Kenneth Gombera, contends that Dr Gordon Chavunduka was not properly elected as Zinatha president at its national conference last September.

As a result of the dispute, he said earlier this month, he was planning to call a rally for ngangas to sort out the leadership row.

Dr Gombera claimed his intended moves in challenging Dr Chavunduka's leadership had the backing of Dr G. Ntopa of the True African National Herbalist Association of Central Africa.

The Deputy Minister said yesterday that as far as the Ministry was concerned the present Zinatha office bearers were "properly elected" under a constitution ratified by a steering committee appointed by the organisation.

It was therefore not true, as claimed by some critics, that the constitution was not made known to some members.

Dr Mazorodze said: "They (Zinatha) should sort out their differences as soon as possible to get on with the work.

"The time for in-fighting for leadership is over and those who were beaten at the election should admit defeat and sink their differences.

"Traditional healers have a challenge and a role to play, especially in the field of mental illness, asthma, fertility in women and others."

The association now had "an international outlook" and could exchange knowledge with its counterparts abroad.

Locally, the Government had been promised grants by the World Health Organisation for research in traditional medicine.

The Minister said leadership wrangling would be a hindrance to efficient development of traditional medicine.

REFUTED

Dr Mazorodze also said that "no effort has been made to mix ngangas and vadzimu (spirit mediums)".

"We accept the existence of various classes of people," he said.

And he refuted certain suggestions that Zinatha might have something to do with the present politics of Zimbabwe.

"This is not a political organisation," the Minister emphasised. "People came from all over the country to attend the meeting where the elections took place.

"There is, therefore, no politics and that is why we as Ministers would not like to be dragged into it (leadership row)."

● Zinatha recently opened an office in Que Que, according to a statement released yesterday.

MANPOWER OFFICIAL ELABORATES ON NATIONAL TRAINING POLICY

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 14 Nov 80 p 10

[Text]

The registration and control of independent colleges has begun, said Dr. Ibbo Mandaza, the Acting Secretary to the Ministry of Manpower Planning when he opened the Zimbabwe Commercial College in Salisbury last week.

In addition to outlining the reasons why Government had found it necessary to register and supervise independent colleges, Dr. Ibbo also outlined the National Training Policy.

THERE are at present 80 independent technical colleges registered in terms of the Vocational Education and Training Act. A further 50 colleges are awaiting registration.

In terms of the Act these colleges come under the control of the Inspector of Colleges, who visits them regularly. An independent college is not issued with a Certificate of Registration unless the Director of Vocational Education and Training is satisfied that the college has sufficient funds at its disposal to provide for the repayment of fees to students if classes are cancelled.

The director must be satisfied that the lecturers employed at the college have recognised and satisfactory qualifications. He must also be satisfied that proper records are kept by the proprietor of the college with regard to courses, enrolments, attendance registers, trainers and lecturers employed and their qualifications and public examination entries.

The director must also be fully satisfied in regard to the standards of operation of the college. This includes controlling misleading and/or extravagant claims with regard to the effectiveness of its training, or guarantees regarding success in examinations. The issue of certificates or diplomas must be approved by the Director of Vocational Education and Training.

Provision is also made in the regulations for the health and safety of students and employees of the colleges. Any changes in conditions of lecturing staff or their qualifications must be reported to the Inspector of Colleges and he reports to the director on any matter regarding the operation of the colleges or any infringement of the regulations.

INFRINGEMENT

Infringement of regulations has taken place in certain cases and registration of certain colleges has been cancelled so that the college has had to cease operations.

The reasons why the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development exercises such control over independent colleges are quite obvious.

First, to protect the public from persons wishing to make quick money, while offering generally useless training for young men and women. In fact, the ministry is at present investigating a number of institutions who have in the past squandered not only student fees, but also grants awarded by various charitable organisations and international agencies.

Second, only through close control of independent colleges can Government ensure that proper and useful training is being offered and that youths are not being churned out as half-trained persons to be exploited as cheap labour in the private sector.

In fact the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development is presently developing a framework whereby every independent college will offer such training that is correlated to national training standards. For example, if a technical college offers a one-year course, it must be certain that such training is equivalent to the first year of the apprenticeship programme.

It is true that some training — however badly administered — is better than no training at all; and many independent colleges should be commended for endeavouring to give youth some training when such youths could have been relegated to the ranks of the many that are forced to roam the streets, without places for further education and without hope of ever finding a job. However, we also have to guard against the rampant practice whereby half-trained youths are sent into industry, to be employed as so-called "semi-skilled" or "machine operators", and remain so for the rest of their working lives.

We have to establish a National Training Policy which will eradicate all these irregularities and ensure that every Zimbabwean has the opportunity to develop his/her skills. To this end, the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development has made the following proposals which are still to be considered by Cabinet.

1. That all manpower training — both in the private and public sector — be co-ordinated by the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development.
2. That accordingly, the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development should survey all training being carried out in the country and take immediate steps to set training standards on a national scale.
3. That furthermore, all ministries (including parastatal bodies) and organisations in the private sector contemplating projects which contain an element of training should channel them through the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development. This will enable the ministry to establish priorities and consider them in the context of the national plan. Thereafter, those concerned can proceed with their projects only with the approval of the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development which should also be responsible for setting appropriate standards.
4. That all training institutions — private or public — be registered with the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development and that such registration be dependent upon the institution satisfying the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development that it was meeting a national training need to a required standard.
5. That an inter-ministerial scholarship committee be established under the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development, but to include representatives from the ministries of Education and Culture, and Economic Planning and Development. The committee should be chaired by the Deputy Secretary, Vocational Education, Manpower Development and Training and the representations of the other ministries should also be of deputy secretary status.

   The committee will establish a scholarship policy which will determine areas of priority in the field of manpower training and against which the numerous offers and applications can be considered.

However, one important point needs to be emphasised with regard to this proposed National Training Policy.

CO-ORDINATE

That the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development seeks to co-ordinate training throughout the country. There is no intention whatsoever to usurp the training functions of other ministries. Indeed there are ministries and organisations who have their own efficient and well-regulated training institutions and/or projects: for example, such ministries as those of Health, Education and Culture and the Ministry of State.

There can be no basis upon which the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development could control, inspect or certify such well-established training institutions. But it can co-ordinate and keep a directory of all training institutions in the country, so as to avoid duplication and also ensure that national resources — both in the public and private sectors — are utilised economically and efficiently.

Finally, let me end my speech by quoting the basic philosophy and policy of the Ministry of Manpower Planning and Development, as outlined in the Minister's first Press statement on 30th April, 1980:

1. To provide and develop a comprehensive infrastructure of skills, development centres and training institutions for our people but with special regard for those who hitherto have been deprived of such facilities: the Zimbabwean peasantry which has borne the main brunt of the liberation war; and our thousands of guerillas, many of whom courageously abandoned school until they were able to liberate their country.
2. To make available to the working class of this country the means whereby it can develop skills, increase productivity and, in the course of the production process, enhance its consciousness as both the backbone of our economy and potentially the most progressive class of the nation.
3. To develop throughout the nation a high level of self-reliance in technological skill and trained manpower, so as to advance our overall objective of attaining genuine, economic independence and progressive social development.

It is in this context that the proposed National Training Policy should be understood.

BRIEFS

UNION MEETING CRITICIZED--Gwelo--Bulawayo Municipal Workers' Union was yesterday accused of making "a sinister move" in calling a meeting of the Executive of the Federation of Municipal, Town and Rural Councils in Que Que next Saturday. Mr J.B. Hurogoda, the secretary general of the Gwelo Municipal Workers' Union, claimed the meeting had been called at very short notice and without any agenda being supplied. The Gwelo union had also been told that it could nominate one member only to attend. Mr Hurogoda said 75 percent of the federation's executive was from the Bulawayo Municipal Workers' Union. "We are kept in the dark about everything for reasons best known to Bulawayo," he said. "We need unity but it appears to us that Bulawayo is not interested in unity for we have been given no facts, reasons or agenda for the meeting." Unless Gwelo could have proper representation at the meeting, he said, it would not send anyone to it. He believed that the federation meeting should be put off until February so that town and rural councils could organise proper representation. "They must have an agenda beforehand so that when they go there they know what they will be talking about," he said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 3] Bulawayo--The Federation of Zimbabwe Municipal Workers' Unions yesterday explained that a Que Que meeting scheduled for November 29 was for its national executive committee to meet representatives of a British-based international organisation representing public and municipal workers. Commenting on a complaint by the secretary-general of the Gwelo Municipal Workers' Union, Mr J.B. Hurogoda, that the meeting had been called at short notice by the Bulawayo Municipal Workers' Union, the FZMWU secretary-general, Mr P. Mpabanga, said the Gwelo secretary-general should have directed his complaint "to me and not to the news media. This not help us cement workers' unity in our country." UNION OPPOSES APPOINTMENTS--Bulawayo--A leading labour official, Mr Phineas Sithole, said yesterday he would take the Government to court if it tried to carry out its decision to appoint Mr E. Soko and Mr J. Mutemi to the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions as representatives of the United Textile Workers' Union, of which he is secretary-general. Mr Sithole, also president of the African Trade Union Congress, said yesterday an unofficial meeting scheduled for November 16 at Gatooma had "aborted because no members had turned up." The purpose of the meeting was to introduce Mr Mutemi and Mr Soko, whose appointment to the ZCTU and UTWU officials was announced in a letter dated October 5 from the Government chief industrial relations officer, Mr I.T. Chigwendere. Mr Sithole said both Mr Soko and Mr Mutemi were trying again to invite some UTWU members for a second attempt on November 30. Meanwhile, Mr Sithole has advised his union members not to attend the meeting "as it has not been called by the official union." He would explain his union's position when he addressed a National Affairs Association lunch meeting here today. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 3]

PF LEADERS TO CONFER--The Patriotic Front's 150-member central committee is due to hold a meeting in Bulawayo on Saturday to discuss the present situation in Zimbabwe, sources said yesterday. The meeting, to be chaired by the PF president and Minister of Home Affairs, Dr Joshua Nkomo, is expected to discuss the ZIPRA/ZANLA fighting at Entumbane and the detention of nine PF officials. MATABELE 'GOLD RUSH'--Bulawayo--Gold dump fever which started in August has died down in most of Matabeleland and the Midlands. The fever affects people looking for goldmine waste which can be retreated. "There was no peace here at the start when a lot of people flooded Gwanda," said Mr L. Christie, chairman of the Gwanda and District Mining Association. "Several of the people have, however, found it quite expensive to find gold. Some have withdrawn from Gwanda but the lucky ones remain." Mr J.H. Targett, secretary-treasurer of the Belingwe Rural Council, said most of the "prospectors" in and around Shabani had given up because of high costs. "The big dumps are still being worked mostly by local people rather than by big mining concerns," he said. In and around Belingwe the situation is quite different. says the Belingwe District Commissioner, Mr T.D. Stevenson. "There are several dumps being worked here. Most have been picked but work has not yet started on a good number of them," he said. Most dumps had passed their preparatory stages but no gold processing had yet begun. Both newcomers to Belingwe and locals had been hit by the "fever" and they were boosting the trade in Belingwe as they brought in workers. The workers in turn brought in their families and small mining villages were springing up near most dumps. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 3]

GOVERNMENT HOUSE RENAMED--The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, has directed that Government House in Salisbury and Bulawayo be renamed State House with immediate effect, a spokesman for the Prime Minister's office said yesterday. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 1]

AIR FORCE TRAINING--Made it! Recruits of the Air Force of Zimbabwe Regiment are congratulated by Flight Lieutenant M. Mbulu at the end of their arduous 150 km march to New Sarum from their training camp between Gatooma and Hartley. After handing over their rifles, the recruits were marched to the mess for a few well-earned beers before going on a 10-day pass. Another 47 recruits who were posted to Thornhill at Gwelo arrived at the base at about 1.30 p.m. yesterday. Part of the way they doubled, part they marched. SPECIAL TARIFF FOR ZIMBABWE--Zimbabwe has been granted preferential tariff rates by the Swiss Government, a spokesman for the Ministry of Commerce and Industry said yesterday. He said the Ministry was notified recently that this would enable the bulk of agricultural and industrial products from Zimbabwe to enter Switzerland at the same preferential tariff rates as goods from other developing countries. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 80 p 11]

MEDICAL FLIGHTS TO MATABELELAND--Bulawayo--A flying specialist service covering the southwest corner of Matabeleland should be introduced in January. The scheme could save many lives in the region and offer badly needed medical expertise, a Bulawayo doctor said yesterday. The Rotary Club of Bulawayo South is sponsoring the scheme. It is hoped that, once established, doctors could fly to the Brunapeg

Hospital once a month. A Bulawayo ophthalmic surgeon and a Rotarian suggested the idea after paying a visit to the isolated hospital. Brunapeg is 24 km from the Botswana border and the 200-bed hospital is run by Roman Catholic nuns, with one doctor in charge. The surgeon suggested the scheme because of the lack of specialised medical knowledge. The hospital could take care of all general emergency work as it had done over the years, said Dr. Evans. The Rotary Club of Bulawayo South has launched an appeal to help raise funds for the service. The light plane to be used will be hired and the surgeon will pilot it. RF CANDIDATE--A former broadcaster, Mr James Thrush, has been named as the Rhodesian Front candidate for the Highlands Constituency, which fell vacant after the resignation of Wing Commander Rob Gaunt. Mr Thrush was the MP for Hillcrest, Bulawayo, until the end of last year, when he "made way for more experienced people" in the Rhodesian Front, he said yesterday. He was fighting the election now, he said, because a candidate with political and parliamentary experience was needed. "When I was in Parliament before for two years, said Mr Thrush, "the big issue was majority rule. It was then on a more national level. "I believe my contribution in the future will be on a constituency level." He said the interests of the Highlands constituency would be "intensely domestic." It would be his duty to represent those interests "no matter whether the people are on the voters' roll or not." The chairman of the party, Mr Geoff Kluckow, said the MP's future interests must represent the interests of the constituents as the RF was "no longer in the driver's seat." He also said the future name of the Rhodesian Front would be decided by a committee to be appointed on December 9. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 1]

DEMAND TO REWRITE HISTORY--Bulawayo--This year's events in Zimbabwe had transformed publications dealing with Karl Marx and socialism from unpatriotic reading into a "way of life," the Deputy Minister of Youth, Sport and Recreation, Mr Cephas Msipa, said yesterday. Speaking at a publishers' cocktail party here, Mr Msipa said there was a demand to rewrite Zimbabwe's history, reports Ziana. "Our children will not accept history that portrays us as inferiors whose salvation lies with the white man," he said. Publishers' experience and special knowledge put them in the forefront of this "gigantic" rewriting exercise, Mr Msipa said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD inEnglish 27 Nov 80 p 3]

BLACK BUSINESS MERGER MOVE--Work has begun in Salisbury on a draft constitution aimed at uniting three black business organisations. The organisations seeking amalgamation are the African Traders' Confederation, the Zimbabwe Businessmen's Association and the Zimbabwe Chamber of Commerce. A 15-member interim committee of the three bodies met last week and chose a committee of three members to work on the integration. The chairman of the interim committee, Dr Isaac Samuriwo, said in Salisbury yesterday the subcommittee would meet today under his supervision to continue its work on the draft constitution. Dr Samuriwo said there had been no hitches so far. When the three organisations have united, possibly early in the New Year, they will discuss a merger with the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Zimbabwe. CHEAPER PROTEIN DIET--Bulawayo--Nhopi, a traditional Shona dish, has been recommended by five Salisbury doctors for use in the treatment of kwashiorkor, a tropical disease in children caused by a lack of protein. Writing in the October issue of the Central African Journal of Medicine, Dr Claver B. Mamvura, a spokesman for a research group, said the hospital diet used to combat kwashiorkor cost about $45 a child over three weeks, while nhopi cost about $12 over the same period. "Nhopi can therefore be recommended for use in general, district and rural hospitals to treat kwashiorkor cheaply," said the report. Nhopi is four parts of pumpkin to one part of peanut butter, stirred and simmered to a fine consistency. The report says that 60 patients, aged between one and three years, were used in research. The patients had been admitted to the Harare hospital, Salisbury, with kwashiorkor. Thirty patients were fed on nhopi and the other 30, used as a control, were were fed the conventional hospital kwashiorkor diet. Each patient was studied until he was ready to be discharged from hospital. The report says that in the nhopi group the range of stay in hospital was between eight and 18 days with an average of 11 days, while the control group stayed between eight and 27 days with an average of 15 days. MINISTRY DENIES DRUGS SHORTAGE--Despite import fluctuations, there is no critical shortage of drugs in the country, a spokesman for the Ministry of Health said yesterday. The spokesman was commenting on a report that a Salisbury hospital had a drug shortage. The spokesman said that factors beyond the control of the Ministry led to "more fluctuations in stocks at the Ministry of Health medical stores than is desirable." "However, adequate alternatives have been available when necessary and every effort is being made to improve the situation." The drug supply problem was compounded by the return to normality in schools and clinics in the rural areas, the freer movement of people, and the introduction of the free health service, he said. ALL FOREIGN JOURNALISTS REGISTERED--All foreign journalists working in Zimbabwe have now received official accreditation, a Ministry of Information spokesman said yesterday. He said 123 newsmen representing foreign organisations and 36 locally based journalists had been registered and issued with cards. No one had been refused accreditation, reports Ziana. The exercise was ordered last month after Cabinet Ministers, including the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, lashed out at reports in the foreign Press which they said painted an excessively negative picture of events in Zimbabwe. All foreign journalists entering the country are required to obtain temporary employment permits within 24 hours of arrival. The accreditation team will be in Bulawayo on Saturday. Local newsmen can be accredited between 8 and 10 a.m., on the fifth floor of the Africa House, Fife Street and 10th Avenue. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 5]

TOGO TO SET UP EMBASSY--The Republic of Togo has spent $65 000 on a house in Avondale to be used as an embassy. It was bought from M.H. Tarica Investments (Pvt) Ltd on September 5. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 80 p 4]

FARMING IMPROVES--There had been a tremendous improvement in agriculture, the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, said yesterday. In an interview, he said that when he took over as Minister at the beginning of March, the industry was going through a depression. The maize sector had just emerged from a severe drought and with a new Government in power there was a lack of confidence among farmers. "We have overcome these problems," he said. "The farmers really have accepted all the changes and they will go on with their job of producing crops and food. "In fact I think we have had tremendous improvements in agriculture." Indications were that the hectares being planted this season, both in the commercial and small-scale farming sectors, were much higher than had been cultivated before. There had also been a big increase in the area being planted by farmers in the purchase areas and tribal trust lands. "I don't believe that the commercial sector has lost as many farmers as generally accepted outside this country. "Maybe the numbers have increased slightly," the Minister said. He was hoping for a good rainy season. "If we get a third drought we will have a major problem on our hands. So, to that extent, I'm a gambler." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 80 p 1]

PREFERENTIAL TRADE WITH NZ--The Ministry of Commerce and Industry has issued further information on the "Generalised System of Preferences" recently granted by New Zealand. The preferences which are on a unilateral and non-reciprocal basis, cover 70 percent of all items included in New Zealand's tariff regulations, and are granted on all categories of goods. To be eligible for the preferences, goods must be wholly obtainable, or partly manufactured in a developing country. If the goods are manufactured with materials from other developing countries, the exporting country can claim cumulative preferential treatment. To claim preferential treatment exporters need only provide a certificate of origin certified by the commercial seller. [Text] [Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 14 Nov 80 p 5]

INFLATION DECREASING--The bugbear of every economy, inflation, decreased substantially in Zimbabwe during the first six months of 1980, according to the Reserve Bank. According to the Quarterly Economic and Statistical Review issued by the Reserve Bank--the first such review ever published by the bank in its 16 years history--overall consumer prices increased by less than 7 percent over the previous year, when inflation reached a peak of 13,1 percent. The reduction in the rate of inflation, which is measured in terms of the consumer price index for higher income families, was mainly due to lower fuel costs. MEASURES TO BE TAKEN TO AVOID CHAD-CAMEROON FRONTIER INCIDENTS

Nouakchott CHAAB in French 22 Oct 80 p 5

[Excerpt] Yaounde, (AFP)--Mr Goukouni Oueddei, president of the Chad Transitional National Union Government, is taking "all measures necessary to avoid Chad-Cameroon frontier incidents": Radio Cameroon reported yesterday that on Monday, in Yaounde, Mr Oueddei assured President Ahmadou Ahidjo that these measures would be taken.

The head of the Chad Transitional National Union Government, having stopped over on Monday in the Cameroon capital while returning from the Lome conference, evoked the peace perspectives in his country during an hour-long meeting with President Ahidjo. The head of the Cameroon State, the national radio stated specifically, informed Mr Goukouni Oueddei of his "concerns following the repeated frontier incidents" (the shelling of the Cameroon town of Kousseri, facing N'Djamena), and "the violation of the Cameroon airspace by unidentified aircraft" (that dropped bombs on the Chad capital).

President Ahidjo also pointed out to Mr Goukouni Oueddei "the consequences that this war could have on Cameroon if it went on indefinitely".

Mr Ahmadou Ahidjo, Radio Cameroon reports, finally expressed the willingness of his country to pursue its humanitarian aid to the refugees from Chad, and to spare no effort in obtaining the peace that he is praying for.

AFRICAN COFFEE PRODUCERS MEET IN ANGOLA

AB301144 Paris AFP in English 0702 GMT 30 Nov 80

[Text] Luanda, Angola, 30 Nov (AFP)--The 22 members of the Inter-African Coffee Organization (IACO) have decided unanimously that coffee production in Africa should be increased.

Representatives of the continent's producers, who account for about one-third of world consumption, noted during their general assembly here last week that coffee output was falling in Africa while it was on the rise elsewhere.

IACO recommended that members show self-discipline, adjusting their sales to seasonal variations in market demand. The conferees agreed that coffee stocks built up by consumer countries were a factor in driving down the price of the bean.

The general assembly also set up a working group to renegotiate quotas assigned to the producer countries at the International Coffee Organization (ICO) meeting in London in September.

The IACO assembly also supported the idea of greater cooperation with the African and Malagasy Coffee Organization (OAMCAF), and decided to study the possibilities of affiliated status with the Organization of African Unity (OAU).

Of the IACO membership, only Benin and Malawi were absent from the Luanda meeting.

Denis Bra Kanon, the Ivory Coast agriculture minister, was elected to the revolving presidency of the IACO, succeeding Angolan Agriculture Minister Manuel Pacavira.

It was decided that Arega Yorku of Ethiopia would serve as secretary general for a renewal term of 3 years.

The assembly adopted a million-dollar budget for the 1980-81 financial year, and decided that the next annual general assembly would be held in Monrovia, Liberia. An extraordinary assembly was scheduled for next March in London.

But the delegates adjourned a decision on building a headquarters for the organization in Abidjan, Ivory Coast, finding that construction estimates were too costly.

PROSPECTS FOR CLOSER SENEGALESE-GAMBIAN RELATIONS NOTED

Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Nov 80 p 9

[Article by Pierre Biarnes: "Senegalese Troops Make Sure Order Is Maintained After the Discovery of a 'Plot'"]

> [Text] Since Friday 31 October, the Senegalese Army, on the request of Gambian authorities, has been making sure order is maintained in Banjul, where a plot hatched by Libya among others was said to have been exposed (1 November LE MONDE). Officially the Senegalese--around 400 men--are taking part in manuevers of the Gambian "field forces."
> According to an unconfirmed account, Sir Dawda Jawara, Gambia's president, invoking a defense agreement made between the two countries in 1967, was said to have asked President Senghor by telephone at the end of Friday morning to get reinforcements to him following the assassination at the beginning of the week of Commander Emmanuel Mahoney, second in command of the "field forces." That officer, whose funeral took place Friday afternoon, was said to have been the victim of a dispute within the group of conspirators to which he belonged. Banjul has not confirmed this thesis.

Dakar--Things began to happen in a rush just in these last few days. It very quickly appeared that the assassination of Commander Mahoney was only the first act of a conspiracy against the regime brewing within the small "field forces" (only 380 men) which are responsible, jointly with the Gambian police (300 men), for maintaining order (there is no actual army in Gambia). Rightly or wrongly the Senegalese leaders saw the hand of Colonel Qadhdhafi in this business and they succeeded in convincing their Gambian counterparts of that, and the latter immediately broke off relations with Tripoli. The conspirators, unmasked, were then said to have decided to play their entire hand before the Libyans actually left. The funeral of Commander Mahoney on Friday afternoon in Banjul was supposed to mark the beginning of popular demonstrations.

Concerned, President Jawara therefore agreed to call on Senegal in accordance with a mutual defense agreement concluded between the two countries in 1967. Several hours later, at the time the rioting was starting to brew, the first airlifted Senegalese units reached the Gambian capital, getting the situation back in control without meeting any resistance, while reinforcements, which had set off by road, were crossing the river. The Yundum Airport and the garrisons of "field forces" were neutralized.

From Saturday morning on order once more reigned in Banjul, where the two small radical opposition parties which had been established during these last months, the MOJA (Movement for Justice in Africa) and the GSRP (Gambian Socialist Revolutionary Party), were outlawed and saw most of their leaders arrested (this was the case for Koro Sall, a MOJA party leader, among others). Apparently, there has been no deep regret expressed over any of the victims.

Nothing leads us to think that forces from outside Africa could intervene next, as was seemingly feared at first in Dakar--which would perhaps explain the official silence of these last 48 hours. But, whatever the immediate consequences of this intervention, from now on nothing will any more be as it was before between Dakar and Banjul.

Gambia is a legacy of Franco-British quarrels from the beginnings of colonization and of the partition agreements which put an end in "Senegambia" to the wars of the time of the French Revolution and the Empire--England retaining the "trading posts" along the river, which were considered then to be the best route for penetration into the interior of the lands in this part of West Africa: Gambia, which sticks into Senegalese territory like the finger of a glove, has from that time always presented serious problems to the Dakar authorities, colonial and then national. It thwarts the harmonious development of the south and the other Senegalese regions. It has always been the center of very heavy smuggling, seriously, detrimental to Senegal.

In spite of these serious inconveniences and even though within these absurd colonial boundaries live exactly the same population groups as those which are settled in Senegal (Mandingo, Diola and Wolof, among others), the Senegalese leaders have always scrupulously refrained up to now from intervening in the internal affairs of their obstructing neighbors. They have been betting on the passage of time and on the natural development of many-sided bilateral cooperation, in particular via the Gambia River Development Organization (OMVG), to get their Banjul counterparts to agree to link little by little the destiny of the latter's country with that of theirs.

On the other hand, for a long time Gambian leaders were in much less of a hurry to firmly commit themselves to that kind of path, along which they ran a big risk of losing en route a lot of priveleges connected with their very special situational income, although their people, as poor as those in neighboring Senegal, were not gaining for their part practically anything from it. Thus, the construction of a bridge over the river, which would greatly facilitate ties between Dakar and its southern province but would intensify just as greatly the interpenetration of the two countries' populations, has never up to now been carried out.

But even if in Dakar up to now they were nonetheless still disposed to make the best of a bad job, the threats that the deterioration of the Gambian political situation caused to hang over the stability of Senegal itself were much less bearable.

Senegal is not going to absorb Gambia, but the prospects of reconstituting a "Senegambia" by means of voluntary union of the two countries are no longer fanciful. The Gambian leaders will already find it more difficult to continue to oppose the bridge over their river that the Senegalese have always wanted. It could be the same regarding a customs union which might curb the smuggling, even if certain Gambian individuals must bear the brunt of that. In any case, without really trying, the Senegalese leaders have just succeeded in pulling off quite a nice coup.

SITUATION FOLLOWING SENEGALESE TROOPS' WITHDRAWAL FROM GAMBIA NOTED

Paris LE MONDE in French 9-10 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by Pierre Biarnes]

[Text] One week after having intervened in Gambia to put a halt to the deteriorating domestic political situation (see LE MONDE of 4 November), the Senegalese troops withdrew from Banjul which, except in case of some unforeseen event, was to have been evacuated by Sunday night. According to reports from unofficial sources, it was possible that Commonwealth forces consisting of Nigerian soldiers would replace the Senegalese troops.

The landing on Friday 31 October, of two Puma vehicles, belonging to the Senegalese Army, at MacCarthy Square (Banjul's central square) and the deployment of 30 men in combat dress, whom these vehicles carried to the church where the funeral was being held for Commander Mahoney, second in command of the Field Forces (who had been assassinated a few days earlier) had been enough to nip in the bud the riot that had been planned for the end of the ceremony. At the same time, approximately 100 other men neutralized the Yundoum Airport and the Field Forces camp at Bacau in the outskirts of town. By the next morning, reinforcements had completed the disposition of troops and, since then, calm has reigned in Banjul.

Once the surprise effect had died down, scarcely 48 hours later, a feeling of uneasiness began to develop in both countries, intensified by the silence kept by official circles both at Dakar and Banjul, a silence which was to be broken the following Sunday by a strange communique issued by the Gambian Government which stated, in the face of all evidence, that the Senegalese troops had only come to participate in "joint maneuvers" with the Field Forces. By refusing to admit that it was upon the request of President Jawara, who had felt threatened, that the Senegalese troops had intervened, the Gambian authorities thus gave the impression that they regretted having called on their neighbor for assistance, of allowing themselves to force the hand of their neighbor. Lengthy secret meetings, apart from the work of the annual session of the joint Senegalese-Gambian joint commission, which was being held at Banjul, were required to make the Gambian authorities publicly admit the truth on Wednesday, again by a second enigmatic dispatch which was cosigned by the Senegalese.

Furthermore, it does appear that, although it may have seemed to be justified at the moment, this Senegalese intervention in a former crown colony was not highly appreciated in certain British circles. Similarly, reservations must also have been formulated by the Americans who are firmly settled in Banjul and who appear to be quite interested in the Yundoum Airport, which might possibly serve them as a point of support more effectively than does Dakar-Yoff.

MEETING ON SCOPE OF MADAGASCAR-SEYCHELLES COOPERATION

Malagasy Delegation, Seychelles Authorities

Victoria NATION in French 6 Nov 80 pp 1-2

[Article: "To Strengthen Exchange Channels"]

[Text] Guy Sinon and Matthew Servina, respectively ministers for Political Organization and Administration and for Tourism and Transportation, held a working meeting at "National House" yesterday afternoon with the Malagasy delegation currently visiting our country.

Zasy Lucien, general director of SECREN (Naval Design, Constructions and Repairs Company), is at the head of the Malagasy delegation including three other managers from this firm. This group has been on a working trip to the Seychelles Islands since Tuesday to explore with various heads of ministerial departments ways and means to strengthen the bilateral cooperation between the two countries.

Yesterday bilateral discussions have been directed toward questions of common interest, including exchange of technical know-how between the two countries in the field of naval constructions and repairs, as well as on short and medium term projects in this domain, together with the required training of personnel.

The two delegations have equally taken-up other subjects for bilateral cooperation, such as tourism and commercial exchanges, toward the goal of giving priority to south-south exchanges as defined by presidents Rene and Ratsiraka.

Messrs Sinon and Servina, in their capacities as general secretary and assistant general secretary in SPPF (Seychellois People's Progressive Front) and the head of Malagasy delegation, in his capacity as president of the People's Council for the Diego Suarez province, have mutually compared their political informations on the current situation in their respective countries and in the Indian Ocean region.

The Malagasy delegation from SECREN, Naval Design, Constructions and Repairs Company, the largest naval work in the Indian Ocean, during its stay in our country will pursue its conversations with the Foreign Affairs and Defense ministers, Jacques Hodoul and Ogilvy Berlouis.

[Article: "SECREN Delegation Meets With Mr Hodoul"]

[Excerpt] The Malagasy delegation from SECREN, Naval Design, Constructions and Repairs Company, headed by its general director, Zasy Lucien, in pursuit of its mission in our country and yesterday afternoon met with the Foreign Affairs minister, Jacques Hodoul; after having a working meeting the day before yesterday with the Political Organization and Administration and the Tourism and Transportation ministers, Guy Sinon and Matthew Servina.

Yesterday's meetings covered various aspects of bilateral cooperation between Sey Seychelles and Madagascar, as they were defined by the highest authorities of both countries, and which are related to trade, maritime and air communications, training, tourism and review of current political situation in the region.

The Malagasy delegation visit is part of the agreements reached by the two countries in the Seychellow-Malagasy maritime pact signed by Minister Servina and his homologue Jean Bemananjara in August 1979; a pact which covers particularly merchant trade between the two countries, import and export conditions in both directions for local products, bilateral cooperation in the domain of naval constructions and repairs, training of qualified shipping personnel and the opening of a naval repair dock in Victoria.

A similar delegation from SECREN, headed by Jean Renjeva, assistant general director, had visited our country in October 1979, following the signature of the maritime pact between the two countries.

MAURITIAN PM MAKES STOPOVER, INTERVIEWED BY PRESS

Victoria NATION in French 3 Nov 80 p 1

[Article: "Mauritian Prime Minister Addresses Press: 'We Must Preserve Peace and Harmony in This Region'"]

[Text] Returning to Mauritius, after an official visit to India, the Mauritian prime minister, Sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, yesterday made a technical stopover at Point Larue Airport, where he was greeted by Jacques Hodoul, foreign affairs minister, and Jeremie Bonnelance, principal secretary. Answering questions from journalists, in the State Room of the International Airport, the Mauritian prime minister described the bilateral relations between Seychelles and Mauritius as good.

He added: "There are numerous questions which require that we work together to preserve our separate identities and to preserve peace and harmony in this region of the Indian Ocean," before relaying his greetings and those of the Mauritian people to President Rene and to the Seychelles people. Asked about the increased arms race in this region, Seewoosagur Ramgoolam declared that he regrets it; because, and he added, "we desire to see this region remain an area of peace, where the local people devote themselves to development work for their prosperity; and not an area of tensions in a state of cold war."

On the question of Diego Garcia Island ownership, the Mauritian prime minister did recall that it belongs to Mauritius and that it is an integral part of its territorial waters. "But," he added, "we ceded it to Great Britain, which in turn has ceded it to the United States and we are making sure that our sovereignty is recognized by Great Britain and the United States."

However, the prime minister hinted, even after regaining this sovereignty, American forces could be maintained on Diego Garcia Island. "All parties must reach agreement with Mauritius and we are not hostile to American presence, as we would obtain some advantages in return" he said.

Asked whether his country would fully take part in the upcoming Colombo conference on Indian Ocean demilitarization, and whether he intended to look favorably on the similar initiative from the Malagasy president for another conference, the Mauritian prime minister has underlined that his country would participate in every conference dealing with problems of the region.

SOMALIA EXPRESSES WISH FOR GOOD RELATIONS WITH KENYA

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 21 Nov 80 p 2

[Editorial: "Security Is Important to All"]

[Text]

The Kenyan government's declaration of a state of emergency in the NFD two weeks ago in the wake of some murdered people in the region was followed by unfounded allegations of complicity by the SDR, and then indiscriminated massacres of the inhabitants. And all along the SDR had been pleading non-guilty.

This week the Somali government has revealed that it has in fact been cooperating with the Kenyan authorities in maintaining peace and security in the NFD, by helping to bring to justice any criminal that has come to seek sanctuary here. INTERPOL can be called to witness the steps the SDR has taken in this regard.

But the Kenyan government has acted very precipitately, showing thereby, that she is not ready to reciprocate the Somali people and their leaders' goodwill. This is very un-neighbourly, and it can play into the hands of our common enemies and the enemies of Africa.

Why should Kenya doubt the SDR's sincerity and be partial to Abyssinia that is full of ill-will towards the SDR and therefore wants to see our relations with Kenya poisoned by disturbing peace in the NFD, is a mystery.

Are we to expect more savage acts from Kenya or will she see reason and act more sensibly, allowing the NFD people to live in security for more than politices and economy. it is very important to them, for on it hinges their survival.

To be able to live in peace is a human aspiration. And both Kenya and the SDR have a duty to maintain such peace in the NFD and improve it, so that their relation too, will in turn be better.

ZAMBIAN-TANZANIAN ROAD SERVICE PROFIT REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

THE Zambia-Tanzania Road Services made a profit of K1.7 million after ferrying 343,913 tonnes of cargo to and from Zambia, the government-owned newspaper DAILY NEWS reported today.

The paper, quoting the firm's deputy general manager Alphorese Makikini, said the rise in tonnage was because of increased number of trucks in operation.

The company last year bought 134 new trucks and its workshop rehabilitated 250 old vehicles, Mr Masikini said.

In the 1978/79 period a total of 204,380 tonnes was hauled.

The company has the capacity of ferrying an average of 500 tonnes of cargo a day from Dar es Salaam to Zambia.

Giving a break-down of cargo transported by Zamtan in the last financial year, the paper said a total of 157,902 tonnes of general cargo were ferried from Dar es Salaam to Zambia while 186,011 tonnes of copper were carried from Zambia to Dar es Salaam.

The company incurred a K28,600 loss in the previous year as it was operating with only 250 trucks and a large number of the vehicles was grounded because of lack of spare parts.

In the 1977/78 period it hauled only 117,936 tonnes of cargo incurring a K1.1 million loss.

And ZANA reports from Kinshasa: member of the Central Committee Mr Kapasa Makasa has called on Zambia and Zaire to encourage exchange visits between the two countries not only at top level but at grassroot level.

Mr Makasa made the call yesterday when he attended the inauguration of the central committee of the ruling Popular Movement for the Revolution (MPR).

He said exchange visits at all levels would enable Zambia and Zaire to learn and benefit more from each other.

He told the gathering which included President Mobutu that the two countries were friendly sister republics.

DUMONT BOOK CRITICAL OF ZAMBIA, TANZANIA

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by Arnold Raphael]

[Text] London, Friday--Professor Rene Dumont, the controversial French agronomist and doyen of his craft, has once again castigated poor colonial Africa.

His new book "L'Afrique Etranglee (Africa Strangled) which has just been published in Paris, largely consists of highly critical socio-economic surveys of Zambia and Tanzania.

But Prof Dumont who has been active in Third World agriculture since 1926 does not spare the rest of Africa. It too, comes under his lash.

The general situation "far from improving is continuing to get worse and is becoming absolutely dramatic."

Tanzania is taken to task for imposing a harsh socialism "imposed from above" and for allowing the bureaucracy to take power out of the hands of the people.

President Julius Nyerere refused to publish Prof Dumont's report.

Turning to Zambia, Prof Dumont claims that Zambia's increasing reliance on South Africa was due not so much to problems arising from the Rhodesian war, but from a system that failed to produce rural manpower which resulted in the need to import food.

He says "copper madness" had done little more for Zambia than encourage vast politically volatile shanty townships occupied by the half-educated.

The professor points an accusing finger at the growing and corrupt bureaucratic black leak on West Africa and predicts generalised famine by the end of the century with the former French colonies becoming deserts and sinking deeper into near colonialism.

Bad agricultural planning had paid "Ivory Coast miracles."

Prof Dumont sprang to fame or to notoriety with his book "False Start in Africa." His point in his new work is that the African continent is still on the wrong course and his warning 18 years ago has gone unheeded.

During his visit to Zambia and Tanzania last year, he came in for some critical examination himself not least in the editorial columns of the TIMES OF ZAMBIA.

KATANGESE MERCENARIES--The Katangese mercenaries who were recruited by South Africa to topple the Zambian Government were not supported by the Zairean authorities. This was said by the assistant governor at Mokambo, Mr Kitanga Bondo, on Monday during the 20th anniversary celebrations of his country's independence from Belgium in 1960. Mr Kitanga told a Zambian delegation from Mufulira that as people staying in border areas, they should strive to cement the good relationship existing between the two countries. Mufulira district political secretary, Mr Griffiths Mataka, who lead the Zambian delegation, said the good relationship should start at the grass-roots level instead of leaving it at the heads of state level. Mr Mataka, who admitted that although there were some problems between nationals of the two sister countries, they should be resolved in an amicable way. He appealed to UNIP and Zaire's Popular Revolutionary Movement (PRM) militants to cooperate and work together for the betterment of the two countries.--Zana [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Nov 80 p 5]

SOUTH AFRICAN ATTACKS STRICTLY AIMED AT CIVILIAN TARGETS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 24 Oct 80 pp 1,10

[Text] We have received for publication the following press release from the Department for Politico-Ideological Education, Propaganda, and Information of the MPLA-Labor Party Central Committee.

The Pretoria racists, who are repressing by force of arms the most basic rights of the black population of the Republic of South Africa and occupied Namibia, are seriously threatening international peace and security through their constant attacks on Angolan territory.

With every day that passes, the constant and systematic armed provocations by the Republic of South Africa are taking on the appearance of a real escalation of undeclared war against our people.

As was reported just yesterday in a communique published in Luanda by the Ministry of Defense, the southern part of the free and sovereign territory of the People's Republic of Angola continues to be the scene of daily violations of our frontiers by racist South African ground forces or aircraft. Those actions are a very clear and flagrant demonstration of the aggressiveness of Pretoria's racist and warmongering rulers toward the Angolan Revolution.

As was mentioned in the document from the Angolan Ministry of Defense, such daily violations have the sole objective of trying to keep our people and their military units stationed in the southern part of the territory in a permanent state of tension, thus preventing the socioeconomic and harmonious development of those areas of our country.

Beyond all the pretexts cited by the racists to justify their warmongering actions, the fact is that in the field, any impartial observer cannot fail to note that all the murderous fury of the South African soldiery falls solely on the defenseless inhabitants of Angola's Cunene, Kuando-Kubango, and Mocamedes provinces. The pretext is one thing, and the objectives are something else. They say they are trying to neutralize SWAPO bases. But the true fact is that their acts of aggression fall on Angolans--on peaceful people committed to the process of national reconstruction.

In short, the direct objective of the racists is Angola and its revolution--an attempt, through all kinds of planned actions, at its destabilization.

As was recognized just recently by experts from the UN Commission on Human Rights, the Republic of South Africa is carrying on an undeclared war against the People's Republic of Angola. In short, the criminal actions of the racists are an integral part of Pretoria's policy aimed at terrorizing the Angolan people, who have opted for the path of progressive development. Those actions contradict the principle of respect for the country's sovereignty, one of the most important principles of international law.

In the first 6 months of this year, 529 provocations were perpetrated against our people. The culmination of the escalation of military criminal pressure on our country by the racists was the big invasion carried out last June. Using the most sophisticated air power, along with heavy artillery and armor of the most diverse types, and supported by mercenaries of the most incredible and strangest origins, in addition to lackeys, South African units penetrated more than 60 kilometers into the territory of the People's Republic of Angola. The aggressors bestially massacred peaceful inhabitants. There were 322 dead, the great majority of them old people, women, and children.

As can easily be seen, the Republic of South Africa could not perpetrate its provocations against Angola without active support from certain Western capitalist powers. It is no secret from anyone, even the least aware, that close economic contacts exist with the Republic of South Africa. Those maintaining such contacts have a continuing interest in exploiting the natural and human resources in the southern part of the continent. Because of that, the United States and a number of other Western powers oppose the implementation of effective measures aimed at putting an end to the aggressive ambitions of the Republic of South Africa.

They refused to condemn the Republic of South Africa's invasion of Angola when they abstained from the Security Council vote on the resolution demanding the immediate withdrawal of Pretoria's troops from Angola and calling for assistance to our young country in strengthening its defense capability.

Again this weekend, supported by fighter-bombers and helicopters, strong South African military contingents once more penetrated our territory. And as has always happened, the fury of the Pretoria criminals fell on those unable to defend themselves--the working people, who were surprised while at their production tasks. At a distance of more than 50 kilometers from the frontier, the racists fell upon the settlement of Danguena. They burned and destroyed everything. The people were savagely strafed as they fled. Nineteen bodies were found shot on the ground. Three brave members of the People's Defense Organization attempted to sell their lives dear. But unfortunately, being armed only with rifles, they could not do anything and were massacred right there. Their shredded bodes were gathered up later. They were unrecognizable, something that well demonstrates the bestial spirit of the racist soldiery.

Also attacked by racist aircraft was the community of Iona in our Mocamedes Province. On their way to kill for the sake of killing, and while the Mirages and Puma helicopters provided cover, the infantrymen massacred seven citizens.

Those were operations which intrinsically cannot fail to disgrace the people who planned and executed them. There was nothing military about them, because in fact they were on the level of pure banditry.

In Windhoek on Tuesday, it was indeed very easy to draw up a communique whose tone was one of a great military victory--it is indeed easy to describe as victories acts of banditry against members of the people who cannot defend themselves. That is the language of cowards. The shamelessness is now reaching that point and touching the limits of cynicism, which is so appropriate to professional murderers.

All of this is happening--it needs to be said--at a time when the South African racists are welcoming an important UN delegation for talks on Namibia's accession to independence. And the intention of the racists is very clear. At the negotiating tables they are trying to stall for time, while at the same time, through their attacks on Angola, they are sabotaging in the field the plans accepted by the parties beforehand for an acceptable solution to the Namibian problem. But their efforts will be in vain.

The struggle continues.

Victory is certain.

WEST SHOWS 'TIMID' SUPPORT AGAINST SOUTH AFRICAN ATTACKS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 25 Oct 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Warmongering Paranoia!"]

[Text] Coinciding with the presence in South Africa of an important UN delegation headed by Brian Urquhart, assistant secretary general of the United Nations, the racist government in Pretoria has ordered an intensification of armed actions against the free and sovereign territory of the People's Republic of Angola. It announced its aggression using the jaded pretext that it only wants to destroy SWAPO "bases."

Pretoria is thus betting on a dangerous and irrational warmongering escalation to the detriment of the dialog and negotiations decided on by the international community.

The seriousness of the attacks unleashed by sizable land and air forces, which are affecting the peaceful inhabitants of Cunene, Kuando Kubango, and Mocamedes provinces, was opportunely denounced by the Ministry of Defense in a communique, distributed in Luanda, which categorized the attitude of the South African racists as an obvious act of sabotage against the resumption of talks concerning the granting of independence to the illegally occupied territory of Namibia.

This latest example of Pretoria's warmongering paranoia is more than a provocation against the Angolan people--who will be able to respond with the strength and determination they have always shown--and the truly free and independent countries of Africa. It is also a direct affront to the United Nations and Secretary General Dr Kurt Waldheim. It is a calculated insult, the result not only of the irrational policy being obstinately pursued by South Africa but especially of the passive attitude of the international community and particularly the five Western powers, which today are still hesitating to honor the commitments made to the parties interested, through the right they have won, in a peaceful solution to the Namibian problem.

International public opinion is now sufficiently enlightened and informed concerning the clear stand fully taken by the MPLA-Labor Party and the Angolan Government and people in the context of southern Africa, which is currently experiencing an explosive situation fueled by the criminal nature of the odious regime of apartheid. We have never concealed the internationalist support that the People's Republic of Angola gives to its brother people in Namibia--a response, be it said, to the demands of the international community as expressed in numerous resolutions by the OAU and the UN Security Council and General Assembly.

This position is one of principle which the Angolan people have adopted with courage, pride, and determination. It has already won respect for us in the international organizations, and this includes countries and governments whose political options are diametrically opposed to ours.

The coherence, firmness, and spirit of tolerance which the People's Republic of Angola has been demonstrating has even succeeded in finding a timid echo among some Western powers, which say they are interested in a peaceful solution to the Namibian problem.

In fact, according to a statement made in London by Manuel Pacavira, Central Committee secretary for the DEPPI [Department for Politicoideological Education, Propaganda, and Information] and minister of agriculture, at the conclusion of an official visit he made to Great Britain, the British authorities acknowledged the uprightness of the stand taken by our party and government on the Namibian problem and reportedly promised to use their influence with the racist government in Pretoria to bring it to its senses and to the path of honest talks within the framework of the resolutions adopted by the United Nations. The British Government and British businessmen also indicated their interest in intensifying cooperation with the People's Republic of Angola, including reactivation of the Cunene Plan, with which Great Britain was associated in colonial times.

Also recently, U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie made statements in Washington that differed from the usual logorrhea to which the United States has accustomed us whenever the subject has been the People's Republic of Angola. His statements can be interpreted as a still timid and shamefaced indication of understanding and respect for the principles which we have adopted as a free and sovereign people and which we have not renounced.

We can draw exactly the same inference from the speech delivered before the UN General Assembly by Freitas do Amaral, the Portuguese minister of foreign affairs, who praised the Angolan Government's important contribution to the United Nations in the process of liberating Namibia. It needs to be added that the Portuguese minister and CDS [Social Democratic Center Party] chairman has never, until now, demonstrated any sympathy for our party or for the government of the People's Republic of Angola, just as he has never concealed his ties with and support for the small puppet groups.

But the racist South African Government, insensible to the lessons of history, obstinately persists in directing its powerful war machine against the people and the free and sovereign territory of the People's Republic of Angola. The same weapons that oppress our brothers in Namibia and South Africa.

Angola does not bow to the force of arms!

And in Cunene, Kuando Kubango, and Mocamedes provinces, the glorious FAPLA [People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola] will again be able to repel the aggressors and also take charge of defending the dignity and honor of the United Nations and the secretary general, whom others, perhaps stronger, chickenheartedly ignore.

In Angola we are a peaceful people. We want peace, and we will struggle to achieve it.

The MPLA-Labor Party and the Angolan Government and people remain faithful to their sincere commitment at the side of the brother people of Namibia in the search for a peaceful solution that will lead to independence, cooperating with the UN secretary general in the implementation of Security Council Resolution 435.

This is known by the international community, specifically Great Britain, the United States, France, and the other powers which have economic interests in Namibia and South Africa and which are now being directly provoked by the irresponsible attitude of the racist Pretoria government.

How long will the insult go unpunished?

The struggle continues!

Victory is certain!

WORKERS HAVE OBLIGATIONS IN NATIONALIZED ENTERPRISES

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 24 Oct 80 pp 1,10

[Text] The national media have recently given ample coverage to the confiscations and nationalizations decreed by the Angolan state in connection with private enterprises headquartered in Angola.

The reasons leading to the adoption of those measures, particularly as concerns the soft drink companies, included abandonment by the managing bodies or owners, the sharp drop in production levels, and deviation from the company purpose--that is, the firm's function--as was the case with the Luso-German Company, Ltd., which has now been taken over.

The confiscations, nationalizations, and takeovers by the state thus emerge as a way of defending the interests of the Angolan people, particularly the working sectors, by giving the state the right to manage the life of the enterprise in question in such a way as to place it in the service of national reconstruction.

That fact alone presupposes the assumption of greater responsibility by the workers in the enterprises involved and by the officials in the government sectors to which those enterprises are responsible. What this actually means is that on the one hand, the workers must increase their productive capacity and be careful to maintain a healthy climate of comradeship and discipline. At the same time, it also obliges the ministries and national directorates directly responsible to see to their smooth operation--specifically in the way of supplies and technical maintenance--and to insure correct economic and financial management in accordance with plans based on the realities in each unit.

In short, what it means is that for an enterprise that has been nationalized, confiscated, or taken over to really represent a true victory by the working classes, the thing that counts basically is the way in which its life is managed from the moment when it legally becomes the property of the people.

HUAMBO, BENGUELA, BIE ELECTRICITY SUPPLY--"The power shortages that have affected Benguela, Huambo, and Bie provinces for a long time ended on Friday as a result of the return of the rainy season, which has made it possible to increase the flow of the Catumbela River and to resume normal hydropower production in keeping with the capacity of the machinery." That announcement was made yesterday by Carvalho Simoes, national director of electric energy, during a meeting with our country's news media. And in another communique, the National Directorate of Electric Energy explains that the reduced flow of the Catumbela River was due to the lack of rainfall, which prevented the normal production of electric energy, and to the simultaneous occurrence of serious damage to the gas turbine generating set at the emergency thermoelectric powerplant installed next to the dam in Biopio. The damage occurred precisely during this dry season that has just passed. [Excerpt] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 26 Oct 80 p 2] 11798

SOUTH REPORTEDLY LIVING PEACEFULLY--Considering the fact that southern Chad has been cut off from the rest of the world and has been deprived of all means of communication and contact and that there is nobody who wishes to officially speak with and deal with anyone, credit must be given to Colonel Kamougue for simultaneously maintaining unity and calmness of all the various classes of the population and of getting on with the work of peacefully conducting all economic and social activities. No one claims that everything which happens in the southern region is perfect, but it would probably be fair and honest to point out that, in a country ravaged by civil war, only the south is living in a state of peace, that its authorities have succeeded in maintaining a viable economy under very difficult conditions in spite of disappearance of the entire banking system, that its government is functioning in a nearly normal manner, that the schools are open and operating to the point that examinations, both primary and secondary, are being conducted under satisfactory conditions. Your correspondent was able to move around and do his job all the way from Sarh to Moundou even though he was stopped at several inspection posts. The question is, would he have been able to travel in northern Chad and produce a similar report there? [Text] [Paris LE MONDE in French 31 Oct 80 p 6] 7619

CFT AID TO COTON-TCHAD--My heavens, I would like to know how the French Textile Development Company can be called "mysterious!" As a matter of fact, this company is well known throughout French-speaking Africa and even in a number of foreign countries. It is a semi-public company that was founded in 1949, whose main office is located at 13 Monceau Street, Paris 8, and ranks high among the leaders in development of cotton production in Africa, teaching the African peasants modern techniques of agriculture and improvement of their standard of living. I do not want to insult your correspondent by intimating that he is misinformed and that he knows nothing about the French Textile Development Company. Therefore, I am inclined to believe, and the context of his article confirms my opinion, that he has deliberately employed this term "mysterious" to make his readers think that this company is a hotbed of intrigue which seeks to hide its political objectives. Therefore, I would like to inform him that, while it is quite true that the French Textile Development Company has taken a chance on helping the Coton-Tchad Company in conducting the 1979-1980 campaign, it has done so in accordance with its normal responsibilities, considering that it was its duty, at a critical time, to assist an African company with which it has always been closely linked and that, in accordance with the missions that it has always assumed in Africa, it could not permit ruining the efforts of thousands of Chad peasants whose total harvest at the end of this campaign reached the level of 90,000 tons of cottonseed, which, in view of the circumstances, seems to be quite remarkable. VARIOUS PLANTS INCREASE, IMPROVE PRODUCTION

Additional Malt Processing Plant

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 13 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

ADDIS ABABA (ENA) — The sencond malt processing factory of the St. George Brewery will begin serivce shortly, according to Comrade Kebede Shenkur, the Brewery's Manager.

When the factory comes into operation, it will save the country from four million to five million Birr, the Manager said. He added that 17,000 quintals of malt will be processed annually in the country thereby meeting the factory's total demand.

The main suppliers of malt for the brewery are the state farms in Arsi and Bale regions. At present part of the malt requirement is imported, which means that importation will cease as soon as the factory becomes operational.

Comrade Kebede revealed that in view of the importance of saving foreign exchange, work on the ten new factory is progressing at a very rapid pace.

The annual production of beer from the Brewery is increasing. Output in the 1971 E.C. production year was 61,075,104 bottles of Pilsner beer. In the second production campaign year, that is in 1972 E.C., output rose to 63,621,095 bottles registering an increase of 5.4 per cent over the quota, according to the Manager.

On the whole considerable effort is made step up production, said the manager. He attributed the success to the concerted endeavour of the factory's workers.

The St. George Brewery ranked third in a competition of the year's "Star Factories" from among the 18 production units of the Ethiopian Beverages Corporation, Comrade Kebede said.

Before nationalization, the brewery had 326 workers. Its present labour force is 718.

Thermoplastic Plant

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 14 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] Addis Ababa (EH)--The Ethiopian Foam and Thermoplastic Industry is exerting maximum efforts to accelerate its production activities and to respond to the ever-increasing demand of the public for its products, said Comrade Seifu Meshesha, General Manager of P. Thomas Tellefsen Company and the Ethiopian Foam and Thermoplastic Industry during an interview with THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD.

The general manager said that the Foam and Thermoplastic Industry being the nation's major producer of thermoplastic products and the sole producer of foam products has been and still is doing every thing in its power to partially alleviate the prevailing shortage of thermoplastic products and to popularize the use of foam products. According to Comred Seifu, the industry produced both foam and thermoplastic products valued at a cost of 3,620,292 Birr during the 1972 calendar year, thereby surpassing the target set for the year by over ten per cent.

Major thermoplastic products of the firm are buckets, jugs and wash basing plates, cups and saucers, plastic drinking glasses, baby chambers, bowels, serving trays, seal fresh boxes and jerrycans. The industry also produces and supplies form products to the various furniture factories and to mattress and pillow producers in the country.

At present, the industry is producing the 24 kinds of its products with only four machines by changing moulds and raising the number of working shifts in order to least meet 10 to 15 per cent of the public demand, the general manager revealed. Earlier, he continued, the firm was operating with a single machine. In realization of the increasing public demand for plastic products, it was urgently needed to add three more new machines which helped to raise the firm's production capacity and contributed towards a partial alleviation of the shortage of the products.

Due Attention

Comrade Seifu however made particular note of the fact that although the industry strives to utilize its maximum production capacity, it is still hard to fully meet the growing public demand until and unless more machines are installed and production activities in this area are extended.

This, according to the general manager, is some thing very important and needs due attention from concerned authorities.

As regards the distribution of foam and thermoplastic products, Comrade Seifu said, the firm distributes its products through its sales agent--P. Thomas Tellefsen Company. Priorities in the sales of the products are given to mass organizations such as Higher Kebeles and peasants' associations.

Asked to comment on any advantages of producing these items locally over directly importing them, Comrade Seifu said that although all raw materials are imported from abroad, local production is still advantageous since the country saves quite a substantial amount of foreign currency this way.

Employment opportunities and the technical knowhow in the production of the items are also additional benefits that can be derived from the local production of the products, he reiterated.

For his part, Comrade Wondwossen Feleke, chairman of the workers' union of the Ethiopian Foam and Thermoplastic Industry highlighted the initiative and enthusiasm being displayed by the labour force towards boosting production.

Comrade Wondwossen stressed that the increased productivity and enthusiastic involvement of the workers is directly attributable to the increase in their level of consciousness and their awareness of the prevailing conditions of the country.

He also commented on the health atmosphere and the smooth relationship that exist between the management and the workforce. The total number of the firm's workforce is 54.

Faffa Foods Plant

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 15 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Text] Addis Ababa (EH)--The Faffa Foods Plant, initially established as a small pilot factory in 1968, is currently exerting a tremendous effort to combat malnutrition and diseases resulting from deficiencies in calories, protein, minerals and vitamins. The plant, which earlier was under the Ethiopian Nutrition Institute (ENI), has been producing different types of nutritious food items since its incorporation in the Ministry of Industry in 1979.

The foregoing statements were made here Thursday to a reporter of THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD by Comrade Belete Beyene, General Manager of the Faffa Foods Plant. Comrade Belete asserted that the major task of the plant is the production, in bulk and quality, of baby foods and their systematic distribution to the broad mass at low prices. To this end, the General Manager disclosed, the plant has been producing such baby foods as Faffa (wheat-flour with soyabeans, milk and ten types of vitamins), dube (a popular product rich in vitamins, iodized salt and protein, and particularly well-nourishing to pregnant women, lactating mothers children and persons in drought-affected areas), Meten (cooked food item for children) and Edget (baby powder milk). It is envisaged that the production of shiro, fried and powdered peas used for making sausage, would commence in the immediate future, he added.

Increased Production

Comrade Belete further disclosed that the plant had produced 7,454 tons of baby foods during the 1972 Ethiopian Calendar year. This shows a substantial increase over the production of the previous year which stood at 4,063 tons, he added. The initial small pilot plant produced only 368 tons of Faffa in 1968, Comrade Belete recalled. Provided that certain facilities are available, he went on, the plant has a capacity of producing 12,000 tons of baby foods per year.

The products of the Faffa plant are of World Health Organisation (WHO) standard and hence internationally recognised, Comrade Belete reiterated. International organisation like UNICEF, OXFAM, the Christian Relief Development Association and the International Red Cross, the General Manager asserted, are purchasing the products of the Faffa Foods Plant. During the Ethiopian calendar year of 1972 alone, these international organisations bought over 3,650,000 Birr worth of Faffa. This confidence that international agencies have in the standard of the plant has earned the country the same amount of foreign currency in cash, he added.

Comrade Belete emphatically noted that the plant is a non-profit organization and as a result sells a quarter of a kilogram of Faffa at 0.25 cents. This has been possible, said the General Manager, mainly due to the enormous support on the part of the Revolutionary Government by way of exempting the plant from taxation and the subsidy of the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA).

The plant conducts a thorough inspection scheme to see to it that the products are sold at the set prices and that they are not hoarded by profiteering merchants, Comrade Belete observed. To this end, he went on, the plant has set up branch offices in Dire Dawa, Mekele, Bahr Dar, Jimma and Awassa for distribution and inspection purposes. In addition to these, the plant has commission agents stationed in Gimbi, Gondar and Dilla, he added. He further disclosed that the plant gives priority to drought-affected areas, mass organisations, hospitals and health centres with the intention of facilitating fair distribution to the broad masses. The plant also envisages to open branches in In Goba and Dessie in the near future.

Future Plans

Speaking of future plans, Comrade Belete Beyene asserted that the plant envisages to raise the production of shiro from the current 154 tons to 400 tons in the Ethiopian calendar year of 1973. He is of the opinion that this product has attained great popularity among agricultural workers in state farms. The plant also intends to build new stores, introduce up-to-date machinery and make certain changes in the already existing machines. According to Comrade Belete, the plant plans to supply bakeries with ingredients like protein and iodized salt with the intention of minimizing cases of goitre in the country.

It was learned that the set target of the plant for the current calendar year is 8,450 tons of baby foods. It was further found out that the plant has 140 employees, a laboratory for internal quality control and a tasting kitchen.

LIVESTOCK, CROP, MILK PRODUCTION, YIELDS DESCRIBED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 13 Nov 80 p 7

[Text] Addis Ababa (EH)--Research undertaken by the International Livestock centre for Africa (ILCA) has proved the most outstanding yet achieved in ILCA's field programme. The introduction of forages and a crossbred cow into an intensified cropping system has increased the income of the family of the peasant by 50 per cent and has produced a six-fold increase in milk yield. Research now focuses on further intensification of forage production and the use of the crossbred, cows for animal traction.

While appraising the activities of the centre in Africa Mr. C. deHaan, Director of Research said that since ILCA's headquarters is in Addis Ababa, the highlands of Ethiopia has become a logical focus on ILCA's research.

The prevailing agricultural system in most African highland areas, he said, is small holding farming, focusing primarily on subsistance crops, with livestock production a subsidiary component of the arable farming system. Within this general pattern, it was noted, however, there is a wide range of land-use systems, influenced by substantial variations in climate, topography, soils and socio-economic conditions.

High-Potential Area

Revolutionary Ethiopia, he said, has the largest highland area of any African nation, covering 490,000 square kms. or almost half of the country, and including approximately 70 per cent of the national human and livestock populations. He added that although meat and milk production in the Ethiopian highlands are traditionally less important than arable farming, the agricultural system of the area make extensive use of animal draught power and provision of feed for draught animals is a central component of the production system.

The first research programme was planned, according to the director, for a relatively high-potential area, combining livestock and cereal production, and in 1977 the Revolutionary Government offered a 160-hectare site for a research station at Debre Zeit. In 1979, the centre was provided with a second 280-hectare site at Debre Berhan. Research at these sites is being conducted in co-operation with the Ethiopian Institute for Agricultural Research (IAR) and the University of Addis Ababa, which has a field station at Debre Zeit.

Mr. De. Haan said that in both ILCA's research areas, work has focused on increasing the productivity of subsiscance crops with improved seed and fetilizers so that areas are released for fodder production which can be used to support improved livestock.

Better Technology

According to the director, in Revolutionary Ethiopia much more attention is being given to produce better fed livestock. Research at Debre Zeit and Debre Berhan includes, however, studies to adopt better technology on livestock management and animal traction.

The introduction of crossbred cows at the two research stations will lead to the eventual introduction of crossbred oxen, it was revealed. The research director said that preliminary observations indicate that crossbreds can plough 50 percent faster than local animals using traditional implements. Crossbred cows, he said, were used for traction in one research farm at Debre Zeit in 1979. Initial results were promising, with 2 or 3 hours of work a day, causing only small reduction in milk production.

Mr. De. Haan further noted that the alternative energy sources for household use are being explored so that cattle manure, which is now dried and burned as fuel, can be returned to the soil to maintain fertility.

The centre, according to the research director, has a good working relationship with the Third Livestock Development Project. The centre in collaboration with the project conducts research programme, data collection and on-the-spot experimentation

DAMS, CANAL, OTHER DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS DETAILED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 13 Nov 80 pp 1, 7

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--A medium-sized irrigation dam has been constructed in Jabi-Tihnan district, Gojjam region, and work on a seven-kilometre canal is to start soon.

This was disclosed at the end of last week during a tour of inspection conducted in the area by Comrade Tekola Dejene, First Deputy Secretary General of the National Revolutionary Development Campaign and Central Planning Supreme Council (NRDC-CPSC) and COPWE Central Committee member, who also made a similar inspection tour of Gondar region.

The new dam in Jabi-Tihnan district is one of the four medium-sized irrigation dams planned to be built under a dam construction project in the region.

A total 171,640 Birr has been spent on the Jabi-Tihnan dam project. It was built through the joint effort of the Revolutionary Government, the European Economic Community (EEC) and five peasants' associations in the locality.

The Revolutionary Government and the EEC contributed 50,530 Birr and the peasants provided labour estimated at 121,110 Birr.

With the irrigation facilities, it is hoped that the peasants would cultivate coffee, fruits, oil seeds, pepper and sugar cane. The dam took two years to complete.

Present during the tour of inspection were Mr. B. Zimmer, EEC agricultural advisor and acting delegate, Mr. H. Okorn, EEC technical advisor, and Comrade Birru Ittissa, Acting General Manager of the Ethiopian Water Works' Construction Authority.

The other dams to be built in the region would be located at Kulti, Fetam and Tikur Woha. It was learnt that construction on the Tikur Woha dam will begin in two week's time.

Comrade Tekola and the team led by him also saw a dam site at the Chemoka River where a dam for electricity will be set up. The power plant at this dam is projected to supply electricity for debre Markos and 13 other towns. The existing power plant operates with naphtha and water, it was stated.

Other development projects were also inspected by Comrade Tekola. The NRDC-CPSC official visited peasants' producers' co-operatives and held extensive talks with their representatives. The office-bearers of the peasants' producers' co-operatives explained to Comrade Tekola the difficulties they had overcome and their future plans.

Two of the peasants' producers' co-operative informed Comrade Tekola that they would produce 1,300 quintals of grain during the current crop year and that they were in the process of building a silo for storing their produce.

Another major agricultural project which the NRDC-CPSC official visited was the Bir Shelleko state farm. There the NRDC-CPSC official was told that peasants of the region had played an active role in the collection of the farm's harvest.

with a view to promoting livestock production in the country, he said. [as printed]

According to the research director, ILCA was established to serve first as a centre for interdisciplinary research to promote the development and demonstration of improved livestock production systems, second as a focal point for training activities that will increase regional competence in the systems approach to livestock research and development and, third, as a multi-disciplinary documentation centre serving the livestock industries of tropical Africa.

AFARS SETTLED IN AWSSA--Assaita (ENA)--Promising ventures are in progress to further improve the livelihood of Afar nationality in Awssa province, Wollo region. The members of this nationality are being settled in a locality where they practise farming and cattle breeding. They are given adequate education in farming and cattle breeding by experts from the North-east Livestock Resources Organization and the Ministry of Agriculture. Besides, a vast pasture land has been demarcated for their cattle in their surroundings. Six peasants' associations in Doubti district own three tractors, a truck and four ambulances while another association owns a tractor and a truck of its own. It is to be recalled that Afar nationality was one of the most neglected nationality during the discredited regime. The Afars used to lead an entirely nomadic life roaming from place to place in search of pasture for their cattle. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 12 Nov 80 p 1]

GUM RESOURCES SAID PROMISING--Addis Ababa (EH)--Ethiopia foresees bright prospects in the harnessing and export of natural resins especially with the creation of conducive conditions towards the qualitative and quantitative production of the resource under consideration and the introduction of effective and efficient utilization of the nation's natural gum potential. This was stated by Comrade Merkorewos Hiwet, head of the Planning and Programming Service of the Forest Products Processing and Marketing Corporation, during an interview with THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD. Comrade Herkorewos said Ethiopia possesses great concentration of natural gum producing trees whose growth areas are distributed throughout the country with some areas known for the growth of the trees in abundance. He further explained that out of the fourteen administrative regions a high potential of natural gum has so far been identified in the administrative regions of Tigrai, Eritrea, Gondar, Gojjam, Wollo, Wollega, Shoa, Gamo Goffa, Bale, Hararghe and Sidamo. Although not identified yet, the growth of natural gum producing trees is also assumed in the remaining three regions, it was learned. The varieties of natural gum potential are gum olibanum, gum Arabic, gum myrrh, gum oppoponax and wasp incense. Of all these varieties, gum olibanum which at present has a high commercial value is the highest potential of the nation. [Text] [Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 13 Nov 80 pp 1,6]

FRENCH JAGUAR PLANES ARRIVE AT LIBREVILLE AIRPORT

Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] Accompanied by an aerial resupply C-135 aircraft, 4 Jaguar attack planes of the French Air Force arrived in Libreville (Gabon) at the beginning of this week after a nonstop flight from France.

Officially, their arrival in Libreville is said to be a training exercise in long-distance flying for the crew, as was already the case in the past, beginning in 1977, in various African countries as well as Djibouti. However, the Jaguar planes had participated in defense and attack operations, notably in Chad and Mauritania.

The four Jaguar planes now in Libreville are part of the tactical air units stationed in the eastern region of France, and some of the squadrons are able to undertake overseas missions.

The Jaguar, a supersonic attack plane armed with 2 cannons, bombs and rockets, has an operational radius of 700 to 800 kms when flying at low altitudes, and of 1,100 kms at high altitudes. In the event one of the protagonists in the present Chad conflict would request the intervention of the French Jaguars, the distance between, say, Libreville and Ndjamena—1,450 kms--would make the use of the C-135 resupply aircraft necessary; the planes could also use an intermediate stop such as Bangui in the Central African Republic. Part of their mission would have to be at low altitudes to avoid anti-aircraft attacks.

For the present, therefore, and in consideration of technical constraints, the Jaguar planes in Libreville seem to have been dispatched to Gabon to reassure primarily certain African countries reportedly worried about events in Chad.

PRESS COMMENTS ON EXPULSION OF LIBYAN DIPLOMATS

AB211734 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 21 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Last Monday, the government announced the expulsion of the entire staff of the Libyan Embassy in Accra. This action is the subject of comment in three papers today.

THE PEOPLE'S EVENING NEWS is drawn into the controversy by what it describes as the harsh action taken against a friendly progressive country like Libya. It says Libya, for reasons of her progressive stand in African politics, has of late been blamed for all political instability in almost all the reactionary governments in Africa. It is now the turn of the reactionary governments in West Africa to blame their political woes on Libya as evidenced by accusations from Chad, Senegal, the Gambia and now Ghana. The paper maintains that the destruction of Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi and the Libyan revolution will not stop the people's revolution in Africa. What reactionaries tend to forget is that a revolution is sowed in a given country until it germinates before it is [word indistinct] to consume what are considered to be parasites around it. The EVENING NEWS notes that Ghana urgently needs economic assistance from Libya since it cannot live on vain promises from Washington and Lagos. If the government thinks it has enough grounds to prove its case against Libya's involvement in Ghana's internal affairs, it should have completely broken off diplomatic relations with Libya. It further says: We have been forced to conclude that there is an international conspiracy with the CIA teaming up with Ghana's present security set-up to cause confusion in the country. If Dr Limann has anyone to be afraid of, it should be his own security set-up. If he cares to find out, we are sure he will be told that it was the same security system which toppled Kwame Nkrumah and all the governments which came after him. At the moment he can say without fear that nobody is subverting the Limann administration from the civilian sector. It is rather the security machinery which is actively doing so by not giving the country's leaders the peace of mind to tackle the nation's problems. We demand that the special branch and the military intelligence should stop interfering with the smooth administrative machinery of the country.

THE PUNCH has a different opinion of the issue. In its view, the Libyans have exploited the economic poverty of the African nations with which they have diplomatic relations to their selfish advantage. This, according to the paper, has become manifest through what it calls the indiscriminate use of the power of its wealth to cover its activities against selected African states of strategic importance. The dictionary of Al-Qadhdhafi has expanded to consist of terms which possess the most lethal definitions for overthrowing legitimate goverunments with the aim of spreading Libyan influence. It refers to Libyan activities in Chad and the Gambia and says: We may not have all the oil money in the world, we may not possess millions of idle and useless dollars in the holds of Swiss banks but in terms of human decency, dignity and human rights we are excremely proud. If Libya will not [few words indistinct] according to the basic norms of diplomacy, then their blood money certainly has no place in her present gloomy economic orbit. [as heard] The Limann administration deserves warm congratulations for asserting once more that Ghana in all her relationships with other nations has never accepted the subservient role by playing second fiddle to some mighty economic godfather.

In the (?thoughts) of a native daughter column of THE MIRROR, the writer comes out from another angle on the expulsion of the Libyan diplomats. In her view any conduct grave enough to warrant the expulsion of an entire African embassy staff should be fully explained to the public; more so when the country is an oil-exporting country and the embassy is barely a year old. The writer wonders who the secrecy that shrouded the official statement is protecting since it gives room for rumors and negates the concept of open government which Ghanaians have heard so much about.

The writer wonders if the embassy of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah has been closed down forever or if a new set of staff will be welcome. She is also puzzled by the [word indistinct] way in which such a drastic measure was taken. [sentence indistinct] The writer concludes her column by saying that everybody knows that hospitality is Ghana's unwritten motto but there is no need to stretch it as far as to apologize for expelling people who are supposedly doing something inimical to the host country. If we cannot be respected for our wealth at least let us be praised for firmness.

THIRD JOINT FRENCH-MALAGASY COMMISSION NEGOTIATIONS

FMG 2.2 Billion

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 31 Oct 80 pp 1,2

[Text] After a few hours of delay beyond the original schedule--a quite natural development since it concerned a meeting of such importance--the Third Joint Franco-Malagasy Commission, which opened on Tuesday [28 October] in Tananarive, closed yesterday [30 October] with the official signature of the documents prepared during this session of the commission, provided for in the general cooperation agreement of 4 June 1973 between France and Madagascar. All of the declarations of intention, which were expressed during the inaugural session, yesterday [30 October] were appropriately carried out.

The French contribution for 1981--consisting solely of nonreimbursable assistance--will reach a total "never previously attained," as French Minister of Cooperation Robert Galley stated yesterday [30 October], amounting to more than FMG 2.2 billion. This confirmed certain forecasts which were made before the meeting that the assistance would open new perspectives in Franco-Malagasy relations. Before lifting the veil on what he called the "material aspects" of the session Mr Robert Galley warmly applauded the views previously expressed by Malagasy Minister of Foreign Affairs Christian Remi Richard. The latter, in effect, expressed vibrant appreciation for the "understanding" of France concerning our problems in agreeing to help us to carry out our "numerous as well as varied" projects.

Mr Robert Galley had stated that he was sensitive to the fact that Mr Christian Remi Richard placed Franco-Malagasy cooperation in a new light. This cooperation certainly goes back for a number of years, but historical developments have not succeeded in destroying it. In short, the leader of our diplomacy expressed all of his "gratitude" to France. Mr Robert Galley responded by stating that these views had gone "straight to the heart," and certainly "to the heart of President Giscard d'Estaing." All of that well illustrates the atmosphere of serenity which reigned over the work of the commission.

On Wednesday [29 October] the committee on "Cooperation" ended its discussions at about 1:00 am. Yesterday [30 October], at 2:00 am, before the departure of the plane which was to take them back to Paris, the members of the French delegation were still at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs for this closing ceremony. What came out of this veritable marathon? Many things which should be credited to the Franco-Malagasy cooperation, which truly deserves to be cited as an example. "French solidarity," mentioned on his arrival on Tuesday [23 October] by Mr Robert Galley, was transformed yesterday [30 October] by Minister Christian Remi Richard into "the solidarity between our peoples" when the latter learned from the lips of the chief of the French delegation that, despite the present world economic crisis which does not spare a country like France, the latter is always ready to help Madagascar, "convinced that this will consolidate even more an already very old friendship."

According to Mr Robert Galley, his meeting on Wednesday [29 October] with President Didier Ratsiraka further reinforced the determination of his delegation to make this third meeting of the Joint French-Malagasy Commission a success, whatever the cost. This cooperation between France and Madagascar is therefore a living reality. France will continue--and by a long way--to be our principal partner.

In the light of everything said yesterday [30 October] at Anosy, where no one seemed in any way to be in a hurry to leave, despite the approach of the time for departure and also despite the bad weather outside, the future will be even more promising. For Rakotovao Razakaboana, minister attached to the Presidency for finance and planning, this session was nothing like a routine meeting. It permitted the beginning of a "common reflection" on solutions for the future, on major national and international projects. If the coal of Sakoa, the tar sands of Bemolanga, and all the large-scale projects which we think about are to be carried out, France has stated that it is ready, here and now, to say "yes" to our proposals. The fact that Minister Rakotovao Razakaboana emphasized at some length the unusual character of this occasion demonstrates the importance with which the two parties already regard their cooperation in these areas.

A final word? The figures speak for themselves. And based on this reality there is also this common will to ensure the success of healthy and fruitful cooperation between the two parties, where words are followed by actions. It happens--more often than one may think--that the two do not necessarily go together.

Joint Communique

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 31 Oct 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] 1) The joint ministerial organism provided for in the general cooperation agreement of 4 June 1973 met for the third time in Tananarive from 28 to 30 October 1980.

The French delegation was headed by Robert Galley, minister of cooperation. The work of the committee on "cooperation" was led by Michel Van Grevenynghe, director of cultural and technical cooperation, and the work of the committee on general affairs was led by Jean Gueguinou, deputy director of African and Malagasy affairs.

The Malagasy delegation was headed jointly by Rakotovao Razakaboana, minister attached to the Presidency for finance and planning, and Christian Remi Richard, minister of foreign affairs. The work of the committee on cooperation was led respectively by Jocelyn Rafidinarivo, technical counselor of the minister of finance and planning; Assomany, director of planning and policy of the education service; and Daniel Rakotomavo, director of program planning for problems of technical assistance, cultural affairs, and investment. The work of the committee on general affairs was led by Paul Rakotondramasy, dierctor of bilateral relations.

After having congratulated Robert Galley on his reappointment as minister of cooperation, Christian Remi Richard reviewed the friendly and fruitful cooperation bewteen the two countries and recalled the interest which the Democratic Republic of Madagascar attaches to the conference on the Indian Ocean Zone of Peace, to which the French president gave his agreement in principle for the participation of the French Republic.

Mr Robert Galley, on his part, expressed appreciation for the quality of the discussions and the cooperation between the two countries and emphasized the improved means to face in an effective way present bilateral and world political and economic problems.

Organization of Work

The following bodies were established:

1) A committee on cooperation

2) A committee on general affairs.

The committee on cooperation was subdivided into three sub-committees which met in succession: a) a subcommittee on technical assistance; b) a sub-committee on cultural affairs; and c) a subcommittee on economic affairs.

Outside the work of the commission the ministers presiding over the two delegations raised a certain number of questions concerning the two countries. The basic options available were decided on in the course of a long audience granted by the President of the Democratic Republic of Madagascar.

Robert Galley was also received by the Prime Minister and Chief of Government.

2) The problems of the French community in Madagascar and those of the Malagasy community in France were the object of loyal and friendly exchanges of view.

3) French technical assistance involves nearly 600 persons, of whom about 450 are in the field of education, two-thirds of whom are in secondary and technical education and about one-third in higher education. Assistance will be more and more directed toward the training of trainers within the university to provide for the progressive replacement of French assistance personnel. (Third Level Normal Schools and the Third Cycle).

4) Scholarships and training programs will be maintained within the framework of Malagasy priorities and thus will be directed specially toward post-university study and research or toward higher educational institutions [les grandes ecoles] except for nonexisting channels in Madagascar [sauf pour les filieres nonexistantes a Madagascar].

5) In the field of higher education inter-university agreements will be used as much as possible to ensure an increasingly broad opening toward other universities.

6) On the other hand teaching "missions" of medium duration will be organized, while travel scholarships offered by France to our university students will be maintained at about their present level.

7) France will continue to provide pedagogical support for the training of trainers, within the limits of its means.

8) In the area of training of researchers the Malagasy side requested the extension of DEA-type [applied economics department] forms of applied sciences to other disciplines.

9) In the area of investments and within the framework of Malagasy priorities the two parties examined projects under way and new projects in the sectors of rural development, infrastructure, industrial and mining studies, and social and educational investments.

For 1980 14 projects totaling F 32,120,000 in non-reimbursable aid, or FMG 1,606,000,000, have been approved by the Fund for Aide and Cooperation (FAC), including:

1) An FP [sic, not otherwise identified] and pilot sawmill for pine timber (second segment): F 3.4 million.

2) Support for Malagasy capacity for cotton production: F 2.8 million.

3) Agro-industrial studies, including development of soybeans: F 1.3 million.

4) Preparations for extension work at Lake Alaotra (first segment): F 1.5 million.

5) Iron ore deposits at Soalala (first segment): F 2.5 million.

6) Aid to the LNTPB (National Laboratory of Public Works and Construction): F 3.0 million.

7) Participation in the color TV program (mobile video truck): F 720 thousand.

8) Direct investment credits: F 1.0 million.

9) Pedagogical equipment (books) for secondary Malagasy schools: F 4.5 million.

10) Agro-industrial studies (second segment) concerning soybeans, supply of rural communities, coffee: F 1.5 million.

11) Study of Point Tanio and the silting up of the port of Tamatave: F 2.0 million.

12) TV network Fianarantsoa-Fort Dauphin-Tulear: F 6.0 million.

13) Assistance to the INPF of Tananarive: F 600 thousand.

14) Aid to public health in Madagascar--radio antennas at Ambatofinandrahana and Anjanamasina: F 1.3 million.

This totals F 32,120,000 or FMG 1,606,000,000.

The agenda having been completed, the two delegations congratulated each other on the particularly friendly and warm atmosphere which characterized the discussions throughout this session.

The delegations note with satisfaction the effectiveness of the work and the positive conclusions which resulted from it.

The French side wishes to express its particular thanks to the Malagasy side for the quality of the reception, marked with friendship, which was shown to it.

FMG 7.5 Billion in Aid for 1981

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 3 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] The overall total of French aid to Madagascar for 1981, as a result of the work of the third meeting of the Joint Franco-Malagasy Commission which ended its deliberations on Friday [31 October], is FMG 2.2 billion, as we reported in our last edition [of 31 October]. The latter total did not take into account assistance under the Fund for Aid and Cooperation involving development operations. To that total should have been added--something which we did not do--the scholarships, the missions of experts, the pedagogical and inter-university support [text states "intra-universitaires," but the context indicates this should have read "inter-universitaires"] to reach the "record" figure mentioned by Minister Remi Richard (Foreign Affairs) or the figure "never previously attained" as French Minister of Cooperation Robert Galley stated after him, for an overall total of FMG 7.5 billion.

To be officially adopted, the committee of the Fund for Aid and Cooperation and the French Parliament must still express their views in the coming weeks on this sum which should henceforth be called "provisional" and on its utilization. It would be astonishing for these bodies to question the decisions taken in Tananarive. Therefore, it is necessary to accept that this is a simple question of principle, since it is understood that everything which concerns public accounts, in France as elsewhere, is a matter for scrupulous computation by the responsible institutions.

However this may be, France remains our principal partner, in every sense of the word. It is France which brings us the most aid. It is with France that we have the most trade. President Didier Ratsiraka recently expressed the wish that the balance of trade between the two countries be reviewed and corrected because it is not in our favor. In other words France buys from us less than we buy from her. A proper remark--especially at the present time but which should also find an echo in terms of most of our trading partners. Thus, for example, for 1979 alone we exported a total of FMG 83,825,000,000 and imported a total of FMG 135,319,000,000. When these trading partners are examined one by one, it is still with France that our trade appears to be more or less in balance. In 1979 we imported about FMG 135 billion in French products, while France bought from us about FMG 84 billion. With the other trading partners, apart from those of the Common Market, the trade "balance" was clearly in their favor. For some of them our products are not "interesting." Even so, we buy their products. With our policy of trade in "all directions" we must also produce more.

To return to what last week constituted the principal news--the meeting of the Joint Franco-Malagasy Commission, of course--French aid to Madagascar has not ceased to increase with the years. It has gone from FMG 3.4 billion in 1977 to FMG 7.5 billion in 1981. And this does not take into account either French aid under the European Development Fund or that consisting of loans, notably through the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation or that coming from international bodies.

In 1981 France will provide us notably with her support for the cultivation of cotton in the Mahajanga and Toliara region, amounting to FMG 140 million; the restructuring of the whole "coffee" operation on the East coast (FMG 75 million); the agro-industrial studies on soybeans (FMG 65 million). Lake Alaotra, our rice bowl, will continue to benefit from French help. The French delegation went there on Thursday [30 October]. The preparations for extension activity in this region will receive an initial grant of FMG 75 million. The exploitation of the iron ore deposits in Soalala, presently being carried on by the Italian firm Italsider with the financial participation of the European Development Fund, will receive, in this category of French aid, FMG 125 million; the construction of the TV network Fianarantsoa-Fort Dauphin-Tulean will receive FMG 300 million; the improvement of the National Railroad Network [Reseau National des Chemins de Fer] will involve providing it with modern equipment to meet the ceaselessly growing needs of our national economy. Figures for this last project have not been provided, as this no doubt is a matter for the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation, whose director general is expected to arrive shortly in Madagascar.

According to Mr Van Grevenynghe, director of bilateral and technical cooperation, the second-ranking French official at the recent meeting, who left Tananarive yesterday [2 November], Madagascar, after holding this latest meeting of the Joint Franco-Malagasy Commission, is among the first countries which presently benefit from French aid. It is to our credit, but also to the diligence of the "all directions" policy of President Didier Ratsiraka who, on several occasions already, has returned Franco-Malagasy cooperation to its proper place after the developments that we all know about. Today France has regained its title of the "natural friend" of Madagascar. But we should not rest there. The purpose of the "common reflection" which drew the attention of the two countries during the Franco-Malagasy summit meeting in Tananarive opens the door still further to new perspectives. A common adventure may be in sight which it is good to undertake together with the same reciprocal confidence as that which animated the work of this Franco-Malagasy commission.

The similarity of views of President Didier Ratsiraka and of President Giscard d'Estaing, particularly with regard to the new world economic order involving first the beginning of true North-South [text states "Sud-Sud," clearly a typographic error which should have read "Nord-Sud"] cooperation and then a European-Arab-African dialogue, is only after all a pious wish on the part of both of them to see a more just and more stable world emerge, especially at a time when the world is increasingly sinking into a chaos of misunderstanding and egotism. This is a world where force is being expressed in fire and blood and, soon, with so-called "economic" weapons whose principal victims will always remain the same.

CONSTITUTION COULD BE KEY ISSUE IN SWA TALKS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

WINDHOEK: There was an increasing likelihood that the agenda of the UN proposed pre-implementation meeting on SWA would be topped with an item to negotiate a constitution for the Territory, informed sources said in Windhoek yesterday.

The sources said there was a growing feeling that a multi-party conference, including Swapo, should first explore the drafting of a constitution before going on to implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 435.

Observers in Windhoek said the main constitutional weakness of Resolution 435 was the Constituent Assembly which would be composed on the basis of "winner takes all."

In Zimbabwe, the constitution was negotiated among the main parties at the Lancaster House Conference before the country went to the polls to elect a government.

In SWA the Constituent Assembly will be responsible for drafting the constitution which, in practice, will be the sole prerogative of the winning party, assuming there is an overall winner.

Observers in Windhoek quoted the extreme possibility of Swapo winning an overall majority of one seat in the Constituent Assembly.

Without having to consult any of the other groups represented in the Constituent Assembly, Swapo could then, for instance, impose a one-party marxist dictatorship-type constitution on the Territory.

But, the observers added, the Constituent Assembly could also go to the other extreme.

If a far-right coalition gained the upper hand in the Constituent Assembly, the Territory's future could be determined by a rightist constitution.

It was agreed that both possibilities were extremely remotr, but nevertheless illustrated the inherent flaw in the Constituent Assembly which could widen rifts after independence in an already divided population.

If a pre-implementation meeting agenda could be agreed upon which included constitutional deliberations, Resolution 435 would require minor adaptation.

Instead of electing a Constituent Assembly — as the UN proposal prescribes at the moment — the Territory's electorate would go to the polls under UN supervision to elect a government to go to the polls under UN supervision to elect a government to lead SWA to independence and rule the Territory in terms of a constitution already agreed to at a multi-party conference.

Observers said such a constitution would be as binding on the government of an independent SWA as a constitution drafted by a Constituent Assembly. — Sapa

PROFESSOR ASSESSES NAMIBIAN SITUATION

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 8 Nov 80 p 21

[Article by Professor Gerhard Totemayer: "The Real Truth"

[Text]

This article has been written by a professor, Gerhard Tötemeyer, who is a noted authority on South African affairs. In fact, Professor Tötemeyer is a native of South West Africa.

The article was written for the Rand Daily Mail, and is reproduced in the Windhoek Observer by courtesy of the Rand Daily Mail. He has written many thesises on South West Africa, and for the residents of South West Africa it is worth perusing his thoughts.

History will yet prove a man like Professor Tötemeyer to have been totally correct in his assessment, prognosis and views on what steps should be taken to bring about a solution for so protracted an issue.

Looking at the present dispensation in Namibia, South Africa still remains the supreme controller. It retains control over foreign affairs, overall defence and security of the territory, post and telecommunications, railways, the Supreme Court and, for the time being, the position of the chief interlocutor in international deliberations concerning the future of Namibia.

South Africa is represented by the Administrator-General who heads the executive authority and the government service and acts through the South African State President. He retains certain powers such as certain legislative and constitutional authority. In terms of Proclamation AG26, the Administrator-General can detain people without trial and effectively ban them. The Administrator-General can also act as an arbiter between the different levels of government. He controls the civil service.

The Administrator-General is not in a position to alter decisions made by the Ministerial Council, the National Assembly and Representative Councils, but can refer them back for reconsidering. As intended by South Africa, the role of the Administrator-General is on the decline to increase the status of the National Assembly and the Ministerial Council.

On the lower level the Ministerial Council has been instituted with executive powers. It is composed of a chairman and 11 members elected from the 11 population groups represented in the National Assembly. The Ministerial Council operates on a "communal" or "collective" basis and not on an individual "portfolio" basis. One reason could have been that the National Assembly cannot provide the knowledgable men to head Ministries.

It is argued that the intelligensia of the black population in Namibia is not duly and proportionally represented in the National Assembly and that the majority of its members belong to opposition groups not being represented in the National Assembly, such as the NNF and SWAPO. Both refuse to acknowledge the National Assembly as a duly elected and representative body. The members of the various ethnic groups in the DTA, constituting the main component of the National Assembly, are not seen as legitimate representatives of the total population.

The DTA cannot escape the accusation by opposition forces that it is linked to divisive ethnicity politics. The DTA is furthermore accused of being a prolonged arm of South African economic and political interests in Namibia, in other words being a collaborator of predominantly white interests. The black DTA leaders also have to meet the accusation of being African traitors and quislings.

South Africa has to face the fact that as long as South African military forces and administrative officials continue to stay and operate in Namibia, that as long as no internationally supervised elections have taken place, that as long as South Africa remains responsible for any aspect of Namibian affairs, and that as long as the National Assembly continues to exist in its present composition and function, no real independence for Namibia can be achieved.

So far the National Assembly, which together with the Ministerial Council and the central administration forms the first tier of government, has not brought about any real fundamental changes to be convincing or to enhance its credibility. What the National Assembly, which is composed of 50 members, is deliberating and what it has achieved thus far can be catalogued mainly as symbolic.

Certain laws which are still applicable in South Africa have been repealed to defuse existing and potential conflict areas, but they remain symbolic acts.

It must, however, be conceded that the repeal of discriminatory laws such as the Immorality Act, the Group Areas Act and alike, has theoretically created a situation which is different from that of South Africa where every white, whether he supports or opposes the South African Government, cannot escape the situation from still being part of the "white" system.

The National Assembly has legislative powers in most matters of national concern as well as executive powers which it exercises through the Ministerial Council. Since the inauguration of the National Assembly, Namibians are now urged to seek redress from this body. The question, however, remains whether instrumental laws, those that directly serve the economy and maintain security will significantly be changed to neutralise or even replace exploiting elements in the economy and polity, and to bring about a new socio-economic order.

According to the Namibian liberation movements, the economic and political conceptions and actions of the National Assembly have too many shortcomings to be acceptable. Although the National Assembly initiated the removal of discriminatory measures from the statute book, this has not changed the existing relationships much, especially on the social level, between black and white. Respect for human dignity is still underdeveloped in the Namibian society.

This situation will remain unaltered till the white population in Namibia realises and accepts it as a fact that it cannot continue to be the dominant group in Namibia, not even primus inter pares.

Most of the whites in Namibia actually fear the implementation of United Nations Resolution 435 (1978), and it seems that as long as true independence according to this resolution has not been achieved in Namibia, the whites seemingly have the intention to live in a protected and privileged atmosphere. This situation of imagined security can, however, not last indefinitely. It is a false hope that South Africa will and can continue to look after the interests of the whites indefinitely.

It is therefore understandable, but not acceptable, that most of the whites and the National Assembly have no immediate interests to participate in the execution of Resolution 435 which, if applied, will change the political and socio-economic scenery in Namibia substantially. The application of Resolution 435 will undoubtedly endanger the existence of the present National Assembly. It will most probably bring it to an end.

The present political development in Namibia has continuously to meet crises of expectations. Can this sufficiently and credibly be done by the National Assembly? Can the National Assembly bring about peace, can it end the military struggle on the borders and strife inside the country, is it in a position to de-radicalise present political developments and attitudes (reactionary and radical attitudes), can it make more "white" land available to the most disadvantaged group in the Namibian society, the peasantry, and can it bring international recognition and internal harmony? Can it meet all these expectations?

Against the background of earlier comments, the answer must be in the negative. The DTA is deceiving itself when and if it believes that it can presently muster the majority support in the population. It is fighting a desperate struggle of political survival. It cannot afford to acknowledge that it operates in an atmosphere of false hopes and insecurity. It has to reassure itself continuously of its representativeness and credibility to justify its actions. If it wants to win, it has to prove that its driving force is stronger and more dynamic than those of the liberation movements. This is doubtful.

As a general assessment, it can with fair accuracy be said that if Resolution 435 is not implemented in due course, the process of polarisation and radicalisation will intensify. It may be the strategy of South Africa to prolong the process of total and internationally acceptable independence. The intention could be of withdrawing itself from internal politics and the administration of Namibia completely and to request the established Namibian army, which came into being on August 1, to be host to the South African military forces or alternatively to be invited by the Namibian Military Forces. South Africa may then argue -- since it established a Namibian Police Force on September 1 -- that it has technically withdrawn itself completely from Namibian affairs and that all the power is now in the hands of the National Assembly.

This could eventually imply that South Africa is also withdrawing as a direct negotiator in the international deliberation process about the future of Namibia by informing the United Nations that all negotiations should now be directly with the "legitimate" government in Namibia with South Africa only as an observer.

If Resolution 435 is not applied soon, and hopes are fading that South Africa and the United Nations will reach agreement in the immediate future of the implementation of the said resolution, the National Assembly may try to impose its will, most probably, if necessary, by force. The impression prevails that the DTA and the National Assembly are bargaining for time and that this can best be done by delaying the application of Resolution 435.

Both may hope that another 15-18 months may be sufficient to strengthen their position and convince the population of the tighteousness of their cause.

If that is the attitude of the two bodies, this strategy will eventually be proved ineffective. Whatever the DTA and the National Assembly intend to do, it will not show the expected results. The fear prevails that in the short run the political situation will deteriorate, that a policy of appeasement will not succeed and that ultimately the National Assembly will be forced to follow a militant policy, which could force the opposition parties to go underground. If that should be the run of developments in the immediate future of Namibia, then the future looks rather bleak and desperate, and will definitely not contribute to a state of stability.

MUDGE CLAIMS WHITE ELECTION NOT TO HAVE NATIONAL IMPACT

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 17 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] WINDHOEK: The Chairman of the SWA Ministers' Council, Mr Dirk Mudge, said in Windhoek on Friday night that the outcome of the election for a White second-tier authority in SWA would have no effect on the national affairs of the Territory.

The SWA National Party won the election by winning 11 of the seats at stake.

Mr Mudge told a Press conference: "The outcome of the White election will have no influence whatsoever on the composition of the National Assembly or the Ministers' Council (the Territory's highest authority).

"The National Assembly was elected by the population as a whole and not by one single ethnic group."

The composition of the National Assembly could only be altered through another national election, he added.

"The people who were elected now in these elections will represent their own people in their own (ethnic) representative authorities and nothing else."

The elected majority would continue to govern the country just as it had been doing up until now.

Mr Mudge said he did not fear that the outcome of the White election would in any way influence the good relationship which existed between his party and the other population groups in the Territory.

In fact, the other population groups had informed him they now stood behind him "far stronger than ever before."

Mr Mudge said the NP had created a "race taboo" and its victory in the White election had done nothing to improve race relations in SWA.

The NP would not enjoy the support of the other population groups because of its policy and attitude.

The NP would not enjoy the support of the other population groups because of its policy and attitude.

By gaining 42 percent of the votes of the election, the RP had at least proved to the NP and the rest of the world that the DTA enjoyed "substantial" White support. There was only a difference of 2 600 votes overall between the two parties.

Mr Mudge appealed to moderate Whites in the Territory not to view the situation pessimistically or be disheartened by the election results.

"I have confidence in the future and we'll just continue with out programme," he said.

Mr A H du Plessis, leader of the SWA National Party and former South African Cabinet Minister, said in Windhoek he considered the result a decisive victory for his party, when considering that the media both in SWA and SA had been hostile of the SWA NP since 1977 when Mr Mudge broke away from the party.

He regarded the results as a clear indication of what the Whites in the Territory wanted.

Mr Du Plessis said he now wanted to make a thorough analysis of the election results before commenting further.

The SWA NP has no ties with the SA National Party headed by the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha. – Sapa

HERERO ELECTIONS ARE ONLY THE BEGINNING, LEADER CLAIMS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 7 Nov 80 p 4

[Text]

THE HERERO second tier election for a representative authority are the first elections ever in which the Herero people will participate in chosing their own leaders along the lines of a Western-styled democratic process.

The 1978 general elections gave them their first taste of what it was all about, Mr Johannes Karuaihe leader of the NUDO Progressive Party of Namibia told the Advertiser yesterday, but this is the first ever Herero election as such.

The NUDO Progressive Party of Namibia is the official opposition to the NUDO Party led by Mr Kuaima Riruako, who represents the Hereros in the National Assembly for the ruling DTA.

Mr Karuaihe acknowledged that "I had to limit our election campaign according to the financial and manpower resources available and concentrate on a few key places only."

But he went on to say: "This is not the last election in which the Herero people will be involved. This is only the beginning. Riruako obviously has a better chance of winning. I grant him that. But I will be close on his heels from then on."

The NUDO Progressive Party was founded at more or less the same time as the second tier elections were announced, by Mr Karuaihe, who had broken ties with his leader in the DTA-affiliated Nudo Party of Mr Riruako in the National Assembly.

Mr Karuaihe presently sits in the National Assembly as an independent, with his former colleague in NUDO, Mr Uazukuane.

All that is known about the split in the ranks of the DTA's Nudo is that it revolves around a leadership struggle.

"We do not indulge in smear campaigns or in intimidation as is the case with others", Mr Karuaihe told the Advertiser. "We must maintain the democracy."

Asked for a forecast of the outcome of next week's elections, Mr Karuaihe replied: "I am not overoptimistic about getting a large percentage of the votes, but I will be satisfied with what we get. Remember, we are only a young party. In relation to the time at which our organisation was born, the election campaign was too short. The last two months were not easy for us."

The Advertiser asked Mr Karuaihe which policy matters he had emphasised during the course of the election campaign.

"Most of my people live in the Reserves", he replied, "so it is natural that agricultural and land questions play a large role.

NUDO Progressive therefore called for more land, more camps with which to control grazing, and more boreholes.

"We need qualified agricultural educationalists and technicians to assist us in developing our agriculture in the Reserves," he said.

"Plentiful good grazing in the east is available, but there is a shortage of water and the cattle are destroying the pasturage through uncontrolled grazing."

Mr Karuaihe also says that the system of communal tenure on the land is overloading the agricultural potential of the ground.

Private ownership outside Hereroland should therefore be encouraged, but the development of the communal system of land tenure should not be ignored because it was of great importance to the Herero people.

Besides agricultural policy, Mr Karuaihe also stressed the importance of educational upliftment of the Hereros and the development of general social services in all spheres as being equally important.

Support for the NUDO Progressive Party of Namibia was generally good according to Mr Karuaihe, and considering the disadvantages under which they operated, to his satisfaction.

Support for this party he felt to be equally strong in the towns as well as in the rural areas.

There appeared to be no significant differences between NUDO Progressive and the DTA's NUDO Party as far as policy matters were concerned.

HERERO CHIEF COMMENTS ON ROLE OF ETHNICITY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] ETHNICITY was an experimental base for future political progress and a means to an end rather than an end in itself, Mr Kuaimo Riruako, Herero Chief and Member of the Ministers' Council said this week.

Mr Riruako said he did not maintain that the recent ethnic elections could attribute a rightwing image to the DTA which might be to the advantage of Swapo in a one-man-one-vote election.

Ethnicity was overemphasised by the present policy of the DTA he said, but it had to be kept in mind that this was a mere experiment in contact between the various population groups.

Racism existed in the minds of all people, Mr Riruako said, but it was important to keep it from legislation and to educate people in accepting one another on merit.

He pointed out that Blacks were traditionally tribalists.

"This is a fact of life", he said. "One had to be realistic if you wanted to achieve your objectives."

Pan Africanism belonged to the past, Mr Riruako maintained. Mixed authorities were a reality in today's world and merit rather than colour should be the criterion. A developing country had to utilise the expertise at its disposal and people should endeavour to learn from each other.

In Africa it was unfortunately the case that defeat was not easily accepted and the people had to learn by their mistakes.

Mr Riruako said he felt the only achievements in the political development of SWA have been brought about by the DTA, such as the abolishment of the Immorality Act, the Mixed Marriages Act and racism to a degree.

Accusations to the effect that the DTA were White puppets held no ground, he said. It was important for a country in the process of becoming independent to negotiate with the colonial power, in this case SA.

The UN had 30 years to bring about change in SWA and give the country back to its people, Mr Riruako said, but they failed. Now the people of SWA were taking their future into their own hands.

The people have already experienced tangible evidence of the changes and this gave them confidence in the promises for future developments from their leaders.

Regarding the White second-tier election, Mr Riruako said it was a mistake to allow White civil servants who didn't intend staying in the country to vote in an election. He was convinced that this should not have been allowed.

He denied allegations of intimidation in the Herero second-tier election and said people were bound to get emotional about election issues and shout at one another.

EDITORIAL COMMENDS UN EFFORT ON NAMIBIA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 24 Nov 80 p 1

[Editorial in column "Comment"]

[Text] United Nations Special Representative on SWA, Mr Martti Ahtissari, is to be congratulated on having made considerable progress in arranging an all-party conference to precede the implementation of UN Resolution 435.

The task has not been an easy one.

The SA Government and the internal parties have frequently accused Mr Ahtisaari of having been blatantly one-sided and this, as he told the Windhoek Advertiser, has troubled him considerably.

There has been a terrific clash of interests and the problems have been intricate.

When the UN team headed by Mr. Brian Urquhart visited Pretoria a month ago, the UN team was clearly apprehensive about both the idea and the prospects of an all-party conference.

An all-party conference was mooted by the South African side.

Mr Urquhart and Mr Ahtisaari pledged to do all possible to make such a conference materialise and indeed Mr Ahtisaari chose to visit the Frontline States immediately after the Pretoria talks to get them to accept the idea.

It would seem that he has succeeded, perhaps with the exception of Tanzania.

The SA Government and the DTA in particular have asked for a full demonstration of impartiality by the UN.

Mr Urquhart proved to be particularly reasonable in his approach in Pretoria.

Mr Ahtisaari has now taken it a step further.

True, more is still expected of the UN: Mr Ahtisaari will have to drop his role as Commissioner of Namibia; the UN will have to stop financially aiding Swapo; UN agencies will have to cease being biased for their part; and the General Assembly and Security Council will have to show an even greater change of heart.

Be that as it may, lets give credit where it is due.

SWAPO TERRORIST DEATHS--Brigadier Willie Meyer Second-in-Command of the SWA Territory Force, has announced that 39 Swapo terrorists have been killed in operations by the SWATF and the SA Defence Force, since October 30. In one of the contacts on November 7, the security forces were following the tracks of terrorists and forced them by persistent follow-up pressure to set up a hurried ambush for the Security Forces. However, the terrorists were surprised in their ambush positions and six were shot and killed. The security forces seized a quantity of weapons, ammunition and equipment. According to the Press release it is clear that the terrorists are avoiding contact with the security forces and are concentrating mainly on intimidation and terror against the local population. LUXURY PATROL CRAFT--A luxury patrol craft of R4m purchased by the SWA Department of Economic Affairs arrived in Walvis Bay last week. This patrol vessel is to monitor foreign fishing activities in SWA waters and will also be used for research purposes. A former luxury yacht, the craft was acquired by the SWA Government from Greek owners in the Mediterranean. Named the S-TO-S (a name that will be changed still), the finish and accommodation of this vessel is luxurious, with fully-carpeted cabins and private bathrooms. There are stainless fittings throughout as well as anti-vibration and anti-nose panelling. She is powered by a 1 500 KW engine and is capable of 15 knots and has a three-week endurance at sea. The extensive array of equipment includes a satellite navigator. According to a report in the Namib Times, grave doubts have been expressed about her capabilities as a patrol vessle. Apparently over the years the SWA authorities have a poor record in their acquisition of fisheries patrol craft and this one is seen as "another disaster." The suggestion has been put forward, that it should rather be used as a prestige flagship for the future President of an independent SWA for official trips to neighbouring countries, rather than trying to "play navel patrols" against faster and bigger vessels. HERERO AREA FORCE--A passing-out parade was held on Nov 6 at Okakarara for the first members of the Herero Air Force who completed their basic military training. This was announced in Windhoek this week by the SWA Territory Force. The Commander of Sector 30, Col J T Louw took the salute during the parade with the Chief of the Hereros, Mr Kuaima Riruako. A total of 80 Hereros completed the basic three-month course and they will form the nucleus of the Herero Area Force. Further basic courses are being planned to expand the Force. The member with the best results will be nominated to attend a leadership course at the Military School in Okahandja. This unit was trained by the SWA Territory Force on request of the Herero leaders, so that they can defend the areas Hereroland East and Hereroland West. The parade was attended by hundreds of Hereros, the woman dressed in their beautiful traditional dress. This was the first military parade in Okakarara capital town of the Herero reserve. Similar parades were held this week in Epukiro and Otjinene with the aim of introducing the new unit everywhere in Hereroland. Col Theron, the Commander of Sector 50, took the salute at these parades. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 13 Nov 80 p 5]

POLICE BRUTALITY ALLEGATIONS--Windhoek--The District Commandant of Police, Colonel Stadler, has dismissed allegations of a clash between his men and a number of Coloureds who went camping at the Dean Vilioen resort last weekend. A complaint was lodged by Mrs. Mouton, housekeeper of the Ella du Plessis High School in Khomasdal. She said that a total of 46 Coloureds, including herself, her 30-year old son and 21-year old daughter, camped at the resort. The group was singing when two Whites arrived, requesting a bit of silence. One of the group apparently made a derogatory remark directed at the two white patrons, and the police were summoned. According to Mrs. Mouton the police, on arrival, beat them with batons. She also alleged assault on her son. "He was even given boxing gloves and told to defend himself", she said. On Monday, she said, her son had to pay R500,000 in fines for illegally staying overnight at the resort. Colonel Stadler said that the police arrived in response to a call by members of Nature Conservation, and that a police officer had been hindered during the execution of his duties. He said it had now become habitual to charge the police with all sorts of misbehaviour when officers were summoned to public places where trouble had erupted. But nobody would lay a charge against the police, he said. A spokesman for Nature Conservation said that the group had had too much to drink, and they were asked to leave. Instead, however, they started cursing the officers of Nature Conservation, telling them to scoot off. The spokesman said the police were then summoned. SENGHOR INTERVIEWED FOLLOWING CEAO MEETING

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 30 Oct 80 p 12

[Interview with President Leopold Senghor; date and place not given]

[Text] Before leaving the Nigerian capital, the head of State held a minipress conference with the authorized representatives of the Nigerian and international press in Niamey. Recorded here are the questions and answers that were exchanged during the meeting.

[Question] Mr President, where does the idea of a trilogue presently stand and what do you expect from it?

[Answer] For the past several years, as you know, I have been recommending a Europe-Africa dialogue. More specifically Eurafrican. In 1976, when we met in Cairo for the Arab-African submit conference, I initiated the idea of an Euro-Arab-African dialogue. The trilogue has the same goal. Thus, we maintain contact with President Giscard d'Estaing who has been promoting this idea.

[Question] What is the present situation of the Senegalese economy?

[Answer] As in most countries in the world, we are having some difficulties. I must remind you that in 20 years of independence, we have had 10 years of drought. In 1977, then in 1979, our trading deficit amounted each time to approximately 50 billion. In order to fill this gap, we were forced, this year, to request approximately 100 billion from France and certain international organizations and financial institutions. However, while borrowing from others, we have also initiated an austerity policy. Thus, we have set up an economic recovery plan and aimed at a revival of our industry. I believe that is 5 or 6 years, our situation will be far better than what it is presently.

[Question] What political role can an organization like the CEAO play?

[Answer] I have talked about development poles in concentric circles for a long time. In 1963, during the constitutive meeting of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), certain leaders, namely Nkrumah, wanted to immediately set up an African economic commonwealth. Which was not feasible at the time.

Last year, West Africa was the first to create a commonwealth, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS). However, subregional organizations already existed prior to this. Personally, I do not foresee any political role for the CEAO. Each State must choose, for itself, its own model of political expression.

In Senegal, we have opted, since 1945, for a democratic socialism. Thus, we presently have four large political parties, representing just as many streams of thought.

The CEAO, in my opinion, must be essentially an economic commonwealth, up and above the ideological differences of the countries that are part of this commonwealth.

[Question] Mr President, a word about the ANAD (The Non-Aggression and Defence Aid Agreement) which seems to be somewhat stalled.

[Answer] We were not able to reach an agreement during the summit meeting of the Heads of State on Monday afternoon. In fact, a member country, Mauritania, raised a fundamental question. Shortly, we will once again convene our ministers. However, it is certain that several African countries have decided to negotiate and sign an agreement within the spirit that we defined. At the level of the CEDEAO, we are several states to want this.

The majority of West African countries believe that they are the object of covetousness. Thus, they feel the need to draw up a defense treaty to guarantee their safety. Senegal's wish as far as this matter is concerned is absolutely unshakable. If there are only two or three States to want this defense treaty, we will obtain it. Those countries that do feel safe are free not to join us. We are forcing no one.

ROMANIAN AMBASSADOR NOTES ROMANIAN-SENEGALESE COOPERATION

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 29 Oct 80 p 4

[Report on an interview with Mrs Olimpia Solomonescu, Romanian ambassador to Senegal]

[Excerpt] (APS) The Romanian ambassador to Senegal, Mrs Olimpia Solomonescu, who has left our country, gave an assessment of the Romanian-Senegalese cooperation in an exclusive interview with the Senegalese Press Agency.

It is not easy for the ambassador to summarize, in several sentences, the level attained by the Romanian-Senegalese relations. However, she was able to point out several of the most significant aspects of this cooperation.

"First, I would like to emphasize that the contacts, the talks and the decisions reached over these past few years during the meetings held in Dakar and Bucharest, between His Excellency Leopold Sedar Senghor, president of Senegal, and His Excellency Nicolae Ceausescu, president of Romania, have contributed to the favorable development of friendly and cooperative relations between Senegal and Romania."

For the ambassador, the documents signed on that occasion reconfirmed the desire of both parties to act together to reinforce, develop and diversify this cooperation.

Mrs Solomonescu believes that the agreement of mutual guarantee of capital investments, signed last 16 June in Bucharest, energy cooperation agreement which will be signed during the next official visit to Romania of Moustapha Niasse, minister of Foreign Affairs, at the invitation of the Romanian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Stefan Andrei, will unfold large prospects of long-term economic cooperation.

In fact, she said, in the area of energy cooperation, a significant step has been taken through the participation of Romania in the electrification of certain districts of the town of Bignona.

"I would also like to mention the air agreement signed by the governments of both countries and the interest that Romania has showed in establishing in the near future the airline Dakar-Bucharest."

Prestigious Event

Also interested in the development of mutual exchange of merchandise, the two countries have manifested concern in knowing what possibilities exist in this area. Mrs Solomonescu noted with satisfaction that for the first time, Senegal participated in the international trade fair of consumer goods (TIBSO) in Bucharest, this past spring.

"I want to emphasize at the same time the participation of Romania in the Dakar international Trade Fair during the last editions and announce that this year, my country will once again be present at this prestigious event."

The ambassador expressed her conviction that direct contacts between Senegalese businessmen and Romanian business firm representatives will contribute to the development of relations in this area, as well as to this kind of event.

Within the cultural aspect of this cooperation, Mrs Solomonescu pointed out the importance of the development of cultural exchanges between Romania and Senegal, given the very favorable framework offered by our country for cultural events.

"To make an assessment of the situation without going into any detail, I cannot help but greatly appreciate the fact that the provisions of the cultural exchange protocol for 1978-1980 have been duly implemented. I would like to recall the success of several events such as the film festival, the expositions, the radio broadcasting, etc, which, in my opinion, reflect the importance and the attention that the concerned Senegalese institutions attach to relations with Romania and the desire of our people to get to know one another better."

Certainly, the signing of the cultural exchange program for 2 more years in November in Bucharest, during the visit of the Senegalese Minister of Foreign Affairs, will enhance the invaluable treasures of the Senegalese and Romanian cultures."

"If I add to this the successful cooperation of Romania and Senegal within the framework of international organizations, it will be to give a realistic picture of the close ties established between our two countries and people over these past years.

The Romanian Government is convinced that Romania and Senegal have at their disposal an important economic and human potential, which will make possible greater cooperation in the future.

RENE ATTACKS INDIAN OCEAN MILITARY BUILDUP

Victoria NATION in English 8 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

PRESIDENT Albert René has again spoken of the dangers inherent in the continued military build-up in the Indian Ocean — as he promised to carry on doing as long as the threat still exists. He also expressed the hope once more that there would be a speedy withdrawal of all foreign military forces from the area.

Mr. René made his latest plea in an address read on his behalf by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Jacques Hodoul, during a reception last night hosted by the Ambassador of the Soviet Union, Mr. Alexander Startsev, to celebrate the 63rd anniversary of the Great October Socialist Revolution.

"The Republic of Seychelles continues to view the rising military build-up in the Indian Ocean with alarm", Mr. René said. "The presence of military vessels and the proliferation of military support facilities continue to grow daily despite repeated calls of Indian Ocean states to turn the area into a Zone of Peace.

"Recent developments in the Persian Gulf have generated a renewed convergence of foreign warships on the area and an intensification of diplomatic activity as efforts to secure shore-based military facilities in the littoral states of the Indian Ocean are stepped up.

Short-term advantages

"It is regrettable to note that certain countries of the region have fallen prey to such overtures in return for short-term material advantages. Their actions can only serve to aggravate an already dangerous situation.

"On a more positive note I am pleased to note that the Soviet Union has exercised restraint in recent months and has desisted from matching the military build-up which has taken place recently in the area. Such restraint is commendable and, hopefully, it will be reciprocated by those foreign countries which have established a military presence in the Indian Ocean.

"We hope, however, that the forthcoming conferences which will be held in Sri Lanka and in the Malagasy Republic will result in the formulation of a concrete plan of action designed to finally ensure a speedy withdrawal of all foreign military forces from the area."

The President's speech also briefly analysed the effect on the world of the Great Socialist Revolution.

"To the people of Seychelles this event has a special significance", he said. "Not only does it mark the transition of the Soviet peoples 63 years ago from a feudal monarchy to one of the outstanding socialist models of our time but it also represents the first serious attempt to evolve a system based on the principles of equality and social justice.

"Socialism, as we know it today, finds its roots in the Great Bolshevist Revolution of 1917. The shot fired from the Aurora in October, 1917 signalled the emergence of a new force in the world. With it the idealism which had kindled the revolutionary fervour of great social thinkers such as Karl Marx and Frederick Engels suddenly found tangible expression.

"Sixty-three years later the effects can be felt beyond the boundaries of the USSR. Many progressive Third World countries have modelled their system of Government on the principles of socialism following their liberation from colonial rule. The socialist movement grows daily in strength throughout the world. That the Soviet Union helped to pioneer the socialist movement is a historical fact of which the Soviet peoples can be justly proud.

"The Seychellois people are, therefore, pleased to join them in celebrating this happy event today."

Turning to Seychellois-Soviet relations, Mr. René said they have improved steadily during the past few years.

"Our friendship, Mr. Ambasador, is based on a mutual respect for each other's views. Our perception and interpretation of events in the world may not always coincide but we have always discussed our differences in a frank and open manner. It is our intention to pursue this policy and to continue to promote better understanding between our two peoples.

Only in this way can we ensure that our friendship develops from a sound base and that it can be sustained even through periods of adversity."

Expressing his regret for not being able to participate personally at the celebrations, President René concluded by expressing the wish that "the friendship which exists between our two countries will continue to grow in the years ahead and that from this friendship will emerge a better understanding of the aspirations of our respective peoples.

"Only by fostering friendship and understanding between nations can we hope for peace, stability and progress in the world."

Earlier the Soviet Ambassador had described the road of scientific socialism adopted by his country with the Great October Revolution as the "shortest way in history from poverty and misery to the well-being of the people as a whole".

Growing tension

Mr. Startsev said the Soviet Union fully understands Seychelles' concern over foreign military bases and growing tension in the Indian Ocean and the aspirations of the Seychellois for the future.

"This concern time and again has been spelled out by President France Albert René, and found its expression in various practical initiatives of the Republic in the field of international relations. For my part, may I say in all frankness that we do share these sentiments.

"It is widely known that the Soviet Union on more that one occasion has put forward and is ready to support any reasonable initiative aimed at achieving a durable solution to the problems of the Indian Ocean, at turning it at last into a zone of peace.

"In our view, these goals will be served by forthcoming conferences in Colombo and Antananarivo.

"The Soviet people take to heart and fully understand the aspirations of the People's Party and Government of Seychelles to consolidate independence of their young Republic, ensure its socio-economic progress and make its contribution to the solution of the most challenging tasks of the present day. "In this context, I may say that we are deeply satisfied by the fact that our approaches to the absolute majority of international issues and developments are very much alike.

"It is especially worth stressing here that this coincidence of views is determined not by any kind of dependence on each other, but by common adherence and devotion to the same ideals of justice and humanism. These common ideals we regard as the most solid foundation and pledge of further successful development of the relations of equality, friendship and mutual sympathy between our countries and peoples."

Among the guests at the reception were Ministers Guy Sinon, Maxime Ferrari, Philibert Loizeau, Ogilvy Berlouis, James Michel and Karl St. Ange.

SPPF OPENS BRANCH OFFICE IN POINTE LARUE

Victoria NATION in English 10 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Text]

THE new Pointe Larue branch office of the Seychelles People's Progressive Front was officially opened on Saturday evening by SPPF Secretary General and Minister of Administration and Political Organisation, Mr. Guy Sinon.

Also present were Mr. Matthew Servina, SPPF Assistant Secretary General and Minister of Transport and Tourism, other members of the Party's Central Committee, Government officials and Pointe Larue branch members.

In his opening speech, Minister Sinon congratulated all those who had helped towards the construction of the office and added that he hoped the office would fully serve the people of Pointe Larue.

"The office cost around R. 52,000 and the SPPF gave R. 30,000," he said.

"The rest of the money has been raised by the branch and we are very happy that the people of Pointe Larue have contributed towards the realisation of this project."

Underlying the role of the SPPF office in the construction of our new society, Mr. Sinon pointed out that it is the people who decide what policy the Government should take.

"It is the people who decide their destiny and the office will enable the people of Pointe Larue to contribute fully by sharing their views".

Mr. Harry Gabriel, chairman of the Pointe Larue branch, said the office was a great step forward in the progress of the Pointe Larue community.

"Nevertheless," Mr. Gabriel said, "we have taken more time than needed to complete the office. I think this is due to the lack of interest, responsibility, cooperation and goodwill that some of our people show."

He added that the office would also be used as an adult education centre, a place where the people of Pointe Larue would develop their craft and cultural talents, and to explain SPPF policies.

"The office will also be used as a library where the people of Pointe Larue will be able to consult documents which will be put at their disposal," he said.

The office has been built on a plot of Government land behind which the Pointe Larue sportsmen will lay out a volleyball court. There will be somebody in the office daily to meet people, take up their problems and suggestions and forward them to the SPPF central committee.

MODERN ICE PLANT TO BOOST FISH CATCHES

Victoria NATION in English 13 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

A NEW ice plant to boost local fish storage will soon be in operation at the Long Pier. Construction work on the plant is coming to an end and the contractors, Machinery and Equipment Seychelles Ltd. have this week begun installing the equipment that will make the ice lumps.

The modern automatic plant, which will help to implement the country's fisheries policies and enable traditional fishermen to stay at sea for longer periods, has been financed by a loan from the Abu Dhabi Development Fund.

It is expected to be in use in January and will have several advantages over present supplies provided by Seychelles Breweries:

● The ice will be delivered directly on to the fishing boats — this will represent a saving on transport costs and reduce the loss through melting while in transport.

● The plant will supply bit ice of three by four centimetres — this will make it more practical for the fishermen as it will do away with the need to chop down the ice blocks as at present, which sometimes bruises the fish.

● The new plant will have a production capacity of 10 tons per day with a storage capacity of 20 tons which can be doubled according to demand — this will ensure that boats are not forced to remain idle because the demand for ice cannot be met when needed.

A spokesman for the Fisheries Division said yesterday that before setting up the plant, everything had been carefully planned.

"The number of schooners using ice at present is approximately 30 and the ice produced by the plant will be more than sufficient," he added. "And since the ice will be in bits and delivered at the Long Pier it will be more practicable for the fishermen and save them time, effort and money as well as preserving the fish much better than the big chunks now used".

The setting up of the ice plant is the second important phase in the fisheries development policies of Seychelles. The third phase will be the fisheries harbour project, which is still under study.

TRADE UNION SEMINAR--The Seychelles National Workers' Union will hold a trade union seminar at Les Palmes Theatre, Mont Fleuri, beginning next week. The seminar, which will last for eight days, will be assisted by the All Union Central Council of Trade Unions (AUCCTU) and will be officially opened on Wednesday, November 19. It will go on until November 28. The seminar, which will have as its theme "The role of the Seychellois in the creation of a socialist society" will provide the basis for an analysis of the socialist society we are creating to enable the participants to realise the need for full contribution by workers in the realisation of our society's objectives. Subjects to be covered by the seminar will include a wide range of passing problems in connection with the theory and practice of the trade union movement in Seychelles. It is hoped that the official opening of the seminar will be performed by the SPPF Secretary General Mr Guy Sinon, who is also Minister for Administration and Political Organisation. The seminar forms part of the education programme of the NWU to help workers assume their responsibilities as true citizens and thus help set up the society we are trying to establish. It is of primary importance for the people of Seychelles to know the duties of the NWU so they will know their responsibility and duties towards the country. KUWAITI FISHERIES AID--Seychelles has been granted R.7 million to finance two important feasibility studies in fisheries and water supply. This is the result of the visit of a five-strong mission from the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development to the Republic earlier this month. The delegation, led by Mr. Bader Al-Humaidhi, the Fund's Director of Operations, were here from October 24 to 26. The first of the studies is concerned with water supply and will examine the technical feasibility of building a dam on the Baie Lazare river to provide assured supplies of treated water in South Mahe. The current drought emphasizes the importance of this project and if the study is positive, the Kuwait Fund is expected to help with finance for the construction work. The second study is in fisheries and is concerned with the identification of viable projects to exploit the resources of the Seychelles Exclusive Economic Zone. In particular, it is anticipated that this study will identify onshore projects such as processing, freezing and storage facilities. Both these studies will start early in 1981 and are further signs of a close relationship developing with the Kuwait Fund, and of the friendly and positive attitude of the Arab world towards Seychelles in its struggle for development. PAC PRAISES SA FLIGHT BAN--Seychelles has been congratulated by the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania for banning flights by South African Airways to the country. In a message addressed to President Rene through its permanent representative at the United Nations, Mr. Henry Isaacs, the PAC said the decision showed the commitment of the Government and people of Seychelles to the struggle for national liberation and self-determination in Azania. "We are mindful of the fact that the Government and people of Seychelles, under the leadership of President Rene, have continuously been reducing the economic and other ties with Pretoria, which were a legacy of colonialism," said the message. In this respect, it continued, Seychelles has not only been upholding the resolutions of the United Nations and the Organisation of African Unity but also contributing to the cause of freedom and justice in Azania. COCONUT PRODUCTION PROJECT--New agricultural machinery will shortly be helping to improve the cultivation of coconuts and the processing of by-products in Seychelles. A range of equipment, which will be used for felling trees, carting off and treating logs, clearing and levelling land, and digging planting holes, was handed over to the Department of Agriculture yesterday by the British High Commissioner, Mr. Eric Young, on behalf of the British Government. Accepting the machinery with thanks at the Grand Anse experimental station, Mr Karl St. Ange, Minister of State for Agriculture, said the coconut industry in Seychelles was now facing a re-birth. "We have in the past faced many problems in this field of agriculture, but these are being overcome, and the planting and harvesting are getting to be much easier," he said. Mr Young said Britain was glad to be helping coconut production, one of Seychelles' most important industries. Assistance also included the arrival of experts in the Republic to help combat coconut pests, find the most economical use of the residues left after the felling of palms and train operators for the machines. Some success had already been achieved, he said, with the production of coconut charcoal. [Excerpt] [Victoria THE NATION in English 11 Nov 80 pp 1, 2]

NO RICE SHORTAGE--A consignment of 2,000 tonnes of rice is being unloaded at the New Port from the ship Taipan Pride which arrived in Victoria yesterday. The ship arrived from Karachi with high-grade rice, while a second rice ship--this time from Bangkok--is also expected this week. A third ship is also on its way to Seychelles, bringing yet more rice. The Taipan Pride will be loading copra from Port Victoria on its way back to Pakistan. During the past weeks there have been rumours of a rice shortage in the country, but it has been found, however, that this shortage was artificial. A spokesman for the Seychelles Commodity Company (SEYCOM), which imports rice, yesterday declared that hidden stocks of rice had been recovered from certain merchants and there had been one reported case of a retailer selling one bag of rice for some R.200--far above the normal price! Had threre not been an artificial shortage of rice in the country, the old stock would have lasted until the end of this month, according to SEYCOM officials. With the new consignments of rice, there will now be two retail prices for this commodity. The regular grade will remain at R.3 a kilo, while the higher grade will be selling at R.4 a kilo. SUPERPOWERS' STRAITS OF HORMUZ PATROLLING CONDEMNED

[Article by Mohamoud M. Afrah]

[Text]

In our Readers' Forum, a reader says that the superpowers poured sophisticated weapons in the third world countries and when these weapons are used by their clients they profess to be surprised and start thinking how to put an end to the hostilities. But the armed conflict between Iraq and Iran did not come as a complete surprise to many of us in the third world countries. Arming two neighbourly Moslem countries to the teeth using the outdated labels of «Good Guys» and «Bad Guys» whenever they deal with politicians in the developing countries confirms the superpowers position.

Iraq and Iran may fight and fight until doomsday, but what surprises us is that superpower patrol boats and destroyers have been policing traffic through the strait of Hormuz and the Indian Ocean, interrogating ships, instructing them to fly white flags and threaten to blockade those ships who refuse to do so.

Briefly, what are these superpowers, naval units and task forces upto? why aggravate the situation? They claim that their intervention is to keep the Strait of Hormuz open and ensure the flow of oil from the Gulf area. We are aware that these superpowers are pleased to see third world countries fight it out so that they will have a future market for their military hardware. But concern over why the superpowers are concentrating their navy, including amphibious ships with thousands of troops aboard in the area is very strong in the third world countries.

Press reports disclose that the Americans, the Soviets, the British and the French have several destroyers, frigates and aircraft carriers patrolling the Indian Ocean areas in order to put the littoral states into superpower orbit. Over shadowing this is the grim threat of direct superpower confrontations over future access to crucial Gulf Oil supplies. The danger grows with everyday the fighting continues and the prospect of an early peace fades. According to the Washington Post continued hostilities and turmoil in the area could raise the peril of global nuclear war to a flash point.

It is no secret that detente between the United States and the Soviet Union has been in trouble. Accusatory rhetoric has escalated on both sides, but given what we have heard from President-elect, Ronald Reagan, during his election campaign, I suspect that detente will be thrown overboard in the years to come.

FRG MAGAZINE 'NO MORE STARVATION' ALLEGATION DENOUNCED

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 14 Nov 80 p 2

[Commentary by Mohamoud M. Afrah: "Lie of the Year Exposed"]

[Text]

Normally we do not answer articles appearing in the yellow press, but the West German sensational magazine, «QUICK», in its issue No. 43 of 16th October, 1980, which carried an article entitled «NO MORE STARVATION IN SOMALIA» by its reporter, Axel Thorer, deserves our attention. The article says, among other slanted reporting, that there is no refugee problem in Somalia, and the reporter amazingly contradicts himself in his next breath and says, «aid from all over the world and especially from West Germany has worked well.» Now, did the reporter and people in his school of thought wanted the aid not to work well?

Mr. Thorer quotes a German nurse working in one of the refugee camps in Somalia as saying: «Since half a year ago there has been no malnutrition in the camps.» But he contradicts himself ridiculously again by saying that when he showed her and the other 23 DRG (German Red Cross) people in Somalia the gruesome photos which went to the press «as recent as this month,» they winked and said, «all of them are old photos. People have to see them today.» Again, the question is: did the reporter and, for that matter the sensation-mongering magazine, wanted the refugee children and their mothers to remain under malnutrition and the threat of starvation? Doesn't the editors of the magazine and its, perhaps pre-oriented reporter, understand that the purpose of the aid was to save the refugees from malnutrition, hunger and disease

ral Republic of Germany, that if refugees in the camps, who were in critical condition few months ago, are today looking better than before, for the aid given to them is just meant for that purpose. They do not depend on slanted reportings by sensational journalists, like Axel Thorer, acquiring rumours from the enemies of Somalia through a five-minute chat and a one-day visit to the refugee camps or the pronouncements of third rate reports prepared by fifth rate rumour mongers.

May I pause here to suggest to people like Thorer and the editor of «QUICK» magazine for ideas for new articles like «Death of Villages and Towns in Western Somalia», about «Women and Babies Slaughtered», about «Waterwells poisoned and Livestock Machinegunned» by mercenaries in Western Somalia and last but not least «Strafe-bombing Rufugee Camps and Towns inside Somalia» by Cuban piloted and Soviet-made Migs.

ITALIAN ASSISTANCE TO PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION FIELD

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 21 Nov 80 p 2

[Text]

Mogadishu, Thursday — The friendly relations between Revolutionary Somalia and Italy have once again and significantly been asserted, thanks to a new and enlightened initiative sponsored by Mr. Marcello Salimei, Italian Ambassador to Somalia. The Italian Government has in fact expanded the scope of its assistance to the development of higher education, to include the specialized training provided to government officials and new entrants to the civil service by the Somali Institute of Development Administration and Management (SIDAM), the sole institution catering to the training needs of Public Administration in Somalia.

To this end, the Italian Foreign Ministry has enlisted the competent services of Cotecno, a consulting firm based in Rome, which will provide teaching aids as well as lecturers in fields of special interest for the Somali Public Administration. A number of valuable books on industrial management have been presented in these last days to Jaalle Ibrahim M. Abyan, Dean of SIDAM, by Mr. Malesani, of the Italian Foreign Ministry, Department of Technical Cocperation, on behalf of Cotecno. In their talks, Jaalle Abyan and Mr. Malesani have made plans for a course on Stores Management and Procurement, scheduled to start in January 1981, with the participation of high calibre lecturers carefully selected by Cotecno for the purpose.

In view of the important role which Public Administration play in our country, this initiative is welcomed by the Somali Government, and it is cooperation may be further strengthened in the future.

FRG AGRICULTURAL, VETERINARY ASSISTANCE PRAISED

Mogadishu HEEGAN in English 14 Nov 80 p 24

[Text]

Bonn (Dad) — For the past year three specialists from the West German food safeguards programme have been working in Somalia. It is a private agency closely associated with an international consultancy and mainly does contract work for the European Community and the Bonn government.

Bonn is to help Somalia set up a countrywide net-work of 35 meteorological stations and compile comprehensive data on agricultural output. The aim is to provide early warning of poor harvests and enable the authorities to take appropriate action.

That is not all the Aachen agency's experts hope to accomplish. They plan to teach Somalia's nomad cattle farmers the basics of crop farming. «It would be enough if at least fodder crops for the cattle were grown.» says Dr Ulrich Daldrup.

West German experts are also lending a hand at the new veterinary laboratory in Kisimayu, on which work began in 1977 to serve Southern Somalia as a diagnostic centre. The veterinary field service has been set up in Lower Juba region with aid and a wide range of equipment from the Federal Republic of Germany.

Vets, research scientistis and laboratory assistants are mainly concerned with combating major cattle diseases. Advisory services extend to epidemiological tests and vaccination campaigns.

Improvements in educational facilities also promise to bring long-term benefits. To relieve pressure on the State Printing Press in Mogadishu, Bonn has supplied Somalia with extra equipment to print school textbooks.

In 1978 German experts started advising their Somali colleagues who underwent training in German printing houses. The quality of Somali textbooks has since improved substantially, with millions in print runs coming off the presses.

NATURE, EFFECTS OF CABINET CHANGES DISCUSSED

Paris LE MONDE in French 9-10 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by J-P L]

[Text] Tanzania has a new prime minister. On 7 November President Neyrere named Cleopha Msuya to this office. Forty-nine years old, Msuya was industrial minister in the preceding cabinet. The head of the outgoing government, Edward Sokoine, who is suffering from diabetes, had asked to be relieved of his functions. The promotion of Msuya puts him in a successor position, but it is still too early to evaluate his political future. Neyrere has already indicated that he will not seek a new term of office in the 1985 election. Considered the confident of the chief of state, and an efficient technician, Msuya could play a more important role than his predecessors, since Neyrere seems especially preoccupied with the direction of the party.

The nomination of Msuya is coupled with a major ministerial shake-up. More than half the posts are affected by these changes. Many of the new officials are making their debuts in government. Among the more notable changes is the replacement of Ben Mkapa in the foreign affairs office by Salim Ahmed Salim, a former journalist. Salim, 38 years old, was Tanzania's representative at the UN and was often cited as one of Waldheim's eventual successors; Mkapa will become minister of information.

Former vice president of the Republic, and several times prime minister, Rachidi Kawawa has been replaced as minister of defense. Named minister of state, he seems more or less eliminated from a position of power. He is replaced by Abdallah Twalipo, former chief of staff. The interior ministry goes to another officer, General Kimario. The appointment of two military men to these key posts is proof of Neyrere's desire to move the army closer to the affairs of state, or, in other words, to control it more closely.

NEW ELECTION POSTPONEMENT

Paris LE MONDE in French 29 Oct 80 p 7

[Article: "Uganda: The New Election Postponement Reveals the Spread of Anarchy"]

[Text] Envisioned for 30 September, then for 10 December, the legislative elections have just been postponed once again in Uganda. According to REUTER, which cites diplomatic sources, they will not take place before the end of January 1981, because of the delay in opening the electoral rolls and the upsurge in violence throughout the country, including the capital, where several murders were committed in the last few days.

Eighteen months after the overthrow of Marshal Amin by a Tanzanian expeditionary corps, Uganda is experiencing total anarchy. In the northwest, looters--and not enemies of the regime, as one might have believed in the beginning--are spreading terror. Four missionaries (three Americans and one Briton), moreover, were wounded by bullets in this sector. In the northeast, where famine rages, cattle thieves this weekend killed two Ugandan servicemen. At Kampala, the military commission in power seems incapable of maintaining law and order.

Put in power by the Tanzanians, Yusuf Lule, president of the Ugandan National Liberation Front, who displeased them rather quickly was dismissed, at the end of 68 days, in June 1979. The Kampala court of appeals has just decided that Mr Lule, exiled to London, legally remains chief of state. The military commission, which turned Mr Binaisa, Mr Lule's successor, out of power, will undoubtedly hardly take this judgment into account; several of its members are at the beck and call of former President Obote, whose blunders had facilitated, in 1971, the seizing of power by Amin Dada.

The former dictator's successors have been incapable of reestablishing the state; the economy is in ruins, the administration no longer functions. To return to power, Mr Obote--who is close to President Nyerere who gave him asylum for 8 years--can count on the support of 10,000 Tanzanian soldiers based in Uganda. But the military commission is not unanimous in wishing his return to public affairs and, in any case, banditry is too developed, even within the Tanzanian and Ugandan armies, for Mr Obote to get himself elected easily.

Is Uganda condemned to swing between anarchy and dictatorship? Or could it become the theater of a new, "friendly" foreign intervention, as might be understood from the "cordiality" of the discussions which Mr Muwanga, chairman of the Kampala military commission, has just had in Addis Ababa with the Ethiopean chief of state, discussions which dealt with the "internal and external security problems of Uganda?"

WARNING: SELLING FOOD TO FOREIGNERS MAY LEAD TO FAMINE

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 13 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

WOMEN who sell millet, cassava and other foodstuffs along the Kenya-Uganda border, have been warned by the local authorities. Tororo district may be faced with an imminent famine, if the local women continue selling foods to hungry Kenyan "magendoists".

In one of the local rallies in a border village, a chief was noted to have issued a serious warning to this effect. He said "food sales in open markets in Kwapa, is banned". He added that anyone who was found selling such food in these or other markets in the neighbourhood, would be dealt with by the law.

The chief noted that Kenyans were crossing into Uganda by road, to smuggle out our produce. He reminded his people about the present Karamoja famine. The same famine was experienced in some parts of Tororo where a prolonged drought gravely affected planting seasons.

Like other parts of Uganda, many Kenyans were also faced with a famine problem. The barter system has been on the increase. Kenyans exchange their fish and meat for the dear cereals and cassava.

The chief said that if the local people sold out all their food, the government would find it difficult to feed them.

Trade along the Uganda/Kenya border has been going on unhindered for ages. It has been very difficult for the uncustomed goods to be apprehended. This is so because there are many outlets across the border that are not guarded. Some of these paths have been used by smugglers.

SWISS AGREE TO 26 MILLION SHILLINGS FOR TEA FIRM

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 13 Nov 80 p 8

[Article by Sam Serwanga]

[Text] A 26m2-pact for a complete overhaul of the Salama Tea Estate factory and construction of a new one with 1.5 million kilogrammes capacity, near Mukono, was yesterday concluded in Kampala.

The chairman, and general manager of Agricultural Enterprises Limited Mr V. Edoku, and Mr F. M. Mweheire, and the director general and managing director for Teatec (U) Ltd, Mr Erwin Reichlin and Mr S. K. Tiwangye, respectively signed on behalf of the two firms.

Teatec is a Swiss firm incorporated in Switzerland and the Agricultural Enterprise is a Ugandan parastatal body dealing in agricultural projects.

Mweheire said the existing Salama Tea Factory was one of the oldest in Uganda, with an installed capacity of 0.9m kilogrammes a year.

In the last nine years its production had gone down from 771,000 kg in 1971 to 88,000 kg in 1978. There had been constant breakdowns of the obsolete machinery at the factory. This had caused work stoppages and throwing away of green leaves in large quantities.

"In 1978, the total amount of green leaves was 892,532 kg which would end up in an output of made tea equivalent to 178,506 kg. This would earn 2.5m/-.

"Todate the situation is worse. The firm can only handle 15 per cent of the 0.9m kg."

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL IN FAVOR OF GENERAL CENSUS

Lubumbashi MJUMBE: LE QUOTIDIEN DU SHABA in French 11 Aug 80 pp 1, 6

[Excerpt] At its weekly meeting on 8 August, the executive council declared itself in favor of a demographic and socioeconomic census of the Republic of Zaire, which still remains one of the few countries in the world not to have available current and reliable information in figures on the vital areas of its development in general and of its population in particular. In the council's opinion, only a general census of the population in particular, carried out with all scientific and technical exactness, guaranteeing the reliability of the results, will make it possible to have available indispensable information on:

--the total volume of the population by age and by sex;

--the school-age population;

--the working and nonworking population;

--the population by profession and branch of activity;

--the volume of the rural and urban population;

--the extent of the rural exodus;

--the agricultural and nonagricultural population;

--the distribution of the population throughout the national territory;

--the extent of adult and infant mortality;

--the elimination of illiteracy and the level of education;

--vital statistics, that is, birth, death and residence; etc.

The state commissioner for national orientation, culture and art has finally announced that following a request made by the executive council, the United Nations has indicated its agreement to contributing technically and financially to the carrying out of this census.

GOVERNMENT HAUNTED BY POOR ECONOMIC PERFORMANCE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Nov 80 p 2

[Text]

THE poor economic performance by the country has continued to have direct and adverse effects on the balance of payments, Government budget and employment levels.

As a result of this there has been a reduction in export earnings and the country has been unable to import sufficient quantities of essential commodities for both direct consumption and maintenance of full production capacity.

This is contained in the administrative committee report of inquiry into salaries, salary structures and conditions of service of the Zambia Public and Teaching Services, the Local Government, judicial, Zambia Police and Prison Services when it looked at the state of economy of the country.

It points out that Zambia's economy continues to depend heavily on copper whose demand has fallen because of world-wide recession.

"The combined effects of declining copper prices and output, have reduced the volume of the country's foreign exchange earnings and Government revenue," explains the report.

As a result of foreign exchange shortages, production in many local industries has sharply declined leading to persistent shortages, price increases and falling employment levels.

It says that the main feature of foreign exchange problems had been the worsening balance of payments position resulting in the accumulation of payment arrears which in January this year reached the peak of K517 million.

The existence of unpaid bills has decidedly discouraged exporters from extending credit facilities to Zambia thereby exacerbating shortages and inflationary pressures.

In the mining sector, the report says difficulties encountered between 1975 and 1978 were largely because of poor copper prices, transport constraints on Tazara and low production levels caused by rising production costs.

Cobalt which offered new prospects for the country has, unhappily, not been realised to the extent previously expected. The other two metals, zinc and lead suffered the same fate as copper and cobalt in terms of reduced production and sales as well as poor prices.

The performance of agriculture has been disappointing both in real terms and at current prices.

The report says because of such a gloomy situation, it is evident that any additional Government expenditure can only be met from new fiscal policy measures and savings.

It notes that incomes in the country are unevenly distributed. The richest 2 per cent of all households earn about 20 per cent of the entire national household income, the same amount as the poorest 50 per cent.

KAUNDA ANNOUNCES PLANS TO OPEN MORE MINES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

SEVERAL mines will be opened within the next four years with the help of other countries in a programme aimed at halting the nation's dependence on copper, President Kaunda announced yesterday.

The Government was holding discussions with friendly nations interested in helping Zambia exploit her natural resources like uranium, emeralds and other minerals, he said.

Dr Kaunda was addressing a rally in Lusaka's Mtendere township on the Party and its Government's programme against poverty and its offshoots of hunger, ignorance, disease, crime, corruption and exploitation of man by man.

He said these evils stood in the way of man's efforts to reach a point in time when he would love God with all his heart, soul and mind.

"The Party is determined to fight all these evils through a number of programmes which have been drawn up in all areas of human endeavour," the President said.

The Party would ensure that its programmes succeeded despite campaigns against it by the enemies.

He said when the "operation food" programme, which is one way of fighting hunger was announced, the enemies said it would never succeed.

Now that they have seen the programme getting off the ground and a number of countries sending their people to come and help, the enemies have started spreading rumours that State farms would be for leaders in the Party and its Government.

The President appealed to Zambians not to listen to rumour-mongers, assuring them that the farms were for the people.

He said: "These people are going round even now spreading these malicious rumours, but you should know that they are not our farms, they are yours," he told the rally.

Dr Kaunda said in an effort to make the country grow its food, the Party was encouraging commercial farmers in a number of ways and the recently announced concessions on seeds and other requisites were part of the campaign.

"I would like to praise their organisation for writing me a letter in which they have pledged full support for Zambia," Dr Kaunda said.

He hit out at external enemies, saying they should leave Zambia alone and that although they had failed in the past, they would continue to hatch more evil schemes against Zambia because the country has refused to be a puppet.

Penetrate

Earlier, member of the Central Committee for Lusaka Province Mr Fines Bulawayo said the area, especially Lusaka Urban, was politically strong and no enemy could penetrate it no matter what tricks he used.

He said agriculturally, the province was doing well

He told the President that the sunflower production target set for the province this year was 11,000 bags.

"We have also sold 200,000 bags of maize to Namboard, a result which we have achieved because we have pledged to eat what we produce," he said.

● The Southern Province has ordered 150 bicycles for extension workers in the department of agriculture to enable them to extend their services to as many farmers as possible.

A spokesman for the department said in Choma that since the province was determined to play a major role in the success of the current "operation food" and "lima" national programmes, everything possible was being done to improve the services of extension workers.

DECLINE OF RCM PROFITS REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

ROAN Consolidated Mines [RCM] made an after-tax profit of K11,699,000 in the three months ended September 30, 1980.

According to a statement released in Ndola yesterday, this figure was low compared with the K31,629,000 recorded in the same period of the 1979/80 financial year.

"The depressed cobalt market was the primary reason for the fall in net earnings. However, in view of the world-wide economic recession the company's performance in the September quarter is considered quite satisfactory," it said.

Meanwhile, the statement added, the outlook for metal markets remains uncertain, with no indication of an early recovery in the economies of the world's leading industrial nations.

Copper production, at 63,694 tonnes, was higher than the 61,487 tonnes produced in the September 1979 quarter and sales for this quarter of 70,364 tonnes were significantly higher than the 65,315 tonnes sold in the corresponding period of last year.

Copper sales values were K1,643 per tonne, an improvement over the K1,511 per tonne a year ago.

Cobalt production was 545 tonnes compared with 590 tonnes produced in the same quarter last year. Sales of 184 tonnes were less than 575 tonnes sold during the same period last year. "The reduced current demand for cobalt will mean further stockpiling until new sales opportunities are opened up for this metal."

The statement added that a significant addition to revenue this quarter was made by the increased values of precious metals and tankhouse slimes sold. These helped to bring the total sales income of the company in the quarter under review to K130,354,000 compared with K125,233,000 in the September 1979 quarter.

DETAILS ON MINEWORKERS UNION GIVEN

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Nov 80 p 4

[Article by Terence Musuku]

[Text] Times Staff writer Terence Musuku, who until recently was a senior journalist in charge of Mufulira division and has been associated with the mining industry for 12 years, looks at the Mineworkers Union of Zambia leadership and, inter alia, discusses the union's objections to the proposed decentralisation system. Read on ...

INDISPUTABLY, Mineworkers Union of Zambia [MUZ] is the largest among the labour organisations in Zambia. Functionally, however, MUZ, in the minds of industrial scientists, is somewhat defective.

This once internationally respected organisation has lost fire-power due to a not-so dynamic leadership which, paradoxically, has been failing to deliver the goods as expected.

In like manner, let's forgive — unconditionally — the leadership of Mine Workers Union of Zambia (MUZ) for their defective and misleading kind of leadership which, paradoxically, has been failing to deliver the goods expected.

MUZ, thus, no longer win satisfying conditions of service for their 56,000-plus members who, day in day out, moil and toil for no substantial remunerations and other benefits as in the past under the reign of the late Lawrence Katilungu.

Yet the sweat and labour of the miners keep the nation's economy sustained even in difficult times as at the moment.

Katilungu's achievements for Zambian miners, during his reign as MUZ president, need no emphasis, no recitals and no re-accounting. He is long gone but his name will remain immortal in the annals of MUZ as a labour organisation.

If we are to say tersely about him regarding his leadership qualities, all can be summed up in one word — PRAGMATIC. He was a tough negotiator with a mesmerising mind.

He was unreservedly hated by all mine managements, but dearly loved by miners en masse.

Katilungu, for his unflinching beliefs and goals he had for miners, was, in true effect, a cast spectre who invariably gave mine management officials nightmares.

But, in sharp contrast, today's MUZ leadership has taken a different approach: they believe in harmonising and fraternising with their supposed "opponents" — Association of Copper Mining Employers (ACME) who represent the mining companies in negotiations with MUZ.

The harmony and fraternity extends to MUZ branch leaders at each division of Nchanga Consolidated Copper Mines and Roan Consolidated Copper Mines.

One can liken the relations prevailing between the two bodies at divisional level to that of two loving brothers.

Naturally, this kind of relations benefit the mine managements rather than MUZ leaders in that, during negotiations, MUZ men enter the conference room with their minds already weakened.

Example

MUZ leaders, hence, accept unwittingly the so-called mutual understanding without knowing that it was a well-calculated design by mine managements to make them or turn them into a group of "Yes, sirs."

As one glaring example, mine managements meet residential, feeding and other costs when MUZ conduct seminars for branch officials.

At the end of the seminar, participants are treated to a life-swill with drinking/dancing parties organised at Lido Hall of Rokana Division; Chewama Hall (Mufulira); Nchanga Club (Chingola); Chaisa Hall (Luanshya) and at other divisional centres.

But, certainly how can MUZ, who earn no less than K56,000 in monthly subscriptions from the members, fail to organise a seminar out of their funds?

What overheads and other financial obligations are they committed to which make it too difficult for them to rely on their own when they organise the seminars?

MUZ, lest we forget, also generates income from the Katilungu House in Kitwe, through rentals and the Melting Pot restaurant. Known expenses are on salaries for full-time MUZ national leaders, secretaries and other workers.

MUZ is equally defective in another dimension of leadership. This is in actual negotiations.

Looking at the existing 1979 to 1982 Memorandum of Agreement, almost every "chapter and verse" stipulated in the agreement, directly or indirectly, favours the ACME or mine managements.

For reasons incomprehensible, MUZ signed the agreement without deciphering and understanding the implications.

Perhaps, ACME were too brainy and just outwitted MUZ representatives when the two groups met around the conference table to draw up and formulate the agreement covering pay scales, leave entitlement and other conditions of service.

Perhaps, tabulating a few excerpts from the agreement would illustrate my contention somewhat fully.

Under Job Grading, the agreement reads: "The grade of each job will be determined in accordance with the Joint Job Evaluation Agreement (1970) as from time to time amended by agreement between the parties.

"The rights of the companies, of individual employees, and of the union to request a re-evaluation with a view to the regrading of any job is provided for in the Joint Evaluation Agreement."

But, in practical terms, MUZ have no say nor representation when job evaluation officers are assigned to evaluate the job content of each job. So where is the Joint Evaluation system being put in practice as stipulated?

MUZ, as can be seen, in respect of job evaluation is involved only in theory.

We can cite another bone of contention, under Unofficial Strikes and Interference With Work: "The companies and the union recognise the serious and prejudicial effect that strikes, lockouts and other industrial actions on the part of employees in the Zambian copper mining industry can have on the national economy.

"They accept, therefore, that every attempt will be made to solve issues raised by fullest use of procedures for processing grievances and complaints which are laid down in the recognition agreement and that if no settlement is reached, they will act in accordance with labour legislation.

Conditions

"In the event, however, that there is any unauthorised strike or unconstitutional action, the head office officials, local officials of the union and shop stewards shall meet the following conditions:

1. Promptly order union members to return to work.
2. Refuse to aid or assist in any way such unconstitutional action.
3. In good faith use every reasonable effort to terminate such unconstitutional action.
4. Support the imposition of sanctions on employees who involve themselves in unconstitutional action."

Anybody reading this part of the agreement, as I have already mentioned, will tell in clear-cut understanding that the agreement was well worked out to favour mine managements.

On discipline, the agreement states: "The union acknowledges that it is the function of the companies to maintain order, discipline and efficiency and also to discharge, suspend or otherwise penalise employees for proper cause in accordance with the Industry Disciplinary Code and the Recognition Agreement."

This part, thus, in black and white gives almost absolute powers to managements to take whatever action against any employee charged with any kind of offence.

The question is: Why did MUZ commit or accept this kind of agreement?

Regarding the current issue — decentralisation — MUZ stands to blame. They have lamentably failed to play their cards well as from the time the Party and its Government put forward the proposal.

Better still, MUZ should have employed a more positive approach in negotiations with the Government by lobbying support in Parliament and during the National Council deliberations.

But, as judged by their utterances and threats, MUZ officials seem bent on putting their heads in the lion's mouth — Party and the Government — who they are trying to hold to a ransom.

Certainly, MUZ officials are taking workers on a fool's errand by challenging the proposed decentralisation system too late. Why did they allow the grass to grow under their feet?

Decentralisation, if implemented, will, of course, have adverse changes in the privileges miners have under the present set-up, which gives autonomous jurisdiction to mine managements in respect of housing administration.

One other consideration is that why should MUZ reject the whole decentralisation system outright? Why not only reject the part or proposal aimed at integrating the mine townships and municipal areas into one?

In their arguments, as released in their MUZ bi-annual resolutions passed in Livingstone, they feel that the integration would be to the detriment of miners generally.

They say: "The intended Local Administration Act is repealing the Mine Township Act Cap 472. This action is even worse than the integration of townships in itself.

"In addition to the above, the local government integration is aimed at depriving Zambians to exercise their rights to choose councillors since the election of Ward chairmen will only be confined to few Party cadres.

"This is a cardinal democratic principle which cannot be denied to Zambians in a democratic country like Zambia.

"It must also be noted that the decentralisation, if implemented, will place the administration of local authorities with the ruling Party, UNIP.

"Although we would be in the forefront to fight against anybody who wish to take power by force from popular elected Party and Government leaders, but this can happen.

"The conference, therefore, resolves:

(a) Strongly opposes the Bill and urges the Party and its Government to withdraw it.

(b) We further appeal to all who cherish democracy to oppose the Bill.

(c) We warn very strongly that the imposition of this Act will result in industrial action which will be too ghastly to contemplate.

(d) The conference loudly and clearly supports fully the petition by the ZCTU to high authorities on the issue.

(e) Those leaders who have participated in these local government elections should either withdraw their candidature or resign from MUZ leadership.

From the above, it is obvious that MUZ are fighting shy. They bungled from the beginning

All, however, is not lost: MUZ even at this stage must strike a balance between what is desirable and what is impossible for them to achieve.

GOVERNMENT BANS IMPORTATION OF BEANS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Nov 80 p 1

[Excerpt] THE Party and its Government has banned the importation of beans with effect from next year.

Announcing this, a spokesman for the Ministry of Agriculture and Water Development said in Lusaka yesterday that the decision had been taken to encourage local production of the crop to avoid shortages of the commodity.

"It is, therefore, important that farmers should with effect from this season increase their hectarage of beans to meet domestic requirements," he added.

Namboard general manager Mr Daniel Luzongo has described as a "drop in the ocean" this year's maize yield to meet the country's demand.

He could not say how many bags of maize his organisation had collected from farmers nor how long the commodity would last, but warned that the nation would have to look elsewhere for survival.

Mr Luzongo said Namboard had spent K150,000 to buy only 200 bags of maize after the October 15 deadline due to public outcry. He said this was a wastage of public funds.

He cited Keembe near Chisamba as one area where it was reported that there was still much maize awaiting collection after Namboard had closed depots for this year, and his men found nothing to buy.

He attributed the poor maize output to the bad season but assured the nation that Namboard had bought every grain available.

And ZANA reports from Solwezi that only one bag of groundnuts was sold to Namboard in Solwezi during the 1979/80 season, North-Western Province member of the Central Committee, Mr Fine Liboma was told Namboard's district manager, Mr Donald Skibell said farmers in the area were not keen on selling their groundnuts to Namboard because of low prices offered by the organisation.

Mr Liboma heard that the province produced a total of 15,543 bags of maize, 1,046 bags of sunflower, 442 bags of groundnuts Zambezi 193, Kabombo 248 and Solwezi, one.

Mr Liboma told officials at both Namboard and the AFC offices that President Kaunda would not forgive any province which did not do well in the food campaign from next season.

Meanwhile, the Southern Province Co-operative Marketing Union (SPCMU) has collected all the crops it bought from farmers this year, general manager, Mr Hasson Ramaswamy, said in Choma.

These included 1.4 million bags of maize, 98,500 bags of sunflower and 3,700 bags of groundnuts.

He said in all the cases, especially with sunflower, the yield was higher this year than last season's.

He said the union bought 54,000 more bags of maize, 48,500 more bags of sunflower and 400 more bags of groundnuts this year.

Mr Ramaswamy said all the crops from rural depots had been collected and the union was now preparing for the next season by providing farming requisites at its more than 400 depots.

Southern Province is determined to increase its maize production from the 1.5 million bags yield last season to between three and four million bags during the 1980/81 season.

And to achieve this, the Department of Agriculture in the province has called for closer cooperation, and co-ordination of work among all organisations and individuals concerned with food production.

SOKO URGES PEOPLE TO SUPPORT KAUNDA, PARTY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

IT is unbelievable that people the Party and its Government had helped to educate and rise to influencial positions should turn against President Kaunda and his leadership, Southern Province political secretary Mr Axon Soko has said.

Addressing newly elected Party officials at the Hindu hall over the weekend, he said UNIP fought for independence so that people could live in peace and harmony.

"It is therefore incredible to see the people, the Party and its Government helped to educate should now turn against President Kaunda and his Government," he said amid shouts of "shame, shame" from his audience.

Mr Soko, referring to the coup plot, said people who were giving President Kaunda headache and sleepless nights were none other than those who were eating and sleeping comfortably.

Anybody who wanted to be in power should go through the right channels and not to make short-cuts.

"By right channels I mean standing in an election and winning and not to try and grab power without the authority of the people, "Mr Soko told the meeting which was attended by Livingstone governor, Mr Mukazo Vunda and district political secretary, Mr Chicanga Mpepo.

In Kitwe, Hotel and Catering Workers Union general secretary, Mr Bob Shamusanga, urged workers in the hotel industry to be more security conscious and report people planning to subvert the Government to the police.

"Every worker should exercise a high sense of responsibility in the defence of the country," he told participants to a one-day seminar at Edinburgh Hotel.

He said members in the industry had a duty to flash out people who held clandestine meetings in hotels at which they discussed coup plans.

And in Kasama, Northern Province Member of the Central Committee, Mr Alex Shapi, has urged members of the defence force in the region to apply their energy to the food production in addition to defending the country, ZANA reports.

Mr Shapi was speaking at a pass-out parade for 80 Home Guards at the weekend.

PARTY DRIVE FACING SNAG, SAYS SIKUMBA

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

COPPERBELT Province political secretary, Mr Cox Sikumba, said in Ndola yesterday that there were difficulties in the Party drive to form sections in some high cost residential areas.

He said: "We still have a sizeable number of expatriate personnel, particularly in the mine townships, occupying houses in the high cost areas and this has caused problems in forming Party sections."

Mr Sikumba was speaking when Mrs Margaret Walawalkar, information and historical research officer from the Foreign and Commonwealth office in London, paid a courtesy call on him in his office.

Briefing her on the Party machinery and organisation, Mr Sikumba said there was effective communication in the system from the section right up to the Central Committee.

He said, however, that while branches and wards were easy to form, there were problems in forming sections in some high cost residential areas which still accommodated many expatriates.

This was because one area comprising 25 houses, the required number to constitute a section, could have only three Zambians while the rest were expatriates who were exempted from acquiring UNIP membership, according to the Constitution.

Mrs Walawalkar, who deals with African countries and some Indian Ocean islands, is on a familiarisation tour which will take her to Tanzania, Malagasy and Mauritius.

Mr Sikumba told her that Zambia was very grateful to the Commonwealth for the firm stand and interest taken on the liberation struggle, particularly the manner in which it handled the talks which led to the independence of Zimbabwe.

"We have nothing but admiration for the Commonwealth for its consistency," he said.

CAUSE OF PARTY FUNDS PROBLEM REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

THE absence of an accountant at Freedom House was the main cause of discrepancies in the accounts department of the Party, Secretary - General Chona, said in Lusaka yesterday.

Had it not been for this problem, the department would not have been weak resulting in discrepancies in the Party's accounts.

The Party chief was commenting on a report by auditors — Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company that about K5,255,000 loaned to Tika Limited and Zambia National Holdings Limited had not been accounted for.

The report was sent to the Chairman of the Economic and Finance Sub-Committee, Mr Wesley Nyirenda, on September 4 last year.

The auditors indicated that the loans were unsecured and the terms of repayment and the interest rates were not clear.

They added: "Moreover, no documents could be produced to enable us to establish the circumstances under which these loans were made available to the above institutions."

The report said Tika Limited was loaned K1,500,000 and the Zambia National Holdings Limited K3,755,000.

Mr Chona explained yesterday that these details were contained in a wrong document which was included by mistake by someone in the 1979 annual report of the Party presented to the 15th National Council by him.

He said unless the question of manning the accounts department was resolved, the present backlog of work "which somebody can term weakness will always be with us."

It was anomalous that the submission made on May 8, 1979 for the employment of the accountant (salaries) had not yet been acted upon, he said.

Mr Chona said he had apologised to the National Council for appending a wrong document to the report and subsequently withdrew it and replaced it with the audited accounts of the Party which would have been attached to the report. He did not disclose details of the document.

Remove

Referring to the loans granted to Tika and ZNH, Mr Chona said these were made in 1975 and legal technicalities were being worked out to remove any omissions made at the time of payment.

He refused to comment further on the Tika case because the matter was now in the hands of the Ministry of Mines.

"The point, therefore, is that until such time when the legal technicalities included above are finalised, the auditors should not expect to see share certificates in respect of the K3,755,000 paid to the ZNH in 1975," he said.

Loans and advances were running accounts and time would never come when these would cease to appear because they were always issued when the previous ones were cleared.

"Contrary to what is reported in the auditors' report, no salary advances were issued to officers who have not cleared the previous one, except those that are normally made in circumstances of unintentional accounting mistake," he said.

Retire

On the imprests, Mr Choma said in the past it was not possible administratively to require all the travelling Party officials to retire the imprests when they returned from their trips, particularly those stationed in provinces.

The Economic and Finance Committee has since taken a stand that no Party official would be given fresh imprest unless the previous one was cleared, and for others who might not be required to travel, letters would be sent to them to retire the imprest and this was normally done by way of filling in a subsistence allowance, he said.

NEW IDA TO GIVE INCENTIVES TO INVENTORS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE revised Industrial Development Act would give preference to investors prepared to use local raw materials, Commerce and Industry Minister, Mr Remmy Chisupa, has said.

Mr Chisupa said in an interview in Kitwe on Wednesday these investors would receive full support from the Government.

He said experts were revising the Act to cover all aspects of investment to make it effective and generate more employment.

But Mr Chisupa emphasised that the Government looked forward to new investors, particularly those making use of local agricultural materials.

"It is the intention of the Government that agricultural input should be localised and whoever produces the implements would be given more support," he said.

The minister said he could not see why industrialists, especially companies obtaining their raw materials within the country, should not double production.

He said one of the major complaints among a number of companies was the inadequacy of foreign exchange allocation. It is hoped once this bottleneck is removed industrialists would face the future with confidence," he added.

Meanwhile, Jamas milling company in Kitwe is installing new machinery worth K1.5 million to boost mealie meal and stockfeed production by about 200 per cent, managing director, Mr Michael Jamas, said when Mr Chisupa visited his mill.

Mr Jamas said the company at the moment produced 1,000 bags of roller and breakfast meal a day and two toenes of stockfeed an hour.

But when the new plant became operational at the end of this year, the company expected to produce 6,500 bags of mealie meal a day and nine tonnes of stockfeed an hour.

At Nkana milling the minister heard that the company had stopped producing chicken and stockfeeds due to alleged sporadic supply of maize by Namboard.

Managing director Mr Richard Mulenga said until the maize situation improved the company would continue to produce only mealie meal.

NEW SALARY STRUCTURE CRITICIZED

ZCTU Critical

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 21 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE new salary structure and conditions of service in the public, teaching, judicial, local government, defence, police and prison services have only increased the gap between the highest and lowest paid.

Zambia Congress of Trade Unions general-secretary Mr Newstead Zimba, yesterday urged unions affected by the White Paper to study the report in detail and make their recommendations to the ZCTU.

Mr Zimba was commenting on the White Paper released in Lusaka by Prime Minister Lusulo on Wednesday.

The ZCTU chief said from what he had read in the newspapers yesterday, the congress thought the salary structures had widened the gap between the highest and lowest paid instead of bridging it.

"At a glance, we are not bridging the gap at all. We have now made it wider. The gap is now a wider and a yawning one," Mr Zimba said.

He said the congress would make its stand known after receiving the White Paper. The unions would do the same and make their recommendations.

"We would like the four unions concerned to study in detail the White Paper and make their recommendations. Once they have given their comments, we will know what the labour movement's view will be generally," Mr Zimba said.

Essential

He was referring to the Zambia National Union of Teachers, the National Union of Public Service Workers, the Zambia United Local Authorities Workers Union and the Civil Servants Union of Zambia.

The labour movement could not rejoice now over the new conditions of service and salaries because prices of essential commodities could go up.

"We cannot rejoice today when tomorrow prices will go up. It is just as good as having nothing because the salaries will have gone back to square one. We cannot rejoice before the budget," Mr Zimba said.

Mr Ndola, chairman of the National Union of Public Service Workers, Mr John Simpito, declined to comment on the White Paper "because I have not studied the report."

The Zambia United Local Authorities Workers Union general secretary, Mr Ndawa Soko, would also not comment, and said he wanted to see the report first.

Many public workers in Kabwe applauded the new salary structure and conditions of service.

But some remained cautious and said they would wait for the arrears to be back-dated from August 1.

National Drug Company personnel manager Mr Eric Nawa praised the Party and its Government for the new salaries which he said compared favourably with those of Zimco.

Mr Nawa said the new conditions were "reasonable."

Good news

He described the increase of travelling allowance outside the country for public workers including civil servants from between K70 and K80 to between K100 and K120 a day as "good news."

"This is a great bonanza except that there are few people who travel outside Zambia," he said.

Lusaka-based unions reserved their comments on the salaries report until they have "studied it in detail."

Civil Servants Union of Zambia general secretary, Mr Alec Chirwa, said the union's negotiating committee of the national executive would meet today to discuss the report.

Zambia National Union of Teachers (ZNUT) acting general secretary, Mr Albert Chibale, said the union was studying the report and would issue an official statement later.

National Union of Public Service Workers general secretary, Mr Willie Mbewe, said he had been away in Livingstone organising a seminar and had not read the report yet.

Statistical Differences

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Nov 80 p 2

[Text]

THE central statistical office yesterday differed sharply with the Government commission on public service salaries over the definition of "low and high income groups."

In the wake of revisions in the public service salary structure, the central statistical office has started a quarterly publication called "Consumer Price Statistics" showing trends in the cost of living.

In the inaugural issue released at the weekend, the publication says: "The low income group is defined to be those urban households with gross monthly incomes of less than K150, while the high income group are those households whose incomes exceed K400 per month."

But according to the Ignatius Muchangwe salaries report released last week by Prime Minister Lisulo: "The low income group is defined as those households who, during 1974/5 were in receipt of gross monthly incomes of less than K100. The high income group are those whose households were receiving gross monthly incomes in excess of K300."

Question

Director of statistics Mr Mpafya Mulenga would not be reached for clarification yesterday, but the big difference in the statistical interpretation is expected to put into question the criterion used by the Muchangwe commission in revising the salaries.

On the basis that the high income group starts at K300 a month and not K400 as now reported by the statistical office, the salaries commission has advised the Government to increase the pay of high income earners more than the lower paid.

In their other reviews of the national economy, however, both the salaries report and the statistical office publication agree that the lower paid continue to be worse off than the high wage earners.

And Zambia's rates of inflation which were as high as 24 per cent for the low-income and 22 per cent for the high income groups in 1976, have continued to decrease.

The rates of inflation which have been fluctuating were likely to drop to less than ten per cent — much for the better.

According to a central statistics bulletin the lowest recorded rate of inflation for the low income group was reached last year at four per cent in July.

And that of the high income group only dropped to just below ten per cent. In February the rate went up from four per cent to eight per cent for the low income group while that of the other group rose to about 13 per cent.

By the end of September the rate of inflation for the high income group dropped to 11 per cent while that of the low income settled at nine per cent.

Tobacco

From the period September 1979 to September 1980 the rate of inflation in food, beverages and tobacco for the low income bracket was 12.8 per cent against 13.7 per cent for the other group.

The rates in the footwear and clothing in the same period were only 5.8 per cent for the low income compared to 8.3 per cent for high income.

Rent, fuel and lighting recorded an inflation rate of 7.2 per cent for the high income as opposed to 3.7 per cent in the other bracket.

The trend is the same in furniture, household goods with 3.6 per cent for the low income and 4.8 per cent for the high income.

MWILA WARNS OF EXODUS TO CITIES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 22 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] THE gap in the standard of living between urban and rural areas is widening very rapidly and unless the nation works extra hard to arrest the situation, no one will want to live in villages.

"This will be catastrophic because it will only accelerate the exodus of the rural population into already over-crowded urban areas," Minister of Agriculture and Water Development, Mr Unia Mwila, said yesterday.

He was addressing the House of Chiefs which has been meeting at Mulungushi Hall in Lusaka for the past four days.

Mr Mwila said as minister in charge of agriculture, he was concerned about this trend.

The minister was addressing the chiefs on the need for them to be actively engaged in the "lima" programme in order to improve the lives of their people.

Frustrated

He admitted that at times, people's efforts in the field of agriculture had been frustrated by certain factors, but he assured the chiefs that the Government was doing its best to ease these difficulties.

In this respect, preparations were being made to streamline the operations of certain service organisations so that they were geared to serving the people efficiently.

Without proper supporting services, he said, the desired boost to agricultural production would not be realised.

"Hence, good marketing facilities and networks of roads are a must," Mr Mwila said.

In order to achieve these objectives, a challenge of producing stockfeed locally must be answered by the farming community.

Mr Mwila said he was happy to note that some farmers had taken up the challenge and were making use of locally available materials to make stockfeed for their animals.

He urged chiefs to encourage their people to use simple agricultural tools and animal manure instead of fertiliser to avoid high costs.

True development, the minister stressed, meant direct involvement of the rural people in production using labour-intensive techniques where the father, mother and child participated in the work of the family garden.

It was important that leaders educated people that the use of expensive machinery was not the answer to raising the standards of living in rural areas, but that with careful use of simple tools, a great deal could be achieved, he said.

UNZA AGRICULTURE COURSE EXTENDED TO FIVE YEARS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 24 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE University of Zambia has extended its academic programme in the school of agriculture from four to five years in response to the ambitious food production programme launched by the Party and its Government.

The move is aimed at orienting students toward practical agricultural work and expose them to "real difficulties and frustrations" farmers face.

This was announced at the weekend by Unza Vice-chancellor, Dr Jacob Mwanza, at a graduation ceremony officiated by President Kaunda at Lusaka's Mulungushi Hall.

Dr Mwanza said the major task facing Zambia in the field of education was to consolidate the existing institutions, expand and orientate them toward solving social and economic problems.

Experience since independence had shown that the gap in the living standards of the farming communities in rural and urban areas had been widening, he said.

Dr Mwanza regretted that the demand for food for the past 16 years had been growing at an average of about 4.8 per cent while production had only increased to about 2.8 per cent.

The importation of food as a temporary relief to redress the situation was not a solution. He suggested that ways and means of increasing output of food and other agro-industrial inputs be found.

ZNS AUTHORIZED TO SUPPLY FUEL TO COOPERATIVES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 25 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Zambia National Service has been authorised to increase diesel supplies to rural reconstruction cooperatives during the ploughing and planting season.

This follows a shortage of fuel in the centres which had been brought to the attention of the Secretary of State for Defence and Security Zulu.

Mr Zulu has authorised the increase in the supplies in view of the importance the Party and its Government attaches to the "operation food programme."

Meanwhile, Yugoslav agricultural experts will soon be coming to Zambia to finalise talks on that country's participation in the K400 million "operation food production" programme.

This was announced in Lusaka yesterday by Yugoslav ambassador to Zambia, Mr Radivoje Markovic, who said preparations for talks between Zambia and his country had been going on for the last two months.

The ambassador was speaking at a Press conference to mark Yugoslav's national day to be celebrated on Saturday.

In Ndola, British high commissioner to Zambia Mr John Johnson said his country had ploughed K20 million into agricultural schemes in Central and Northern provinces.

He said Britain would continue to help Zambia in development programmes, including the K400 million "operation food production" programme launched by President Kaunda.

Speaking when he paid a courtesy call on the Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee, Mr Shadreck Soko at his office, Mr Johnson said Britain had been helping developing nations in agriculture.

The envoy, who is on a three-day tour of the Copperbelt, said although his main interest was to inspect agricultural schemes in which Britain was involved he was visiting the province because it was the industrial centre.

INQUIRY INTO SOUTHERN PROVINCE LAND OWNERSHIP REPORTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

THE land shortage in Southern Province is a result of many fertile farms being owned by a few individuals while the Government had turned large tracts of productive areas into State ranches, the commission of inquiry into the land issue in the province was told in Lusaka yesterday.

Giving evidence during the commission's first public hearing since it was appointed by President Kaunda last October, a Choma businessman, Mr Aaron Chonya, reported that some of the farms owned by a few individuals had remained unutilised despite the shortage of land in the province.

The commission, which is under the chairmanship of High Court judge, Mr Justice Ernest Sakala, was appointed to resolve the land problem in the province.

Its terms of reference include investigation and reporting on matters relating to land in the province, such as the availability of land for use by peasant farmers, methods which might be used to facilitate expeditions, acquisition of unutilised or underutilised land.

Testifying before the commission, Mr Chonya said as a result of the shortage of land, many people had migrated to areas like Mungule in Lusaka, Mumbwa and Namwala in search of fertile land for agricultural purposes.

Explaining how the unnamed people came to possess the "many farms" in the province, Mr Chonya said they were the only ones who had money to buy them off at the time when some white commercial farmers left the country.

He said: "Some of the people in the province, particularly Choma, own up to seven farms each and some of these are under-utilised."

Another contributing factor to the land shortage was that game reserves had been established in agricultural areas, leaving peasants in unproductive land.

He told the commission that lack of land had hampered village regrouping scheme in the province. "People in the province own a lot of cattle. If they have been regrouped, their animals would not have had grazing land," he said.

To alleviate the shortage of land, he suggested the few people who owned many farms should be made to surrender those they did not utilise for Government to re-allocate them to the peasants.

Asked what method the Government should use to repossess under-utilised farms since owners paid for them, Mr Chonya said the State should compensate them.

He called for abolition of forest reserves to give the land to the people.

Asked what size of land the Government should allocate to peasants, Mr Chonya said that at least 100 hectares could be enough for one family.

The commissioners observed a minute's silence in honour of Mr Kenan Nkwabilo, a divisional manager with Anglo-American Corporation who died at Lusaka's UTH on Sunday after a road accident.

Mr Nkwabilo was a commissioner in the land issue. He will be buried today.

SWEDISH AGENCY TO PROVIDE CO-OP EDUCATION AID

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

SWEDISH International Development Agency (SIDA) is to provide a total of K2,750,000 for cooperative education to equip personnel who would run marketing unions when they take over the bulk of Namboard's operations on April 1.

This was announced in Lusaka yesterday by Minister of State for Agriculture and Water Development, Mr Justin Mukando, when he officially opened the eighth general meeting of the Zambia Cooperative Federation at the Natural Resources Development College.

The minister also reported that marketing unions had now been formed in all the provinces, except for Lusaka, to take over most of Namboard's functions.

Mr Mukando urged the department of marketing and cooperatives, the Zambia Co-operative Federation and the marketing unions to start bracing themselves for bigger tasks ahead of them.

He said the role of the department of marketing and cooperatives and the cooperative federation from next April would be to ensure that funds were available in Time to the marketing unions to avert their failure and collapse and that all the money was well looked after and fully accounted for.

The minister urged the federation to set targets of the total membership that it had and share capital contribution targets that each cooperative member should pay after the 1981/82.

He said: "In this way, you can easily increase your membership from the present 100,000 to 200,000 and share capital contribution from the present K4,000,000 to K10,000,000 by 1990.

Mr Mukando reminded federation officials that most people had alleged that the Zambian cooperative movement had failed in most fields.

Meanwhile, Chief Chipepo of Kabwe Rural has called on Namboard and other businessmen with trucks to help distribute fertiliser and seeds fairly in his area.

CONSTRUCTION OF MASS MEDIA COMPLEX PUSHED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Nov 80 p 5

[Text]

INFORMATION and Broadcasting permanent secretary, Mr Edward Lubinda, has instructed Nissho Iwai Corporation of Japan to complete construction of the mass media complex before November next year.

He said the Party and its Government was in a "hurry" to start using the complex and there should be nothing to stop completion of the project by next November.

Mr Lubinda issued the directive yesterday when he toured the project to inspect progress. He was accompanied by Zambia Broadcasting Services director-general Mr Alport Phiri.

The Party and its Government attached great importance to the complex which would become the "ear" and "eye" of all activities, Mr Lubinda said, and called on officers who would work from the premises to make the best use of the facilities.

"Apart from that, officers should know and understand Party and Government policies. What they put out on the air or television should reflect Party and Government thinking," he said.

With new facilities available, workers would have no "scapegoat" for shoddy performance and the onus was on all of them to be responsible and take a more serious attitude towards work.

He was impressed with the progress made so far and said from now onwards Government officials, including Minister of State for the ministry Mr John Banda and secretary to the Cabinet, Mr Evans Williams, would inspect progress.

Project director, Mr Takasha Kohno, earlier urged Mr Lubinda to consider building a wall round the complex for security.

BRIEFS

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE NEEDED--The Government has been urged to establish a national employment service in view of a seriously adverse situation in the fields of manpower and employment. It has been advised to appoint a small working party to review problems which may arise in the implementation of the new salaries and conditions of service in the public sector. These are some of the recommendations of the administrative committee of inquiry into the salaries, salary structures and conditions of service in the public, teaching, judicial, local government, defence, police and prison services. The committee has noted that tardiness in implementing reports compiled and recommended by commissions has become a feature of the public service. To support this, the committee said its appointment would not have been necessary if the recommendations of the Mwanakatwe Salaries Commission on staff relations in the public service had been implemented. The committee pointed out that its appointment was made against the background of an extremely tenuous and unstable industrial relations situation. It noted that the Government had done a commendable job in promoting an elaborate and efficient industrial relations structure in the private sector. SHELL OIL PLANT READY--The Shell and BP used oil recycling section at its Kitwe lube oil complex will be commissioned this week, a spokesman said in Lusaka. The recycling plant has an initial capacity of 3,000 metric tonnes which will rise to 6,000 tonnes when used oil becomes more easily available. He said the reconditioning of used oil drums plant at the Kitwe complex was already in operation and the response was good in supplying the plant with drums. The spokesman said next year the company hoped to set up an additional plant at the complex for filling oil into small packs for retail at its petrol stations. MILNER OWNS CHILANGA FARM--Former Home Affairs minister Mr Aaron Milner confirmed yesterday that he was the owner of the Chilanga farm used by armed terrorists who planned to topple the Government last month. Although he had sold the farm to Lusaka lawyer Mr Pierce Annfield in "about April or May" this year, the lawyer had not paid for it yet. In an interview at his Makeni home outside Lusaka, Mr Milner said since he was legally still the owner, he hoped to sell the farm as soon as the present political crisis hinging on the foiled coup plot was over. Mr Annfield has since left the country and the Government has put a K10,000 prize for anybody offering information leading to his arrest in connection with the coup plot. Mr Milner returned from Zimbabwe early this month and immediately renounced his

Zambian citizenship. He said since his return police had not interrogated him but he had gone to them once at his own initiative to find out what they wanted from him. He said the Government had returned to him several guns which were seized from his house during a search while he was in Zimbabwe because he had licences for all the weapons. His Zimbabwean passport which was seized had now been given back to him, he said. Asked if he would now return to Zimbabwe, Mr Milner said: "I don't see myself leaving this country permanently for the next five years." [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 23 Nov 80 p 1]

SUDANESE TIES HAILED--Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Wilson Chakulya has called for the broadening of relations between Zambia and Sudan to cover areas of human endeavour. Mr Chakulya said in Lusaka yesterday that relations between the two countries should be strengthened for the benefit of the people. The minister was speaking after the new Sudanese ambassador to Zambia and Tanzania. Mr Kamal El-Mekki presented his credentials at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Mr Chakulya told the Sudanese envoy that Zambia and Sudan were peace-loving countries and it was in this they both supported the liberation struggle in Southern Africa. Mr El-Kekki assured the minister that his country would do everything possible to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the two countries. Mr El-Kekki said his staff would cooperate with the Zambian authorities to develop a better understanding between the two countries.--Zana [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 26 Nov 80 p 5]

POLICE FORCE VEHICLES--A consignment of 400 vehicles out of the 900 ordered overseas for the Zambia Police Force will soon arrive in the country. This was disclosed by Home Affairs Minister, Mr Wilted Phiri, in Chipata when he met provincial secretary, Mr Justic Chimba, yesterday. Mr Phiri said the vehicles were already at Dar es Salaam port and were just waiting collection. He explained that the government had earlier this year ordered a total of 800 vehicles from Romania, some of which were already in the country and in use. Another fleet of 50 was ordered from West Germany, and another fleet of 50 from Britain. He pointed out that once all these vehicles arrive transport problems that have hit the force for some time now will be eased. Earlier Mr Chimba told the minister and his entourage that the police force needed adequate transport to cope with the wave of crimes in the country. COLUMNIST COMMENTS ON BULAWAYO VIOLENCE

[Article by Henry Maasdorp]

[Text] LAST week, as news came of the whirlwind being reaped in the form of an outburst of barbaric fury in Bulawayo suburbs, the writer, suffering from a sinking feeling in the soul, recalled previous occasions when he had experienced this disagreeable sensation.

One such was the outbreak of the Second World War in 1939; another an outbreak of rioting in Bulawayo in 1961, one of a series of events which put paid to hopes of co-operation by black nationalists in the process of political evolution on which white politicians had embarked; a third the unilateral declaration of independence whose 15th anniversary was last Tuesday.

Other people will have had their own black moments of this sort: these are ones that happen to stick in the writer's mind.

In each case the sinking feeling was thoroughly justified by subsequent history. The source of the dismay was an intuition that "they" (all or any people with authority or influence) had "blown it" — had shown an underlying loss of control, and made all of us hostages to fate.

In the event the unforeseen and contingent did take over in each instance, and things were never the same again.

Will history similarly justify "that sinking feeling" in the present case, or can there be the more or less peaceful recovery that is always hoped for in the wake of such a breakdown of society?

The requirements for a real and lasting recovery are demanding.

Political foray

Why did four Cabinet Ministers and five Deputy Ministers have to make a simultaneous political foray into Matebeleland last weekend — the event that touched off stoning and faction-fighting in Bulawayo's White City Stadium, and had a sequel in an outbreak of warfare between the ZIPRA and ZANLA cantonments which spilled over savagely against civilians?

A general answer, applicable to both the political parties involved, is that they do not appear to understand politics as meaning the fair representation of contending interests, in a continual debate which takes the place of warfare.

They understand politics rather, as an all-or-nothing power game which is a form of warfare.

This attitude would explain the governing party's sheer inability to live with, to leave well alone or at least tolerate, the existence in some strength of a rival black grouping.

Instead it had to challenge its rivals head-on in their heartland with the party rally in the White City Stadium; where, before the disorder began and even after it was brought under control, a string of inflammatory remarks were made from the platform — about the police ironically, the very people relied on to suppress the accompanying disorder); about a one-party State; about the rival party; about the formation of vigilante groups which should be ready to deliver blows, and about stopping the pay of former guerillas whose allegiance to the Government might be "questionable"; not to mention a threat to make the Press a Government mouthpiece.

All this spelt a reckless disregard of the probability that if politics is employed as a form of warfare, instead of as a substitute for it, warfare in the literal sense of the word will follow.

Two roads

Still less can the rank and file of the rival party be spared the judgment that they make politics a matter of warfare. A limited bout of "war to the death" is precisely what happened in Bulawayo on Sunday evening and Monday.

This is, essentially, the background against which the question of whether a recovery is possible has to be considered.

Broadly speaking there are two roads which a recovery can take, if there is going to be one. Although some degree of force would mark both of them, they can be distinguished as the relatively gentle and morally acceptable way, on one hand, and the morally and physically violent way on the other.

To embark on the gentle way all concerned would have to respond sincerely to Mr Mugabe's appeal on Monday night, an appeal summed up in his concluding words: "Pamberi nerunyararo!"

Civil war

This would entail nothing less than a thoroughgoing change of heart in men, and doubtless women, in whose souls a primitive combativeness, which came to the fore and held sway in long years of conflict, is now, it appears, being carried forward into new circumstances in which its victim will be their own society.

As for the violent way, there are models aplenty. It may entail fighting out a civil war, at whatever levels of intensity, with the usual accompaniments of material ruin and loss of liberty; and the eventual restoration of "order" on the graves of the losers in an authoritarian State with a "Redeemer" at the top.

But would that represent real recovery? Is it what we want?

MUGABE DENIES GOVERNMENT PLANS TO SEIZE PRESS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 16 Nov 80 pp 1-2, 12

[Article by Desmond Kumbuka]

[Text] THE Government had no intention of "seizing the Press as such" and had not discussed the question of introducing a one-party state in Zimbabwe, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said in Marandellas yesterday.

"Of course the Government is unhappy with some comments and twists that have come out in some of our newspapers," he said, "but the Government is not prepared to undertake the exercise of taking over the papers."

He was commenting on recent reports in which the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, said the Government was to take measures to acquire a controlling interest in Zimbabwe Newspapers.

Said Mr Mugabe: "People must see the distinction between statements made by leaders in their capacities as individuals and those they make as representatives of the Government".

Answering questions after addressing about 200 white farmers, the Prime Minister also dissociated the Government from a statement by Senator Nkala in Bulawayo last week that in view of the Patriotic Front's recent moves, the central committee of ZANU (PF) "has to decide whether there should be a one-party state or not".

"When people make statements, we must judge whether they are making such pronouncements as individuals, party leaders or as representatives of the Government" he said.

The official procedure in Government, according to Mr Mugabe, was that Ministers could make major policy statements only on issues relevant to their specific portfolios with approval from the Cabinet and himself.

"But where this procedure is not followed," he said, the public was entitled to ignore such statements as they would not have official Government backing.

The Prime Minister said that although the Government was unhappy with some "comments and twists" that had appeared in some of the national newspapers, "I should state that we are not prepared at this stage to undertake the exercise of taking over the Press."

All that was in the pipeline, he said, was the expansion of the Zimbabwe Inter-African News Agency (Ziana) as the national news service, and the introduction of provincial newspapers under the Ministry of Information and Tourism.

Addressing a ZANU (PF) rally in Bulawayo last Saturday, Senator Nkala said that in line with the Government policy of entering into joint ventures in vital industries, the Zimbabwe newspapers would have to be jointly owned as they were considered "vital instruments".

Asked whether it was true that consideration was being given to introducing a one-party state, Mr Mugabe said that although he did not personally believe such a move as anathema to democracy, the ZANU (PF) central committee had never discussed the matter.

Such a move would entail amendments to the Zimbabwe Constitution agreed during the Lancester House talks and so far, no proposals for such amendments had been made.

"In fact, we have majority in Parliament and can do whatever we want legally and constitutionally without resorting to introducing a one-party state," Mr Mugabe said.

One questioner asked what measures the Government had taken to compensate losses to farmers as a result of "terrorism".

Mr Mugabe replied: "The Government would be bankrupt overnight if it undertook to entertain the numerous claims of this nature."

Mr Mugabe also reminded the white questioner to take note of the fact that "what was terrorism to you in the past was not terrorism to us, while what you considered to be justified was to us terrorism".

Answering another question about what the country's declared socialist ideals would mean for the private sector, the Prime Minister said that his Government would continue to recognise the private sector as an important segment of the country's economic structure.

He said Zimbabwe's socialist principles were aimed basically at making the peasant sector more viable through the introduction of communalism and common ownership of the means of production.

"We are committed to socialism because we believe that people must own the resources and exploit them for their common good," he said.

It was Government policy to implement socialist ideals through the introduction of a co-operative system, provided the people accepted it. The Government would not regiment people into accepting anything against their will.

Where there was resistance, Mr Mugabe said, the Government would undertake to "educate the people into accepting the system".

He told the farmers that the Government would seize white-owned farms and redistribute them to peasants as co-operative farms.

DEPENDENCE ON SA RAILWAY INCREASED

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 16 Nov 80 p 12

[Editorial]

[Text]

DEPENDENCE on the South African rail route has increased, not decreased, since independence came about in Zimbabwe. Railways on both sides of the Limpopo have denied any suggestion of lack of co-operation but there is still a sneaking feeling that all is not well.

It is admitted that bottlenecks are hitting the Zimbabwe economy, that both imports and exports are suffering, and there are reports of an unofficial go-slow down south on the handling of goods destined for this country.

A country which wants — more correctly needs — trade links with a neighbour should not kick it in the teeth at almost every opportunity and then expect sympathy and preferential treatment.

South Africa has already been warned that this country will use the vital rail link as a matter of convenience — until the alternative routes to Beira and Maputo are fully operative. Whenever that will be.

The Republic has always been in a position to turn the screws on this country and, we are convinced, did so during the settlement talks period, particularly when Kissinger was around. We do not suggest she is doing it now; rather that she is putting her own requirements on the railway system first.

We have always advocated a good neighbour policy, not interference in the affairs of another country whatever one may think of its policies. It is a "cake and eat it" situation if one side decides which links will be cut and which will be retained . . . perhaps even to the extent of writing: "Dear apartheid-ruled, racist South Africa — please send us some more trucks . . ."

LARA COMMENTS ON VARIOUS ASPECTS OF NATIONAL SITUATION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11, 12 Nov 80

[Interview with Lucio Lara by NOTICIAS correspondent J. Branquinho]

[11 Nov 80, p 4]

[Excerpts] Today the Angolan people are celebrating the fifth anniversary of their national independence, won after more than 10 years of arduous armed struggle against Portuguese colonialism.

When the late President Antonio Agostinho Neto proclaimed independence in Luanda on 11 November 1975, the city found itself threatened, on the north and on the south, by the combined forces of the army of Zaire and the puppet FNLA group, South African troops which had moved into the country and Jonas Savimbi's UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola].

The development of events, however, led to the failure of all of the maneuvers and the efforts of the international imperialists, through their domestic and foreign agents, to prevent the consolidation in Angola of a regime truly representing the popular will. Beginning in 1975, the MPLA, which later became the MPLA-Labor Party, consolidated its regime throughout the national territory, gradually neutralized the threat of the FNLA and UNITA puppet groups, and established the foundations for the development of the process of building a socialist society in Angola.

In honor of this anniversary of Angolan independence, we are publishing an interview granted to a special NOTICIAS correspondent who was in the RPA [People's Republic of Angola] by Lucio Lara. Due to its length, we have divided the report of the interview into two parts. In the first, which we offer our readers today, the Angolan leader describes the political process which led to the conversion of the MPLA into the MPLA-Labor Party, and the difficulties and achievements experienced since then.

Lucio Lara needs no introduction. He is identified with the history of the armed struggle of the Angolan people against colonial domination and with the process leading toward the construction of socialism undertaken by the People's Republic of Angola under the leadership of the MPLA-Labor Party.

Lucio Lara: You are certainly not unaware that, in an experience similar to that of the FRELIMO, in fact, the MPLA has become a party. We believe that this change, basically, was one effected in the process of the national liberation struggle.

The results were really important in developing class consciousness. Thus when we went to the congress, the conditions for the creation of a Marxist-Leninist party were established for us. The party was formed by the decision of the congress, the MPLA established itself as the Labor Party, and we, like you, continue to use the MPLA name for historical reasons. But the basic problem remained--implementing this decision in practice, truly establishing the party, and thus being transformed from a movement, we would say almost a front, into a vanguard party. We chose a process, a methodology, which we call "purification." We could have called it something else, but we call it purification because of the simple fact that it is an effort to purify the MPLA, defining which of its elements meet the minimal statutory requirements for being party members.

Many officials were subjected to this purification, many were harshly criticized, many failed to become party members and were simply accepted as supporters--some neither as candidates nor members, the two categories we have in the party.

NOTICIAS: This also happened with officials who were already members of the MPLA?

Lucio Lara: Yes. Not perhaps on the highest leadership level, but this happened with a good many on the middle leadership level.

Moreover, at this time we feel quite enriched by this purification process. It has been going on for almost 2 years and is almost complete, in the sense that merely the purification of those who are actually members of the MPLA is involved. We are not yet at the stage of accepting new members in the party. Moreover, there is great pressure and great interest on the part of the working masses in joining the party, but as they were not in the MPLA before, we have not yet reached this stage. We have made use of our own experience since the purification period began, during which, on the basis of the cells, party committees at the work sites and sector committees have been organized. The provincial and municipal committees were created from the top down, obviously. It could not have been otherwise. And the members of these committees were appointed by the Central Committee, after screening and selection from among the best militants. This really provided our organization with extensive experience, and on the basis of it we have been proceeding to draft the necessary regulations, from the operational regulations for the base organizations to those concerning the application of sanctions. We are also in the stage of regulating the future acceptance of members.

Acceptance of Members

NOTICIAS: And when will this phase begin?

Lucio Lara: After the congress. We cannot begin earlier in order to avoid a certain haste, a certain opportunism which always exists at these solemn moments for a party. With the congress, well, there are many people who . . . in a word, we do not want to do this. We want to officially close the campaign of purification, probably in October, when we will make the final assessment precisely in order to submit an accounting to the special congress, and after the congress the cells themselves will begin to be the motive force for recruiting and enlisting the new members and for consciousness-raising. Some of them have already made suggestions and are exerting considerable pressure, but we have always tabled these until this selection of former members of the MPLA has been completed. Today we have about 20,000 party members, for we have selected from among the former MPLA members a little over 20,000. Some 6,000-plus more were designated during the purification process for the youth movement. They will not join the party but it was decided they are qualified to serve in the youth section, since our youth is party youth. This is not however a mass organization properly speaking, but party youth with rather clear party characteristics: a party reserve.

This does not mean that the youth sector will have only these 6,000 members, it will have much more. These are only those resulting from the purification process for the former members of the MPLA.

In the organizational sector, there was not--and there is not yet, to be truthful --a profound awareness of the basic organizational role in controlling the economy of the enterprise, in controlling the life of the state. This experience is still very weak, just incipient, but this concern is truly beginning to exist. This year the party is making rather profound surveys of the base organizations, the cells, to be precise, to see how the cell pursues its internal life, on the one hand, and on the other, how it checks on and works for an increase in production, the organization of the work, the improvement of the national economic system, the organization of the state, etc.

Pessimistic Conclusions

We reached somewhat pessimistic conclusions, we could say. Not exactly pessimistic, perhaps, but we did not find great work on a scientific level. There is still a lack of awareness. And then we decided to launch an immediate campaign to raise the consciousness of the base organizations. We did this beginning last year, when we started to hold regular provincial meetings of all the cells, represented by their coordinators, to study the general functioning of the cells on the provincial level. Then coordinators were elected in all the provinces, on the basis of a certain criterion, for a national gathering. We have already held two national gatherings of this type, which yielded excellent results. Today, without a doubt, there is a very great advance in the awareness the cells are gaining of their true role. The cells should not be simply a political tool for the theoretical discussion of problems, but an element in the life of the nation, useful to the life of the people, devoting attention to the entire complex of economic and social problems in their work.

Relations Between Cells and Trade Union Commissions

NOTICIAS: One question: How are the party structures related with the trade union commissions on the level of the work site?

Lucio Lara: Every cell or party committee in the production units where there are various cells is obviously in working contact with the trade union commissions. These contacts are not truly organic, it cannot be said that they are organic. Generally speaking--this was a finding of ours, although not always true--the trade union commissions always have a good proportion of party members. Obviously, we have issued instructions to the effect that it is better to elect party members, but this was not compulsory if there were workers who were not party members but whom the working masses regarded as meeting the requirements for carrying out trade union obligations. This happens, and there are trade union commission members who are not party members. But in a general way, there are party members in all the trade union commissions, and it is through them that the contacts for the coordination of a given action in a production unit are established. This coordination exists, but it is really weak. We would say that there is not yet a total awareness of the strength this coordination can have, and we can go much farther in this regard. For example, in combating the local consumption phenomenon, one we see in some sizable enterprises, a legacy from that very difficult transition era through which we lived, when the factories were abandoned, and the workers did the best they could, appointing their workers' commissions, and in a general way mainly for lack of knowledge of how an enterprise is managed, they divided the products of the enterprise among themselves, paid themselves their wages, etc. If the enterprise produced certain goods in short supply, and there were none on the market, the workers believed that since they produced them they therefore had a priority right to these industrial goods. This happened for example with beer, mattresses, cigarettes, etc. This type of attitude, which we call local consumption, took root in certain enterprises and still survives today.

NOTICIAS: Is it a rather general phenomenon?

Lucio Lara: It is not very general, fortunately. But we would say that it still affects our production tremendously, because it is found in some truly major enterprises. We can point to some 30 enterprises in which this is seen today, and this poses the problem for us of how to combat this local consumption. Obviously here, if there were good collaboration between the party bodies and the trade-union bodies, they could even aid the party leadership and the government to wage this battle. But this awareness does not yet exist to a very great extent. And there are other phenomena inherent in our movement which prevent a very timely attack on these problems, not to mention others. For the truth is that given the high cost of living existing in the country, the lack of consumer goods, etc, this is what we still consider normal in this stage. There are very serious phenomena involving speculation, for the battle against which the state apparatus does not yet have adequate tools. And who is the direct victim of such speculation? The worker himself. And the worker defends himself, naturally. Until we succeed in organizing our own forces in his defense, to defend the workers in this respect, we cannot be surprised when insofar as possible the worker defends himself. Until we have approached this complex of problems and resolved them as they must be resolved, a frontal battle against local consumption will be very difficult. But we can wage--and we are already pursuing this path--a political battle against this phenomenon, precisely through the political and trade-union organizations in the production unit.

[12 Nov 80, p 3]

[Excerpts] NOTICIAS: Can you analyze the problem of speculation such as to relate it to the continued control of certain economic sectors by private interests, which may constitute the embryo of a domestic bourgeoisie? Do you believe that this poses a serious political threat, and that there is concerted action against the revolutionary process in Angola?

Lucio Lara: There are two aspects here, two angles from which we can analyze this problem. The first involves the departure of the Portuguese, abandoning everything and their mass exodus--I believe that you had this same phenomenon in Mozambique, although perhaps not with the same intensity as we saw it when they departed.

Under the Portuguese colonial system the private businessman was the real motive force for everything. It was they who made their private plans, for there was no national plan. A given private businessman engaged in the purchase and sale of dried fish, and in addition to that he supplied himself with needles, buttons, kerosene lanterns and lamps, and it was he who established his own circuit, he who engaged in his own imports and determined his own exports, in coordination later with colonial organizations--unions, etc. Overnight, the distribution system disappeared, and it had to be taken over by the state, which was incapable of it, even in terms of personnel. The management of stores is a delicate matter which requires great experience, and in our almost 5 years of independence we have not yet acquired the necessary commercial experience. Our trade officials have not yet gained this experience, and some who inherited it have not yet acquired a view adapted to today's Angolan state, to the Angolan revolutionary state.

Absurd Imports

To understand this it suffices to note that many imports we are still making today are entirely absurd things in relation to our society. Sometimes articles we have imported, ordered by some official of ours, arrive here and we are amazed and wonder for whom these articles were imported. Sometimes it is not even for the petty urban bourgeoisie, more likely for a small and very privileged group within that bourgeoisie.

This phenomenon still exists, and the state apparatus is not yet experienced enough to be able to stop it immediately. This will be the product of great experience which must be acquired, and which we are in any case acquiring--the problems are being discussed, pointed out, criticized, and we are seeking to correct them insofar as is possible. But it is obvious that the apparatus is large, and a correction is made here but there are two or three other instances there offsetting all this correction.

Moreover, the small businessman is also in a certain way vital, because he aids us considerably in the distribution of goods. The stores we have created are not enough, the management of these stores is not satisfactory, and therefore this becomes a necessity.

Tendency to Become Bourgeois

This is one aspect of the problem, but there is another. There are parts and strata of our people which naturally have a tendency to become bourgeois. Consciously or unconsciously, this is their tendency. For example the produce peddler, certain fellow-countrymen who did business abroad during the war and have returned to the country today, but do not understand clearly what the country is today, what the philosophy of the country is, and in an innocent but obviously bourgeois fashion, want adamantly to establish a shop and exploit the customer, the consumer, to the maximum. This has happened on a larger scale than we believed it could. And we do not have sufficient supervisory bodies, that is an objective reality.

All of this leads to very substantial illegal trade, quite threatening and highly speculative--we would even say shamefully speculative and extending to the point of robbery. And this phenomenon, we reiterate, is not generalized today, but there are centers of bourgeois profiteers, and not only in Luanda, of individuals who are now beginning to have political attitudes, beginning to feel that the party does not accept them. We even know of some who want to organize in associations, in cooperatives. There is this phenomenon, which I regard as absolutely natural too, and the party is vigilant, is aware, although perhaps it cannot always act with the necessary speed.

We Are at War

We have very complex problems, which have as their basic origin the war we are actually waging. We are living under a wartime regime, although it does not seem so. One cannot feel it in Luanda, but we are truly at war. For this war we must pursue, the state is prepared to spend perhaps more than 50 percent of its budget.

The Bureaucratic State

There is the bureaucracy, our own bureaucracy. We have not succeeded, for example, in destroying the bureaucratic state of the colonial era. We have not succeeded, and we say that this is a point of reference for the revolution itself. The bureaucratic state which we inherited still remains, with all its waste and all its preconceptions, with the threat it constantly poses to a revolutionary state which seeks to be dynamic and with an immediate capacity to deal with this or that situation and is incompatible with those long and conservative procedures of the bureaucratic functionary.

NOTICIAS: Can you describe this type of phenomenon in ideological terms? To what point is there evidence of the spirit of the colonial official, bureaucracy, incompetence, and on the other hand, irresponsibility and contempt for the property of the people, and what is the MPLA-Labor Party, as the leading political force, doing to put an end to this type of situation?

Lucio Lara: A moment ago I spoke of the participation of the base organizations in this whole process. I believe that I made it clear that in a first phase, the base organizations were more concerned with themselves, with their own organization and functioning, and not with the influence they must have on that which surrounds them, on their labor sites, the neighborhoods, the society immediately around them.

This awareness is just emerging today. It is obvious that the battle against these erroneous or outdated tendencies, the ideological battle, is being waged constantly, but it has still been waged in perhaps a somewhat theoretical fashion. It has been reflected more precisely in the denunciation of bureaucracy, the vices and tolerance of the petit bourgeois, the petty ambitions of the petit bourgeois which become great ambitions, of the weight which the petit bourgeois still has in our country even on the party level.

Denunciation Is Not Enough

This denunciation is pursued constantly, but it is not enough. Words do not suffice. What is necessary really is a more efficient, more direct battle, and this battle can only be waged by the cells, by the base organizations. It has to be carried out by means of denunciation and sanctions.

In this regard, we can say that we have already won some victories, that we have already achieved something. Certain work sectors are not only detecting the errors and petit bourgeois vices but are combating them directly. It is a beginning, we would say, with the support of the party leadership itself--a short time ago we held a special session of the Central Committee to focus on the economic problems of the country. The analysis made was already excellent, and some important directives were sent to the base organizations.

Party Members and Bureaucracy

There is still an important group at the base--not a majority because we have taken care to control it--of party members linked with the administration and therefore with the bureaucracy. It is an important sector, without a doubt, in which there are excellent militants, but there are also many opportunists.

We have still not freed ourselves totally of many problems, some inherited from the colonial era, others inherent in the very society in which we life. Manifestations of a regionalist nature, of a tribal nature, and even racial preconceptions, have not disappeared from our society. Opportunism, rivalry for appointments, the tolerance characteristic of the petit bourgeoisie--these are still evident in our society.

Since the final days of leadership by President Agostinho Neto, our party has devoted great concern to these manifestations, which we regard as absolutely natural.

We deal with this question naturally, from the point of view that these are phenomena in the class struggle, phenomena which there is no way we can root out or regard as rooted out. They are normal phenomena in the class struggle, and it is necessary to find the proper means for combating them.

If it were possible to remove certain comrades, particularly the revolutionary intellectuals who are within the struggle--they are not supporting the struggle but within it, they live in it, breathe it--of the practical tasks they need to carry out, we could perhaps deal with the problem of the class struggle in our country in a more correct and theoretical fashion. This is not possible at this time, nor has it been possible. There is a specific effort, our Central Committee has instructed the Political Bureau to focus seriously on the problem, there is already a first study, a first approach to the problem of the class struggle, of the social structure of our country, which will in the future be submitted for discussion and criticism by various sectors.

The Language Problem

There is a problem which we are evaluating theoretically first of all, and which will certainly help to make language more precise. This is also a very important problem in the leadership of a party such as ours, the problem of language.

There are leaders, for example, who have not yet had an opportunity to study all the theories, or all the basic elements in Marxist-Leninist theory, who are shall we say inherently and even sometimes intuitively Marxist-Leninist. Their ideological attitudes are reflected in persistent actions which are generally correct in practice, but when it comes to theory there is vacillation, and we can even sometimes say deviation. I would place these "deviations" in quotation marks, they are deviations of language often rather than of concept. Even in issuing orders many of our leaders, naturally, because they did not have an opportunity to have the normal training, sometimes interchange this or that term which, on the close analysis in which certain theoreticians like to engage, seem to be a "deviation."

Judging by Actions

None of this has to do with our real, concrete situation.

Our people, in the vast majority, are illiterate, or have not gone beyond the fourth grade. Others never had an opportunity even to learn to read, and the great majority do not speak Portuguese. The people express these things in Portuguese, and in the national languages, the Marxist vocabulary does not yet have enough meaning to be used properly, and we sometimes see that in order to translate three words of Portuguese the interpreter must cast about and sometimes turn to a national saying to express the concept. This is the objective reality we face, and therefore the theoreticians must be very careful in their analysis, in classification.

There are for this reason these language deviations. But this does not mean that there are no real deviations: there are. We are experiencing the problem of asserting a given ideology, which not all the people accept, and which many people embrace out of sympathy for the MPLA--perhaps its banner or perhaps certain leaders. But when the orientation of the MPLA began to be perceived, many people adopted a negative attitude, they did not have the courage to say no, but they sabotaged the decisions in one way or another.

We have therefore this battle, which is a normal one. We are not worried, but we are persuaded that it is a very serious battle, the more so since we are living under heavy foreign pressure. Just a short time ago the Americans again contemplated a possible intervention in Angola. We see this pressure and we see the pressure from Savimbi, that freak of nature whom South Africa succeeded in hoisting to a position from which he could go to the United States and England to seek support, to the point that there was a candidate for the American presidency who did not hesitate to state publicly that he is prepared to support the puppets against the Angolan regime. This was a candidate who was a film actor, Reagan: he says it plainly and does not conceal it.

We suffer from this weight of very violent foreign aggression on all sides. I will not hide the fact that we are still being infiltrated from two neighboring countries. I was in Moxico a few days ago, and there were infiltrations all along the eastern frontier. And we continue to think about what is happening and what this may mean.

We sense again a very aggressive attitude on the part of the international imperialists against Angola. This is related to other phenomena of an international nature, such as the problems of Iran and Afghanistan, to the fact that we have excellent relations with the USSR and we have Soviet advisers helping to build our army, to the fact that we have on our territory the Cuban revolutionary army. These are guns which we do not conceal, and they will be there so long as the danger of total aggression from South Africa exists.

NOTICIAS: Another question: After the death of President Antonio Agostinho Neto, a tremendous movement was seen in certain sectors, with speculation about the division which it was said would inevitably develop on the level of the leadership structures of the MPLA-Labor Party themselves. Can you analyze the situation in this regard?

Lucio Lara: We can state that on the level of our party leadership, there are no problems, except for the problems resulting from a broad leadership in any party. It is obvious that with the death of President Neto, the imperialists immediately sought to derive benefit. Moreover, the resurgence of Savimbi is related to this.

But I believe that the calm and reflective way in which the Central Committee of the party found a new president, without any problem, was obvious to everyone. Really without any problem. Obviously this gave rise, before and after, to much speculation. Fortunately we moved rapidly, there were no major difficulties, and this surprised all our enemies.

As to the factionalist phenomenon, I know a bit about the life of other parties like ours, and there is none--I can state this categorically--which has not from time to time had its factional phenomena. None! The firmest communist parties even suffer this from time to time.

We in the MPLA have suffered, not often but sometimes more violently, from the factional phenomenon, because of the objective factors with which we have been faced.

It is natural that this or that militant, this or that official, will have a different concept of how our advance toward socialism should proceed. These are discussions which occur from time to time, and it is necessary to establish the right decision. We say that it is necessary for the party to speak with a single voice. This is obvious, but it is not easy.

I would answer, show me a party, a single one, which does not have these phenomena. They are natural, they are phenomena of the class struggle and particularly of a class struggle in which a Marxist-Leninist party develops to guide the process.

NOTICIAS: Therefore the class struggle, the ideological struggle, also occurs within the party itself?

Lucio Lara: Necessarily! Our party is a young party, with an organization which has chosen the ideology of the proletariat.

NOTICAS: A last question. Do you believe that the factors you analyzed, domestic or foreign, working against the process of socialist change in Angola can in overall terms thwart this process?

Lucio Lara: No. I have had the privilege of visiting all parts of the country, even the most remote. There are harsh and fierce criticisms. But this criticism in which our people are engaging and which is really very rich comes about within the spirit of combat, of confidence. It is not and never was defeatist criticism. And thus, when our people criticize, they want us to give them hoes and weapons, whatever is lacking to achieve what they have always dreamed of as the goals of the MPLA. Moreover there is nothing better for a leader than to go to these places, to make contact with the base levels of our people, to hear, to discuss, to be criticized, to accept criticism and to try to use this to correct what is wrong. This is what gives our revolution the greatest optimism and confidence: it is an indestructible revolution. The revolution is indestructible, and the process of socialist transformation in Angola is irreversible.

PORT UNLOADING FACILITIES INADEQUATE--Table mountain and the city lights early yesterday were a welcome sight for the Indonesian crew of the partly laden grain carrier, Gurami, which had to come to the City essentially for food and fuel after three months on the Angolan coast with a grain cargo from Thailand. Food was virtually unobtainable and since the Indonesians enjoy their spices, and required meat, rice and potatoes, they were in danger of starving in Angola. Today she returns to Mocamedes to discharge the last of her maize, altogether an economic disaster for the owners since the Marx business syllabus mentions nothing about demurrage for embarrassed shipowners. The ship with her 12,000 tons of cargo had first waited a long time at Luanda for service and discharge thereafter was very slow. Lobito was a little better but Mocamedes was no good either. NATURAL GAS DISCOVERED--The Gulf Oil Corporation has announced the discovery of natural gas near Douala at (Manoka). This is good news, but we should not rejoice yet, for we must make sure that the otherwise large deposits of natural gas have commercial interest in its exploitation. We will know more about this in the next few days when wells will be sunk in the area. [Text] [AB281340 Yaounde Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 28 Nov 80]

AHMAD NASIR DISCUSSES SOVIETS, SOMALIS, ERITREAN UNITY

Kuwait AL-QABAS in Arabic 17 Oct 80 p 3

[Article: "In Press Conference After Meeting With Minister of State, Ahmad Nasir: We Are Trying to Change Soviet Position vis-a-vis Eritrean Issue; Somali Facilities for United States Will Strengthen Russia's Support for Ethiopia"]

[Text] 'Abd-al-'Aziz Husayn, the minister of state for cabinet affairs, received yesterday morning Ahmad Nasir, the chairman of the ELF [Eritrean Liberation Front] Revolutionary Council and Executive Committee, who was accompanied by 'Abdallah Idris Muhammad, the ELF Executive Committee member, and 'Ali Salih Muhammad, the ELF representative in Kuwait.

The minister of state has said that the general situation in Eritrea and the efforts being exerted to unite the revolution ranks, considering that unity is an essential and fundamental step for the revolution's triumph, were reviewed at the meeting.

The minister also said that Nasir explained to him during the meeting the full situation on the Eritrean arena and the revolution's readiness to negotiate with Ethiopia without any prior conditions in order to achieve independence.

The minister added that Nasir also explained the importance of the Eritrean people's steadfastness and firmness in the face of the threats and dangers surrounding them.

Press Conference

On the other hand, Ahmad Nasir has underlined the ELF's eagerness to form a united command, a single army and a single organization, to unite all the Eritrean factions and to realize unity of opinion. Nasir has also denied that he has held any direct meeting with Osman Saleh Sabbe.

The Revolutionary Council chairman, speaking at a press conference held yesterday morning at the Hilton Hotel, also pointed out that the Soviet Union's position toward the Eritrean issue is wrong and that the Soviet Union advances vast military aid to Ethiopia which uses this aid against the Eritrean revolution.

Nasir also asserted that there are Soviet and Cuban experts in the Ethipian army but denied the presence of armed Soviet units inside Eritrea.

Nasir further said: We are trying to change the position of the Soviets and of the Cubans instead of launching propaganda attacks against them.

He also denied the reports about past Soviet aid for the Eritrean revolution, saying: Since the inception of the revolution in 1961, they have not assisted us with a single bopeck or a single bullet. Their sole positive stance was their support for Eritrea's independence when the Eritrean issue was discussed at the United Nations in 1948.

Somali Facilities in Berbera Port

Answering a question on Somalia's granting of military facilities to the Americans in Berbera port, Nasir said: There is no doubt that the Somalis are free to establish the relations they want. If giving facilities is positive for them, we view it as negative for us because Ethiopia will continue to demand, under the pretext of these facilities, more and more sophisticated weapons from the Soviets. However, the Somali position is normal because Somalia has found itself compelled to resort to any strong country to confront an enemy supported by a major power and given all the military capabilities.

Negotiation With Ethiopia

Nasir also expressed the ELF's readiness to negotiate with Ethiopia on Eritrea's independence through a united delegation representing all the Eritrean factions.

He has said: The Sudanese have informed us recently that Ethiopia has agreed to negotiate with the Eritreans without prior conditions. We are ready to respond to this initiative. However, if the Ethiopians think of liquidating our cause militarily, they are deluded because the revolution's military position is very good and is developing constantly. Moreover, the revolution has realized political victories that have noticeably beset the Ethiopians who are now on the defensive in this regard. These successes and victories add to our revolution's strength and continuity.

The ELF revolutionary Council chairman asserted that the relations existing between the Eritrean revolution and Sudan are normal and denied that these relations have been affected negatively by the visit of Mengistu, the chairman of the military council ruling Ethiopia, to Sudan last May.

Nasir further said: The ELF welcomes Arab aid but rejects any conditional aid. As for the need for unity which is pointed to us during our visits to the Arab states, we consider this reference a service for Eritrea and not a condition imposed on it. We also consider this reference an expression of feelings that show their concern for the revolution and their eagerness for the revolution to achieve its goals of independence.

Praise for Kuwaiti Position

In his press conference, Nasir lauded the stances of Kuwait's amir, government and people. He also said that his visit to Kuwait has come within a tour he is making to a number of Arab countries in anticipation of future possibilities.

CAUSES OF RIFT BETWEEN ERITREAN LIBERATION FACTIONS DISCUSSED

Kuwait AL-QABAS in Arabic 10 Oct 80 p 3

[Article by Azhar al-Khafaji: "Armed Clash Between Eritrean Revolution Factions Poses Threat of Civil War; Eritrean Liberation Front Representative in Kuwait: We Have Fought Popular Front to Safeguard Our Strategic Positions; We Are Ready for Dialogue and for Unity; Clashes Will not Divert Our Attention From Liberation; Representative of Popular Front for Liberation of Eritrea in Kuwait: Clashes Stopped With Beginning of October; Commitment to non-Presence of Third Force on Eritrean Arena"]

[Text] In the past 3 months, the Eritrean arena has witnessed armed clashes between the forces of the ELF [Eritrean Liberation Front] and of the PFLE [Popular Front for the Liberation of Eritrea]. Some of the clashes have been violent, and have posed the threat of a civil war similar to the war that erupted in 1972 and continued until 1975. AL-QABAS has interviewed the representatives of both fronts in Kuwait to shed light on the causes and factors of these clashes out of the need to exert efforts to contain the clashes and to preserve the unity of the Eritrean revolution in the face of the Ethiopian forces.

Whereas 'Ali Muhammad Salih, the ELF representative in Kuwait, has confirmed that his front's forces have engaged in combat against the PFLE factions because the latter tried to undermine the rear lines and the strategic position of the ELF which form a vital supply artery for the ELF forces in the advance positions and whereas he has noted that the PFLE forces have also (compromised) the ELF positions at a time when the front asserts that no single grain of sand will be relinquished, 'Umar Bashir, the PFLE representative, has noted that the ELF has failed to fulfill its commitment to establish joint military coordination and has withdrawn some of its forces from the PFLE positions. He has also said that the ELF has militarily liquidated the Tigre Liberation Front and opened, at the same time, dialoque with Saleh Osman Sabbe when the October agreement concluded between the representatives of the two fronts stipulates that no third force exists on the Eritrean arena. Following is the text of the interview with the two fronts [sic].

The ELF has revealed for the first time that violent fighting has broken out between its forces--the Eritrean Liberation Army--and factions of the PFLE in a serious development in the rift between the Eritrean revolution factions.

'Ali Muhammad Salih, the ELF Kuwait office director, has said that the rear lines and the strategic rear positions of the ELF have been subjected to an extensive attack by the PFLE forces.

The ELF forces have confronted this attack which is actually posing the threat of a civil war for which the Eritrean people will pay a high price. The ELF office director has also revealed that the ELF is holding contacts with the other Eritrean parties to unite the efforts and to channel them toward the common enemy, Ethiopia.

Salih has also pointed out that since the 1970 rift, the ELF has been trying to contain this rift and has been seeking unity on the Eritrean arena but that the circumstances have not helped these efforts achieve success.

Salih has also said: Out of its faith in the unity of the Eritrean arena, the ELF is still seeking to achieve unity among the Eritrean revolution factions. In affirmation of these intentions, the ELF concluded with the PFLE in 1977 an agreement known as the 20 October agreement. As a result of this agreement, the Joint Political Command was formed to crystallize the provisions of the agreement. In fact, various political, military and information committees were formed but because of the lack of response on the part of the PFLE, these committees have not been able to carry out their tasks. The PFLE has also refused to attend the meeting of the Joint Political Command and has failed to take part in the meetings of the popular organizations (formed of both fronts) and has rejected military coordination.

Matters have not stopped with this negative attitude, which the ELF has tried to eliminate, but have gone to the point of harassing the ELF forces. Scattered clashes have taken place on the northern coast and in some other areas between the Eritrean Liberation Army on the one hand and the PFLE and the Tigre Liberation Front forces on the other.

The ELF has exerted efforts to contain the incidents. At the Political Command meeting on 15 April, a decision was taken to stop the clashes between the two sides and to form a committee to investigate their causes.

Large-Scale Attack

The director of the ELF office in Kuwait added:

Last August, the PFLE exerted concerted and ceaseless propaganda efforts to distort the ELF positions and to accuse the latter of betraying the cause and of being opposed to unity. We were surprised by this concerted propaganda campaign. However, the campaign's goal became clear when the PFLE launched a large-scale attack on the strategic positions of the ELF's rear lines with the aim of occupying these positions and expelling the ELF forces from them.

The PFLE goal became yet more evident when this front tried to change the character of the limited local clashes and to transform the confrontation into a crushing civil war that harms the Eritrean cause at a time when Ethiopia is mobilizing all its resources and its military forces to strike the Eritrean revolution factions.

Our positions in (Adubha, Zara, Shar'it, Diba and Wakr) were subjected to a broad and comprehensive attack by the PFLE forces, in cooperation with the (Ethiopian) Tigre Liberation Front.

In the face of this comprehensive attack, the ELF had no recourse but to resort to patience and to endeavors to contain the situation. But the ELF found itself facing premeditated attempts aimed at liquidating it--attempts for whose implementation all the military resources of the other two fronts had been mobilized.

So the ELF confronted the attack to defend its gains and its strategic positions which form its rear lines and its support in its confrontation against the Ethiopian forces on the frontlines. Had these positions fallen, their fall would have meant liquidating the ELF militarily by encircling the frontline forces of the Eritrean Liberation Army.

Setback for Unity Efforts

The ELF office director has also said: The ELF considers this development which has been imposed by the PFLE forces a serious setback for the unity efforts and an open backing down on the agreements existing between the two organizations--agreements that stipulate that arms may not be resorted to in settling differences.

He added: We ask the PFLE to abide by all the concluded agreements because only the Ethiopian enemy will benefit from this attrition which obstructs the Eritrean resources for confronting this enemy.

Even though the ELF forces and strategic positions have been harassed, we declare anew our abidance by the principle of unity and we warn of the dangers of the eruption of a civil war between the two organizations and of the impact of such a war on the basic national cause, the cause of liberation.

On the other hand, the director of the ELF office in Kuwait has revealed that the ELF is holding dialoque with Eritrean parties to urge them to join the unity march and that meetings and discussions are being held with these parties with the aim of including them in the Eritrean effort and in mobilizing the resources for the united action to liberate Eritrea.

Ethiopian Concentrations

On another development, 'Ali Muhammad Salih, the office director, has said that the Ethiopians are amassing their forces in the various frontline positions with the aim of regaining some strategic locations, such as the area of (Quhayin) which the ELF captured after fierce fighting during which the front seized a number of Ethiopian enemy tanks and vehicles and a large quantity of weapons and ammunition, and the areas of (Adibrah and Tamrat) which the front regained after fierce fighting against the Ethiopian forces.

Non-Monopolization of Dialoque

'Ali Muhammad Salih has described the reports speaking of the presence of an agreement between the ELF and the Ethiopian enemy to grant Ethiopia self-rule as fabricated and groundless reports aimed at distorting the positions of the ELF which has declared repeatedly that there is no alternative to the full liberation of the Eritrean soil and to imposing complete and undiminished national sovereignty over it.

The front also asserted before and is reasserting now that it will not monopolize any negotiation or dialogue with the Ethiopian regime. Should any initiative be made for talks with the Ethiopian enemy to enable us to realize our national goals, the ELF will not respond to such an initiative without the participation of all the Eritrean factions.

'Umar Bashir, the director of the PFLE office in Kuwait, has stated that the armed clashes between the front's factions and the ELF forces stopped as of the beginning of this month as a result of the contacts made with the ELF and of the demand that it stop the clashes that serve the Ethiopian enemy.

Bashir has provided a glimpse of these differences, pointing out that this glimpse may explain the background of the clashes that took place recently.

Bashir told al-Qabas: The Eritrean arena witnessed a civil war that lasted 3 years, from 1972 to 1975. The ELF declared this war to liquidate the PFLE forces.

Dialogue Committee

Even though all our appeals for putting an end to this war were met with rejection, it was evident that this war was causing a bloody drain to the revolution. The result was that the Eritrean masses moved and exerted their pressures which bore fruit in putting an end to the war. A dialogue committee was then formed of both sides and succeeded in realizing a large degree of rapprochement. However, the ELF blocked the dialogue until convocation of the second national congress in 1975.

After this congress, the ELF resumed the dialogue with Osman Saleh Sabbe on the grounds that he represents the Popular Liberation Forces (the external mission) as a substitute for the dialogue with the combatants.

Ignoring PFLE

The ELF persisted in its dialogue with Osman Saleh Sabbe which produced the 1976 Khartoum agreement.

This agreement could not realize the Eritrean aspirations for unity despite its reference to the need to hold a unification conference between the two organizations. This is because Osman Saleh Sabbe represents neither the revolution nor the Popular Liberation Forces.

This is why the PFLE demanded that the ELF engage in dialogue with it. However, the ELF persisted in its dialogue with Sabbe and supported his faction's presence in Eritrea by facilitating this faction's entry through the Kasala road which is controlled by the ELF. As a result of this cooperation, a joint delegation was formed and visited a number of Arab states in 1976.

October 1978 Agreement

Bashir added: This agreement collapsed quickly, the two sides [ELF and Sabbe] clashed in 1977 and the ELF liquidated the Sabbe group. After this development, concerted meetings were held between the PFLE and the ELF. As a result, an agreement was concluded in Khartoum on 20 October 1978 in the presence of a Sudanese delegation. This agreement calls for the formation of joint committees to coordinate the action of the two organizations in five spheres, namely: Information, political, military, economic and social spheres.

The Eritrean people blessed this step. The agreement also stipulates recognition of the PFLE and the ELF as the two representatives of the Eritrean revolution at home and abroad.

Joint Action Document

Despite the difficulties facing implementation of the agreement, this agreement was developed, after strenuous efforts, with a joint action document in 1979. A joint higher political command was formed. The document was a natural result of the strategic Eritrean withdrawal from the cities as a consequence of the unlimited Soviet support for the Ethiopians. The document came to embody a united Eritrean position intended to offer the revolution joint protection in the face of the dangers emanating from the Ethiopian aggression and from the Soviet involvement represented in aiding this agression.

The agreement also provides for defining a strategic base for the Eritrean revolution and for forming a joint military command to manage and unite the military action.

The coastal area was defined as the Eritrean revolution's strategic base--a base to be defended jointly. However, the ELF sent only one third the forces that were supposed to be sent to the coastal area. Those forces stayed on the front for 2 months and then the ELF withdrew them, justifying its action by saying that the ELF had positions that needed to be defended.

Consequently, the Ethiopians occupied the positions on the northeastern coast where the ELF forces used to be stationed. These positions were again liberated from the Ethiopians and handed over to the front [not further specified] forces in order to realize and implement the October agreements.

The PFLE representative also said: Our front agreed to grant the ELF transmission hours from its radio facilities but the ELF withdrew its representatives from the information committee. The ELF also withdrew its forces without notifying the PFLE, thus creating a gap which the Ethiopian enemy has tried repeatedly to exploit.

The ELF has also liquidated a number of our elements in (Wankalya) because of what was described as personal acts.

Tigre Front

[Question] But the ELF says that elements of the Ethiopian Tigre Front confronted its forces which were compelled to retaliate and that the PFLE supported the Tigre Liberation Front, thus forcing the ELF to confront the PFLE elements. What is the PFLE's comment on these statements?

[Answer] We meet with the Tigre Liberation Front and give it aid. We deal not only with this front but with (Aromo) and the Western Somalia [Liberation Front]. These movements fight against the Ethiopians and it is natural for us to meet with them and support them.

During its military confrontation with the Tigre Liberation Front, the ELF liquidated this front militarily and then expanded its confrontation to include our forces behind the Ethiopian enemy lines. This tendency by the ELF coincided with another tendency, namely to establish contacts and coordinate with Osman Saleh Sabbe.

No Presence for Third Force

'Umar Bashir, the PFLE representative, concluded by saying: Now that the clashes between us and the ELF forces have stopped since the beginning of the current month of October, we ask the brothers in the ELF to abide by the October unification agreement which stipulates that there is no third force on the Eritrean arena.

We also ask them to implement and apply the other provisions of the agreement which are capable of securing greater efforts for confronting the Ethiopian enemy and for reducing the time needed to achieve the final victory and full independence for our Eritrean soil.

QUAINOO DENIES INVOLVEMENT--Brigadier Arnold Quainoo, retired at the end of last year by the Limann Government from his position as Army Commander, has issued the following statement: "Ever since my so-called retirement, various serious allegations, including incitement to mutiny and even treason, have been made against me from very high government sources. At all times, these defamatory and grave allegations, always unsupportable by evidence, are given very wide publicity by the news media. The latest is the story that I am working in concert with one Mr Buller to subvert civilian rule. This story is, as usual, cruel, unfair and untrue. I find it difficult to appreciate the necessity and motivations behind these constant and relentless manoeuvres to implicate me in manufactured coup plots. "I want to reassure my friends that I am still a high-minded gentleman with principles. Since November 1979, I have been preoccupied with searches for a place to house myself and my family. My current jobless status and the unwillingness of the military authorities to pay my due gratuity are problems I consider difficult but not insurmountable with time. However, I must confess I find the vicious harassment very disturbing indeed. All I need now is the necessary peace of mind to reconstruct my life. I therefore entreat the Government, in all sincerity, to get off my back. I believe that every Ghanaian is entitled to the same peace and security as sought after by those in political leadership positions. Finally I'd like to tell all those who are responsible for this mud-slinging intrigue and all those who find themselves today in the corridors of power that they do not love Ghana more than anybody else." TENTATIVE REVIEW OF COUP'S ROOT CAUSES

[Excerpts]

IT IS NOT POSSIBLE to assess the full significance of the coup which resulted in the overthrow on November 14 of President Luiz Cabral, and the installation of a Revolutionary Council led by the Prime Minister, Major Joao Bernardo Vieira, until more is known of the personalities.

There is a strong representation of the veterans of the war for independence who have had recent cause for complaint in the direction affairs of state were taking. But that the two ministers killed were mestizos and that the new ruling group is almost entirely black confirms the significance attached, in the immedate aftermath of the coup, to the fact that those most seriously damaged by the events are the mestizos and Cape Verdeans who have for long played a dominant role in politics in Bissau. The black population has not been proportionately prominent in the seats of power in Bissau and the path to unity between Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde has not been as smooth as the leaders of the PAIGC — the party that controls both countries — would have desired.

Initial reaction to the coup would indicate that links in the PAIGC between Cape Verde and Guinea-Bissau have been seriously weakened.

If the problem of unity between the two countries was an issue, it certainly cannot be considered the only explanation of the coup. The economy of Guinea-Bissau has been in considerable difficulty recently. There have been rice shortages and imported commodities appeared to have disappeared before reaching the market. It is this sort of laxity, in spite of the considerable foreign assistance that was being granted, which went against the grain for those who wished to see the tenets of Amilcar Cabral heeded.

This has been a troubled political year in Bissau. Earlier in the year some senior members of the PAIGC were put on trial, allegedly for opposing the proposed union with Cape Verde and plotting against the government.

There had also been plans for restructuring the armed forces, giving them a more traditional hierarchy, which would have run against the opposition of some of the veterans used to the system of authority developed during the years of war against the Portuguese.

Most recently, however, there has been the disputed adoption of the new constitution, a matter of days before the coup took place. Two clauses caused considerable reservations. One clause made the President also head of government. In the view of a number of members of the People's National Assembly, this was tantamount to a reduction in the role of the prime minister. The President's defence was that the clause merely formalised what had hitherto been the practice.

Another clause dealt with the question of nationality. While Cape Verde has restricted the presidency to people born in Cape Verde, the Bissau constitution did not have this stipulation.

All these factors have contributed to an atmosphere of unease in Bissau. Tension with Guinea (Conakry) merely exacerbated domestic problems. It is noteworthy that Conakry was the first country to recognise the new government in Bissau and immediately sent a senior delegation with offers of assistance, especially of food.

Whether Conakry's welcoming of the new regime is of any significance is difficult to tell. The dispute over territorial waters which contain substantial deposits of oil and which Conakry annexed in 1963, is unresolved and the case presented by the previous regime in Bissau still stands. Conakry has, in the past, suggested unity between the two countries based on pre-colonial ties between their peoples. If this issue is resurrected by Conakry, it might prove to be a diplomatic side-stepping of the oil dispute.

Bissau hinted, when the oil dispute arose, that it would be prepared to mobilise its forces. The new head of state in Bissau commands the loyalty of his troops and of the most experienced of the military leaders in Guinea-Bissau.

International reaction to the coup has been limited. In Lisbon it is well known that General Eanes, the Portuguese President, enjoyed close ties with both former President Cabral and President Aristide Pereira of Cape Verde.

President Senghor, of Senegal, has been abroad, thus preventing any statement from Dakar.

SPECIFIC DETAILS OF RECENT AGREEMENT WITH CUBA PROVIDED

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 23 Oct 80 p 8

[Text] The third Guinea-Bissau-Cuba intergovernmental meeting held in our capital from 15 October until 21 October 1980, ended with the signing of a protocol of cooperation in various areas and a trade memorandum. In the 1980-1981 period, cooperation between the two countries will be consolidated and new fields of cooperation will be opened, in accordance with the wish expressed by the two parties in the final document signed by the delegation heads.

In addition, as the vice chairman of the State Committee for Cooperation, Raul Donas Santana, said, "the agreements reiterate the cooperation between Guinea-Bissau and Cuba, which has been made more dynamic and given considerable stimulus by the most recent meeting." The health, education and fishing sectors will benefit most.

"Both parties express their satisfaction with the results spelled out in the resolutions of the last meeting," stated the protocol. In the health field, the Cuban government promised to send 38 cadres (doctors and experts) in various fields. In turn, Guinea-Bissau expressed interest in keeping the present integrated brigade of 41 technicians, as well as exchanging nurses who specialized in orthopedics, surgery and obstetrics.

In this sector, it was agreed that the delegations would trade information and study the evolution of cooperation. The two parties also discussed exchanging technical documentation on health matters in general, hospital organization and administration and teaching materials for training nurses.

In the education sector, the Cuban ministry will send 15 experts to work in primary education, statisitcs and planning, secondary and adult education, among other areas.

In fishing matters, 12 Cuban specialists will provide technical assistance on refrigeration maintenance, naval electronics and power and naval operations. Departments in this sector will exchange delegations. Thus, in the first quarter of 1981, a Cuban delegation will visit Guinea-Bissau and, in the second quarter, a Guinean fishing delegation will go to the Socialist Republic of Cuba.

Cooperation in Other Sectors

In addition to the above-mentioned, Guinean-Cuban cooperation will extend to other areas. The third meeting was important because new areas of mutual aid will be opened and also because the previous stage was successfully concluded. This will provide a positive start to the new phase. Athletics, physical education, housing, agriculture, the sugar industry and communications are some areas where the two countries plan to use the available means to strengthen cooperation through specific measures.

In agricultural matters, the tobacco experiment by Cuban experts merited special attention again and the Cuban Government agreed to train four Guinean comrades in tobacco firms for 6 months. Cooperation in this area will extend to poultry raising, forestry development and the sugar industry.

In cultural and media matters, Guinea-Bissau asked that teachers for the school of music, a film editor and specialists in radio broadcasting be sent and that Guinean cadres serve apprenticeships in graphics, advertising and journalism. Thus, our country could receive items for radio broadcasts. After specific information is provided, these requests will be considered by the Cuban Government.

In addition, the Cuban party promised to consider providing the Bissau State Committee with technical assistance on municipal adminstration, architecture and urbanism, topography and training Guinean personnel.

Renewal of the Agreement in Two Years

The third intergovernmental meeting is a followup to the scientific-technical accord between Bissau and Havana signed on 21 September 1976 in Cuba. The two delegations decided to renew the accord and review it in 2 years.

According to the protocol, the fourth intergovernmental meeting will take place in Havana in September 1981. The date of the meeting will be announced by the two parties 45 days beforehand.

The trade memorandum signed between Guinea-Bissau and Cuba by Francisco Coutinho, director general of the People's Warehouses, and by Ataulfo Pichardo Galdos, legal and economic counselor of the Cuban Embassy in Bissau, in essence sums up all the salient points in the protocol of cooperation, spelling out minor details and marking the trade opening between the two countries.

STUDENT REGISTRATION CONFINED TO PARTY YOUTH MILITANTS

Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 7 Oct 80 p 2

[Text] "I have decided and informed the board of the Kwame N'Krumah National High School that admissions to the 10th and 11th grades have been suspended.... This year enrollment in those two classes will be limited to applicants with proof of their participation in JAAC or with a document from their government office stating they agree to work there and take courses in the country and abroad." The state commissioner of national education, Comrade Filinto Vaz Martins, announced this decision at the end of the primary school teachers' graduation in Bissau last Saturday.

This measure, approved by the commissioner of education, should now solve a number of problems created by the excessive numbers of high school students, especially at the complementary course level where there are not enough teachers to hold classes normally. By this measure, Filinto Vaz Martins stressed the need for rigorous planning to train the country's cadres.

"Obviously, education is for all, but first for those who want to work earnestly for this land, to continue our party's political line. The nation of Guinea-Bissau," he emphasized, "has the duty, consequently, to orient its action in this direction. Then the PAIGC's revolutionary political line will allow everyone to have a place and a chance in life. We cannot allow any opportunistic spirit which is contrary to our party's objectives into our structures."

The commissioner of education said many young people neglected political activities, specifically attacking those who "only because they already enjoy a much easier social situation, advance but do not commit themselves totally to the party structures or the true needs of the country." He felt those young people used the Commission of Education as a springboard for their future life.

Lack of Cadres With Will and Dynamism

The state commissioner of education expressed deep concern about the lack of cadres even to fill positions in the commissions: "Cadres with the will and dynamism to succeed in their work and advance the process of development, cadres in education to train the ever-growing number of young people who seek a place in school."

The need for cadres in education is felt even more when we learn from CEEN Planning and Statistics that, for the 1982-1983 school year, the education department will need at least 1,200 secondary school teachers, for the 5th through the 11th grades.

How can that problem be solved if many young people concentrate on intermediate and specialized courses in preparation for the advanced ones?

Comrade Filinto Martins spoke of the alternatives and prospects for training in the country--law schools, physical education and athletic training facilities, the Technical Institute for Vocational Training which this year will offer courses on civil construction, general mechanics, electronics, bookkeeping and secretarial studies, with carpentry and agricultural studies under consideration, the Chico Te Brigade which will train high school teachers, the possible intermediate nursing school for students who complete the fifth year, but are not interested in further studies, and others.

The state commissioner of national education, in a meeting with the 10th and 11th grade students stressed that no one could go on to higher studies unless he attended the intermediate schools in the country or worked in some government department or firm. Only those organizations could grant scholarships for advanced studies, taking into consideration their needs and the young person's abilities. "Only in this way can the student be sure, when he completes his studies, he will earn his living and not be unemployed," he stressed.

In Bissau, Minister Hensiger met with high justice officials, among them Comrade Cruz Pinto, the attorney general of the republic. They discussed the possibility of improving the ties of cooperation and friendship between the two countries in this field and exchanged information on the activities of their respective governments. The GDR official visited the city of Bissau and some projects in progress in our city, met with the friendship brigade of Free German Youth (FDJ) which is working in our country and also attended the solemn opening of classes at the Professional Training Technical Institute in the Bra Center. PORTUGUESE COOPERANT TEACHERS--Over 60 cooperant teachers have been contracted in Portugal this year. They will teach in secondary schools, mainly in the Kwame N'Krumah National Lyceum, in addition to the teachers who taught in the 1979-80 school year and whose contracts have been renewed. This information was given to us by Comrade Delfim da Silva, director of the Bissau Lyceum, who had gone to Portugal for this purpose. After a meeting at the Portuguese Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the teachers who signed confirmed their trip to Bissau and the final list was delivered to the Cooperation Office. Comrade Delfim da Silva pointed out upon his arrival in Bissau that he had great difficulties in contracting cooperant teachers for secondary schools. Initially about 100 teachers applied, but many withdrew at the last moment. These teachers should arrive here shortly because the beginning of the classes is scheduled for the middle of November [Text] [Bissau NO PINTCHA in Portuguese 16 Oct 80 p 2] 11635

DELEGATION TO DPRK--The PAICC is represented at the Seventh Congress of the Workers Party of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea by Comrade Joao da Costa, member of the CSL [Supreme Struggle Committee] of the party and the state commissioner for health and social affairs. PORTUGUESE AERONAUTICS COOPERATION--Although there is a training center in Bissau, next to the air base, the Civil Aeronautics organization has trained some of its cadres in Portugal in cooperation with the Portuguese Civil Aeronautics and the public firm ANA (Airport and Air Navigation). During his recent visit to Portugal, Comrade Mario Mendes, the director of Civil Aeronautics, discussed with officials of these two entities the progress and possibilities of training cadres in this field. We should remember that at this time there are two young men taking pilot training, one in aeronautical information and another one in the field of fire fighting. Next week eight people will start the course of air traffic control and in November of this year another young man will be sent to train in the second stage of aeronautical information. PORTUGUESE, DUTCH INSURANCE COOPERATION--The Imperio and Bonanca insurance companies of Portugal and EENIA of Holland have agreed to work closely with the National Insurance Institute and Social Security. This decision was made when comrades Voss Ribeiro and Flavio Proenca, insurance director general and deputy director general respectively, visited those two countries recently. The Portuguese companies will provide support on boating accidents all over Guinea-Bissau and the Dutch firm is considering collaborating on life insurance, mainly in the group insurance sector. In other news, we have been informed that Fire Prevention week, sponsored by the General Insurance Administration, will be held in February 1981. The State Commission of the Interior, the State Committee on the Autonomous Sector of Bissau, the Company of Humanitarian Fireman of Bissau and some Portuguese groups have already been asked to provide logistical support for this event. ACCIDENTAL POWER OUTAGE--Once again, there was a power and water outage in the city of Bissau when a fire of unknown origin caused a breakdown in the Central Electricity Department. There was an explosion when the disaster occurred at dawn last Thursday. Flames spread immediately through the electrical installations, completely ruining some parts and causing major damage to "group four," the largest generator group. No estimate has been made yet of the cost of the damages. Moreover, it is not known how long the repair work will take. In the meantime, the "group five" generator, which was also damaged by the fire, was repaired and began working 2 days later. This single generator is providing electricity and water to the capital, through a system of supplying the city by zones, until "group four" is repaired. COUNTRY IS RESOLVED TO DEFEND ITS BORDERS

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 10 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Kenyan Somalis Must Decide Now"]

[Text] THE Government's patience with some Somalis living in this country while owing allegiance to Somalia or any other nation is running out fast. This is especially so for those Somalis living in North-Eastern Province, who are either responsible or shield the Shiftas responsible for the political violence in the area.

In this, they demonstrate unequalled ingratitude because since the end of colonialism, the Government has stepped up development in the semi-arid area by building roads, hospitals and schools. In its further commitment to help the area catch up with the rest of the country, the Government has — with increasing success — dug many bore holes to provide water, both for livestock and human consumption.

Veterinary officers are also in the area to teach the local people better husbandry methods thus improving their living standards. The depth of the Government's commitment to developing the once neglected area becomes all the more obvious when it is realised that all this has been going on at a time of severe budgetary constraints when it would have made economic sense to spend the scarce resources in areas guaranteed to bring greater and faster returns.

Some people in the area understand this and have committed their future to this country. There are others, however, still sitting on the fence waiting to see what will happen before jumping on the side that wins in the local conflict. These are the people whose actions and deeds are inconsistent. They are the collaborators who make the political violence possible by giving the Shiftas moral and material support.

These collaborators need to be told in no uncertain terms that the conflict can only end with Kenya successfully defending her territorial integrity. If they are not ready to accept that and support our stand unequivocally, then they should leave immediately, for their imagined haven in Somalia or elsewhere. Failure to do so will mean fire next time and they should not say they were not warned.

It is quite obvious — to us even if it may not be to others — that acts of violence similar to the one in which a district officer was recently killed would not be possible if the Somali leadership did not give material and moral support to those responsible. Indeed, it would have been relatively easy to track down the killers, who fled in a Government vehicle. This would have made the killers think twice before committing such a heinous crime.

But with ready support from their brothers across the border, the killers knew too well that all they had to do was cross the border and they were safe. That is why the Somali Government must be held responsible for the killing. There had been welcome signs then of a schism in the Mogadishu leadership developing, with some members advocating a formal renunciation of the greater Somalia dream.

It now seems as though the pressure of fighting a losing war in the Ogaden region, coupled with ever desperate economic and political crisis at home, has slammed the door on any advance in this direction. This is unfortunate because the Mogadishu regime does not seem to realise that internal problems can never be solved by starting foreign adventures.

Admittedly; it is the easiest way to deal with crisis at home, but only in the short term. In the last analysis, this stop-gap strategy backfires, deepening the internal crisis. Somalia is busy shopping for friends. We hope the new friends will bluntly tell her these elementary truths. The new friends should find it easier since they are also our friends.

We are, however, aware that as a sovereign country, Somalia can disregard all advice. In that case, we would urge all the people who care for peace and the benefits that come with it to re-appraise their need of a friend who stirs trouble among neighbours when he fails to keep his house in order.

With right on our side we can not lose. It may take some time; it may disrupt our activities in other areas, but the end will be the same: The crushing of all elements bent on dismembering our country. The Government has made it clear it will not hesitate to take all necessary measures to achieve this goal, even if it means rounding up all Somalis and putting them in a village.

And the fact that a country dedicated to upholding democratic principles is willing to take this extreme step should be enough evidence that we are determined to defend our borders.

SHIFTAS POSE NEW THREAT

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 14 Nov 80 pp 9-11

[Text] INTENSIFIED acts of terrorism by shifta bandits in the North Eastern Province of Kenya in the past two weeks threatened to return the security situation in that area to the years soon after Kenya's independence, when the new-born nation found itself engaged in an all-out war with shifta secessionists seeking to break the area away from Kenya and join it to Somalia. And once again, as was the case in the 1963-67 shifta war, Somalia is believed to be behind the new insurgency in that province. In an attempt to contain the situation, the government of Kenya swiftly took a number of security measures which included the imposition of a 12-hour dusk to dawn curfew over the whole province, the sealing of the border with Somalia and Ethiopia and the mobilisation of the country's security forces in the area. If the situation does not improve, the government has threatened to put nearly 700,000 Kenyan Somalis living in the area into security villages.

The security situation in the North Eastern Province has been worsening over the past year or so as incidents of terrorism have increased. Most of these acts of terrorism were aimed at local residents and were generally considered merely criminal, rather than politically motivated, even as the government intensified its efforts to root out the bandits. As things got worse, the government reluctantly agreed to recruit and arm local residents to act as homeguards and assist the security forces in tracking down the shifta bandits. The exercise, which was to begin this month, has now been scrapped following what seemed to be a new awareness in the government that some of the local people were collaborating with the shifta.

The first indication that the terrorism perpetrated by the bandits in the North Eastern Province over the past months may not be merely criminal, but politically motivated, came two weeks ago when the bandits ambushed and killed the district officer for Dapaab in Garissa District, Mr. Johnson Welimo, and later stole a government Landrover and drove it across the border into Somalia. There is no way of physically distinguishing Kenyan Somalis from their kith from across the border in Somalia and it was the public contention of the Kenya government that some Kenyan Somalis, who owed allegiance to Somalia had been collaborating with the shifta. Soon after the killing of Welimo, the area's provincial commissioner, Mr. Ben Kaaria, gave Kenyan Somalis in the area 14 days in which to report, apprehend or help in the capture of the bandits who killed the DO. Kaaria warned that if any other civil servant was killed in the area by the shifta the government would have no alternative but to round up all the Somalis and put them in security villages and shoot on sight anyone found outside the villages. The official also warned that the government would scrap the famine relief programme in the area and suspend all development projects there until the people of the area and their leaders produced the shifta.

The echos of the threat by the Kenya government had hardly died when the shifta struck again, this time killing six people, four of them instantly. Among the dead were four civil servants. The four were shot dead when the shifta raided a shop which is frequented by civil servants at Bura-Karatasi in Garissa town, the provincial capital, on November 9 at around 8.30 p.m.

True to its word, the government immediately mobilised security forces in the area and imposed a 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew over the whole province and declared a state of emergency. Thousands of people were rounded up by the security forces in Garissa and Wajir for screening as a massive hunt for the killers was mounted.

In Nairobi, the minister of state in charge of internal security in the office of the president, Mr. G.G. Kariuki, told newsmen that the Kenya government had declared an all-out war against the shifta. "The time has come when we should make sure that this type of situation is not repeated. . . Our security forces are determined to contain the situation," Kariuki said. And both in Nairobi and Garissa government and security officials were busy drawing up plans for the establishment of security villages throughout the province. Even as these measures were being implemented, reports, which could not be confirmed, from official sources said that shifta had raided a guest house in Garissa and killed another four people on Monday night.

While the government, together with its security forces, was trying to come to grips with the shifta menace in the North Eastern Province, Somali parliamentarians from the area were busy fighting a verbal war in Nairobi. Over the weekend, the minister for information, Mr. Peter Oloo-Aringo, castigated MPs from the province for what he termed their laxity in assisting the government eradicate the shifta. Aringo was especially concerned about the "conspicuous" absence of eight out of the nine MPs from the area at meetings which he held at Garissa, Mandera and Wajir last week concerning the security situation in the area. The one exception who attended the meetings was Mr. Sheikh Aden, an assistant minister of industry.

In retaliation, five MPs from the province, who included Aden, accused the government of deliberately keeping them out in the cold and failing to involve them in the activities to sort out the problem. The MPs said they had not been informed of Aringo's visit, either by the minister's office or the office of the provincial commissioner in Garissa. Two of them, A.M. Sheikh and A.M. Mohammed (an assistant minister of livestock development) said that they had heard of the visit while in Nairobi the day before the minister left, but were told by the minister and his permanent secretary, Mr. John Gituma, that there was no space available in the plane that was to take the minister's party. Aden and another assistant minister for agriculture, Mr. A. Hirsi, said they were in Garissa together with some of their other colleagues attending the provincial development committee and provincial agricultural board meetings, both chaired by PC Kaaria, just a few days before the minister was to arrive there, but they accused Kaaria of keeping the information concerning the visit from them. Aden, however, claims that he remained behind in Garissa when his colleagues left for Nairobi on November 5 and that he was still there when the minister and his party arrived that morning. He said he had to insist stubbornly on accompanying the minister on his tour in his capacity as the chairman of the North Eastern Province parliamentary group. Eventually, one of the officers accompanying the minister had to be left in Garissa to make room for Aden, according to Aden. The assistant minister wondered when Aringo made the reported accusations, saying: "At no time did Mr. Aringo and his two assistant ministers feel or comment about the absence of the other MPs. The minister never expressed any displeasure at any stage in his tour."

More significant, however, was the insistence by the MPs that there was no shifta activity in the North Eastern Province, in spite of the extreme seriousness with which the government and the rest of the country have taken the issue. According to the MPs, most of what was going on in the area was mere criminal banditry and could be easily contained by recruiting and arming local homeguards who were familiar with the local terrain and other conditions. The MPs conceded that there had been politically motivated terrorism in the area lately which they attributed to Sodaf, a rebel movement based in Ethiopia, which is opposed to the current regime of President Siad Barre in Mogadishu. According to the MPs, the terrorism being perpetrated by Sodaf was calculated to trigger the hostility of the Kenya government against Somalia by making it look as if the terrorism was being carried out by shifta with the blessing of the regime in Mogadishu. All five MPs were opposed to the measures the government was taking to contain the situation in the the province and spoke out against the villagisation programme the government promised to implement if they cannot get any co-operation from Kenyan Somalis in the area. The MPs were on Wednesday joined in this stand by a former MP and Kanu leader in Mandera, Mr. D.M. Amin, who also hit out against the dusk to dawn curfew and other measures taken by the government so far, which he said denied Kenyan Somalis the right to move freely and treated them as if their citizenship were in doubt.

From the foregoing, it is quite clear that not only are Kenyan Somali leaders not in agreement with the actions of the Kenya government, but that the government can expect little or no co-operation from leaders in the North Eastern Province as it goes about implementing the current measures to contain the security situation in that province. The Somali MPs, however, seemed to have misjudged the mood of the rest of the country when, on Tuesday, they attempted to have the situation in that province discussed in parliament. The attempt, introduced by Garissa North MP, Mr. Abdi-Kadir Hassan, fizzled out when it could not get the mandatory 15 members to support it out of a full-packed house. The members felt there was little point in discussing a security matter which they felt the government was handling effectively enough.

That should probably have served as enough of an indicator to the MPs from the North Eastern Province as to the mood of the rest of the country over the issue. However, three of them, Aden, Hirsi and Mohammed, all of them assistant ministers, were reported to have threatened to quit parliament unless the shifta menace was resolved. The three were said to have issued their threat soon after parliament had refused to discuss the issue. "We cannot continue living with people who even go to the extent of creating a situation which only suits their own interests," the three were reported to have said, through Aden.

That statement seems very vague and could be open to all kinds of interpretations and misinterpretations. Already, various people are beginning to question the meaning behind the statement. Among the first to question it was a former trade union leader and ex-political detainee, Mr. Ochola Mak'Anyengo, who issued a press release on Wednesday questioning the loyalty of the three assistant ministers to the government of Kenya of which they are a part. Mak'Anyengo interpreted the statement by the three MPs to mean that they could have a better life in Somalia.

During the 1963-67 shifta war, Somalia openly backed the shifta. Somali radio and newspapers carried stories and commentaries exhorting the efforts of the shifta and calling on the rest of the Somali population in Kenya to rise against their government. The shifta were accorded training grounds in that country and allowed to use Somali soil to issue anti-Kenya government statements and other forms of propaganda. This time, however, Somalia has not yet come out in support of the terrorists and at the time of going to press the government in Mogadishu had not issued any statement in support of or against the terrorists. The Somali ambassador in Kenya, Mr. Abdurahman Hussein, has, however, said in Nairobi that his country was not involved in the current situation in north eastern Kenya.

Whether or not the ambassador is telling the truth, his sincerity stands questioned. In an exclusive interview with the Daily Nation on Wednesday, Hussein said Somalia could not renounce its territorial claims over Kenya because it has never claimed any part of Kenya in the past. Either Hussein was being dishonest, or he must be a most ignorant man. Somalia has not only publicly claimed the north eastern region of Kenya since this country's independence, but the Somali government has printed and distributed maps of what is now referred to as Greater Somalia which includes the north eastern region of Kenya and the Ogaden province of Ethiopia over which Somalia and Ethiopia have been constantly at war. Kenyan and Somali leaders have held several summits over these claims by Somalia, the most memorable being on October 28, 1967 in Arusha, Tanzania, under the chairmanship of Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, at which a memorandum of understanding called the Arusha Accord, was reached under which Somalia was to renounce its claims over Kenyan territory. All this is public information of which the Somali ambassador should be aware.

Perhaps he meant by saying that Somalia never claimed Kenyan territory, that Somalia still considered the boundaries of Greater Somalia bona fide. Hussein blamed the current situation in the North Eastern Province on an "enemy" which was neither Kenyan nor Somali, which was trying to create misunderstanding between Kenya and Somalia, but stopped short of naming the enemy.

With the deteriorating security situation in the North Eastern Province, Kenyans have become seriously concerned about the arming of Somalia by the United States, a country considered traditionally a friend of Kenya. America has been selling arms to Somalia in exchange for the military bases at Berbera and Kismayu built and left behind by the Soviets when Russia was expelled from Somalia several years back. Makueni MP, Mr. Kasanga Mulwa, on Tuesday made an appeal to the US in parliament to stop arming Somalia since such weapons could be used to attack Kenya. The US has also been seeking military facilities in Kenya and the security of Kenya's border with Somalia has been a prime factor in the negotiations. So far there has not been any word from Washington on the worsening situation in that region. ■

AMBASSADOR EXPLAINS SOMALIA'S POSITION

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 14 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] THE feelings of many Kenyans are that your country is involved in one way or the other in the current breakdown of security in Kenya's North-Eastern Province. Kenyans also felt that Somalia was involved and backed shifta activities against Kenya during the 1963-65 war. How do you feel about these accusations?

I can assure you that my country is not in any way involved either before, or in the current situation of Kenya's North-Eastern Province. Contrary to this, in fact my government has, in the past suggested and invited the police forces from the two countries to jointly carry out boarder control and comb out criminals.

My government invited the Kenya Police Force to jointly comb the Kenya/Somalia borders, so that in the event of criminals or enemies making any mischief, the two police forces could co-operate.

With all the sincerity and trust from my government, all I can tell you right now is that I am empowered to renew this invitation to the Kenya Police, of course through the Kenya Government.

I must also point out one thing at this juncture. I have been waiting to hold official talks with Kenya Government officials before I could grant an interview to the Press. But since I had not been approached by any Government official in connection with the current situation in the North-Eastern Province, I have reluctantly agreed to be interviewed by the NATION.

But in this connection, I must also state how disappointed my government and I have been because of hostile attitude taken by the Kenya Press, and the NATION in particular towards my Head of State, government and Somalia.

A case in point here, is the NATION's editorial of October 29. To say the least I think the writer of that particular editorial forget that my President, H. E. Siad Barre, was one time Chairman of the OAU.

My President's wish is to have a united Africa and cannot be involved in dividing Kenyans.

Instructions

Let me state here that I have definite instructions from my President, and I speak with authority, that I was sent here to further cultivate and maintain good relationship between Kenya and Somalia.

Kenyans (and we are sure, this is the official stand of the Kenya Government) would like Somalia to renounce publicly her territorial claims on Kenya's land. Can you state once and for all that your country has no claims on Kenya's land?

I don't want to go into the substance of all this... To renounce a claim on something, is when one has before made such a claim. But as far as Somalia is concerned, and as far as I know it officially, my country has never before claimed even an inch of Kenya's land.

And since Somalia has never made any claim on Kenya's land, I really don't know how my country can be pressed to renounce a claim it has never made before. If I have never claimed your shirt, how can you press me to renounce a claim I have never made?

Let us get this matter right. And I hope you are not going to report tomorrow that the Somali Ambassador yesterday "renounced" his country's claim on Kenya's land. I have not done that because there is no need for me to do so since we have never claimed any part of your country.

Certain people accuse Somalia of being interested in Kenya's land, Ethiopia's land and even Djibouti. It is offensive for anyone to say that my country would like to grab land, even from Djibouti, when it was Somalia which was the first country to recognise that country's (Djibouti's) independence.

Somalia is not interested in any country's territory and will never do that.

If your country has never claimed parts of Kenya, how do you explain the existence of an official map in possession of your government showing a "Greater Somalia"?

First of all may I say I have not come across the said map you have in mind. But if you are referring to the one I know of, I must state here that all over the world there are different maps showing different features.

There are geographical maps, historical maps, educational maps etc. But we do not have the one showing Kenya's territory. So I don't know which one you are referring to.

I am referring to the one your government is currently using when teaching Somali children the boundaries of "Greater Somalia". This map shows portions of land belonging, not only to Kenya, but to Ethiopia, Djibouti etc. The map shows Kenyan land up to Meru as belonging to Somalia.

That is one of the maps I talked about for educational purposes. That map is purely for giving kids the necessary background, but I am not aware that it claims parts of land belonging to Kenya.

You mention Djibouti, Ogaden etc. I must tell you, for your information, that Ethiopia is one African country which took part in the 1884 conference for the scramble for Africa. There was no other African country except Ethiopia which sat down with many European countries to divide African countries.

Ethiopia was then just given the Ogaden like that, just as several European nations — British, Italians, Germans etc — scrambled for various African countries.

Ethiopia was then given Ogaden, and that is the background of the dispute in the Ogaden. They have been ruling that country by force against the wish of the local people there. Somalia's views on this are that the people of the Ogaden should choose their destiny.

Let them work out their self determination strategy. That is the position, but we are not interested in grabbing anybody's territory — not even Ogaden. The people will have to choose whether they would like to be governed by Ethiopians or by anybody else.

So Somalia's official stand in so far as Ogaden is concerned is that Ogaden is not yet independent, and that it is still struggling for its independence?

That is correct. Ogaden is still a colonial country, and Somalia's interest here is to help the people achieve independence, just as we have assisted many African countries achieve independence.

But how do you explain the fact that Somalia has, in the past, fought Ethiopians for Ogaden? If as you claim Ogaden people ought to choose their destiny, why did your country fight and was subsequently defeated during the 1978 war?

I shouldn't have liked to respond to this question, but anyhow since you have posed it, I do. First of all it is not true to state that Somalia suffered defeat in that war. Somalia as I have explained, likes assisting liberation movements throughout Africa attain their self determination rights.

This was the case in our involvement in the war you have just referred to. The people of Ogaden will decide what they want. Somalia then when called upon, will assist.

But, you must not forget that during the 1978 war, Ethiopia brought in a large number of Cuban soldiers and even right now they are still there as mercenaries. Now, whichever way one looks at this, it is an abuse for an African country to call foreign mercenaries to fight another African country.

Dialogue

Let me also state here that it is not the business of Somalia to say what Ethiopia does with their independence. I don't want to open up a dialogue between myself and the Ethiopian Ambassador here over this issue any more. But the fact is that they brought in over 100,000 Cuban troops who are still occupying their land.

You realise that the majority of Kenyans in North-Eastern Province are of Somali origin. What is Mogadishu's official stand over the Kenya Somalis? Could it be assumed right that your country may be dreaming to "assist" the Kenya Somalis attain self determination if ever there is such a thing?

The people in the North-Eastern Province of this country are Kenyans. I have never been there myself... although I wish it could be possible for me to meet them there and talk to them (even though it is not my official business to do that).

I also understand that the official interpretation of the philosophy Nyayo, means love, peace and unity. If that is the case, then I would say the people there too need peace, love and unity.

And please don't lead me further into this area, for I have no business with this issue. We hear that there are a lot of killings going on there. We hear also that Government officials have been killed. It ought to be established who is doing all this.

I am sure by now the Kenya Government knows who the enemy is. If it is the work of criminals, then we have had cases of this nature even taking place in Nairobi and else in Kenya. But may I say that it is wrong for people to be locked up in concentration camps even if crimes have been committed.

This is why I said earlier that my government would be very willing to co-operate with the Kenya police to effectively comb the area for the purpose of establishing and apprehending criminals.

Your people in North-Eastern Province need to be talked to in a loving way in the philosophy of peace, love and unity. Once they are treated that way, I am sure, they too will co-operate. But as I said, this is not my official business here. It is your Government's business.

What of the claims that the Somali Salvation Front (SOSAF), the organisation which is causing trouble at home in Somalia may be involved in all the trouble in our North-Eastern Province? Can you comment on this?

I don't know anything of the sort...Maybe you know better than I do. In fact I have never met and don't even wish to meet members of the so-called SOSAF.

But who is behind its leadership and is it causing trouble in your country?

I don't know. You know better than I do. Ask me another question, I don't know about that.

Still on this issue, Mr Ambassador, would you deny or confirm here that there is internal political problem inside Somalia right now?

Well, since 1962 when we attained independence, my country has always strived for development, just as it is the case in many African countries. But, somehow, the previous governments did not do much in the fields of development, so the military took over the reigns of the government and to date we are still developing Somalia.

Of course opposition in any country is a common feature, and it is not just confined to Somalia alone. There may be few dissatisfied individuals both inside and outside Somalia, but that is nothing to worry about.

My President's philosophy is to develop that country, and unite it with the rest of Africa. We are not going to be retarded in any way by our detractors.

While on development Mr. Ambassador, it is said that the US is currently arming your country to the teeth, just as it is said that the USSR is arming the Ethiopia. If this is the case, don't you believe that the involvement of the Super Powers might constitute a major danger in the Horn of Africa?

Let me tell you — and this is official, that the US have asked for ports facilities in Somalia. We have granted that to them on the account that they assist Somalia in development. We have not asked for arms from the US, and to the best of my knowledge, I am not aware of any arms from the US which have been delivered to Somalia.

As for the security of the Horn, you had better ask the same question to the Ethiopian Ambassador. Why are they receiving arms costing billions of dollars from the USSR. For what do they want to do with those arms. What good are they going to do for Africa?

If they are meant for attacking Somalia, then naturally we have to prepare. We have not received neither have we asked for any arms from the US.

Let me also state here that Ethiopia is our immediate neighbour. Our aim is not to fight them, but if they want to fight us, that is a different matter, we will have to defend ourselves.

Just for the record Mr. Ambassador, would you explain what you mean by the term "Greater Somalia"?

That is just for propaganda purposes used by our opponents. That word used to be a catchword sometimes at the UN in 1948. It was a word used by certain nations at the UN.

Yes Mr. Ambassador, but specifically what does it mean? Do you want Somalia to be referred to as "Greater Somali"?

I told you it is a word used by propagandists. To us it means nothing. It is a name you might call Kenya as "Great Kenya."

SERIOUS ACCUSATIONS LEVELED AT MINISTERS

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 21 Nov 80 pp 4-6

[Text]

PRESIDENT Daniel arap Moi on Thursday last week relieved the MP for Nyeri, Mr. Waruru Kanja, of his duties as an assistant minister for local government after Kanja had made a number of serious accusations against two cabinet ministers and had called on the government to name the people who were behind the assassination of the former minister for economic planning, Mr. Tom Mboya, in 1969, and the former MP for Nyandarua North, Mr. J.M. Kariuki, in 1975.

Kanja's dramatic accusations were made in parliament on Tuesday last week in a personal statement in which Kanja sought to exonerate himself from what he claimed had been said about him by some people. Although he did not elaborate on what it was that had been said about him, Kanja went on to claim that there was a plot to assassinate him and named the minister for constitutional and home affairs, Mr. Charles Njonjo, and the director of the Criminal Investigations Department, Mr. Ignatius Iriga Nderi, as the two people behind the plot. Kanja also repeated his earlier accusations of late last month that two cabinet ministers were being accorded security escorts because of their past crimes, naming the two as Njonjo and a minister of state in the office of the president, Mr. G.G Kariuki.

Kanja's contention was that only the president and his vice-president needed to be protected by armed escorts. Objecting to the provision of armed bodyguard protection for the other two ministers alone, Kanja asked, "Why are they being guarded while other ministers are not being guarded, if not for their past crimes?"

Speaking on the alleged plot to assassinate him, Kanja insinuated that the plot was being hatched to silence him the same way Mboya, Kariuki and Pio Gama Pinto had been silenced for being outspoken. "When we talk about something we are told to shut up or else face what others have faced . . . We should be free from intimidation. If I am guilty I should be hanged in public, but don't take me to Ngong (where J.M. was taken by his assassins)."

Kanja charged that members of parliament would not be free to speak out without fear as long as the assassins of Mboya and Kariuki were still at large and demanded that the murderers be named. He also called for the naming of the "the big man" mentioned by Mr. Isaac Njenga Njoroge, who was tried for the murder of Mboya, charged and sentenced to death on September 10, 1969 by Justice A. Simpson. During the trial, Njenga was said to have asked several senior policemen who arrested him. "Why pick on me? Why not the big man? We did what we were told."

Although the prosecution attempted to use this statement to prove complicity on Njenga's part in Mboya's murder, the court found it inadmissible as evidence. Kanja challenged the present attorney-general, Mr. James Karugu, to open the file on the Njenga trial and tell the nation who the big man named by Njenga was.

In the heated debate that followed Kanja's accusation, the MP was taken to task by several members of the government, notably minister for local government, Mr. Stanley Oloitipitip, and the minister for livestock development, Mr. James Osogo, and at least one backbencher, Mr. Fred Omido (Bahati) to substantiate his allegations, both on the past "crimes" on Njonjo and G.G. Kariuki and on the plot to assassinate him. After heated exchanges, Kanja was asked by the vice-president and the minister for finance, Mr. Mwai Kibaki, who is also the leader of government business in the house, to substantiate his charges or be expelled from the house for three consecutive sittings. Kanja did not substantiate and was expelled from the house for three days by speaker, Mr. Fred Mati. The following day, Kanja was dismissed from the government by President Moi, who said his appointment was "not in the interests of the nation and good government."

This was the second time that Kanja had made accusations of past crimes against Njonjo and Kariuki and called for the naming of the "big man" in the Mboya murder. The first time was late last month when parliament was debating the issue of dumping of dangerous drugs and ineffective hospital equipment in Kenya. The MP for Nakuru North, Mr. Koigi wa Wamwere, had claimed that Mboya would not have died if the American-made rescue air device used to resuscitate him had not been faulty. Kanja then argued that it was not the device that killed Mboya but the acts of those who sought to silence parliament. A heated exchange followed with the minister for energy, Mr. John Okwanyo, maintaining that the Mboya issue should be forgotten since it did nothing but open painful wounds for the members of the Mboya family and contaminated the political climate in the country. Okwanyo challenged MPs who had any information that shed any light on the death of Mboya to give it to the authorities rather than exploit the painful tragedy for political opportunism. Wamwere and Kanja argued there was nothing opportunistic in demanding that the nation be told the circumstances that led to a national leader's death.

In the climate created by the Mboya debate, the issue of the provision of armed bodyguards was almost forgotten. Last week, when Kanja repeated the charges that the two ministers were being guarded for their past crimes, however, G.G. Kariuki came to his own defence, and that of Njonjo. Kariuki denied that they were being guarded for any past crimes and appealed to Kenyans to ignore the statements by Kanja. Kariuki, who is the minister in charge of internal security, said the issue of anyone's security or protection was not a matter of parliamentary or public debate and warned that it was wrong for anyone to try to earn credit by provoking the government and resorting to mudslinging. "Anyone doing that should be ready to answer all the questions the government might put to him," he added.

Since his resignation as attorney-general to run for the Kikuyu seat in Kiambu, Njonjo has often come under attack from critics who felt that he was seeking even more political power. With the presidency filled by President Moi and the vice-presidency by Mwai Kibaki, there were speculations that Njonjo wanted the constitution changed to accommodate him as a prime minister. This Njonjo rejected noting that there was no provision for a prime minister in the constitution. It was then that another speculation began that Njonjo was now after Kibaki's job. In spite of the speculations and denial about the tug of war between the two, Kibaki and Njonjo have, wittingly or unwittingly, clearly come out with two combative camps. And with Kibaki and Njonjo coming from the same Kikuyu ethnic group, most Kenyans have been treating the fight between the two camps purely internal matter of the Kikuyu, while among the Kikuyu themselves, the tug of war has often threatened to take the ethnic group back to the times before the death of late President Kenyatta when the Central Province was divided by political hostilities between people from Kiambu District and the rest of the Kikuyu.

In recent months, Njonjo has been on the offensive accusing some people of fighting him and G.G. Kariuki. According to Njonjo, those who have been agitating the public are those who do not want to see Moi in power and he has on several recent occasions stated that there is no vacancy for the presidency. This made little sense to most observers who did not see what connection there was between Njonjo's critics and the presidency. What did make sense, however, was Njonjo's recent charge that the agitators wanted him sacked from government by the president. Saying he had been a target for similar attacks during Kenyatta's regime, Njonjo retorted, "If I was not sacked during the late Kenyatta's time, I will not be sacked now." But even during Kenyatta's time, never before has Njonjo ever come under the kind of attack that was levelled against him by Kanja on Tuesday last week.

Whatever the truth is about the Kanja affair, the accusations by Kanja are serious security-wise and must not be taken lightly by either Kenyans or the government and need to be investigated to find out the truth. Besides the security issue involved, however, the accusations were also politically, heavily loaded. According to Kanja, the people who want to kill him want to do it because he is said to have been "corrupted so that somebody somewhere does not get the seat he has been fighting for." Kanja said the whole thing began with a statement he made at the leaders' conference held at the Kenya Institute of Administration in Kabete in May this year, which he said was interpreted to mean that he was supporting the vice-president and minister for finance, Mr. Mwai Kibaki.

Given the tug of war that seems to be going on within Kenya's political hierarchy as well as the often talked about struggle for power between Njonjo and Kibaki, Kanja's allegations have to be seen in this light and it would seem from Kanja's statement that he was convinced that the discussion of the J.M. and Mboya murders would tip the balance in favour of Kibaki and against Kibaki's opponents, whoever they are. Speaking to The Weekly Review on Thursday afternoon, Kanja said he had been driven to make his latest charges in parliament after he had been upset by what he considered as a threat from Njonjo. The threat, he said, had been delivered to him through the minister for local government, Mr. Stanley Oloitipitip, whom he said had been sent to him by Njonjo to warn him against continuing to raise the issue of bodyguards and the J.M.-Mboya issue in parliament.

As a member of the government at the time, the correct thing for Kanja to have done would have been to raise the matter of Njonjo's and Kariuki's with the government through the normal procedure. The same should have been done on the issue of the alleged plot by another member of the government to kill him or silence him in parliament. Failing to do this, Kanja should have done the next best thing which is to resign his government appointment before raising the matter on the floor of parliament. As it was, Kanja invited his own sacking from the president for failing to comply with normal government discipline.

But Kanja had no regrets for his actions. Addressing a press conference soon after he had received the letter from the president relieving him of his duties as an assistant minister, Kanja said, "I have a lot of respect for President Moi as man of great integrity and mercy, but I have no regrets in accepting his decision. I am not bitter . . . I thank him for having relieved me of my job."

While there seems to be a consensus among observers that Kanja's actions and statements were directly related to the reported in-fighting between Kibaki and Njonjo, Kanja's critics as well as some observers are of the opinion that Kanja was acting on Kibaki's behalf, in spite of the fact that it was Kibaki who named Kanja to be expelled from parliament. Both Kibaki and Kanja are from Nyeri and according to political observers in that district all had not been well with the relationship between the two men for a while. The relationship has, however, been reported to have been improving in the past few months. Both were also close friends of the late J.M. Kariuki, who was also originally from Nyeri, and Kibaki was the only senior government minister who attended Kariuki's funeral and gave a personal eulogy. In conclusion of the eulogy, Kibaki said, "Even if it takes 100 years, we want to know why he was killed, and by whom?"

Kanja would seem to have attempted to kill two birds with one stone when he called for the naming of the murderers of J.M. and then went on to name Ignatius Nderi as one of those to be asked in the case of his death. The people of Nyeri tended to take the killing of Kariuki as if it was more personal to them than to the rest of the country and Kanja often capitalised on this when conducting his election campaign last year. His chief opponent was Mr. Peter Nderi, a former district commissioner and younger brother of Ignatius, while Ignatius was among a number of senior police officers mentioned in the report of the parliamentary select committee set up to investigate J.M.'s death, said to have been among the last people to see J.M. alive. Kanja's critics in Nyeri argue that Kanja just dragged Nderi's name into his accusations as a political strategy, knowing the nature of the politics of his constituency. His supporters, however, argued Kanja did not need to pull such a trick with the next elections campaigns nearly four years ahead and insisted that the government should investigate the accusations by public hearings.

The issue of the Mboya and Kariuki assassinations is still very sensitive in Kenya and the government would hardly encourage a public debate along these lines. It must have been with this in mind that President Moi on Saturday warned leaders against bringing up the past "which cannot bring the peace, unity and love that is necessary if we are to forge ahead as one nation." The president has recently displayed a combative mood against "dissidents" whom he claimed were out to disrupt peace in the country. The events of the past one week if they got out of hand could easily lead to a serious breach of security, which justifies the attitude of the president. ■

STUDENTS RIOT AT KENYATTA UNIVERSITY

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 21 Nov 80 pp 10-11

[Text]

THIS week, angry second year students at Kenyatta University College, boycotted their lectures demanding that their allowances be reviewed. According to one of the students, the second years said that since their teaching practice period has been extended from the usual 8 weeks to three months their allowances should be increased. To make sure that their demands were met, the students formed a committee which went to the ministry of higher education headquarters on Tuesday to discuss the issue but were reportedly told by the director of higher education, Mr. J.M. Kamunge, that they should go back to the college to give the ministry officials time to convene a meeting today to consider their case.

However, when the committee returned to the campus, the students demanded that the minister should come personally to talk to them, but the minister did not turn up. The students then telephoned the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Joseph Mungai, to come and address them. Mungai reportedly promised to come on Wednesday at 10.00 a.m. but failed. The student then decided to boycott their lectures.

According to a third year studen who refused to disclose his name, t second years started being rough wi the first years in an attempt to enlist their support. The university administration then called in riot police. The riot police had to use tear gas to disperse the students from the compound after they had been given twenty minutes to pack and go. "The commotion was caused by second years, it had nothing to do with first and third years," said one student. As a result, the second year students were sent home indefinitely, while the rest of the students are expected to report to the college on Sunday, November 23.

When The Weekly Review arrived at the campus, the students were desperately asking for a lift and had blocked the Nairobi-Thika road with stones forcing every motorist coming from Thika to stop and give them a lift. Some of them threw stones at motorists who refused to stop. However, according to Thursday's Daily Nation, the permanent secretary of the ministry for higher education, Mr. J. T. Leting, in his letter to the college said, among other things, that grievances related to allowances should be communicated to the ministry through the college authorities. Besides the allowances the Nation said the students are also unhappy about the rumoured plan to split the allowances over three terms, so that students would get shs. 40 one term with the rest divided evenly between the other two terms. The students want the allowances split evenly over all three terms.

The Nation also reported that students had boycotted classes since Monday and threatened to leave the college if their grievances were not resolved by Friday. It was on Wednesday when things really got worse that Leting gave the ultimatum that students either resume classes or go home. The ultimatum failed and the students were ordered to go home. ■

GASOHOL PRODUCTION NOT EYED FAVORABLY

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 14 Nov 80 pp 23-24

[Text] OF all the papers presented at the power alcohol production symposium organised last week by the Kenya Sugar Authority and the Kenya Society of Sugar Cane Technologists, the presentation by the Kenya Chemical and Food Corporation Limited (KCFC) stands out as the most sketchy. The KCFC is currently constructing a factory on the outskirts of Kisumu which they euphemistically call a "molasses utilisation complex". The complex would appear to be more suitably described as a power alcohol distillery, since alcohol production will be, by far, the bulk of the complex's output. The government of Kenya has the controlling interest in the alcohol plant with the remaining 49 per cent of the shares held by the Madhvani Group and the Chemap Group of Switzerland.

When finished, the molasses complex is expected to produce 20 million litres of alcohol annually, of which 1.6 million litres will be comprised of potable alcohol for use by spirits manufacturers. Besides this, KCFC says, the plant will also produce 1000 tonnes of dried baker's yeast, 3000 tonnes of wet yeast, 3000 tonnes of citric acid and 2 million litres of natural vinegar per year. In addition, the plant will produce 6800 tonnes of oxygen, 7500 tonnes of sulphuric acid, 2000 tonnes of ammonium sulphate, 10 million cubic metres of methane gas and 6000 tonnes of gypsum. Besides the alcohol, the other products appear to be by-products which the KCFC finds profitable to produce. Otherwise, it appears the intention of the KCFC was to manufacture power alcohol for use as a blender in petrol.

The symposium was held to discuss the viability of power alcohol projects in the country using the sugar industry as their main source of inputs. Several participants at the symposium went further to suggest the use of crops other than sugar cane. Their recommendation was based on the opinion that the supply of molasses in the country, the proposed feed stock for the Kisumu plant and another one at Muhoroni, is insufficient for power alcohol production in the long run and that deriving alcohol from sugar cane would produce conflicts in land use.

The paper presented by the KCFC did not, as would have been expected go into the costs of realising the project. Some emphasis was placed on the production of by-products of the alcohol distillation process and the foreign exchange that the exports of such by-products would earn the country. The KCFC did not, however, attempt to indicate how much foreign exchange the export of by-products could earn the country. Instead, the paper says that involvement in the export of sophisticated chemicals would provide the country with prestige, besides the foreign exchange.

Utilisation of molasses the KCFC says, will eliminate the environmental problem of dumping surplus molasses which pollute the environment. But the KCFC has had to invest shs. 80 million in the construction of an effluent treatment plant to treat the effluent coming off its own operations. Though the plant is expected to obtain 40 per cent of its fuel needs from the methane gas produced as a by-product of the alcohol distillation process, it will still have to depend for the rest of its energy needs on imported petroleum.

When the alcohol complex is finished, KCFC expects to employ more than 500 people. The project was initially estimated to cost shs. 560 million. So far, industry sources estimate the project to have cost shs. 1000 million or more although construction is only about half-way through. At this rate, the project is estimated to cost about shs. 2000 million to complete. Using the projected employment figure of 500 people, analysts point out that the cost of providing employment for a single worker averages out as shs. 4 million, a figure which, they hasten to point out, is completely unrealistic anywhere. Even if the project was to be completed by spending only shs. 1000 million, which is already unrealistic, the average cost of providing a job in the "molasses utilisation complex would be shs. 2 million which is still grossly unrealistic.

Using this argument, analysts point out that investing such amounts of money in food production would benefit more people than the proposed alcohol project is excepted to benefit. They add that furthermore, the power alcohol is intended to blend petrol to give it a higher octane rating but is not intended for blending with diesel which is likely to become the major fuel for motor vehicles in future.

BRIEFS

BITUMEN IN SHORT SUPPLY--There is an acute shortage of bitumen in Kenya. The shortfall is said to be between 20,000 and 30,000 tons a year. The most affected are new road networks and maintenance work where considerable delays have been reported. An official of the Ministry of Transport and Communications, Mr. W. T. Gasiorowski, told the NATION yesterday that only 10 per cent of the programmed maintenance work had been completed. "The situation is that bad," he said. It was not immediately known how much money has been lost as a result of the delays. But it is believed the loss will run into several million shillings. Private construction companies are among the worst hit. Most of them described their losses as "colossal". However, to arrest the situation, the Government is reported to have authorised the import of 12,000 tons in four shipments, with the last one arriving in Kenya between December and early January 1981. Because of lack of storage facilities the stocks being imported have to be in drums, making them 30 per cent more expensive than if imported in bulk. But Mr. Gasiorowski confirmed that, as soon as sufficient storage was available, the Government would consider importing bitumen in bulk. It is thought the only long-term solution lies in either the expansion of the oil refinery plant in Mombasa or setting aside substantial funds for importation. The Mombasa plant produces 25,000 tons a year. But with frequent breakdowns, the actual figure is much lower. Other reports said the Government together with the oil companies operating in Kenya, were already working on a programme to reprocess bitumen to create more oil. But there were fears the output of bitumen would fall much more sharply and could force the Government to more than double the imports. Moreover, Uganda, whose crude imports are also processed at the refinery, has reportedly not claimed its quota of the bitumen for the last nine years. DOE GIVES DETAILS OF ECONOMIC PROBLEMS, AUSTERITY MEASURES

London WEST AFRICA in French 24 Nov 80 pp 2347-2349

[Text]

LIBERIA is in a desperate economic plight, according to a statement to the nation by the Head of State, Master Sergeant Samuel K. Doe. In an effort to reduce government spending there will be no further government hiring and all wage earners will be required to lend the government money by buying national savings bonds — to the extent of two months' salary for the better paid and one month's salary for those earning less than $750 a month.

These are extracts from Master Sergeant Doe's address:

This morning, I have called you to tell you that our country is in serious financial difficulty. I want to tell you what the problems are, what has caused them, and what we think we should do to solve them.

My fellow citizens: When we took over the government on April 12, one of our most immediate concerns was to find out the financial position of the government and to get a complete understanding of the state of our economy.

On that morning, one of the first things we did was to put an announcement on the radio calling the heads of government's economic and financial institutions to report to the People's Redemption Council. When they came to the Mansion, they provided us with some important information which indicated, among other things:

- That there was only $5m. cash in the vault of the National Bank;
- That the former government owed $700m. to other governments and financial institutions abroad which the PRC government would have to pay;
- That the public corporations jointly owed $80m. to foreign financial institutions, which this government would also have to pay; and
- That the government of Liberia owed the National Bank over $20m.

From all indications, therefore, it would seem that the Tolbert government had only been surviving from hand to mouth, and from monies they had borrowed at very high cost to the Liberian people.

Traditionally, our economy has been supported mainly by iron ore, rubber and other agricultural products. Today, the high cost of production, caused mainly by the increase in the price of oil, and the low demand for steel in the industrialised countries, has significantly weakened the operations of our iron ore companies. The companies are all experiencing heavy losses.

As a result, government's revenue from the iron ore mining sector has fallen considerably. In addition, the iron ore sector has stopped providing new jobs. For example, a few years ago government received nearly $35m. annually in profit-sharing. But today, because of the recession in the steel industry, and the high cost of production, the iron ore sector contributes practically nothing to the Liberian economy.

The agricultural sector has been equally disappointing. Exports from that sector are showing little improvements. And food imports, especially rice, continue to go up because we are not working hard enough to feed ourselves. All this had led the government into serious financial problems.

It seemed even worse when we realised that the revolution, which had freed the Liberian masses from many years of oppression, suppression and exploitation, would also arouse high expectations, and raise the people's hopes for an early improvement in their standard of living and the general economic well-being of the country.

We, therefore, saw it as our first task, while securing the state, to plan and direct the economy so as to improve the terrible situation which we met.

Poor economic conditions resulting from a number of developments during the past few months have kept revenue collections below what was expected. Instead of collecting $250m. in taxes and other revenues, as we had projected, we will actually realise $201m.

Because government has been spending more than it has been collecting, it today owes the National Bank of Liberia a total of $33m. The National Bank, as a result, owes the commercial banks a total of $18m. This has consequently created a situation in which the commercial banks do not have enough money to lend the business community.

The National Iron Ore Mining Company and the Bong Mining Company are facing serious financial difficulties, and have indicated to government their plan to close down their mines. Due to inflationary and other conditions even Lamco is not making profit. You will observe that these problems existed long before the PRC government came to power.

What is distressing about the situation is that if these companies close down, it would mean the displacement of over 25,000 Liberians who are either employees or dependents living in these areas.

Another factor which has contributed to our economic problem is that since the April 14 incident last year, and in particular the April 12 revolution this year, some businesses and individuals that had funds on deposit with the commercial banks have withdrawn their monies. Total deposits withdrawn from the banking sector of the economy since April 14, 1979, were about $25m.

As this amount has not been spent or invested in Liberia, we can only assume that it has either left the country through means which by-passed the banking system, or that it is being hoarded.

While acknowledging the impact of general world conditions on our country, we must accept that several activities at home have contributed, in some measure, to the fact that the financial situation has shown no improvement. There seems to be a "crisis of confidence" which may have been brought about by random harassment of members of the business and banking communities by men in arms.

We are aware of these things, and if you want to be honest, fellow citizens you will admit that we have spared no efforts to bring these conditions under speedy control. control.

These incidents should not have been totally unexpected in the early days of the revolution, but they certainly have no place in the new society we are trying to build at this time. Of course, one or two stray incidents still occur.

Another matter which has contributed to the crisis of confidence, is the intervention, from time to time, of members of the People's Redemption Council in the affairs of business houses, public corporations, concessions, and generally, in labour matters.

Many times these interventions have over-ridden or by-passed the proper authorities or the channels established for dealing with such matters. We are not unaware of the negative effects of these actions, and we are doing everything within our capability to reduce and control them.

My fellow citizens and friends: this is Liberia today. This is where we stand, financially and economically, today. These are the problems which face us, today. The question is, what are we going to do about them? Where do we go from here?

The most urgent problem which we must tackle is that of balancing the budget. We can do this by increasing revenues or reducing expenditure. We have determined that it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to increase revenues through additional means such as imposing new taxes or a higher rate of custom duties or excise taxes. We have therefore had to explore other methods for raising revenue, of which we shall inform you later in this statement.

On the expenditure side, we feel that through greater discipline and control in government spending, it would be possible to achieve a significant reduction in total government expenditure, although this will not be enough to make up the total deficit.

In this regard, I would like here to confirm the main points contained in Executive Order No. 15, which I have recently signed in connection with the implementation of the 1980/81 budget:

Due to the present deficit in the budget for fiscal 1980/81, and our commitment to the International Monetary Fund to hold the overall deficit at the level of $75m, all ministeries and agencies of government are hereby directed to desist from submitting requests to my office and/or to the bureau of the budget for additional funding, since, indeed, there are no reserve accounts in the budget from which such fundings could be provided. Under no circumstances will expenditures exceed allotments, nor will allotments issued exceed the adjusted appropriations in any budgetary account.

As an additional measure, government will now impose a severe limitation on the purchase of new equipment of any sort, during this fiscal year. Our policy shall be to "repair rather than to replace." Only in extreme circumstances, and only after full justification has been made, through the proper channels, will government approve the purchase of new equipment.

None of the above measures will be enough to reduce the level of government expenditure to one which would enable our income to cover our expenses. We have therefore considered several other alternatives.

We considered the possibility of across-the-board retrenchment of up to one-third of government salaried employees. But we dismissed this idea because of the serious economic difficulties that the retrenched persons would face in these hard times.

We also considered the possibility of reducing everyone's salary by a certain precentage, but we abandoned this idea because the effect would have been carried over to the next fiscal year, when perhaps some of our problems would have been solved, and then we would have the additional problem of raising everyone's salary again.

Another suggestion considered was that workers in government and the private sector would be required to make mandatory contributions to government, but this reminded us too much of the unfair practices of previous administrations, where people got 11 months' pay for 12 months' work. We do not wish to be associated with this form of forced labour.

We have therefore made two decisions: The first is that, effective immediately, there will be a total freeze on government hiring. This includes agencies, and public corporations.

Secondly, we have decided that we will borrow from all salaried employees certain specified portions of their annual income which government will repay in a number of years, with interest. Under this arrangement, every wage-earning Liberian citizen will be required to make a compulsory purchase of what will be known as National Savings Bonds.

As you are aware, I and the members of the PRC have already donated to government our salaries for the months of August and October, to assist in the financing of the free education programme.

In this same spirit of sacrifice and commitment to the cause of our people, we have again agreed to donate our salaries for the months of March and May of next year. We are not lending our salaries to government, neither are we using them to purchase bonds.

All Cabinet Ministers, their deputies and assistants, civil servants, members of the armed forces and security agencies, employees of public corporations, government financial institutions, as well as all Liberian employees of concessions and other private companies, who are presently earning $750 per month gross salary or above, will be required to follow our example and forego two months net salary to be applied against the purchase of National Savings Bonds.

All Liberians earning less than $750 per month will be required to forego one month's net salary, to the similarly applied against the purchase of National Savings Bonds.

TECHNICAL, POLITICAL LEADERSHIP ARE COMPLEMENTARY

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 26 Oct 80 p 2

[Article by Mia Couto: "Have the Technocrats' Attempts Died Completely?"]

[Text] What is the use of party cells, production councils of the production units and other basic entities of the ODM [Democratic Mass Organizations]?

One could say that this is a ridiculous question, but it is a question that in practice some officials of factories, enterprises and production units are beginning to ask. For these officials the party cells and the basic organs of the ODM are resource organs that are "of use" in certain circumstances. They are remembered when there is a difficulty, when there is need to make some guideline from the top reach the workers. For the directors of some factories and production units political organs of their sector are only consultative appendices.

In some cases it is a mistake that is easy to correct. However, in other cases it is a conscious action aimed at changing the management of a firm into a purely administrative and technical action. Thus an attempt is being made to "institutionalize" the production councils, the other mass organizations and the party cells. A challenge difficult to meet at short range and impossible at medium range. This is so because the nature of grass-roots political organizations is very different, it is: to conduct political work, promote mobilization and education of workers, without which the enterprise or factory will not be able to function properly. The task of technical management and political management are not antagonistic, they complement each other. Even if the machinery and technical possibilities of a factory are improved, this will mean little (even in terms of output and efficiency) if the workers are not mobilized to understand the importance of their participation in the work. And when there is talk of "participation in the work" this does not mean only greater improvement in the execution of productive tasks. The objective of political work is precisely to free the workers from being robots and make them participate in the struggle for control over their working and living conditions.

The temptation of technocrats has still not died completely. Their capacity to resist is only in inverse proportion to one factor: strengthening grass-roots political work in the places of work and residence.

SLOW PROGRESS, INDIFFERENCE OF PRODUCTION COUNCILS CITED

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 26 Oct 80 pp 22-27

[Article by Luis David: "Production Councils, Abandon Snail's Pace"]

[Excerpts] For 3 days of intense work, about 300 workers who came from the most diverse points of the country discussed reports from 10 provinces and from 10 branches of activities. At the same time, marking the fourth anniversary of their creation, the production councils made a review of the work conducted thus far. The councils indicated that although the organization has grown and has spread to all provinces and has been organized according to branches of activities, it did not succeed in achieving the deep transformations seen on the political and economic fields since 1977.

It was up to the Political and Organizational Offensive to show that the production councils did not keep pace with this transformation. "We have strayed from the fundamental purpose. Our organization spread to the entire country and covered all the most important sectors of economic and social activity, but it was not capable of introducing new working and management methods."

The final communique said that "the reports that we heard during this meeting confirm this conclusion."

In addition to more or less common aspects, such as the lack of raw materials and replacement parts and the participation of workers in political and cultural activities to celebrate commemorative dates, the reports of some of the sectors also showed how the workers have succeeded in overcoming some of the difficulties by recovering old materials, manufacturing parts, and by participating in training courses. That is, they have demonstrated how the offensive was taken on by ousting the enemy from the top and by abandoning work at a snail's pace.

However, in other sectors "lack of movement and apathy persist. Working methods from a past phase of our revolution still remain."

Therefore, there is unequal growth and "when this happens, the march is difficult," as Minister Mario Machungo said. It becomes necessary for the production councils to introduce, in extension and depth, conditions for achieving an equal growth level that would allow the creation of labor union centers, a new type structure, a socialist structure.

However, what can be seen even today is that in some sectors the production councils do not come from the grass roots. This makes it possible to understand the lack of data which characterized some of the reports, and the difficulties some of the delegates had in replying to the questions raised by other participants. Symptomatic of this situation is also the fact that some of the reports limited themselves to pointing out the situation existing in the province or in the branch of activity without providing any initiative that had been developed to overcome the situation or presenting any proposals for the solution.

The qualitative jump to be given toward the formation of labor unions also needs the correct understanding of the role of the party in relation to the production councils in the present conditions of our country. The production councils, as was clearly explained, are an arm of the party, the leading force of the state and society and the main instrument of the dictatorship of the proletariat. Therefore, the party is the guiding force and points out the tactics and the weapons to be used at any moment in the struggle for building a socialist society.

This aspect is also directly related to the type of relations that must exist between the production councils and the management of enterprises. In many factories "the power that we have established is ours, it is a socialist power. It is not our understanding that our relations should be those of collaboration, of cooperation with the director, the representative of our people's state. The power that is attributed to the director is balanced by the support he receives from the workers, by the popularity of his decisions.

That this type of collaboration does not exist in many cases is also evident, and can be reflected in the operation of the enterprise as well as in the type of relations that must exist between the production councils and the workers.

On the other hand, there is also another type of action that makes the work of the production councils difficult in some sectors. These are cases of persons at the level of state apparatus who do not understand or value the work of the production councils. On the contrary, they try to hamper their activity or to remain outside their operations. Here too it is necessary for the production councils to take on their role as an arm of the party in the execution of actions which implement the aspirations of the working and peasant classes.

In this framework, to bring the Political and Organizational Offensive to the production councils means to put into practice new working methods, fight ignorance and lack of movement, unleash a battle at the level of minds and raise political and professional awareness of every worker.

For this it is also necessary to remember the past. To be aware that, in many cases, the absence of a labor union tradition in our country--since few Mozambican workers at any time had access to colonial labor unions--is reflected at the present time. To this situation should be added another factor whose understanding helps to perceive the enormity of the work to be carried out: It is that the great majority of the Mozambican workers are of peasant origin who still carry with them feudal ideas which it is necessary to fight and destroy. In many cases the fight is internal and personal, without which it will be impossible to raise political awareness and achieve the victory of new ideas and the victory over underdevelopment.

Production Councils' Tasks

The final communique of the meeting which outlined the context in which the production councils were created, reviews the work carried out and indentifies errors and successes, exhorts the workers to "prepare outselves to fulfill the tasks that the party outlines for us to achieve victory against underdevelopment. Let us create the conditions for the establishment of socialist labor unions in our country."

Also, the communique states: "To achieve this we must:

--"Create production councils where they do not exist and root them and consolidate them where they already exist;

--"Change the production councils into a true Democratic Mass Organization, so that all patriotic workers participate in our activities;

--"institutionalize work collectives at all levels of our enterprises, thus insuring the workers' participation in the management of the economy;

--"Apply on all levels the principle of economy, fighting waste and producing more with less materials;

--"Increase the level of technical and scientific knowledge of workers by making them participate in literacy courses and professional training courses;

--"Purge our organization of the load of impurity that it still has by modifying our work style and assuming the offensive."

The 10 Branches of Activity

At the closing session of the National Meeting of Production Council which, as at the opening and one of the working sessions, was presided over by the member of the Permanent Political Committee of the Central Committee of the FRELIMO Party and the minister of planning and minister of agriculture, Mario da Graca Machungo, various documents were approved by acclamation, among them one concerning the integration of branches of activity.

According to this document, 10 integrated branches of activity will now exist instead of the previous 22, covering the following sectors:

1. Metallurgy, Metalmechanics and Energy--Sectors of steel, electromechanics, metalmechanics, precision industry and electric energy.

2. Chemicals, Rubber, Paper and Lumber--Sectors of chemical industry, fuels (gasoline and gas), rubber and plastics, manufacturing of paper and graphics and lumber cutting and manufacture of furniture.

SISAL PRODUCTION DECLINING WHILE PRICES RISE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 12 Nov 80 p 3

[Excerpts] The production of sisal, one of the national assets destined for export, is showing a sharp decline in the province of Zambezia, and is characterized by the low quality of the product currently being sold. As a result of this situation, which has continued for several months, a sizable volume of bundles of sisal fiber and twine have been rejected by some purchasers.

Despite the studies made some time ago with a view to the possible expansion and diversification of sisal-growing activity in Mozambique, for the double purpose of improving the profitability of the enterprises and being able to carry out the industrial processing of all of the sisal produced in our country, which would be reflected in a substantial increase in the volume of foreign exchange brought into the country, a lack of sufficient organization in this important sector for these goals to be made a reality continues to be seen.

The most serious problems arise at the plantations where there is almost no supervision of the tasks. Often a manpower shortage has occurred during peak periods. This situation is general throughout all the sisal production units in the province of Zambezia, which have fallen far below fulfillment of their goals for quality products for export this year.

The Most Flagrant Case

Mocuba Sisal, a production unit which at one time was one of the largest national producers of sisal fiber, actually mirrors the picture in the deteriorating sisal enterprises in Zambezia. Both in the farm sector, with a plantation of about 3,000 hectares in sisal, and in the industrial sector, where there are two shredding installations, one of which has broken down, the production indices are very low and far from meeting national and foreign orders.

According to Dinis Nandupale, a section chief at Mocuba Sisal, these difficulties are developing at a time when the price of sisal fiber is profitable for the producer. Despite the constant ups and downs characteristic of the international market, our sisal has been earning a minimum of $720 CIF during some months of this year, which is double the price obtained last year.

EDITORIAL CAUTIONS AGAINST ESCALATION OF CONFLICT

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 22 Nov 80 p 10

[Editorial: Don't Be Lulled Into More Dreams"]

[Text]

The virtual military defeat of SWAPO's guerrillas, who suffered tremendous losses, has caused a certain bluntness in political thinking and, as a result, it has had its influence on political decisions.

There is no denying that, militarily, SWAPO poses no threat, for its mechanised adversary has changed its tactical and operational policies. No longer is it a question of just hunting an elusive guerrilla, but of striking with murderous effect across the border to exterminate whoever provides succour to SWAPO, or even tacit assistance.

The good life back in Windhoek's recreational places has cast an impenetrable shadow over the minds of certain people. Unfortunately, those people are the policy-makers, albeit in the form of directives from Pretoria.

The position is more grim than it ever has been. Being of the type given to doing homework, this newspaper is not ill-informed about the thinking outside the Pretoria quarters.

Has it ever dawned on these people that the amended tactical operations of the massive strike forces in the north have also caused those immediately north of us to start re-thinking militarily? Luanda knows that any major and successful SWAPO operation inside of South West Africa triggers an invasion of the south of Angola. She has nothing in her hands to even remotely stop the South Africans. What she has to weigh up against the South Africans is confined to the midlands and to the larger centres such as Luanda.

Down south there are no supply depots or communication and, as a result, a total lack of logistics.

Thus, a stop-gap has to be devised by Luanda because of the fluid and uncertain political situation.

Consequently, the Luanda government is at the moment strengthening the air defences of the mother country with the most sophisticated material.

It is estimated that by 1983 nothing in the air will be able to venture too deeply over Angolan air space. It is potentially a dangerous situation for, in the game of war, the players at the board are aided by various fortunes, allies and advisers, and who for every move, have a counter-move in the form of new weapons and new tactics.

And remember -- fortune is the guiding angel of war.

We are currently busy with a delaying tactic, instigated by Pretoria. Our country's real citizens are being misled and are being told political lies daily. The truth of the matter is that all politicel parties in South West Africa, even the one-man alliances and coalitions, will be on a par the moment United Nations Security Council Resolution 435 is implemented.

The only party fighting the South African forces is SWAPO, and she has a right to claim that she and South Africa alone can put an end to the bloodshed. Most of the other political leaders take to bed at night, heady with wine in some cases, and totally oblivious to what politics mean. It is the South African soldier and the SWAPO guerrilla who are battling, and it is the SWAPO political leader and the Pretoria political leader who must put an end to this horror of unnecessary death in the north.

How long can we hope to get away with lies?

A ceasefire, which only these two parties can agree to, will immediately trigger the situation of placing all parties in the country on a par and of starting the machinery to implement internationally supervised elections so as to put an end to the current political circus and lunacy.

ANALYSIS OF MUDGE VICTORY

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 20 Nov 80 p 13

[Article by Peter Kenny: "Mudge Will Have to Move Fast"]

[Text]

WINDHOEK. — On paper at least Mr Dirk Mudge's Democratic Turnhalle Alliance came out tops in last week's South West African ethnic elections by winning three of the five contests.

But the losses in the white election to the National Party of SWA and in the Damara election to Chief Justus Garoeb's Damara Council were a heavy blow to the DTA.

Many whites voted for the NP hoping the abolition of apartheid could be reversed. But the NP has been put into the unenviable position of having a mandate from the whites that it cannot implement.

Of the 95 770 votes cast last week, the DTA obtained 64% of the votes to 36% gained from the unco-ordicated anti-DTA opposition.

Although the Republican Party, the white component in the DTA, lost 11 of the white Legislative Assembly seats to the NP and gained only seven, it gained 42% of votes cast. The NP gained 48% and the ultra-right Herstigte Nasionale Party captured 10% of the white vote.

Ironically, the loss of the RP to the NP might mean the DTA can increase its rather suspect credibility with the black electorate in SWA.

But Mr Mudge will have to move fast, and it might be too late under the present circumstances in the turbulent territory.

At least Mr Mudge is not hamstrung by having to pander to a mandate from a conservative white electorate, and the NP, whose national electoral front, Aktur, is not in control of the National Assembly where the decisions concerning overall national importance are taken.

After his defeat Mr Mudge made it quite clear that there would be no turning back on the abolition of apartheid in the territory and that efforts towards an internally acceptable settlement for SWA would have to be speeded up if black aspirations were to be met.

"The people of South West Africa want independence and not self government," he said impassively when discussing the DTA's white election defeat.

Observers have rightly pointed out that the majority of white temporary personnel in the civil service, police, prisons and army voted for the NP, and inevitably they will one day cross the Orange River back to South Africa.

The NP also received many special votes from former civil servants who have already returned to South Africa but were still eligible to vote under the one year's residency qualification.

The DTA was hoping that Chief Justus Garoeb might join their side if his party won the Damara election, but Chief Garoeb said he had no such intention. He also said he did not see Swapo as an enemy, although he disapproved of their methods of operating.

The Damaras are the third largest ethnic group in SWA after the Owambos (47% of the one-million population) and the whites (11%). The estimated Damara population is 86 000, about 9% of the total population.

If the Damaras decided to back Swapo in a United Nations-supervised election, this would without doubt seal a Swapo victory, as the Owambos will probably back Swapo en masse.

Now that Mr Mudge does not have the support of the majority of whites he must look to serving the interests of his black electorate who put the DTA into power in the National Assembly in the non-internationaly recognised one-man-one-vote elections in 1978.

Mr Mudge's only hope of survial is to show he sincerly wants a genuine multi-racial state that is not a disguised form of apartheid.

To do this he will have to drastically increase the amount spent on black education and genuinely increase job opportunities for blacks in the territory.

With a sizeable number of whites backing the moderate policies of his DTA, Mr Mudge said his party had shown it had stuck to its principles and had not watered them down even though they showed to be unpopular with the majority of whites.

As Mr Mudge cannot look to the white right for support he must look leftwards to his black constituents.

Miracles rarely happen, and Mr Mudge will have to hope he can achieve one in the short space of time before a UN election.

Black aspirations will have to be met speedily if Mr Mudge is to survive at the top.

Not having to pander to the whims of the white electorate, the NP victory might be a blessing in disguise for the farmer who is at the helm in SWA to satisfy black aspirations.

Trying to speed up the start of the UN election could help the DTA or, if the cause is already lost, it could speed up its ousting from power.

The next few months will show the trend, with or without a UN election.

SWAPO D LEADER CLARIFIES HIS POSITION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Nov 80 p 4

[Text]

WINDHOEK: The leader of Swapo D, Mr Andreas Shipanga, said in Windhoek yesterday that a number of issues concerning the UN Secretary-General, Dr Kurt Waldheim's proposal for an all-party conference on SWA remained unclear to his party.

One of the most confusing issues remained the composition of the proposed all-party conference, which will precede implementation of the UN independence plan for the Territory.

"We are still not sure how we will be represented at such a conference, but one thing is sure — we will not attend the conference as part of a South African delegation," Mr Shipanga told Sapa.

"We want to attend as a independent delegation.

"We are not South Africans, we are not part of South Africa. . . we are Namibians and want to attend the conference as Namibians," he asserted.

Another matter that perturbed Swapo D was SA's statement that it would not participate directly in the proposed multi-party conference.

It was imperative that SA be directly involved in the round-table talks on the territory's future, because only SA was qualified to discuss certain unresolved military matters with UN officials, Mr Shipanga said.

These included implementation of a demilitarised zone along SWA's northern borders during the run-up to independence, he added.

Mr Shipanga said he would prefer more time to study Dr Waldheim's proposal in full before commenting further. — Sapa

ARTICLE DEPLORES STATE OF FISHING INDUSTRY

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 18 Nov 80 p 7

[Text]

THE WESTERN Districts Development Advisory Committee (WDDAC) has expressed its disappointment at the Central Government's inability to achieve concrete progress with the implementation of the 360 km fishing zone off the SWA coast.

Mr Eric Meyer, chairman of the WDDAC is reported to have said that he and his committee feel like onlookers in the whole affair.

In reply to written representation to the AG and the Secretary of Economic Affairs, the committee was assured that the matter was continually receiving attention at the highest level.

This highest level refers to SA's representation at the International Conference of South East Atlantic Fishing (ICSEAF).

It is indeed noteworthy that SWA does not have independent representation on ICSEAF, although not at all surprising in view of our adolescent constitutional status.

Significantly, however, SA has increasingly come to be seen as the main culprit for the demise of the SWA fishing industry when it would otherwise have been expected that SA should be the guardian.

When SA declared its 360-mile fishing limit off the Republic's coast in 1977, the massive buildup of foreign flag vessels along the south coast thinned out and retreated northwards to SWA waters.

Whereas in 1974-5 there were an estimated 30 to 40 foreign trawlers off the SA and SWA coasts, there were in June 1978, 172 foreign fishing vessels off the SWA coast alone, of which 29 were processing ('factory') vessels.

All but 48 flew the Russian flag.

The displacement of foreign vessels from the newly-declared SA 360 km zone was not solely responsible for the increase in foreign activity in SWA waters.

The trend had already been observed in 1975 (significantly the year of the Turnhalle Conference) when various foreign countries were inflating the presence of their vessels along the SWA coast in order to qualify for higher ICSEAF quotas.

For political reasons, SWA remains to this day one of the few if not the only country with a 19 km fishing limit off its coast.

For political reasons also, SA negotiates with the international fishing community the distribution of quotas in the south east Atlantic in which zone SWA fishing grounds lie.

AG 32/79

It should be borne in mind that AG 32/79 concerning the declaration of a 360km fishing zone off the SWA coast is nothing more than enabling legislation. This was confirmed by the then Director of Economic Affairs, Mr Piet Kruger, in Windhoek earlier this year.

The balance between East and West Bloc countries in ICSEAF is a precarious one. Countries involved in that conference and who qualify for quotas in the south east Atlantic include the following: Bulgaria, Cuba, East Germany, Israel, Italy, Japan, Poland, Portugal, SA, Spain, USSR, Angola, France, Rumania.

The chances of SA negotiating an international recognition of AG 32/79 have obviously to be considered in the context of the international parameters of the decolonization of SWA which means they cannot be judged favourably.

A unilateral declaration of a 360-mile zone for SWA is as dangerous a move as a UDI by the National Assembly.

Taking into consideration the 90 percent or so SA shareholding of the SWA fishing industry, the implementation of AG 32/79 can only result in increased profit-taking by SA trawlers in these waters.

The indirect benefits accruing to SWA from the largely SA – dominated fishing industry are of course not to be overlooked but these boil down to very little namely, labour opportunities and the spin-off to Walvis Bay's domestic economy.

Bearing in mind that Walvis Bay is constitutionally incorporated in the Cape Province, revenue in the form of taxes on fishing profits accruing to SWA itself are marginal.

Although it must be granted that, some of the holding companies controlling factories and fleets in Lüderitz and Walvis Bay, have registered as SWA companies since 1975.

RESOURCES

It is widely known that SWA'S reserved fish stock has dwindled to a miserable fraction of what it was in 'the good old days.'

Actual landings within allocated quotas of pilchards, once the pride of SWA fishing, dropped from over 200 000 tons in the early 1960's to 16 800 tons in the early 1970's.

The locus of responsibility for this condition can only be laid at the feet of the SA fishing authorities on both political and economic grounds; and not at those of the Red Bear.

It has been fashionable to point fingers at the Red pirate deep-sea trawlers and processing craft harvesting unlimited crops while unconstrained by annual quotas which were applicable and enforced on locally-based fleets only.

SA authority in SWA waters is said to be restricted by technical factors such as unsophisticated monitoring capabilities in relation to high-powered radar equipped deep-sea trawlers of the advanced fishing states.

Occasional boardings of foreign vessels by SA sea patrols were unable to detect any fish in those holds which were not supposed to have been caught according to ICSEAF regulations.

Local fishermen in Walvis Bay are sceptical of such non-findings.

It is pointed out that countries much less powerful than SA in naval terms are quite capable of guarding their fish resources against foreign exploitation.

Iceland successfully waged a fish war against Great Britain's pirate vessles in Icelandic waters without firing a shot in the early 1970's.

The tiny north Atlantic island of Farao confiscates any foreign craft catching without permission in its internationally recognized zone, with the aid of two tiny launches.

On the other hand, SA – owned fishing companies operating from Walvis Bay in SWA waters have netted millions of rands worth of fish since the industrialisation of the fishing sector in 1950.

Today, some of these companies have moved to South America where the pelagic fish crop still harvests formidable returns. In certain cases these companies have stripped their Walvis Bay factories of the necessary processing equipment, shipped these across the Atlantic, and installed them in their new factories in Peru.

When the long-awaited commission of enquiry into alleged irregularities in the SWA fishing industry finally materialises, some revelations might see the light of day.

In the meanwhile, demands for an internationally recognized 360 km fishing zone for SWA should not be seen as the be-all and end-all of the underdevelopment of the Territory's fishing industry.

OWAMBO NEGLECT--The north has been neglected in the past and development in Owambo was of primary importance, Mr Peter Kalangula, new President of DTA said in an interview with the Advertiser yesterday. Mr Kalangula said if Owambo was further neglected, the situation could deteriorate and spread through the rest of the country like an epidemic. This could affect the lives and future of all the people in the country. "If Owambo were to go, all would be gone," he said. He pointed out that unemployment in Owambo created a situation where it was easy for Swapo to recruit fighters for the war in the north. Referring to the proposed preimplementation conference, Mr Kalangula said it would be meaningful to talk to Swapo directly. This would help to smooth out many misconceptions and put an end to the speculation about matters concerning the future of SWA. Mr Kalangula said it was too early for him to point exact areas he regarded as important in his new position as President of the DTA and he wouldn't consider propagating any policy changes before the matter was discussed with the Executive of the DTA. At his stage he could only point out areas where he has noticed specific needs. He regards it as important to talk to people irrespective of their political affiliations, in looking for a solution for the country. This applied to internal development as well. It could only have positive results if the opinion of all was asked and respected. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Nov 80 p 2]

PRESIDENT Shagari has sent a message of congratulations to Mr Ronald Reagan on his election as the next president of the United States.

Speaking to mass media executives at the end of a luncheon in Lagos, he said that, as he had indicated in reply to a question his recent visit to the United States, he and the people of Nigeria would respect the decision of the American electorate.

Asked whether the defeat of President Carter had not rendered useless the impact he made on the American president during his visit to Washington, he said: "Whatever impact I may have made was not directed to Mr Carter as a person, but to the American people. And they are still there".

In reply to another question as to whether he had any misgivings on the outcome of the election in view of Mr Reagan's anti-African statements, President Shagari said that it was too early to judge Mr. Reagan.

"Promises and statements made during election speeches should not be taken too seriously," he added.

He said that his government would continue to apply pressure on the United States to adopt a positive attitude to the struggle against imperialism, colonialism and racism. "Whoever is president in the United States cannot ignore those pressures," he added.

AMERICAN commentators saw Reagan's landslide victory as Jimmy Carter's personal humiliation — not a victory for the Americans. Such is the degree of their disillusionment caused by the narrow choice afforded them by the system. Surely the Americans have every reason to be sceptical about the prospects ahead when Reagan enters the White House in January.

Mr. Reagan may soon discover what incumbents feel when they get to the White House. One sure thing is that there is a world of difference between soapbox rhetorics and the realities of both domestic and international affairs. At home it is doubtful if Mr. Reagan possesses the kind of magical wand with which to wave off all the ills plaguing American economy. Outside, he may get his fingers burnt in trying to renegotiate

SALT II. But his moves in the Middle East would be watched with more than the usual interest.

As we have said [NN 7/10/80] it matters very little whether it is a Republican or Democrat who is in the White House. Indeed, with Reagan in Washington, Africa knows it is dealing with a man who wouldn't care a hoot about African aspirations. The factor of deceit and subsequent hurt is, therefore, absent. Such a thoroughbred is easier to handle than a half-committed incumbent.

For us, there is no slackening of efforts towards, freeing the rest of southern Africa from the domination of Reagan's racist cousins. All pious hope for a smooth sail will not take Africa anywhere. There is not a more fitting welcome to the field of diplomacy to a novice than by reiterating our stand over Namibia and South Africa by both words and deeds. In so doing, of course, Africa shall have to bear in mind Reagan's determination to reassert American supremacy the world-over.

Concern About Racism Shown

[Text]

THE people of the United States of America have chosen former actor, Ronald Reagan, as their 40th chief executive. Reagan's election is hardly surprising though it might not have been expected by some observers.

On the other hand, Mr. Reagan defeated an opponent whom Americans have so often been told was a mediocre and whom the world had sometimes seen falter when he should have been firm.

The election of a new president in America has so much significance because of the influence which that nation can wield and does wield in the world. Americans may be considered immodest but certainly not incorrect when they call their president the most powerful man in the world.

Who is Ronald Reagan, and what prospects have the world with Mr. Reagan as the most powerful person in it? His opponent in the presidential contest attempted to characterise him as a war-monger in a campaign which seemed to degenerate at its tail end. Mr. Reagan on his part made efforts to portray himself as a peace-loving person who only wanted to see America return to its rightful place — in spite of his previous utterances.

We hope the true President Reagan will emerge from between these extremes of campaign rhetorics. While not suggesting that he should do anything against the genuine interests of his own country we hope that he will always consider the overall interests of the world before making decisions.

Ronald Reagan's success might be attributed to the fact that he raises in the hearts of Americans, nostalgic visions of power and grandeur. A powerful America might contribute to world peace by deterring ambitious expansionism elsewhere, but a belligerent America might prove a threat to itself and the rest of the world. Humanity may not survive another cold war.

The new president's African policy has the potential for being the first area of disagreement between him and Nigeria. Mr. Reagan's government would be making a grievous mistake if it does anything that seems to suggest support for Africa's enemy, South Africa. Even a conservative government must recognise the dangers of supporting unbridled racism and oppressive minority domination. The pragmatist, that America's new president is reputed to be, will ensure that the advances achieved by his predecessor are not undone.

On the whole, although Nigeria's Foreign Minister has suggested that this country would prefer Carter to Reagan, the new man in the White House should not find it difficult to reconcile the interests of his country and ours. We ask only that the world should have peace and that Africa should have freedom.

Maintenance of Cooperation Expected

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 10 Nov 80 pp 2, 14

[Editorial in the column "Comment": "The President-Elect"]

[Excerpt]

NATIONAL elections usually concern only the people of the country involved. They will choose their leader as they please. But the world today has become so complex that what goes on in one corner of the globe is likely to affect the affairs of another country, in another sphere, in no small way.

NATIONAL elections therefore are no longer the exclusive concern of particular countries. Elections in certain countries like the United States generally assume extraordinary importance to all for the mere reason that as world power, a policy tilt either way can have far-reaching repercussions on many nations.

THAT is why the Carter-Reagan race for the presidency was followed with keen interest around the world. Ronald Reagan, the president-elect, as a super Republican conservative, frightened many. Our Ishaya Audu is on record as preferring a Carter victory.

THAT was some diplomatic gaffe. But, perhaps, with good reasons. Many other countries — The Soviet Union, People Republic of China, Egypt and so on — expressed themselves in favour of Carter. However, the overwhelming majority of American voters whose direct business it was, made their free choice for Reagan.

JANUARY 20 next year when the president-elect assumes office, is just around the corner. But, already, Ronald Reagan has assembled a foreign policy panel to advise him and has in addition, re-stated his position on a number of world and local issues.

THE foreign policy of the coming Republican presidency is something that will be of profound interest to us in Nigeria, and elsewhere. In the United States, the presidency and the Senate now to be controlled by the Republican Party, make foreign policy.

NIGERIA and the United States can be truly described as partners in progress. We have a huge trade surplus with America. Our exports of crude yield some eleven billion dollars. We have cooperation arrangement covering many other fields including technical education and agriculture with America.

THESE efforts were begun in the Nixon era and continued by Gerald Ford. To his eternal glory, it was President Jimmy Carter who in four years enabled the spectacular expansion of the base of mutual cooperation between our countries. The expectation therefore, is that the Reagan presidency will not only maintain this cooperative effort but, will also, consciously address itself to further broadening and tightening the ties that bind us.

Warning to Reagan

[Commentary by Sam Chike in the column "Political Diary": "Reagan vs Africa"]

[Text]

ISHAYA Audu is my man. And my kind of man. He is courageous, bold, outspoken, sincere. I do not know about his being undiplomatic.

Diplomacy has to do with the dictates of the times. It is not all about speaking with tongue in cheek.

A good diplomat must know when to launch a vicious attack, when to blow as he bites, when to be nice, gentle and reconciliatory.

The media last week were full of noise and nonsense over the statement credited to my man Audu expressing his preference of Jimmy Carter as the white House lord for the next four-year term.

They shouted that Ishaya had put Nigeria in a fix; that he ought to have lied about his prefrence of Carter in the US Presidential race It was the business of Americans, they felt, to make known their preferences on an American Presidential election.

They are a trifle right and a great deal wrong. They are right about Americans' right to choose who rules them. But they shot too wide when they inferred that the US presidency is the sole business of America.

Here are my reasons: America is a superpower whose sovernance casts waves that sweep across the entire world. A reckless American President can trip off an Armageddon capable of of consuming the world. And our beloved Nigeria is in the world and is not too anxious to be destroyed.

Assuming that Armageddon is a remote possibility, don't you know how much freedom means to Sam Chike as a true Nigerian? Who is not yet well convinced of Nigeria's commitment to freedom in Southern Africa?

Jimmy Carter was already doing good political and economic business with Africa. We were assured of American support in the campaign for majority rule in South Africa and Namibia. Carter had cleared the path for serious talks on a new world economic order which would be just to developing countries.

And now Carter is out and Reagan in. Reagan had better tell himself that White House is no Holly wood. There is a whole world of difference between taking up a star role in a film and being the real President of the United States.

And somebody had better tell him that as president of America, he cannot afford a conflict with the force that are the nations of the Third World.

SPECULATION ABOUT MUHAMMAD AL-QADHDHAFI NOTED

Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 7 Nov 80 p 3

[Commentary by Kayode Soremekun: "What Is Gaddaffi Up To?"]

[Text]

MUHAMMAD Gaddaffi President of Libya is a man who views the world in absolute terms. To him things are either black or white. No grey. And that's not saying much for him. In the world of diplomacy there are no extremes. You do not feel so strongly about a particular cause, such that you will want to impose it on others. At best you will be rebuffed politely, and if you push too hard war will ensure.

Gaddaffi is one man who has not allowed such consequences to bother him. He is so passionate about Pan-Arabism — that Libya has virtually turned into suitor-wooing one country or the other for a merger.

With remarkable consistency he has failed with countries like Egypt, Tunisia, and Algeria. Meanwhile he has just hatched one with Syria. Given the country's immense oil wealth it seems inexplicable that many Arab countries have continously rebuffed his moves. The real point is that Gaddaffi's taciturn personality turns one off. Little wonder, many of the Arab leaders have made him a target of their searing rhetorics:- Sadat says, "He is a mad man and a lunatic" Nimeiry of Sudan points out that "he has a split personality both of them evil"; while the late Shah of Iran has tersely described him as "crazy"

Views

These are very extreme views, and do not accurately portray the man called Gaddaffi. The safest thing that can be said about him is that he is unusual. He stands out a mile from other world leaders. Some of his own views amply bear credence to this unorthodoxy. Hear what he says on majority rule — "majority rule is a dictatorship imposed on the minority". On referendum, "referendum is the cruellest form of dictatorship where people can not say why they voted yes or no, on certain issues"

Certainly, Gaddaffi is a wearisome fellow, but he begins to constitute himself into a worry through his intermittent forays into Africa. In the last bloody conflict in Uganda, Gaddaffi was there In the boiling zone called Chad Gaddaffi is there again. Meanwhile our government has hardly thought it fit to do anything about it. This is long over-due or is Africa no longer the centre-piece of our foreign policy?

Ironically Libya's 2.6 million people have hardly hesitated as regards having a collision course with Nigeria. Sometime last year, it was reported that the Nigerian Embassy in Tripoli was under the surveillance of Gaddaffi's security men. When this newspaper did so much as to raise its voice on the issue, the Libyan Ambassador did not hesitate to hand verbal vulgarities by way of explanations. Again very recently, Libyan planes were caught violating our air-space. In the light of all these there is the compelling need for a heart to heart talk with Gaddaffi to ask him about what he really wants of Nigeria. The way the matter has been handled leaves much to be desired. Certain pertinent questions ought to be asked. Where were the planes going? Where were they coming from? What was the nature of the cargo? So far the public is in the dark about all these.

Various rationales have been suggested for Gaddaffi's out of turn postures. Some usually point to his age. By the time he came to power he was 26 years old, a mere boy. But people often forget that this is 1980 that Gaddaffi is no longer 26, but nudging 40. Consequently, one finds it difficult to write off his brashness as mere youthful exuberance. At 37, he hardly needs to be told that power should be tempered with responsibility. Others have pointed out that with so much money at his disposal about 12 billion dollars in 1979 from the sales of oil) and having to contend with a small population of 2.6 million) he has the financial largesse to finance extraneous ventures. Little wonder, almost every liberation movement in the world has found financial succour on the door-steps of Libya. These range from the ultra-radical Palestinian groups to Moslem guerrillas in far away Phillipines. Even the Irish Republican Army is not left out in terms of fiscal refurbishment from Libya.

But it needs to be pointed out that despite the country's wealth the country is still in the throes of certain problems.

Libya's terrain is so arid that 90 per cent of the people lives in less than 10 per cent of the total land area. Moreover, Libya is not sufficient in many kinds of foods. It is these kinds of problems that should really engage the attention of Gaddaffi.

In this respect, he only needs to borrow a leaf from his arch-enemy Israel. In 1948 Israel was mainly a desert. But thanks to massive irrigation schemes. Israel succeeded in freeing a large chunk of her land mass from aridity. Secondly, it will not be out of place for him to revolutionize the agricultural sector. It still holds true that any nation that depends on outside sources for a necessity like food is only revelling in the illusion of political independence. For in the long run, self-sufficiency in food goes a long way to shoring up a forceful posture. Moreover, Gaddaffi needs to know the obvious. That oil is a wasting asset, and as such every attempt should be made to diversify this resource base.

Or does he want to be a rich man today and a poor man tomorrow?

In fairness to Gaddaff however, his record is not one of unbridled militancy. Indeed, the likes of him has some reliance in a world like ours. With characteristic candour, he did not hestitate to ask the British and the Americans to dismantle their military installations. Hitherto, Libya has been a playground for different shades of neo-colonialism. But Gaddaffi put a halt to this. He has also gone down very well in the area of oil policies. He happens to be the standard bearer within the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). Unlike other OPEC countries that give huge concessions to a single oil company, Libya granted concessions to many companies of different nationalities. Thus he was able to strengthen his hands with these oil companies. Again in 1970, Libya was the protagonist against the oil majors. Gaddaffi forced then to concede increases on the posted price of oil. Such a thing had never happened before. Indeed, Libya's action impelled other OPEC members to join in an onslaught on the oil companies. Hitherto, the oil majors had been regarded as sacred cows. But Gaddaffi shattered this myth. And he has been so successful that "the oil majors have been dislodged from their dominant position in the oil industry.

So what does all these add up to as regards the man called Gaddaffi? Obviously it looks as if he knows his unions on the domestic scene and in his relations with blood-suckers like the multinationals. In his country right now poverty is unheard of, serfdom in the form of slaving away for another person is no more. Every man is entitled to decent shelter. But he cuts a sorry sight on the international scene. And the reason is not far to seek. Gaddaffi sees international issues in the same way that he perceives domestic issues. On the domestic plane, it was pretty easy for him to have his way. Just through sheer force and will, he was able to revolutionize his country's socio-economic structure. Having attained his objectives with such ease, he has proceeded to do same on the external front. But then international realities, have frustrated him repeatedly. To his extreme nature, he cannot understand why the state of Israel should exist. But then, that is a reality he can always acknowledge while fighting.

POLITICAL ACTIVITY BAN LIFTED IN KANO

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 7 Nov 80 p 24

[Article by Abdulhamid Babatunde]

[Excerpt]

THE ban on political activities in Kano has been lifted and the city's political life began throbbing last Wednesday evening.

First to mount the soapbox was Malam Aminu Kano, the Leader of the PRP who addressed a mammoth rally organised by the state directorate of the party at Shahuci ground in the city.

In his address, Malam Aminu expressed disppointment with the near dormant economic life in the state which, he said, had made people who once sold clothes to change to selling sugarcane.

He lamented that the executive in the state had deviated from the coerous task of redeeming the masses and were now wasting time and money in propagating rancour.

He explained that he had ignored all the provocative statements being made by the dissidents in the party because the plight of the commonman and children who still live in abject poverty and neglect was foremost in his mind.

Malam Aminu Kano called on PRP supporters not to take the law into their hands but to report to the police any provocation because they should not be seen as trouble makers.

The deputy governor of the state, Alhaji Ibrahim Bibi Farouk, was another prominent speaker. In his message to the thousands of people at the rally, he pointed out that his stand on the on-going crisis in the party was determined by the high regard he had for Malam Aminu Kano, who had consistently demonstrated the virtues of patience, tolerance and discipline.

He added that there could be no success in any endeavour which was not guided by respect and discipline. He urged all supporters of the party to rally round the leader and guard against being hired away with promises of contracts and other material benefits.

Alhaji M. B. Suleiman, the state secretary of the party, told the crowd that the rally was being organised as a farewell message from the party leader who was proceeding to Enugu for a national directorate meeting.

He called on the police to be up to the task posed by the changing climate in the political scene of the country because "when the masses are disenchanted there can be no stopping them."

Earlier, the Chairman of the Kaduna State Youth Wing, Alhaji Awwal Mujibur Rahman, accompanied by about 2,000 supporters, had paid a solidarity call on the Deputy Governor of Kano State Alhaji Ibrahim Bibi Farouk, where they congratulated him for being steadfast in supporting the leadership of the PRP.

In another development, the sale of alcohol has been banned in the Bichi Local Government area of Kano State.

The order which took effect from October 30, this year, was aimed at preventing further addiction to alcoholic drinks in the area, a report from the information office there said.

The report said members of the public had been urging the local government to make such a move in view of the increased indulgence in alcoholic drinks.

NPN CONGRESS IN ENUGU DRIVEN FROM MEETING HALL

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 20 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

SOLDIERS in Enugu last Friday lost their patience with the delegates to the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) Congress and flushed them out of the Soldiers Club, Enugu where the Congress was scheduled to take place.

It all started when the whole forum was thrown into confusion as the delegates could not reach compromise on which candidate should be allowed to vie for nomination into various party positions.

Mr C. C. Onoh fielded Mr G. O. D. Eneh for the party chairmanship. Others allegedly vying for the same position and whose supporters also went wild included Sir Joseph Nwankwu, Mr Mbazulike Amechi and Mr B. B. O. Emeh.

As the tension mounted, the delegates resorted to verbal warfare, ultimately degenerating to physical assault. The soldiers guarding the Soldiers Club threatened "to make a report" if the delegates continued the "free-for-all fight" but the soldiers threat was to no avail. Eventually, the soldiers alerted the commander of the 21 Armoured Brigade.

The commander acted immediately. Troops soon filed into the compound. Lieutenant Adamu, who led the flush-out campaign, disclosed to the delegates that there had been an order from Lagos that military grounds must not be used for political rallies.

Just as some party stalwarts who were less disorganised were trying to plead with Lt Adamu to be allowed to continue in the venue, about 40 more soldiers, apparently more furious, rushed into the compound and the delegates fell into a stampede.

Some abandoned their brief cases, many others scattered their files as they struggled to avoid confrontation with the soldiers.

After the fiasco, some leaders converged and insisted on continuing the meeting but at a different venue.

A group that assumed to have constituted a "quorum" met at Nike Hall near Enugu but no decisions were reached.

Addressing the delegates earlier at the Soldiers Club before being driven out, the NPN Director of Strategy, Mr A. Mbazulike Amechi (The Boy Is Good) had regretted that the party had remained disorganised because of its defeat in Anambra State in the last elections.

He lamented that "the disorganisation had affected the morale of the party adversely as it had led to accusations and counter-accusations, which culminated in a crisis of confidence within the leadership of the party".

Mr Amechi added that the situation had continued to deteriorate while "our political opponents were consolidating their position".

By this, the Vice-President could appear to have decided to make good his threat contained in his letter as published in our issue of November 8, 1980 in the following words:

"Smuggled out and delivered to us by an NPN insider who became disenchanted and revolted because of his party's crude tactics in Anambra State, the plan contained a naked threat of a change in the leadership of the State Executive of the party, should the fortunes of the NPN fail to experience an appreciable change in the next six months."

The Vee-Pee's appointees for the positions met with stiff opposition, hence the confusion.

Full text of Mr Mbazulike Amechi's address to NPN leaders will be published later.

CONTEMPORARY CHANGES IN ISLAM EXAMINED

Paris LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE in French Nov 80 p 36

[Article by Guy Nicolas—passages between slantlines originally published in italics]

[Text] The Muslim community of Nigeria, with its nearly 40 million adherents, is the biggest Islamic group south of the Sahara (1). This community, however, has to coexist with several other confessional communities: in 1963, in this very populous country (80 million inhabitants) (2), the Muslims represented 47.2 percent of the populace, the Christians 34.5 percent, and the practitioners of traditional worship 18.4 percent (3). If Islam and Christianity are growing to the detriment of the ancestral religions—still practiced by 34 percent of the populace in 1953 --the former is on the point of reaching the status of a majority in the country, due to the strength of its roots in the north, the growth of the Islamized population, and its present expansion toward the south. A large number of the leaders of the country, including President Alhasi Shesu Shagar himself, are of the Islamic faith.

The different religious groups are not implanted uniformly. Up until recent times, the Islamic religion was especially widespread in the north of the country, and the southern regions escaped its influence. Even today, it is preeminent north of the Benoue, extends to the west of the Niger delta, but is not yet solidly rooted east of it. On the other hand, Christianity, nonexistent in a large part of the former region, is preeminent in the southeast and holds a strong position in the southwest. The recent regrouping of the Nigerian federation into 19 states has somewhat modified the assumptions of the problem by breaking up the old regional entities. However, increasing citizen mobility favors the diffusion of religious beliefs and practices.

Islam was introduced north of present-day Nigeria at the instance of shephards, merchants, missionaries, and immigrants Islamized elsewhere. But its expansion was above all effectuated by means of the dominant warrior aristocracies of the well-organized states built up at the outlets of the Saharan [trade-] routes. As early as the Eleventh Century, Islam became the official religion of the Kanem-Bornu empire seated on the banks of Lake Chad. Starting in the Fifteenth Century, it inspired the rulers of the Gao empire, at the top of the bend of the Niger river. The influence of these two states helped to propagate Islam in the Hausa kingdoms situated between Niger and Chad. Freed from the hegemony of their neighbors to the west and the east, because of Gao's conquest by Morocco and the Turkish move into Tripolitania and Fezzan, these kingdoms were enriched by trade with the Mediterranean world, then later with the European settlements in the Gulf of Guinea. They were opened to Islamized immigrants coming from the West and to the influence of Maghreb merchants. The Islamic religion assumed the status of a state religion in their royal courts, though local princes may have continued to sacrifice to other cults, and though the great mass of their subjects remained faithful to their traditional beliefs, fundamentally polytheistic.

This situation, the pressure of the Saharan shepherds and the divisions between these kingdoms, led to the success of a "holy war" /(jihad)/ preached in the early Nineteenth Century by a cultured Muslum: Usman dan Fodyo. The latter was a member of an ethnic group of immigrant livestock-raisers (peule [translation unknown] formation) who came with their flocks from Senegal. Assimilated into the Hausa ruling class as a tutor to the princes of Gobir, one of the principal Hausa kingdoms, he nevertheless benefited from the support of the members of his ethnic group when his reformist demands ran into rejection by local sovereigns. With their help, he overthrew the Hausa dynasties and founded a huge empire, the Sultanate of Sokoto (4), which extended from the Niger to the Adamaoua, and from south of the Adar to Ilorin. This new state, which termed itself Islamic, propagated the Koranic religion in its territory, not without running into many instances of local resistance. At the end of the Nineteenth Century, it welcomed the survivors of two great empires --the Mahdist empire on the banks of the Nile, and the Tijani empire on the Niger, which had long held their own against the European conquerors before falling before their blows, to the east and west. So it became a kind of ultimate Muslim bastion opposing the "infidel" conquerors. However, its cohesion and power had considerably declined, and it foundered in 1903 before British troops.

As for the Bornu empire, after having rebuffed the attacks of Sokoto in 1808 and 1812, it was also broken under the assault of Arab immigrants pushed out of Fezzan by the Turks, then by a conqueror coming from the east: Rabah, who had been defeated by French troops at Kousseri, in 1900. The English next endorsed the restoration of the Kanemi dynasty, which the latter had successfully undertaken.

Decolonization and Regional Conflicts

As soon as it had established its control over Sokoto and Bornu, Great Britain began working to utilize the political and administrative structures of the local states to ensure its authority more easily over a vast and populous region that was poor in resoruces (5).

Following World War II, when the new coastal elites began to take up the banner of pan-Africanism, nationalism, and democratic debate, and were demanding ever more strongly the departure of the colonialists, the latter tried to keep alive, for their own benefit, the cleavage between the parts of the country thus constituted. On the one hand, the colonial power refused to dissociate the north or to introduce there any modern institutions; on the other hand, it worked to keep apart the various elements of this region educated along western lines from their southern counterparts, above all through the use of a Hausa-language press organ in the north: GASKIYA (6). This old instrument of war propaganda gradually dissociated from the administration was the crucible of a regional elite devoted to the unity of the north, the Islamic religion, defense of the Hausa language, and a Muslim political authority legitimzed by the /jihad/. Similarly, British researchers from the Zarya school revitalized the theme of the "holy war" and the memory of the defunct empire.

At the same pace as the decolonization movement in Nigeria unfolded, a sort of connivance was established between the colonial power, the emirs and intellectuals of the north who ruled a rural mass kept in subjection to the values of "tradition," at least of that tradition born of the "holy war." For most of the inhabitants of the northern region, independence could only mean domination by the southern elites, Christianized or "pagan," hostile to the traditional environment and representing in their eyes the march of barbarism. The only conceivable "civilization" being Islamic, seen in the nostalgic light of the /jihad/. So a northern "moral rearmament" took place, which expressed itself in the creation of a regional party: the Northern People Congress (NPC). Founded by members of the aristocracy and the "men of the /Gaskiya,"/ this "northernist" party was dominated from its creation, 1949, by the personality of the sardauna [translation unknown] Malam Adamu, a descendent of the founder of the Sokoto empire. The adversaries of this "strongman" claimed he intended to pursue the aim of his ancestors by carrying the banners of the /jihad/ all the way to the ocean. In fact, elected prime minister of the northern region (by the terms of the Lyttleton Constitution of 1954, the "regions" of the Nigerian Federation enjoyed great autonomy), the leader of the NPC followed a dual strategy of strengthening the independence of the north and of winning power at the federal level.

Quite fascinated by the Pakistani secession, he did not altogether put aside the idea of building an Islamic state corresponding to the old "protectorate of the north." Also, he worked at basing the authority and legitimacy of his government on Islam, increasing the number of Islamic institutions, supporting the application of Muslim law /(sharia)/, strengthening the worship of the founder of the /jihad/, even going so far as to try to create a new Sufi brotherhood: the Usmaniya. On the other hand, he wanted to increase the influence of the NPC at the federal level, where an alliance with the NCNC [National Council of Nigerian Citizens], the eastern party, made it possible for one of his lieutenants, Sir Abubakar Tafewa Balewa, to become prime minister of the Lagos government. Rejecting any thought of partitioning the region over which it reigned, the NPC did however move in with its ally the NCNC to dismember the western region, where its principal adversary, the Action Group (AW) of Obafemi Awolowo, was especially strong. Under these conditions, the regional conflicts at that time were to take on the character of religious conflicts. And the hegemonism of the northern party appeared to its adversaries as a new avatar of the "holy war." Nevertheless, this "politicization" of Islam involved only part of Nigeria's Muslims.

In the very heart of the northern region, the policy of the NPC ran headlong into the autonomist demands of the emirate of Kano (7), whose origins went back to the last century, (starting in 1983, the emirs of Kano were freed from the tutelage of Sokoto, of which the government at Kaduna, capital of the north, was heir) but which was reinforced by the forceful interventions of the regional government. This demand was the doing of both a local political party of "progressive" leaning: the Northern Elements Progressive Union (NEPU) and of an Islamic reformist current affiliated with the branch of Tijaniya founded in Senegal by Sheikh Ibrahim Nyass. These two distinct bodies joined in a common denunciation of the corruption of dynasties in power and, by reference to Nineteenth Century interpretation of "holy war," saw itself as a revolutionary movement aimed more at a change of regime than at the religious conversion of its adversaries. This conception was to be further developed after the eviction of the emir of Kano, Mohammadu Sanussi, by the prime minister of the north in 1963 (8).

In the coastal zone, however, the western region was experiencing very rapid expansion of the Islamic religion (9). This had been brought there by Hausa merchants coming from the north who settled down in the principal towns. Also, Muslims from other continents, especially Indo-Pakistanis coming from the British Empire, had introduced a type of Islam completely different from that found in the north. Among these proselytes were missionaries and adepts of the Ahmadiya sect of Pakistani origin (10). They established schools providing western-type education and thereby produced a new elite, very different from the Sudanese aristocracy. Because of this, the Islam that one finds in this region, peopled mostly by the Yoruba, is hostile to any effort by the latter to perpetuate its privileges by means of religion. The spreading of Islam in the western region was so extensive that the Hausa merchants of northern origin, fearing to lose their trade monopolies and being unable to assert their ethnic distinction, for fear of being sent back to the north, converted in great masses to the Tijaniya brotherhood (11), during the Fifties, so as to avoid being submerged by the local Muslim community.

The regional conflicts of the first republic led Nigeria to the edge of the abyss. The military coups of 15 January and 28 July 1966 changed things. The principal leaders of the NPC having been eliminated, the old regions were dismembered, the regional political parties banned; for 13 years an authoritarian regime undertook to modify profoundly the situation of the country. Their policy was assisted by the development of oil production and the experience of the long civil war that, from the pogroms of 1966 to the surrender of Biafra, in 1970, profoundly affected the Nigerian people. But the commentators at the time who talked of a "religious war" did not see that their frame of reference was obsolete: a large part of the federal troops, as well as Col. Gowon, the chief of state, were of the Christian religion. The disappearance of the NPC leaders and a new economic, political, and national dynamic had altered the assumptions. The task of national reconstruction to which all Nigerians were urged to contribute required tolerance and secularism.

In 1978, the military government, headed by a new team of "incorruptible" captains (Murtala Mohammed, Obasanjo), committed itself to a path of return to democracy: the constituent assembly which met at its behest elaborated a new federal regime. During this time, however, the demand by certain Muslims for a special supreme tribunal for Muslims (the court of appeal of the /sharia/), extending throughout the whole of the federation measures hitherto reserved to the north, unleashed passions. Some saw in it the omens of a new period of chaos. But the majority of the assembly and the military government ignored the boycott of deliberations staged by its supporters, and tempers cooled. The new political parties allowed to run candidates in the 1979 election had to establish themselves on a federal basis, without reference to any kind of ethnic affiliation, or regional or confessional membership. They all recruited members from different faiths: thus one factor for politicization of religious beliefs disappeared.

On 1 October 1979 the military government, in a totally voluntary action, turned over the leadership of the federation to new elected leaders. The constitution of the second Nigerian republic, which is inspired in large part by the constitution of the United States, establishes separate federal and local authorities, the later corresponding to 19 "states" headed by an executive and separate legislative bodies (13). Recruitment in most organs of the government of the country must respect state-by-state quotas. Because of this, Muslims and members of other religions are constantly required to work together. The first conflicts within the new regime were basically about economic and political questions, without religious implications. However, as the corruption and criminality resulting from uncontrolled development linked to the oil boom mounted, so today there is rising a wave of religiosity which is affecting Muslim circles as well as Christian. The beginnings of division between "progressive" and the "moderate" blocs can be discerned. This cleavage affects all the confessional communities. A general determination to build a united and coherent nation seems to be stronger than any factors for intolerance and discrimination, on whatever basis they may rest.

In reality, the Nigerian Islamic community, which has committed itself totally to this effort, is divided. And it is so despite the establishment of joint official Islamic institutions: the Superior Council of Islamic Affairs (headed by the Sultan of Sokoto), the Office of Pilgrimages, the Islamic judicial organization, the Association of Muslim Students of Nigeria, the Association of University Teachers and Administrative Personnel, etc. These divisions are linked to the stratification of modern Nigerian society into opposing or different interest groups (the peasantry, the leadership, the merchant class, the wage-earners, business circles, intelligentsia, the new technobureaucratic class, the urban proletariat, etc.), to a cleavage between the common people and the cultivated, to divisions between [illegible] brotherhoods, even though they no longer wear the same political aspect they did 15 years ago, to a sectarian split (the position of the Ahmadiya, considered heretical by the Sunnites), etc.

One of the most striking changes to the community is the appearance of a new generation of Islamic cadres coming from the new intelligentsia and who at all levels of decision-making are taking the place of the sultans, emirs, and traditionally clerical cadres...This transfer, which confirms the alteration made since 1966, overthrows the bases of Islamic power and opens up new prospects for Islam (14). The present political system gives a considerable electoral power to the Muslims, since each party must have a federal constituency, and because the system of equalization between states is extended to most federal institutions. Now the Muslims constitute more than half the electorate in 12 states, whereas the Christians are a majority in only 5, all in the eastern part of the country. At the individual state level, the situation varies according to whether the population is predominantly Muslim or Christian (traditional religions are more and more in the minority). It happens that some state assemblies take discriminatory measures (forbidding alcohol, games of chance, private schools, etc.) which the minority immediately denounces as manifestations of religious intolerance. But such measures are quite rare, where the unanimous support of the members of the faith the one benefit from these laws is not forthcoming. Sometimes, also, the Muslims of one state favor one of the political parties or are wooed by one of them, and the manipulation of religious symbols is one of the familiar strategies of the politicians.

Some religious cleavages could also be at the origin of the demands for dismembering the existing states. Some non-Muslims sometimes express their anxiety about the privileges enjoyed by the followers of Islam in certain domains, the most striking being the place which the pilgrimage to Mecca holds in the life of the country, one month out of each year. There were 24,000 pilgrims in 1970, 51,000 in 1974, 101,000 in 1978. Their numbers were reduced to 50,000 in 1979, and some candidates at that time promised to increase them. The government of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) brought it up to 60,000 this year, in order to keep its commitments. Some Christians are asking that just as much importance be accorded to their own pilgrimages (to Lourdes, Jerusalem, etc.). Similarly, non-Muslims deplore the perversion of the principle of the secularity of the state by the recognition of Islamic law and judicial authorities solely for followers of Islam. But these recriminations are generally not made very bitterly, and they are marked by signs of tolerance. For their part, the followers of Islam in general take pains to avoid going in directions that might jeopardize the cause of national unity. Transgressors are frequently called down by their own coreligionists.

The Test of Modernity

Under these conditions, Islamic proselytization, carried on by elites new to power but still according to traditional dignitaries an important representational role, is taking flight anew. As the beneficiary of Arab or Pakistani assistance, it is using the most modern means of mass communication (radio, television, the press, etc.). It is even exploiting reactions to the unfortunate consequences of an anarchic economic regime where corruption, criminality, and materialistic aspirations are exacerbated. This new initiative is deliberately outside the realm of politics.

The strictest Muslim leaders, such as Mr Aminu Kano, president of the People's Redemption Party, which was associated with reformed Tijaniya, reject any mingling of politics and religion, and reinterpret the /"holy war"/ of the last century in terms of economic struggle. Also, a work of "purification" of popular beliefs and practices, aimed at substituting a "standard Islam", directly inspired from the sacred texts, for the vestiges of an Islam weighed down by tradition and history, is under way at all levels. It is cultivating the usage of the Arab language, not understood by most local Muslims, and the spreading of basic texts; it clears up misunderstandings and popularized the basic notions of the Islamic religion. In doing this, it may be guilty of certain departures from pure Sunnite doctrine, such as the world-vision of the Ahmadiya. Jurists or theologians coming from the new institutes of Islamic studies, and members of a Muslim aristocracy having accomplished a spectacular /aggiornamento/ [translation unknown] are making efforts to discredit "superstitions," the high-handedness of ignorant priests, the corruption in certain religious quarters, whereas official discourses unceasingly attribute the evils of the day to the loss of a feeling for the divine.

A certain Islamic populism is thus developing, which aims at creating a national unity of believers around a certain number of criteria and spontaneous reactions. The nationalist ideal here is more to the point than the idea of the /Oumma/ or Islamic nation. But the impact of these currents on the mass of the populace is far from being guaranteed in every case. And the gap which continually grows larger between the people of the countryside and suburbs, and the "political class", could take on the aspect of a return toward an Islamic "tradition" less scrupulous about its orthodoxy than about its moral and material security. At present, however, the Nigerian followers of Islam seem to be committed to a path which is more and more divergent from that of the Islamic Arab republics, as well as from the Iran of the ayatollahs. This orientation, after all, which today accords with a tendency widespread in sub-Sahara Africa, could correspond to the affirmation of a distinctively African Islamic initiative.

OBASANJO'S NEW BOOK GETS HEAVY CRITICISM FROM ENUGU

'Public Outcry' Against Obasanjo

Enugu WEEKLY STAR in English 9 Nov 80 p 2

[Article by Cyprian Madu]

[Text]

The former Nigerian Head of State, General Olusegun Obasanjo has been in the news again. His appearance this time after handing over power to an elected democratic government 13 months ago was met with banter and criticism from eminent citizens of this country.

The bone of contention is a book he wrote on the account of the Nigerian civil war titled "My Command" which was launched for public consumption a few days ago.

Punches came from right and left and the General had consistently maintained that he was responsible for everything he wrote in "My Command". He seems to have forgotten that it was a calculated attempt to reopen the healed old wound of the civil war.

Brigadier Benjamin Adekunle (Black Scorpion), a former general officer commanding the 3rd marine commando division of the Nigerian Army expressed the fear that General Obasanjo's book "My Command" was like a time-bomb which when exploded may set this country ablaze because the account of the conduct of the civil war given in the book was "a bundle of lies and an instrument of blackmail".

The Black Scorpion wondered why the book was allowed to see the light of day since such books by Brigadier David Ismihewon himself was stopped by the Gowon regime.

Brigadier Adekunle dealt extensively on the watered content of the book and concluded that the General wrote the book to make money and a false name for himself and had thus commercialised the blood and sweat of those who laid down their lives and lost their limbs in the 30-month civil war.

Be that as it may, General Obasanjo's 'My Command' was not the 'type of scholarly and investigagive literature that will go down well in the interest of well-meaning Nigerians because it contained a one-sided story of the events capable of reopening the old wound of the brutal civil war.

For instance, could the former head of state tell us what he meant by Aburi fails and Nigeria, Ojukwu set for war as well as his so-called strategies for the war.

One could have expected that General Obasanjo could sit quietly and enjoy his private life as a "farmer" or come out and propose ways in which President Shagari including state governors and the legislators could pilot the affairs of the nation.

Successfully thus resorting to discussing delicate and military confidentials to the public in this peacetime of the civilian regime is to satisfy his selfish ends.

Most of us are witnesses of this war and could not swallow hook, line and sinker blatant lies about one sided story of the civil war. In fact the lies tantamount to touching the tail of a leopard as our saying goes.

Every Nigerian including the 'rebels' and the federal loyalist were the casualties of war because everyone was equally affected directly or indirectly.

It will be in the interest of the public if the federal government banned the book from further circulation if peace is to reign.

Reminder of War

Enugu DAILY STAR in English 18 Nov 80 p 9

[Article by Pal Okafor: "That 'My Command' and the People of Eastern Origin"]

[Text] The recent booklet entitled "My Command" by the former Head of State Gen Obasanjo should not come as a timely mistake to any Easterner but as a timely reminiscence of the war to any Igbo, Efik or River Line areas of Eastern Nigeria.

Irrespective of our politicial believes now history or culture has shown that the Calabars have got natural links with Arochukwu in Igbo land, the Rivers people have their blood relationship with the Imo State and since the Imo State is regarded as the heart of Igbo land, "My Command" by the former Head of State should be regarded as a timely reminder of the tragedy to all Easterners. It is true that many of us have learnt nothing and forgotten nothing if not, why should the former Head of State of Nigeria ever launch a book to remind the Easterners how they were slaughtered during the war.

Remembering how the war started it is on record that the Easterners were asked to pull out of the federation of Nigeria, it is on record that all the Eastern army officers were murdered in cold blood in some parts of Nigeria, history has shown that defenseless civilians were also mercilessly butchered in some parts of Nigeria. All these things forced the Easterners to decide on managing their own destiny but the black forces around the world helped Nigeria to subdue the Easterners irrespective of all their unhuman treatment and barbaric act towards soldiers of Eastern Nigeria origin. The former Head of State of Nigeria not minding the thousands of Easterners that died during the pogrom in Nigeria or the civil war, chose this time to reveal to the world that the conquest is yet to be completed.

The conquest is yet to be completed because under the leadership of Gen Obasanjo the mighty Nigerian army was political. The mighty Nigerian army under his command broke the Nigerian Constitution which makes it impossible for Nigerians to acquire property anywhere in Nigeria. The former Nigerian Head of State failed to resolve the issue of abandoned property in the Rivers State. The former Head of State failed to resolve the imbalance of manpower in his civil service commission. He also failed to decentralize industries under his command. The politics in the Nigerian Iron and Steel industry is still in our memory. The siting of the biggest oil refinery in Kaduna with a big oil pipeline flowing from East is a good command from the former Head of State.

The establishment of numerous universities and teaching hospitals with expatriate staff to run them is also a good command. The establishment of international airports to congested areas in Nigeria is also a good command. The total neglect of all parts of Eastern Nigeria should have been a very good command that is expected to be published by the former Head of State.

And this is why I say that this is a timely reminder of all those mixed blood of Eastern Nigeria to read the hand writing on the wall and see the footprint on the sand of time.

It is very unfortunate that his administration helped to divide the country he never helped to build, and that his command destroyed the image of the country leaving despicable chronicle for generations yet unborn. A good command indeed.

PROBLEMS AT AJAOKUTA STEEL POINTED OUT

Irregular Payments at Ajaokuta

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 6 Nov 80 pp 1, 3

[Article by Olu Omole, Biola Ajoni]

[Text]

IRREGULAR payment of salaries and salary arrears have been uncovered at Ajaokuta Steel Company.

Officers who were promoted but whose promotions were nullified by the acting Minister of Steel Development, Malam Mamman Ali Makele, were discovered to have been paid salaries attached to their unapproved scale in addition to the arrears.

Some of the affected officers were promoted from salary grade level 08 to 10; GL 09 to 14 and GL 10 to 14.

According to New Nigerian investigation there was an assessment exercise in the company between May and July. The result of the assessment was released on August 18 and promotions were announced.

The promotions announced were, however, opposed by majority of the workers who petitioned the acting Minister of Steel Development and the General Manager of the company, Dr. F.R.C. Ezemenari.

In a memo dated October 7, to all his staff, Dr. Ezemenari said that in view of the "extraordinary large number of protests and petitions" against the promotion exercise it had been cancelled.

Despite Dr. Ezemenari's memo, the accounts department went on to pay salaries for the nullified promotions to the affected officers with arrears with effect from July.

Some of the beneficiaries were understood to have collected arrears of salary of between 400 and 2,000 Naira.

Contacted in Lagos yesterday, the acting Minister of Steel Development, Malam Ali Makele, confirmed the detection of irregular payments.

He said, however, that he had ordered the recovery of the irregular payments to all the affected officers.

In addition the minister said that he had discussed that all officers found to be responsible for the irregular payments be disciplined.

Malam Makele said the promotion exercise which led to the payments were approved by the management of the company when it had no board.

According to him, such a situation would not be in the overall interest of the nation's steel industry.

Malam Makele said that the panel he set up would determine the right officers to be promoted and to what post or salary grade levels.

Malam Makele Called Obstructionist

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Nov 80 p 1

[Editorial: "Ajaokuta Is Drifting"]

[Text]

IF former Steel Minister, Mr. Paul Unongo, opened his mouth too wide against Ajaokuta Steel Project deal which bred suspicion and led to his reassignment, he had at least one or two things to his credit. He had a clear understanding of what the difficulties of the project were. Above all he shared in the commitment, or at least he appeared so, of the 1983 deadline for the commencement of the production of steel at Ajaokuta. These two things endeared him to the people on the site. We are not so sure of Malam Mamman Ali Makele, the acting Steel Minister. His apparent inability to make a positive impact on the move towards the attainment of the 1983 deadline has made him to be part of the problem. This is a tragedy.

The checkered history of the Ajaokuta Steel Project is now common knowledge, although the details of why it is so are well outside the realm of common knowledge. It is Shagari's administration that is seeing the project off to a start—much to the chagrin of the obstructionists and diversionists, especially in the Federal Ministry of Works who had acted as temporary foster parents to the project. But recent developments suggest that the obstructionists have regroupped. It is as if Malam Makele is swallowing any advice emanating from the ministry and implementing them without thorough evaluation of the implications of such advice. At best, this will make him look like a man who doesn't do his homework well. At worst, however, it portrays him as one being part of the obstructionist move that had curtailed the progress of the project for years.

Secondly, the manner in which the Ajaokuta Steel Company — a limited liability — is being handled suggests that it is being tied down to the civil service structure, especially the salary aspect of it. Although steel won't roll off until 1983 [?] the foundation for this next-to-miracle has to be laid now. The one-step-forward and two-backwards movement at Ajaokuta cannot lead to the realisation of this objective even in 1987. We are aware that there are plans to take the Ajaokuta Steel Company out of the civil service orbit but this doesn't have to wait until 1983.

Thirdly if the proposal to site a metallurgical school at Ajaokuta is dropped, as we hear it is being mooted, the consequences will be enormous for the project. It seems also the once bossy and obstructive role played by the Ministry of Works has now been taken over by the Inter-ministerial Committee of the Steel Development Department in the Executive Office of the President. For example, circulars emanating from this source portray disguised intentions. They, naturally, highten suspicions. Malam Makele must be seen to be doing more than merely listening to his advisers. He must evaluate any advice. Ajaokuta needs an accelerated programme. For that it has to have a dynamic, intelligent and, above all, fully committed man behind it. If that means appointing a new person to that job every six months the president should not regard it impossible to do so.

Intrigues Said Hampering Work

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Nov 80 pp 1, 3

[Text]

IT is unlikely that the Ajaokuta Steel Project will be commissioned in 1983 as scheduled.

Already, the project is three months behind its slated take-off time and it may take another 3-6 months to provide the necessary foundation for its take-off.

Experts on steel engineering have also predicted that none of the rolling mills under the project would be completed before 1986 if the present trend and pace of work were not checked by the Shagari administration.

A follow-up investigation conducted by the New Nigerian revealed that the situation at Ajaokuta was bred by the recent reversal of certain vital and far-reaching decisions by the acting Minister for Steel Development, Malam Mamman Ali Makele.

Our investigations also revealed that the project is suffering as a result of political intrigues and manoeuvres of a political party in collusion with top functionaries of the Ministry for Steel Development as well as senior management staff of the steel project.

Informed sources at Ajaokuta told New Nigerian that the problem which the project is now saddled with began following the exit of the former Minister of Steel Development, Mr Paul Unongo, whose absence had been taken advantage of by some top functionaries of the ministry not interested in the realisation of the project.

The sources disclosed that on assuming office last year, the former minister appointed a general manager and a deputy general manager for the project in the persons of Dr F.P.C. Ezenemari and Alhaji Idris Attah, respectively.

He also appointed a three-man task force on the advice of the general manager to design a new organisational structure based on the Aladja one, for the Ajaokuta project which had been working on the civil service structure since its inception.

We gathered that the task force was to look into the issues of promotion of staff in the company, prepare fresh organisational chart, and make necessary staff changes and reassignment to bring about efficiency in the new organisation.

The directives to this effect were contained in a letter of April 14, 1980.

Accordingly the task force, headed by the then deputy general manager of the project, Alhaji Idris Attah, went into action and assessed all the staff of the company and made recommendations for their promotion and reassignment in accordance with the directives of the minister. The task force also designed a new organisational chart.

We also gathered that the recommendations of the special committee were forwarded to the minister in a letter dated August 4, 1980.

Our investigations revealed that the recommendations of the task force were approved by the former minister excepting minor changes in specific cases. The minister also endorsed the entire report and the approved staff list.

On assuming office in September, this year, the acting Minister of Steel, Malam Mamman Ali Makele, was shown the reorganisation chart and assessment exercise. He consented to the report and made some changes verbally, giving directive to the general manager to effect the changes from July 1, 1980.

Accordingly the general manager wrote letters to all the workers affected by the changes informing them of their promotions and or reassignment as the case might be.

The accounts department was also informed to proceed with payment of salaries to staff on the basis of the new salary structure with effect from July, 1980.

However, some members of staff whom the changes did not favour resorted to writing series of petitions to both the general manager and the acting minister. This subsequently led to the suspension of the payment of the new salaries as well as the new organisational structure on the directives of the Permanent Secretary in the Ministry of Steel Development.

Our correspondent who visited the project site at the weekend reports that as a result of the confused situation at Ajaokuta the workers morale is very low. Many of them were absent from their places of work as no one seemed to be in charge of any thing. Some are even said to be reporting at month end only to collect salaries.

The only activity going on at the site was the ground levelling exercise which would form the basis of the foundation of the project.

It is not yet known how the workers would be paid their salaries next month, because although the new salary structure was dropped, it was not made clear whether the workers would be paid on the basis of their former scales. However the letter suspending the payment said those who were paid on the new scale should pay back the arrears they received within 6 months, beginning from this month.

Probe Called For

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 12 Nov 80 p 13

[Text]

PRESIDENT Shehu Shagari has been called upon to set up a high powered panel of inquiry to investigate allegations of "intrigues and manoeuvres" aimed at undermining the completion of the Ajaokuta Steel Project on schedule.

The House Committee Chairman of the Kaduna State House of Assembly, Alhaji Dahiru Maigana, made the call on Monday in a release.

He said that the inquiry was needed to bring to book those responsible for such unpatriotic activities, in view of the priority position of the project.

Alhaji Dahiru also urged President Shehu Shagari to take a closer look at those close to him and examine the quality of advice he received from them, adding that "it is my belief that certain people around the presidency are only busy serving their own interests."

FARMERS TO BE COMPENSATED FOR LAND LOST TO DAM

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 6 Nov 80 pp 1, 3

[Article by Salisu T. Waziri]

[Text]

THE Sokoto Rima River Basin Development Authority (SRRBDA) has made available the sum of 361,244 Naira for the payment as compensation to farmers whose land were acquired by the authority for the construction of a dam in Goronyo town of Sokoto State.

This was made known by the authority's General Manager, Alhaji Muhammadu Arzika, while addressing a press conference yesterday.

The money, he said, had already been handed over to Sokoto State Government who would in turn arrange payments direct to the farmers in assistance of the farmers' local government officials.

The area which the authority was paying for, the general manager said, covered about 881.5 hectares and was intended to be used for the building of the dam, staff houses, workshops and other services connected with the dam.

He said about 1,445 farmers were affected by the acquisition and the amount was made up of 96,783 Naira for economic trees while 264,449 Naira was for crop compensation.

Already, the state government, he explained, had made available plans to check fraudulent elements and make sure that only genuine land owners covered by the area received the compensation.

The general manager also disclosed that the authority had already signed a land tenure survey contract with an indigenous firm of surveyors, North Point (Nig) Ltd., in the sum 850,000 Naira, for surveying about 20,000 hectares for the proposed reservoir of the dam.

The contract, he said, include the demarcation of the reservoir boundry, identification and recording of existing farm plots, preparation of registers and identity cards for the land owners, the study of the size of population and buildings in the area to be flooded and socio-economic study of the villages in the area.

Speaking on the progress of the authority so far made on the Bakolori Project, Alhaji Mohammadu Arzika said all was now peaceful and the authority had successfully cropped various items during the last rainy season.

He said about 5,480 hectares would also be ploughed on the dam project during this dry season to grow wheat, maize, cotton, cow peas, tomatoes and other vegetable crops by irrigation system.

He also commended the attitude of the neighbouring farmers for their positive co-operation with the authority by reporting some mischievous elements alleged to be inciting the farmers to make illegal claims from the government.

CORNFLAKES FACTORY PLANNED FOR KADUNA

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 6 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by Owen Anikwue]

[Text]

LARGE scale production of a made-in-Nigeria brand of cornflakes is to be embarked upon by the National Grains Production Company (NGPC) next year in Kaduna.

The construction of the processing plant estimated to cost over one million Naira is to start this year.

When fully established, the Kaduna Cornflakes Factory which is the first of its kind in the country is expected to process 300 kilegrams of corn per hour to produce 600 tonnes of cornflakes annually.

The Chairman of the National Grains Production Company (NGPC), Alhaji Kasimu Aliyu, disclosed these facts yesterday in an interview with the New Nigerian.

Alhaji Kasimu Aliyu said that in 1977 alone Nigeria imported about 2,950 tonnes of cornflakes, adding that at that moment, the country needed about 3,000 tonnes of the breakfast delicacy annually.

The Kaduna Cornflakes Factory, Alhaji Kasimu explained, is a joint venture between the NGPC and a British firm which has 20 per cent shares while the NGPC has 80 per cent.

The establishment of the project had also been included in the 1981-85 development plan. The Federal Government was therefore expected to assist in financing the project, the NGPC Chairman said.

One of the factors that had influenced the decision to establish the cornflakes factory, Alhaji Kasimu revealed, was the encouraging results of the NGPC's pilot flour mills plant in Kaduna, which, he said, had been producing successfully, 500 tonnes of guinea-corn and corn flour packed in polythene bags, daily.

Another major project to be embarked upon next year by the NGPC, is the semi-processing and packaging of raw rice, harvested at Mokwa mechanised farm. The rice, he said, would be contained in small paper packets, ready for cooking.

Among other good grain production planned by the NGPC, Alhaji Kasimu said, are the establishment of 4,000 hectares of mechanised farm to be located in each of the 19 states of the federation, with the capital base of each farm fixed at one million Naira, he said.

BRIEFS

CROP INCREASE PROGRAM--A programme aimed at assisting farmers throughout the country to produce large quantities of rice as well as other food crops has been worked out by the National Cereals Research Institute. Already, the programme has been submitted to the Federal Government and if approved, it would involve the training of 500,000 farmers to produce rice and other food crops within the next two to three years. This was announced by the chairman of the institute, Mr Akin Abolarin, while exchanging views with the acting Governor of Niger State, Alhaji Idris Alhassan in Minna, yesterday. He said that under the programme, which would be known as Small Holders Agricultural Extension (SHARE), other food crops which would be cultivated include maize, soyabeans and beans. The chairman explained that during the programme, the institute intended to supply each farmer with adequate feeds, plant and cultivate the products of such farms with the assistance of farmers. This, he explained, would be carried out for a period of two to three years so that in the end the technology of modern farming would have been successfully transferred with minimum difficulty to each farmer. HAUSA-LANGUAGE NEWSPAPER--Another Hausa language newspaper has been launched--this time in Kano. The newspaper, "Maganar Kano" (Kano Talk), is a weekly published by Sarkimedia Limited in Kano. It is printed in Zaria by Gaskiya Corporation. Speaking at the launching on Friday, Alhaji Sabo Mohammed, editor of the weekly and Sarkimedia chief executive, pointed out that the paper was determined to be influential, though unbiased reporting of events. He said by laying emphasis on Kano State activities, 'Maganar Kano' would correct the 'negative publicity' which other papers give the state. He added that no political interest would be favoured by the paper except the interest of objectivity. Alhaji Sabo Mohammed hinted that the Emir of Kano was invited to launch the newspaper as a sign of the respect which the paper accorded traditional rulers in the political set up. The Emir was represented by the Dan Iyan Kano, Alhaji Abbas Sanusi, who read an address on his behalf. He commended the initiative taken by Sarkimedia and urged that the paper be firm in its objective reporting. He noted the paper's name was apt in view of the fact that politics bring a lot of talk. Two issues of the paper had been on the market at 15 kobo per copy. [Text] [Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 10 Nov 80 p 3]

STRIKE HALTS 'DAILY TIMES'--The Production Department of the Daily Times has been on strike for the past two weeks. As a result, the Daily Times newspaper and the Sunday Times have not been in circulation for the period. It was not clear what has caused the strike but informed sources said the technical workers could have been protesting against the new technology (web off-set printing equipment) recently acquired by the company. It should be recalled that the junior workers of the Daily Times were on strike last April over wage demands which was later resolved without disrupting the production of the company's publications. TAX ON RENTED BUILDINGS--The Ondo State Government is to introduce 12 percent property tax on rented and leased buildings and other revenue yielding property in the state. In a new tax drive, the state government is also introducing special taxes on items sold in supermarkets and hotels in the state. The state commissioner for Finance, Chief Famuyide Fasoranti, explained that tenants would be required to pay the tax directly to the state government to avoid sabotage by landlords. He announced the setting up of more revenue collecting offices, the establishment of a state-owned bank and insurance company and several other measures aimed at improving the state's revenue, including a review of the state's register of taxable adults. LOW COST HOUSING--A total of 130 towns and villages will benefit from the 3,000 housing units being built in Kwara State by both the federal and state government. The project is estimated to cost ₦8.5m. The state governor, Alhaji Adamu Atta said the project was in fulfillment of his party's election promise. He explained that the houses were low cost, designed with the common people in mind. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English 24 Nov 80 p 2394]

STEEL PRODUCTION BY 1983--An eight hundred million naira contract has been awarded for steel development in Nigeria. This revelation was made in Lagos at the weekend by the acting Minister for Steel Development, Malam Mamman Makele. The minister disclosed that Nigeria would be sure of steel production in 1983. Outlining the project, Malam Makele said that by October 1981 President Shehu Shagari would commission the steel plant at Warri, where a total of about 5,000 workers would be employed. He said that the Oshogbo and Katsina plants would be ready in 1982 while the Ajaokuta complex would commence production in 1983. He pointed out that already Russians were submitting drawings for the machinery. On Ajaokuta, the minister said that development there was in progress. He added that a training school was being built, and contract for 6,000 houses would soon be awarded. He further said that Iron Ore, Lime stone and Clay would be needed for production. He added that coal was the only problem, but would be imported in the first two years until suitable coal was discovered in Nigeria. Malam Makele made these known to a six-man delegation of Iron and Steel Workers Union of Nigeria when they paid him a courtesy call. In his speech, the secretary of the union, Mr Ademola Ajayi, told the minister that politics should not be played with economic development. [Text] [Lagos DAILY TIMES in English 10 Nov 80 p 5]

URANIUM MINING--Nigeria will soon introduce another item into the world market when the Nigeria Uranium Mining Company takes off properly. This revelation was made by Alhaji Ibrahim Hassan, Minister of Mines and Power while performing the inaugural ceremony of the Nigeria Uranium Mining Company (NUMCO) in Bauchi. Alhaji Ibrahim said that NUMCO is charged with the responsibility of selling, exploring, exploiting and development of uranium and other related minerals in all parts of the country. The Minister recalled that the search for uranium commenced during the last administration, and deposits were discovered in Dange, Sokoto State and Gombe area of Bauchi State. Through recommendation a French uranium mining company, Minatome S.A. in conjunction with the Nigeria Mining Company (NMC) are to start work in those two areas soon. Uranium is used for the generation of nuclear energy and the production of nuclear arms. It will be recalled that Professor Ishaya Audu, Minister of External Affairs warned that Nigeria may join the nuclear club because of South Africa's participation in the production of such arms. SECRET NPN, PRP MEETING--A secret meeting in London between key officials of the National Party of Nigeria (NPN) and the Aminu faction of the Peoples Redemption Party (PFP) has surfaced as a plot to sell-out the PRP. According to Chief Michael Imoudu, the London caucus struck an alliance which saw the PRP as a baby of the National Party of Nigeria. The meeting among other issues, said Chief Imoudu witnessed a financial deal between both party agents to make the alliance stick. Chief Imoudu who was similarly addressing a caucus of the party's national directorate in Port Harcourt hinted that Malam Aminu and Mr Ikoku picked a quarrel at Churchill Hotel in London after a disagreement on financial disbursement. Their disagreement, he added was settled in Lagos later. Also contributing to Chief Imoudu's address, Governor Abubakar Rimi maintained that the NPN was purely responsible for the financing of the London caucus. He inferred that the NPN was now enjoying its secret marriage with Malam Aminu and Mr Ikoku, and questioned the creditibity in offering Malam Aminu presidential treatment at the Enugu convention on the order of the federal authorities. SCIENTISTS DEPLORE FOOD IMPORTATION--Nigerian scientific agriculturists are very sad over the importation of some basic food into the country in large quantity. The Assistant General Manager, National Root Crops Research Institute, Umudike Mr John C. Obi made this known in a key note address delivered at the School of Agriculture, Umudike Silver Jubilee celebration. He said that this practice was detrimental not only to the country's balance of trade, but also to its economic and political independence. The assistant general manager said that scientific agriculturists were sad because Nigeria as an agricultural country with a populous and hardworking agrarian society, should be able to feed herself and still have considerable surplus, if all the developed agricultural technologies could be applied at the farm level. He said that there were 18 agricultural research institutions in the country working on different crops and animals. Mr Obi, whose theme in the address was "Technological possibilities in Nigeria," admitted that Nigerian Agricultural Research Institutions had made significant breakthrough in production-oriented research in the attempt to increase food production in the country adding that what was most probably lacking was researches on management and sociological aspects of technological change. FOREIGN MINISTER ON ARAB SUMMIT, REGIONAL PROBLEMS

LD261205 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 22 Nov 80 p 3

[Yunis Muhammad Ishaq report on interview with Foreign Minister Abdurahman Jama Barre by ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT, in Jidda--date not given]

[Text] Jidda, ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT Bureau--Somali Foreign Minister Abdurahman Jama Barre has told ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT that the forthcoming Arab Summit Conference will discuss the document on Arab economic and military strategy which was reached during the meetings of the seven-member committee, as well as the report which was prepared by this committee.

The Somali minister expressed his hope that all the Arab states will attend the summit conference, that Arab disagreements will disappear and that Arab solidarity and unity will be restored. He said that his country is averse to disputes or issues that intensify these disagreements. He added: We are now in dire need of joint arab action and we hope that the resolutions which will be reached by the kings, leaders and presidents of the Arab states will be commensurate with the events and the current phase through which the Arab world is passing.

The Somali minister denied that his country had asked for $40 million in return for granting facilities in Somali territorial waters to the United States. He said that his country had simply agreed to grant these facilities to the United States in return for an American offer of $40 million. He added: It is true that this sum is meager and does not meet our requirements, but the United States promised to help us and so we agreed to give it the facilities.

Abdurahman Jama Barre emphasized that his country has not offered the American administration any bases in Somalia. He only mentioned "facilities." He added that Somalia does not agree to give bases on its territory to any power but, as far as facilities are concerned, we grant these to any country with which we have strong relations, particularly our friends. He said: To be frank, our country has until recently been the only country in the Horn of Africa which did not provide military bases or facilities at a time when some states had bases in neighboring countries. However, because we desire to defend our sovereignty and dignity against the threats of certain major powers and their allies, we have been compelled to grant the United States these facilities in return for military aid. Asked if Somalia has received any consignments of this military aid promised by the United States, Barre said that Somalia has not yet received any aid of this kind. He added that the aid, which is in the form of weapons, is for self-defense. He said that Somalia has no other sources to supply it with weapons.

Asked about Arab aid to Somalia and whether it is true that this aid is meager, Abdurahman Jama Barre said: Very regrettably, the Arab states have done nothing so far to bolster the Somali economy. We hope that these states will contribute to bolstering Somalia. He appealed to the Arab states and Arab capital to invest in Somalia which has agricultural, livestock, fish and mineral resources. He said that these resources are sufficient to meet the requirements of the Arab community.

The Somali minister accused Ethiopia, together with its Soviet and Cuban allies, of being behind the war in Ogaden. Abdurahman Jama Barre said that his country is not a party to the Ogaden war and does not wish to enter this war. He added that this war is between Ethiopia and Ogaden.

The Somali foreign minister explained his country's role in this war as one based on supporting and bolstering the Ogaden Liberation Front politically. He added that Ogaden (western Somalia) does not need armies to fight alongside it or any country to fight for it; it only needs arms.

He went on to say that the Ethiopians are trying to push Somalia's name in this war as a means of propaganda, in an attempt to portray the war to world public opinion as a conflict between the two countries. The Somali minister said that the best solution to this tragedy is for Ethiopia to recognize the rights of the Ogaden people. He added that the Ethiopians should realize that the time of colonialism has ended. He said: It is very regrettable that the Ethiopians do not wish to recognize this fact; having failed to confront the Liberation Front, they resorted to attacking Somalia and to making others believe that this is a Somalia-Ethiopian war. We believe that when Ethiopia changes its colonialist concept and erroneous political views, this war, which can have no positive results, will end and we will then be able to restore relations between the two countries.

The Somali foreign minister described the Soviet Union's intervention in the regional war as aimed at changing the map of the area and gaining strategic advantage. He said: While helping the people of Ogaden, we were not aware that the Soviet Union would openly intervene in this war. We did not intervene in this war directly. We undertook to help the Ogaden Liberation Front as a reaction to direct Soviet intervention with all its forces, under the command of the number-two man in the Soviet armed forces. He added: Ethiopia is now claiming that it [presumably Somalia] is strong by the presence of foreign forces on its territory. They imagine that Somalia will devour Ogaden, forgetting their own domination and war in Eritrea.

Abdurahman Jama Barre described his country's relations with Kenya as "good despite some differences" which, he believed, will disappear because we, being friends, will resolve them despite our disagreement on certain matters.

NEED TO INCREASE FOOD OUTPUT SEEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] BULAWAYO. ZIMBABWE will have to double its food production over the next 15 years to keep up with rising consumption, the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, said last night.

Speaking at the annual dinner of the Bulawayo branch of the Institute of Bankers in Zimbabwe, Senator Norman said: "In the next five to 10 years, food could well overtake oil as the most important commodity that we need."

The Minister said increases in food consumption in 1980 had been "astronomical".

Although this was partly the result of rising incomes in some sectors of the economy, it was important to realise that agriculture was crucial to the future well-being of the country, he said.

"It is essential to realise that home-grown food is the cheapest food," Senator Norman said.

This country was paying farmers $135 per tonne for A-grade wheat. The latest imported price from a neighbouring country was $250 per tonne.

Despite the needs for vastly increased agricultural production the Minister said he was confident Zimbabwe could again become an exporter of food to the many countries bordering it.

INCREASED FUEL PRICES ANNOUNCED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] THE price of petrol and blend fuel goes up by 6c a litre today. The move is part of measures to reduce the Budget deficit and to start releasing funds blocked in the country for the past 15 years.

This was announced last night in a statement from the Ministry of Finance. The full text reads:

"The Minister of Finance today announced certain measures to increase income for Government revenue and borrowings, and thus to contribute to the financing of the 1980-81 Budget deficit, and at the same time to make progress with the release of funds blocked in Zimbabwe over the past 15 years.

"First, the Minister announced that the duty on motor spirit has been increased with immediate effect.

"As a result, the price of motor fuel (that is, petrol and blend) has increased today, Friday, November 28 1980, by 6c a litre. The prices of other petroleum products including aviation fuel, diesel fuel and paraffin are unaffected by this decision.

"Second, it will be recalled that in the Budget speech in July this year it was mentioned that the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe was working on the problem of releasing blocked balances which had accumulated over the past 15 years, while bearing in mind the country's balance of payments limitations.

"It has now been decided that with effect from Monday January 5 1981, a number of measures to release funds will be introduced. With one exception they involve the use of the six-year bond procedure and will therefore generate an immediate flow of funds to central Government with the subsequent repayment and transfer to the beneficiaries taking place over a period of six years.

"As an initial step the Reserve Bank will now receive applications for the release of blocked dividends, interest and other income which accrued during the years 1965 to 1973 to companies domiciled in previously designated countries.

"The relevant income will, however, only be considered for release over a six-year period through the medium of special 4 percent Government of Zimbabwe blocked bonds.

"Similarly, the Reserve Bank will consider applications for the release through the same bond procedure of 50 percent of branch profits that accrued during the same period to head offices situated in former designated countries.

"These concessions do not apply to insurance companies and their branch operations whose position is still under consideration.

"Never-resident individuals, and former residents who emigrated prior to January 1 1980, who have assets blocked in Zimbabwe with an overall cash value not exceeding $1 000 may apply for the immediate release of such funds.

"Similar individuals with blocked cash assets of more than $1 000 but less than $3 000 may also apply for the release of these funds through the six-year blocked bond procedure.

"With a view to promoting local participation in foreign-owned companies operating in Zimbabwe, applications for the remittance of disinvestment proceeds will be considered within predetermined limits.

"Where such authority is granted the relevant funds will only be transferable through the special six-year 4 percent Government bonds.

"All inquiries and applications must be directed through the applicants' local bankers," the statement said.

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO INCREASE BEEF PRODUCTION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 29 Nov 80 p 2

[Text] THE Government is considering measures to help revive the cattle industry in Matabeleland, the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, said in Bulawayo yesterday.

"The cattle industry is very much in the doldrums, but I have the firm conviction that these measures will assist us to regain our place as exporters of quality beef," he said.

Senator Norman, who was speaking to Bulawayo Rotary Club, said the news media tended to overplay certain aspects of Zimbabwean life and society, and to overemphasise things that had gone wrong or were at the point of going wrong.

"On balance I believe that more goes right and that more will go right than will go wrong.

"The Government has been in power eight months. There have been hiccoughs, anomalies and mistakes, but we are still intact which, on this continent, is quite an achievement.

"People talk about the instability of the Government. I know there are factions, and I know there are people, who are anxious, for whatever reasons, to achieve power.

"But under our present leadership, I believe we have political stability."

He said a year ago the country was losing 80 people a day in vicious war. There was still a small element of banditry continuing around the country but he was confident the Government would get on top of it "eventually".

The net loss due to stocktheft had dropped to 33 last week, compared with 4 200 in the first week of January. But this success, he said, was being offset by poaching being carried out on a massive scale.

"It is beginning to outrage the population as a whole, because of the suffering the culprits leave behind," he said.

Senator Norman said that following two years of drought the country had low maize stocks. He was confident that given a good rainy season, the country would recover from this situation and become a major food exporter.

Referring to the increased petrol price as being an inhibiting factor to travel, he said: "We will have to put up with further increases if we are going to pay our way."

EDUCATION MINISTER ANNOUNCES SWEEPING CHANGES

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] EDUCATION Minister Dzingai Mutumbuka yesterday announced sweeping, radical changes to give another 60 000 children the chance of a secondary school place next year.

His ambitious plans include "hot seat" learning — having two shifts a day in each school — and a massive, around-the-world recruitment drive for teachers.

There will also be bigger classes and the part-time use of some primary schools by secondary pupils.

The aim of the far-reaching reforms is to increase the number of Form 1 pupils from 20 000 to nearly 90 000.

Mr Mutumbuka said that a mere 10 percent of black youngsters make it to Form 1 — the first year of secondary school.

"We are going to ensure that this imbalance changes as soon as possible," he said in a special statement.

A big teacher recruitment drive has been launched overseas, mainly in Britain and Australia.

Ministry officials are already abroad laying the groundwork for a huge influx of teachers.

The Minister is personally overseeing the provision of proper housing for teachers sent to rural areas.

The classroom shake-up is to affect all but "independent" schools.

The changes in the Government sector, which is mainly urban and has a Grade 7 enrolment of 27 000 pupils, will be that:

Group B — formerly all-black — secondary schools will have 42 pupils in each Form 1 class and will introduce double sessions for Form 1 classes — one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

They will continue to draw their pupils from the usual "catchment" areas.

Group B primary schools not already having double sessions will vacate some of their classes for the use of Form 1 secondary pupils.

Group A — former all-white — high schools which are under-used will be filled up.

At first they will draw pupils from their normal "catchment" areas. Any vacancies after that will be filled by children from other areas.

There will be up to 36 pupils in each Form 1 class.

The changes in the private sector, which is mainly rural and has a Grade 7 primary enrolment of 70 000, will be that:

- Form 1 classes will each take up to 42 pupils.
- Double-sessioning will be introduced in Form 1 wherever possible.
- Secondary boarding schools will be expected to open one or more additional Form 1 classes especially for day scholars.
- Potential Form 1 boarders who live less than five kilometres from their secondary school will attend as day scholars.
- Form 1 classes will be introduced at primary schools.

If necessary, primary classes will have to have double sessions to make way for their newly established secondary wing. And from the beginning of next year new conventional day secondary schools will be attached to the already established primaries.

Mr Mutumbuka said he understood the "magnitude" of the exercise.

He added: "It is our Government's policy that as many children as possible will be able to enjoy the benefits of secondary education.

"For without a high level of academic and technological education we cannot hope to develop Zimbabwe along the lines which would be of most benefit to the people."

PHINEAS SITHOLE SACKED FROM UNION LEADERSHIP

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] ZANU chairman Phineas Sithole was last night sacked as general secretary of the United Textile Workers' Union.

But the long-time union man dismissed the decision as illegal — and threatened to challenge it in the courts.

He said the move was politically inspired by ZANU (PF).

Union branch chairmen from around the country met at Hartley and decided to kick him out. They are furious at his repeated allegations that the Government is scheming to turn the labour movement into a ZANU (PF) puppet.

The move to fire the veteran union leader has been brewing for weeks.

Mr Sithole, a ZANU MP during the Government of National Unity, is expected to fight his sacking.

His national executive was also dismissed.

ZANU (PF) activist Mphego Soko was appointed in his place and Mr John Mutemi was made president.

The union bosses are now to appeal to the Labour Ministry to recognise the new leaders.

Zimbabwe's strife-torn trade union movement was also rocked yesterday by a power struggle raging in the Post Office.

A long-established trade union is being challenged by a resurrected radical workers group.

The established union is the Post and Telecommunications Union of Zimbabwe, which was set up more than 50 years ago.

The rival group is the Zimbabwe Posts and Telecommunications Workers' Union, which was launched in 1971 but which has been dormant until this year.

It is affiliated to the Zimbabwe Trades Union Congress, which has been accused of being an arm of ZANU (PF).

The ZPTWU is fighting hard to "poach" members, especialy among the lower grade workers.

ZPTWU president Lovemore Matombo, who is a PTC senior assembly assistant, said the old union was a white-run organisation which had only begun admitting blacks nine years ago.

The ZPTWU is not registered with the Labour Ministry and is not recognised by the PTC management.

Another union under threat from a ZTUC-inspired rival is fighting back.

The General Engineering and Metal Workers' Union is battling to stop the unregistered Zimbabwe Engineering and Iron Workers Union poaching members.

National organising secretary Joe Chinoperekwei accused the ZTUC of interference.

He also said Webster Gwekwerere, organising secretary of the Government-formed Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, was causing chaos.

"He has only just returned from abroad after many years and doesn't fully understand the situation here.

"He is certainly not qualified to interfere."

CHIRAU DESCRIBES VITAL ROLE OF CHIEFS

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Nov 80 p 9

[Text] Zimbabwe's chiefs must now act as a vital link between the Government and the people, the president of the Council of Chiefs, Chief Jeremiah Chirau, said last week.

The chiefs' new role was essential because of the introduction of party politics into local government.

With different parties controlling councils throughout Matabeleland and Mashonaland, the Government could find itself effectively denied access to the people in some areas.

"The chiefs will have to become the Government's eyes, ears and mouthpiece. They must also become its channel of communication with the masses," he said.

Chief Chirau urged all the country's chiefs to direct their people towards only those goals which created one harmonious and united nation.

In an interview at his rural home in the Chirau TTL almost 30 km west of Sinoia, Chief Chirau said his plea was directed to all chiefs in Matabeleland and Mashonaland.

The Chiefs' Council president said as the traditional "fathers" of the nation, "chiefs should not so much be concerned with the politics of the country as with the spiritual, social and economic health of its people who are our subjects".

At the same time he urged the Government to make full use of the institution of chiefs to mobilise national unity.

He appealed to the Government to keep intact and united the Zimbabwe Council of Chiefs, and to utilise it for Shona and Ndebele unity.

Discussing the role of chiefs in the new Zimbabwe, Chief Chirau said if the plan was accepted the Government and the chiefs could hold periodical "indabas" to uphold the interests of the Government, the people and the country, and to keep open the channel of communication between the masses and the Government in all areas.

He said: "The role of the institution of chiefs should not be underrated. Its destruction could pose a very real danger to national unity.

"Chiefs could be used as an important instrument and a vital arm of the Government in the new situation where different parties will be controlling sections of the country through their elected councils.

"Relying on political influence alone could be disastrous, indeed suicidal, if the chiefs were not placed under the arm of the central Government."

In fact, he said, in Zimbabwe's new situation, politics tended to divide the people not only politically, but also geographically and regionally, rather than to unite them.

Two different political influences were operating in the two major regions making up Zimbabwe.

"There is ZANU (PF) dominating Mashonaland and ZAPU (PF) dominating Matabeleland. That alone demonstrates the makings of division. The council elections will come up with the same structure--ZANU(PF) councils in Mashonaland and ZAPU (PF) councils in Matabeleland.

"It is an unfortunate state of affairs brought about because politics, division politics, has been introduced in local government affairs. It can have far reaching results, very serious ones indeed."

If the chiefs fell under the control of the councils, they would have to team up with the party controlling these councils. The party could then effectively deny the Government access to the people of that region.

He said it was important that chiefs maintain their traditional powers.

If the government gave more powers to councils than to the chiefs, then in some area, the Government itself would virtually lose all its powers and control, he said.

He said: "My fear is that if the chief becomes a servant of the council, it will mean that Matabeleland chiefs become servants of ZAPU (PF) and Mashonaland chiefs servants of ZANU (PF).

He said "indabas" between the Government and the chiefs would be held to assess interests, events, successes and failures and to determine new directions for better progress and advancement for all.

TEACHING OF MINORITY LANGUAGES BACKED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] BULAWAYO.

MANY minority groups in Zimbabwe were being culturally deprived because their languages were not taught in schools or used in the mass media, a leading linguistics expert said yesterday.

Professor Brian Annan, Professor of Linguistics at the University of Zimbabwe, said in an interview that one of the most urgent tasks of his department was to look at the problem of a "mother tongue" in Zimbabwe.

"We want to try to inculcate a respect for each individual's own spoken language," said Professor Annan, who was here to deliver his inaugural lecture.

"Take the Batonka of the Zambezi Valley or any of the other smaller groups. Many of these people don't speak Shona or Ndebele.

"They are being deprived of education and they are being culturally deprived by not being taught in their own language."

Another problem area was the Chishona language itself, he said.

It was "very much a pseudo form" in that it had been to some extent artificially created rather than evolving as a standard dialect.

Written Shona was really created by the researchers of the early decades of this century, in particular Professor C. M. Doke, who based the written language on a fusion of Karanga, Korekore and Zezuru.

Although, for example, the development of English as a standardised language involved the submergence of several other languages in the British Isles, the written language was based on the spoken language of a particular group of people.

This was not the case with Shona, Professor Annan said.

"Shona is almost as bad as Esperanto. Ndebele is in a better position than Shona, in that the standard dialect has a central core which is related to the language of a particular group."

He believed it was important for a written language to evolve directly from a particular spoken dialect if it was to be effective.

This was why Esperanto and the other attempts at an artificial international language were doomed to failure.

The Chishona situation was further complicated now, Professor Annan said, by the extensive incorporation of English construction into the language.

This was particularly true in the Salisbury area, where linguistics experts had jokingly renamed the dialect Chiharare or Chihighfields.

He delivered his inaugural lecture, first given in Salisbury in August, at the National Museum last night.

Although he has been running a linguistics department at the University since 1974, the professorial chair was not created until January 1 this year.

In the lecture, the professor said English would continue to be used as the medium of national unity and international currency in Zimbabwe.

"An introduction of any other language as the major medium of communication at this stage of our development would be ill-advised for the economy of the country," he said.

"This is not to say, however, that indigenous languages have no place in the development of Zimbabwe: On the contrary we believe that a greater pride and interest in all the languages of Zimbabwe should be promulgated."

DETAILS ON UMTALI'S FIRST BLACK MAYOR GIVEN

Salisbury THE SUNDAY MAIL in English 30 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] UMTALI

ULULATING women and clenched fist salutes greeted the appearance in the Umtali Council Chamber yesterday morning of Zimbabwe's first black mayor in his red robe and chain of office.

He is Councillor Davidson Jahwi who was elected a city councillor last Sunday for Ward 2 (Sakubva) by a majority of 923 votes.

The council chamber was packed when the 12 councillors — eight of them black — took their seats for the first time for the formal installation of the new Mayor, following the valedictory address given by the retiring Mayor, Councillor Max Phillips.

Among the guests were MPs, Senator Ken Fleming and the Catholic Bishop of Umtali, Bishop Donal Lamont, at his first civic functions since his return to Umtali.

Councillor S. Mhaka proposed Councillor Jahwi as Mayor and this was seconded by Councillor J. N. Munowenyu. The Deputy Mayor is Councillor Roy Truscott, who held the same position in the last council.

Thanking councillors after his election as the first black Mayor of Umtali Councillor Jahwi said it was an honour to join the long line of mayors preceding him.

"I am aware that the office of a councillor is a most responsible one," he said. Although he and the other councillors were untried they would at all times occupy the office "with dignity and awareness of the need to serve in the best interests of Umtali and all its citizens".

In his valedictory address, Councillor Phillips said he regarded the introduction of political councils as a retrograde step.

"Councils, of course, must follow overall national policy, but political councils, instead of concentrating exclusively on the interests of their citizens, are apt to follow meekly the party line instead of challenging Government decisions where these are contrary to their city's interests," he said.

● Que Que's first black Mayor and Deputy Mayor—Councillors Lameck Chaunoita (32) and Tinarwo Dandadzi (28) — will be installed at a special meeting of the town council tomorrow.

They were elected on a ZANU (PF) ticket in the local government elections last Sunday.

Both were born in the Gutu district near Fort Victoria. They have been deeply involved in ZANU (PF) activities since 1971 and have lived in Que Que for at least 10 years.

The new Mayor, Councillor Chaunoita, became involved in politics at Dadaya Mission, influenced and inspired by former Prime Minister Senator Garfield Todd, who was restricted to the area.

After secondary education at Dadaya he went to Que Que in 1969 where he taught briefly before joining Sable Chemicals as a laboratory assistant.

Councillor Dandadzi became secretary of ZANU (PF)'s Mbizo district last year. He took his "O" levels at Gutu Secondary School. In 1971 he joined Sable Chemicals as a distribution clerk, and was promoted to despatch supervisor last month.

PRESIDENT ISSUES 'REVOLUTIONIZE THE CHURCH' PLEA

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 29 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] GWELO.

"THE wineskins in which the wine of the Gospel came to Africa are too foreign and outmoded to be able to contain the new ferment of total liberation. They must now be relegated into the archives of history."

This was said by President Banana when he addressed a graduation service at the Baptist Theological Seminary near Gwelo yesterday.

In his address the President returned again to the theme he has been propounding on several occasions in recent months: The need for change in the Church.

He went on: "This may sound painful to those members of the Church who have a nostalgic hankering after the fading Church shrines and structures. The national life of this country has undergone a revolution. The Church must be revolutionised, reform falls short of the demands of that justice upon which alone an authentic national identity can be founded."

The President said the Church had to knock down the old edifice of a colonial Christianity that was responsible for legitimising a master-servant mentality, and evolve a new and compelling theology, a theology that held out promise of the eschatological (doctrine of death, judgment, heaven and hell) potential of man, a guarantee of the restoration of the ideal man.

"The church needs to join forces with the resurgence of national consciousness for the purpose of reappraising Zimbabwean culture and gearing the Gospel to addressing itself to people in forms native to that culture," he said.

"A cultural revolution piloted by the church will give the Gospel teeth as well as roots in the lives of Zimbabwe's peoples."

Earlier in his speech President Banana said that reconstruction referred not only to the rebuilding of the physical landscapes of the country but to the reconstruction of broken lives, resulting in a new people with new attitudes and new forms of relationships based on mutual respect.

"The greatest challenge facing all Zimbabweans is to live together as friends and comrades, otherwise we run the risk of perishing as isolated fools and criminals," he said.

"We have to cross the bridges of tribe and race to become truly human and truly Zimbabwean. The philosophy of (sons of England) must give way to the philosophy of (sons of Zimbabwe). The accident of your birthplace should not be used to claim a false sense of superiority."

He said the churches were challenged to supplement and reinforce the progressive policies of the people's Government and cautioned the new young ministers not to be intimidated by the magnitude of the task to the point of wanting to hide behind their youth and inexperience.

"Youth and inexperience are not valid excuses for refusing to engage enthusiastically in the search for a national identity, and do not forget that it was the youth of our country who bore the brunt of our national liberation struggle," he said.

"Meaningful change in the Church will equally have to be championed by our young and forward looking theologians and you will no doubt meet with stiff resistance from certain quarters," he said. "One of the ironies of history is that there is always a group of people who will fight against their own freedom."

He told the graduates they were not going out as experts above reproach and it was important that they should tap the resources of non-commissioned members of the Church in the task of interpreting the implications of the Christian message.

HERBALIST SUPPORTS ZINATHA ELECTION--A Salisbury spirit medium, Mr Josiah Toto, said yesterday the leadership of the Zimbabwe National Traditional Healers' Association was popularly elected. Voicing his support for the Deputy Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze, who on Wednesday demanded an end to the bickering in the Zinatha leadership, Mr Toto said ngangas from all the five provinces elected Dr Gordon Chavunduka as president. The election took place in Salisbury on September 7. But a Salisbury herbalist, Dr Kenneth Gombera, is disputing Dr Chavunduka's leadership. The Ministry of Health says Dr Chavunduka was properly elected. Dr Gombera said recently he planned to call a rally for ngangas to resolve the row once and for all. Mr Toto, who is a member of a 17-man steering committee that drafted the Zinatha consitution, said: "At the election people said that they wanted to vote by a show of hands. "Every one raised their hands, some both hands, and others still even raised their legs to vote. "Those who were defeated should do what whites do. If a white man is defeated in an election he telephones the winner to congratulate him." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Nov 80 p 17]

GOVERNMENT OFFICE BUILDING--A contract for a 20-storey Government office block was signed in Salisbury yesterday by the Minister of Works, Mr Clement Muchachi, and the managing director of Roberts Construction, Mr D. A. Evans. The building which will be on Central Avenue between Fourth and Fifth streets, Salisbury, will cost more than $12 250 000, the biggest contract yet awarded for a Government building. Its 20 floors of office accommodation will have a ground floor car parking area and entrance level, with services room on the basement and one on the top floor. Roberts Construction will begin work in the new year and it is expected to take about 3 1/2 years to complete. Mr Muchachi said yesterday that the new building will accommodate Government ministries and will be similar to the Earl Grey building. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 28 Nov 80 p 17]

YUGOSLAVIA PLEDGES SUPPORT--The Yugoslav ambassador to Zimbabwe, Mr Vojislav Vujovic, says his country will co-operate with Zimbabwe in the fields of reconstruction and development. Speaking at a ceremony held to commemorate the national day of the Republic of Yugoslavia at the embassy in Highlands, Salisbury, yesterday, the Ambassador said it was significant for the people of Yugoslavia to celebrate their first national day in an independent Zimbabwe. "After what we have gone through together it is really a pleasure to be able to celebrate this day in your independent country and I would like to share with you the day--37 years ago--when we struggled for racial and social liberation." He paid tribute to the late President Tito of Yugoslavia and said it was sad he was not alive to witness the independence of Zimbabwe. The function was attended by members of other diplomatic missions and several Ministers, including the Minister of Manpower Planning and Development, Mr Edgar Tekere. Mr Tekere said in his reply: "The people of Yugoslavia are the kind of friends who understand that ours was a revolution. We emulated Marshal Tito and we must continue to emulate him if the revolution is to continue." He said Yugoslavia had helped Zimbabwe during the struggle by giving arms of war and now it should help in the new course of the revolution. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 29 Nov 80 p 3]

ACTIVITIES OF LIBYANS NEAR CHAD CAPITAL

Support Base in Douguia

LD021013 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Nov 80 p 8

[Report by Jacques Isnard: "Tripoli Setting Up Base 60 Km From Ndjamena"]

[Text] Libyan troops are at present setting up a logistical base at Douguia, 60 km north of Ndjamena, the Chadian capital, making it easier for them to help the People's Armed Forces [FAP] commanded by Goukouni Oueddei in their battle against FAN leader Hissein Habre's supporters. According to information obtained in Paris the Douguia base, which has a runway capable of taking the Libyan Hercules aircraft, is the most forward-based of Tripoli's military installations on Chadian territory.

Since the Libyan offensive in Chad the presence of regular forces under Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's orders in Ndjamena has not increased, contrary to reports from a foreign source. Libyan technical advisers are training units loyal to Boukouni Oueddei in the Chadian capital and only two Libyan commando units each with around 30 men have been located in Ndjamena. However, 2,000 Libyan soldiers and volunteers from several Arab countries which support the Tripoli regime are now massed in the northern Aouzou strip and around Faya-Largeau.

These Libyan forces are equipped mainly with large numbers of Brazilian-made Cascavel tanks, British-designed ferret automatic machine guns and Soviet troop transports. They need a large flow of regular logistic support from Libyan garrisons on the Mediterranean coast.

Before a possible operation to conquer Ndjamena or, more probably, to support FAP units with their heavy equipment, the Libyan troops are at present setting up an intermediate base at Douguia, some 60 km north of the Chadian capital. This base can receive the Hercules transport aircraft (arms, munitions, gasoline, food and troop reinforcements) bought from the United States, but it will probably not be able to receive the Soviet-made Tupolev-22 fighters which the Libyan air force is capable of suing.

The Douguia base has been prepared, if necessary, to receive 2,000 men selected from the garrisons in the north of the country or sent as reinforcements direct from Libya.

According to information gathered in Paris, the FAP units in Ndjamena have considerable amounts of individual and collective weapons: 81-mm French, SOP and U.S. mortars, recoilless 57-mm guns mounted on jeeps, 14.5-mm machine guns mounted in pairs on land rovers, Soviet RPG 7 antitank rocket launchers and multiple rocket launchers (Stalin's organs).

New Developments

LD021105 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

[Philippe Boggio dispatch: "Libyans in Chad"]

[Text] Ndjamena--The war in the Chadian capital has once again changed in appearance. It is no longer colored solely by the desert, by the fratricidal struggle between the men of the north. Since 21 March when Hissein Habre mounted an "armed rebellion," according to his adversaries, against the National Unity Transition Government [GUNT], only the People's Armed Forces [FAP], President Goukouni Oueddei's troops, had been fighting in the city.

It is now the "southern" soldiers of Lieutenant Colonel Kamougue, GUNT vice president, who are occupying the government positions on the frontline of the former presidency, destroyed by the FAN's 120-mm shells. Lieutenant Colonel Kamougue told us Sunday 23 November that he had taken command of the coalition forces in the capital.

The first signs of the change can be seen at the Chari Ferry, which is the only means of crossing from Cameroon to the "government zone" of Farcha, a village on Ndjamena's northwest outskirts. The interminable discussions with the canoe operators on the Cameroon side amid the gasoline barrels, bags, automobiles and ambulances waiting to cross can only succeed if you are dealing with the vice president's men.

In the absence of President Goukouni, at present in Conakry, the government representatives are reticent because "there are too many problems with journalists." Transport Minister Ramat Alkhaly, who was himself preparing to cross the river in a canoe, assured us that he could "do nothing for us."

As soon as we finally arrived in the city, Lieutenant Colonel Kamougue welcomed us, surrounded by "southern" ministers and senior officers from the old Chad army, in the "villa mobutu."

"It is true," he explained, "that I am responsible for coordinating military operations in Ndjamena. The coalition forces' methods are too diverse, and that is giving Hissein Habre an advantage since he is leading one army which obeys one leader."

Although the FAP fighters are courageous and seasoned, the "southern" officers remarked, they know nothing about the position warfare into which the Ndjamena conflict has sunk. They fall back after an attack, often because they have not been given fresh supplies of ammunition. The FAN can therefore recapture a villa or administrative building lost the previous day without having to fire a shot.

Since mid-October the Chad Armed Forces [CAF], trained by the French army, have replaced the FAP elements on the front "in order to launch a new offensive against the strong bases."

Division of Tasks

So what has happened to the bulk of Goukouni Oueddei's troops? Officially they are still stationed at Farcha, theoretically under the coordinating vice president's supreme command. "You will see them in action if there is an attack," we were assured. Meanwhile a division of tasks seems to be emerging, despite the difficulty in obtaining reliable information in Ndjamena: the FAP seem to be in action in the far north of the capital, essentially on the access roads and on the main road to Abeche, a city in the northeast which is still being used as a FAN supply base. They are apparently also occupying cities in Borkou, Ennedi and Tibesti--Chad's northern provinces--and forward positions in the center of the country. According to some reports obtained in Kousseri, a Cameroon border village where observers and diplomats have taken refuge, this division of tasks could, however, conceal "a degree of exhaustion" in the FAP over the past 3 months. One rumor, which obviously cannot be checked, states that Goukouni Oueddei may have lost up to 40 percent of his troops stationed in the capital either in the fighting or through desertion.

"U.S. Fable"

According to some people their move northward could be seen as an attempt to cut off access to Douguia, which is situated 60 km from the capital, where the Pentagon believes it has detected the presence of more than 3,000 Libyan Islamic legionaries. Lieutenant Colonel Kamougue showed some irritation on this subject. The "U.S. fable," as the "southern" officers call it, is irritating him. "Nobody has seen these Libyans in Chad," the vice president explained to us. "All I can tell you is that we have asked for material aid from that country since the other governments are doing nothing to help us. I have not heard talk of anything else."

[Question] What about the Tupolev-22 fighter-bomber which bombed FAN positions in the capital at the beginning of the month?

[Answer] It is a mysterious ally. We do not know who is sending it to us.

[Question] What about the Chinook helicopters which are transferring the CAF to the north?

[Answer] I do not bother to find out who is piloting those helicopters. I merely ask the government for a helicopter. [Answer ends]

Moreover Lieutenant Colonel Kamougue does not know whether--as has been rumored--the FAN have captured some 10 Libyan soldiers. "How can they be recognized?" Nor does he know whether an agreement was signed between Chad and Libya in June. "I was in Paris and when I returned I had not time to discuss things with the president."

With the support of these invisible Libyans, whose presence is nonetheless confirmed by other sources, fighting is continuing in the capital with machinegun and heavy artillery fire, although the shooting is not as intensive as it was in spring. An average of 15 seriously wounded people arrive each evening at the two field hospitals which have been set up in Cameroon.

Ruined Site

We were able to tour the "government" positions. In some sectors, near the post office or along the river, the adversaries are dug in less than 100 meters apart. Hissein Habre's snipers, armed with French MAS 36 rifles, wait for hours in a tree or behind the ruins of a wall for the shadow of a CAF soldier to appear. A FAN group has been surrounded for 2 days in the old Sudan Embassy. The government forces may take a week to oust them. "The use of light artillery is very difficult," an officer told us, "because the two armies are fighting in very limited space and we are in danger of shelling our own positions."

The city is unrecognizable. All the downtown administrative buildings have been partly destroyed by heavy artillery. The Place de l'Independance is now nothing more than a huge area pockmarked with holes. All that is left of the cathedral is the facade. When the antiaircraft guns are not pulverizing the houses, the fighters on both sides are digging routes through gardens, enabling them to avoid the streets.

Since last weekend the CAF have been systematically machinegunning the river at night to prevent Hissein Habre's canoes from crossing, since he too has a point of access on the Cameroon side. This is a dangerous operation: as soon as a boat leaves the Kousseri bank a 12.7-mm machinegun, whose "impregnable" emplacement the CAF officers proudly showed us, opens up. Tracer bullets disappear over the lagoon, which flows into the Chari. If the moonlight is not good enough to show up the target, the sentries send up flares and the gunner can adjust his aim just as in an exercise.

PRESIDENT SENGHOR INTERVIEWED ON TALKS WITH KING HASSAN

LD291604 Rabat MAP in English 1211 GMT 29 Nov 80

In a statement to Moroccan News Agency MAP, President Senghor said he had very cordial talks with King Hassan II of Morocco. The talks, he added, centered on the Arab-Israeli conflict and the invasion of Chad by the Libyan army.

Concerning the Arab-Israeli conflict, President Senghor affirmed that "slow progress is being made in spite of all." He precised that during the socialist international congress held in Madrid from November 13 to 16, he met with PLO representative Mr. Sertani and Israeli opposition leader Shimon Peres. From these meetings, went on President Senghor, "I learned that we are moving towards what I call 'dynamic compromise.' I would say no more, but I have talked about it at length with His Majesty King Hassan II after having talked about it to President Al-Sadat of Egypt."

Concerning the Libyan invasion of Chad, President Senghor said it was related to massacres of black Mauritanian prisoners by the "Polisario."

Affirming that Mr. Hissan Habre of the Armed Forces of the North (FAN) will sign the cease-fire agreement already signed by Chadian President Goukouni Ouddei, President Senghor indicated that the committee on Chad will meet at the level of heads of state to spare Chad from being colonized by Libya.

He expressed optimism and faith in the future because "there is an awakening of African conscience, and unity of thought and action between (?north and) south of the Sahara. I believe more than ever in Afro-Arab cooperation. This is the essence of the talks I had with His Majesty King Hassan II."

He then added that "You Moroccans have the great chance of having one of the most cultivated and lucid heads of state."

Speaking of the works of the Academy of the Kingdom of Morocco, the Senegalese president underlined that the second session did some very good work, adding that "I have the impression that Morocco is setting a cultural model valid not only for the Maghreb but for black Africa as well."

ANGOLA, CAPE VERDE COOPERATION AGREEMENT RATIFIED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 4 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] Yesterday in Luanda there was an exchange of documents ratifying the general cooperative agreement existing between the People's Republic of Angola and the Republic of Cape Verde, signed on 15 December 1976 by the late Comrade President Agostinho Neto and Cape Verdean President Aristides Pereira.

The agreement calls for cooperation in the political, cultural, economic, financial, judicial, technical, scientific, transportation, communications, diplomatic, consular and security areas.

Angolan Minister of Foreign Affairs Paulo Teixeira Jorge, who represented our country at the ceremony, said that this event exemplified greater cooperation in those areas between the People's Republic of Angola and the Republic of Cape Verde.

Paulo Jorge also stated that this agreement reflects the confidence both countries have in wanting to increase and harmonize bilateral relations in order to find ways and means to extend those cooperative relations which will be of mutual advantage.

Joaquim Pedro Silva, plenipotentiary ambassador from that friendly country to Angola, pointed out that the implementation of the ratified agreement will indicate a higher level inthe traditional relations existing between our two peoples and countries. He also emphasized that those relations had been molded by the common struggle of the two vanguard parties, the MPLA-Labor Party and the PAIGC. He also stressed the dynamic role played by the joint commission which had made the arrangement for sectorial cooperation possible, especially in the commercial and cultural areas.

OFFICIAL STRESSES UNITY BETWEEN ANGOLA, MOZAMBIQUE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 28 Oct 80 pp 1, 4

[Excerpts] In the reciprocal analyses of our development processes, we concluded that our options have been transformed into specific actions. Today Angola and Mozambique are raising high the banner of socialism, certain that our workers have found their respective vanguards, which will lead them to more profound achievements." According to Lucio Lara, member of the MPLA-Labor Party Political Bureau, this was one of the conclusions reached during the Maputo meeting between the vanguard party of the Angolan people and the FRELIMO Party.

Lucio Lara, who led an MPLA-Labor Party delegation to Mozambique, made the statements to the national news media yesterday, moments before returning to his country.

The Angolan high official reported that the objectives of his 4-day visit to our country have been achieved, within the framework of strengthening the existing relations of friendship and cooperation between the two parties, which are currently facing new problems as the governing parties of the respective states.

"In effect, the delegation came with the mission of reaffirming the close cooperation between the two parties and analyzing the present status of their relations, which are excellent," Lara said. He continued: "We can say that the labor class here in Mozambique is asserting itself more and more as the bulwark of the socialist revolution in southern Africa."

Regarding the way in which the MPLA-Labor Party views the efforts being developed to find a peaceful solution to the Namibian problem, Lara declared that since the days of the late President Agostinho Neto, Angola had done everything in its power to bring about a peaceful solution. "However," he added, "we are familiar with the nature of imperialism, of which the South African regime is a specific and mo savage expression. Nonetheless, we are convinced that the basic steps have been taken and that a prospect for a peaceful solution is appearing on the horizon, welcomed by our people with great enthusiasm."

Seeing the Angolan delegation off at the Mavalane international airport were Marcelino dos Santos, member of the Permanent Political Committee of the FRELIMO-Party Central Committee, and Julio Carrilho, of the FRELIMO Central Committee.

BRIEFS

PORTUGUESE AFRICA LEADERS MEETING--Luanda, 2 Dec (AFP)--The heads of state of Cape Verde, Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe and Angola began their meeting on Tuesday to examine the situation created by the 14 November coup in Bissau. Mr Aristides Pereira, president of Cape Verde and secretary general of the PAIGC (African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde); Mr Samora Machel, president of Mozambique; Mr Manuel Pinto da Costa, president of Sao Tome and Principe, and Mr Jose Eduardo Dos Santos, president of Angola are taking part in this meeting. According to ANGOP (Angola news agency), Mr Eduardo Dos Santos, in opening the meeting, regretted the absence of Guinea-Bissau at this meeting and added that Angola is sure that it did not shut the door on the Republic of Guinea-Bissau. The Angolan president also recalled the friendly relations which unite the Portuguese-speaking African countries and emphasized that the Luanda meeting does not constitute interference in the internal affairs of a foreign country. Mr Jose Eduardo Dos Santos added, however, that events in Guinea-Bissau affect the life of the PAIGC and can have repercussions on relations between the former Portuguese colonies in Africa. Finally, he expressed the hope that in spite of everything, unity of these countries will be strengthened. [Text] [AB022050 Paris AFP in French 1733 GMT 2 Dec 80]

SA OFFER TO MAURITIUS--Port Louis--South Africa has undertaken to give credit guarantees worth R14-million to Mauritius to help mend its cyclone-torn economy. But, because of pressure by the leader of the opposition marxist Mouvement Militant Mauricien, Mr Paul Berenger, the offer has not yet been accepted by the Mauritian Government. The credit guarantees "without strings" were proposed by South Africa to finance a housing programme for middle-class people and to promote the tea industry. DOS SANTOS COMMENTS ON DIFFICULT LIVING CONDITIONS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Nov 80 pp 1, 12

[Address by President Jose Eduardo dos Santos to the people of the Funda Commune, date not given]

[Excerpts] Dear comrades and countrymen of Funda Commune:

About 6 months ago, we paid a visit to Luanda Province, and at that time we planned to come here to talk with the comrades and to bring up some ideas that might enable us to solve some of the problems that concern you.

Unhappily, we had to cut our visit short. We went directly from Icolo and Bengo to Luanda, without stopping by Funda. The comrade minister of agriculture has told me that the comrades were unhappy at that time, and obviously rightly so. We had urgent problems to solve, so we had to return to Luanda, but we also said on that occasion that we would find a better opportunity to come here and learn about the problems, not only here in Funda Commune but throughout this area, and here we are. We are here after visits to various locations in the two provinces.

I can say that we are satisfied. We are satisfied because we saw comrades working, working under difficult conditions. We encountered comrades and countrymen who had come from the central and southern part of the country, who are working here with virtually no place to live. They all sleep in a large dormitory. They have problems getting food, but they work. They are aware that their work is the most important thing.

We also observed that there are enthusiastic comrades, who want to take part in national reconstruction. We have seen comrades enrolled in the OMA [Organization of Angolan Women], Pioneers enrolled in the OPA [Organization of Angolan Pioneers] and, above all, everywhere we visited, we saw that the people greeted us with great affection, great happiness and attentiveness, and this pleased us. I would like right now to thank all the comrades, all the countrymen who organized this warm reception for me and the delegation accompanying me. I would like to thank the people of Funda Commune, who received us very warmly, who waited many hours here in the sun to meet with us and have this conversation with us.

We know how the people of Luanda have suffered for lack of water, especially in the city of Luanda. There are areas today where the water supply is insufficient and has been insufficient for a long time, for many years. This is unhealthy for our people, who cannot prepare their food properly, who cannot--well, take care of their hygiene. We are going to make every effort to see that this project is completed by December. The comrades in the Building Ministry initially planned to complete this project by March or April 1981. We think we should have more workers, to move up the schedule, and we have made this decision. We have requested a bid from the Cuban enterprise, we are hiring more workers, and now the comrades say that the project will be completed this December, and then Luanda can see its water problem solved, for the most part. It will be more satisfactorily resolved when we complete the water towers that are also to be constructed in the city of Luanda, two towers that will make it possible for potable water to reach the top floors of the highest buildings in the city of Luanda.

So we are making this effort, and we are sure we will be successful, and one more problem will be resolved. During this year we have partially solved the public transportation problem in Luanda Province. Now we are working to solve the water problem.

Another serious problem is that of nutrition. Every morning we visit some poultry firms, enterprises that produce eggs and chickens in Luanda Province. These companies have some problems that are easy to solve; others are not so easy. For example, there is a feed shortage; we have to solve this problem. There is the shortage of water. We are also visiting agricultural enterprises. We observe some difficulties there, too, and the major problem we notice is the diet and living conditions of the workers. This means we must take some steps to feed the farm workers better and to improve their living conditions, to improve the housing these workers live in. After we solve these problems, we are sure we can increase production here, in tomatoes, potatoes, beans, onions and even cassava. This will largely resolve many of our nutrition problems.

We Cannot Solve Everything Alone

Now, after this state visit, we are going to have some meetings with the comrade officials to find the quickest way to solve these problems we are confronting. I am sure that the comrades of Funda Commune and other municipios and communes that we have visited will give us their help. We are the leaders. Our mission is to guide, to draft the guidelines to resolve the problems, but we cannot solve everything by ourselves. We draw up the guidelines, and someone has to carry them out. Someone has to go into the field to put in practice the guidelines drafted and passed on by the party and government. These are the comrades who are going to put them in practice, who are going to work in the agricultural enterprises, the poultry concerns and so on. Well, some of them are here among you, and I hope the comrades understand the effort we are making, and that they will support us, that they will help us revolve the problems experienced by all of us, felt by all of us.

Well, I will not go on any longer. I think this first meeting was more for us to get to know each other. This is the first time I have come here as president of the party and the republic. I have been here before as a member of the Political Bureau or the Central Committee and the government, so it was natural that the comrades would want to see me personally and see the comrade members of the Central Committee and Political Bureau who accompany me. We are already acquainted.

Long live the MPLA-Labor Party!

Long live the People's Republic of Angola!

Long live the Central Committee of the MPLA-Labor Party!

Long live the Funda Commune!

Long live the Angolan People, from Cabinda to Cunene, one people, one nation!

FAILURE TO ACHIEVE MANUFACTURING GOALS DISCUSSED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Nov 80 p 1

[Editorial: "A Task for All the People"]

[Text] Of the basic documents to be submitted to the First Extraordinary Party Congress, which are now being discussed among the rank and file, the analysis of activity in the manufacturing industry merits special attention, since this is an important segment of the sector defined as decisive for the country's economic development, and is responsible--along with agriculture and animal husbandry--for the production of many of the most basic consumer needs of our people.

In the critical judgment we must make of the activity developed by the manufacturing industry in the 3-year period from 1978 to 1980, the characteristics of the active labor force and the stage of development of awareness in the labor class, as the most representative group in this important sector of the nation's economy, represent an influential factor.

Suffering generally from the same shortages and problems that confront most of the other sectors of the nation's life, the three branches of the manufacturing industry (food and light and heavy industry) have not succeeded in achieving the goals established by the first congress in 1977 for the succeeding 3-year period. In effect, with regard to the economic goals established for the manufacturing industry, the overall rate of achievement averages around 50 percent, with rates of 45, 66 and 40 percent for the food industry, light industry and heavy industry, respectively.

Still, we cannot fail to note the success of the Angolan workers in recovering most of the industrial park abandoned by the colonialists, including units destroyed by sabotage. This immediately suggests to us that there is an appreciable revolutionary awareness in the labor class, specifically in the manufacturing industry sector.

Let us look at some examples of the activity in this sector during the 3-year period, and also at the major problems that have not been overcome and that are responsible, to some extent, for the low rates of production and productivity that have been recorded.

In the food sector, during the 3-year period it was necessary to resort to importing raw materials, since domestic agricultural and livestock production was not even sufficient for direct consumption, and these sectors began to deliver surpluses to industry only this year. Even resorting to imports, in 1979 the corn and wheat mills did not exceed 60 and 49 percent, respectively, of the goals established at the first congress. These low production levels had noticeable repercussions in the bread baking industry. Struggling with internal problems as well, the industry could not satisfy consumer needs. There were also low production rates for vegetable oils, margarine, sausages and preserved meats, fruits and vegetables.

As for beers and beverages, production levels in 1979 were 41 and 51 percent, respectively, of the goals set, while the sugar industry, where large investments were applied to mechanize production, did not reach 50 percent of the 65,000-70,000-ton goal set by the congress.

Results were no better in light industry, which also depends on imported raw materials. Despite the reorganization effort throughout the 3-year period and the existence of a plan to build new units (of which only Africa Textil in Benguela was completed), production in this sector remained at very low levels, necessitating imports of large quantities of finished products, specifically textiles, shoes and clothing.

With respect to heavy industry, major efforts during the 3-year period were concentrated on measures to organize, recover and maintain various units.

We note, for its strategic importance, the Alto Catumbela cellulose plant, recovered in July of this year and already showing excellent prospects for production. Encouraging results were also obtained in the manufacture of dry cells, batteries and tires. Results were not significant in metallurgy and metalworking, with low production rates for machetes, hoes and plow-shares, indispensable tools for agricultural development.

It is also noted that very little was accomplished in the subsector of Freezing and Refrigeration, where we have not recovered or maintained most of the existing facilities and have not gone beyond the planning stage for the installation of a new national cold storage network.

Of the major problems and difficulties that held back development in the sector during the 3-year period, one on the greatest was the irregular supply of raw materials, both domestic and imported. Weak domestic production and unsatisfactory coordination and functioning in the import sector caused numerous disruptions in supply, leading to frequent and rather prolonged idleness in some industrial units. Other unsolved problems in the 3-year period included poor maintenance, lack of technical assistance and irregular supplies of parts, fuels and lubricants.

The shortage of cadres, namely technicians and administrators, was one reason for the lack of organization and control of production and poor enlistment and management of the labor force, estimated at about 57,000 workers, including 22,500 in the food industry, 19,500 in light industry and 14,500 in heavy industry.

Of the manufacturing units, 72 percent are state run, 3 percent are mixed, and 25 percent are private; they are responsible for 50, 14 and 30 percent, respectively, of the overall volume of production in the first 6 months of this year.

Thus we see it as undeniable that during the 3-year period from 1978 to 1980, despite efforts in various areas, the manufacturing industry did not meet most of the guidelines of the first congress, which will generally remain in effect for the next 5-year period.

It is feasible to meet these guidelines within a short time.

MAJOR RESOURCES DEVOTED TO MILITARY GOALS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 29 Oct 80 p 1

[Text] We are a little more than a month away from the convening of the First Extraordinary MPLA-Labor Party Congress, the major purpose of which is to analyze the degree to which the guidelines established in 1977 by the First MPLA Congress have been met, with respect to the social and economic development of the People's Republic of Angola [RPA].

The meeting of the highest body of the party will also take up other questions related to party life, in particular, and to the life of the country, namely, appointments to vacancies on the Central Committee, analysis of the political military situation and the social composition of party and government structures, as well as the international situation, with particular emphasis on the situation prevailing in southern Africa.

The success of this impressive undertaking requires that all the Angolan people take part, particularly the party membership, whose responsibility it is to discuss, analyze and present opinions on the documents to be submitted to the congress, so that the resolutions to be approved will truly reflect the wishes of the party rank and file, and hence the interests of the country's working classes.

In effect, an analytical accounting of the 3-year period from 1978 to 1980 requires an in-depth study of the causes and effects of factors that, in one way or another, have influenced the development of the country.

To this end, the various preparatory committees and subcommittees began several months ago to compile studies, conducted by sector of activity, interpreting the reports and analyses ofthe respective ministries, and these studies will constitute the basic documents for discussion by the party members.

Although economic problems will constitute the major topic of the first extraordinary party congress, the delegates should give no less attention to discussion of other important issues, such as the defense and security of the RPA.

In effect, ever since independence, because of our geographic location, our socialist option and the resulting practice of proletarian internationalism, as well as the Western powers' support [to South Africa] and a certain "passivity" by some African countries, the People's Republic of Angola has been coping with an undeclared war, imposed by the most backward regime known to mankind: apartheid South Africa.

For this reason, the need to defend at all costs our sovereignty and territorial integrity has meant that a large part of our economic and financial resources, as well as a large segment of the active labor force, namely our youth, have been diverted from other sectors.

Our economic and financial resources are basically used to strengthen our defense capability, to modernize and expand our technical-military means and to raise the technical-military, political and cultural level of the troops, to improve the level of their combat training.

For the reasons cited above, and also to maintain constant and intensive combat against internal reactionaries and puppets, the state security and domestic order sectors absorb a considerable part of our resources.

Hence, it is extremely important to examine to what extent the willing sacrifices by the nation as a whole have led to a proportional improvement in the organization of our defense and security forces.

To discover the mistakes, to examine the causes and find the solutions to improve the situation are thus pressing tasks for all the members of these structures and agencies, and particularly for the party members themselves, so that the First Extraordinary Party Congress can outline the necessary directives.

Since the defense of our sovereignty, our territorial integrity and our independence as a people and as a nation is also a form of struggle for our economic independence, let us work to see that this set of problems is suitably resolved.

Let us, therefore, contribute actively to see that the First Extraordinary Party Congress drafts the indispensable guidelines for the resolution of the people's problems.

REPORTS OF SWAPO ABANDONMENT DENIED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Nov 80 p 8

[Text] Lisbon, 1 Nov--The Angolan news agency ANGOP denied today that the Angolan authorities are prepared to meet with the South Africans to discuss future relations between the two countries.

"It is unthinkable that, in exchange for understandings with the South African Government, Angola would stoop so low as to betray those who have taken up arms, with harsh and painful sacrifice, to gain their right to independence," the agency declared, and described the reports about the negotiations as a "provocation against the Angolan people."

Such provocation, ANGOP said, is not beyond certain Portuguese political forces that have never concealed their distaste for the free and independent Angolan state, nor their support for the puppet Savimbi, who has long provided their militia in Angola.

According to the reports, Angola would withdraw its military support to SWAPO, Namibia's liberation movement, and South Africa would stop supporting the puppet group UNITA.

The contacts between the Angolan and South African authorities were said to have been reported to ANOP [Portuguese News Agency] by a diplomatic source in Bissau. Later, both the Cape Verde Ministry of Foreign Affairs (some contacts were said to have taken place on Ilha do Sal) and the Angolan Embassy in Lisbon denied the report, which was also disseminated by the Portuguese news agency. For their part, the South African authorities refused to make any comment whatever on the matter.

DOS SANTOS WARNS CABIRIANS AGAINST TRIBALISM, SUPERSTITION

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 2 Nov 80 p 3

[Speech by President Jose Eduardo dos Santos during visit to Cabiri commune: date not given]

[Excerpts] During a meeting with the people of Cabiri, Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos gave the following extemporaneous speech:

We have come here for a short visit. Why have we come?

First, because we wanted to know the comrades who are working here, on this Cabiri project. Second, because we wanted to have direct, personal contact with all the people of the Cabiri commune.

But first, I should like to offer you my personal revolutionary greetings and the greetings of our Central Committee.

Well, comrades, I have the impression that we are all pleased. The entire delegation accompanying me is quite content, for we see broad smiles on the faces of our comrades; we see much gaiety.

We Are All Angolans

We are all Angolans; and now, in all parts of Angola, we find a mixture of individuals. In Luanda we have comrades and fellow countrymen who have come from all parts of Angola. We have married couples; some are from Luanda, men who have married women from Cabinda, Huambo, Benguela or Mexico. We have women, some from Cunene, who have married men from Luanda, Malanje and the like. What I am saying is that we are all one big family. A large and single family: the Angolan family.

I do not know if our Cabiri comrades agree with this. I have the impression that they do. Here live comrades from Huambo; can it be that comrades who have come from Huambo or other parts of the central and southern areas cannot marry with the ladies of Cabiri? (They can, the crowd answered.)

Then why was it said here that there was a president for just the comrades of Cabiri and another president for the comrades of Huambo?

I believe that those words should not be spoken by any of us. We are all Angolans. Comrades from Huambo and other central and southern provinces who meet here in Cabiri are in their own country. In like manner, if Cabiri comrades should go to Benguela, Huambo, Cunene or Cabinda tomorrow, they will also be in their own country. Therefore, Angola is for all Angolans, from Cabinda to Cunene. We must not be divided for tribal or racial differences. Quite the contrary, we must live ever more united, and our unity must be molded in work.

I am quite pleased to hear from the comrade minister of agriculture that Huambo comrades are working in Cabiri, working a lot. I believe that this example should be followed by our Cabiri comrades, since, after all, the comrades who came from Huambo are working, producing potatoes and tomatoes in Cabiri, and everyone eats those items. Would it be fair for some to work and others to take advantage of that labor? (No, the crowd answered.) Would it be fair for those who do not work to eat? (No, the crowd answers again.) Therefore, those who do not work should not eat. (They should not eat, the local people shouted.) Does this mean that the Cabiri comrades do not like to eat?

Comrades, I believe that we should all work. For if we all work together, there will be greater production and we shall all be able to eat more and better. And afterwards, we shall be able to live better, for there will be a division of labor. Some will work in agriculture, others in construction; still others will work in the mechanical trade repairing cars or planes. Others will work as teachers in the schools. But all of us, each in his own place, must work. That is the only way we shall be able to develop and escape from the misery we are now experiencing. We can see before us comrades who are ill-clothed. Certainly, there are comrades who have little money with which to buy food. We must all work; each one must contribute; and, gradually, if we all work, we shall overcome our present difficulties. That is why I wanted to make this appeal to our Cabiri comrades--to strengthen our national unity, the friendship we all share.

To Carry Out the Guidelines of Our Immortal Leader

Moreover, our immortal leader, the late President Agostinho Neto, left us many guidelines, many lessons. From the time of his youth, when he began the struggle for our national independence, he made it clear that it was necessary to combat tribalism, racism and regionalism. All Angolans, from Cabinda to Cunene, must appear as a single bloc, a single people, a single nation, for we still have many enemies. If we tell ourselves that the Huambo comrades have another president and the Moxico comrades still another, we shall be making it possible for our enemies, those who have weapons and come from South Africa, to penetrate our territory and occupy our country. For divided, we shall not be able to fight enemies who are very strong.

In addition, this year we are making preparations for the establishment of the Popular Assembly. I have the impression that the Cabiri comrades will also be taking part in the election of provincial deputies--the individuals who were chosen by the comrades themselves to represent the people of Luanda Province at the Provincial Assembly--to defend the interests of that people.

In the Provincial Assembly we have comrades from all parts of the country. And those comrades will not defend just the interests of the area in which they were born. If a Cabiri comrade was a deputy, would he defend only the affairs of the Cabiri people? (No, the crowd answered.) If the South Africans got in but did not penetrate as far as Cabiri, would the Cabiri comrade not go to fight because the enemy had not reached Cabiri? (No, the crowd answered.)

Therefore, I am strongly insisting on this point, for we have been concerned upon learning that our comrades here have tried to become disunited. We have been greatly concerned. And now we feel much better, for this problem has finally been resolved in a friendly manner, among citizens of a single country, a single nation. And if we continue to work in this way, that is, to discuss our problems and arrive at mutually acceptable solutions, we shall be strengthening our country and, especially, our party.

We Alone Must Resolve Our Problems

We must not think that all our problems will be resolved by others. We alone must resolve those problems. And one of the most serious is that of fetishism. Some comrades believe in fetishism; others do not. And we must be very careful, for those who believe in fetishism often mistrust other comrades, other fellow countrymen who have done nothing. When someone dies in their house, they immediately think the neighbor is responsible, that the neighbor has cast a spell. At times the neighbor is not to be blamed.

Therefore, we must be very careful. Then too, there are soothsayers or witch doctors to whom sick people sometimes go for help. And those individuals give the names of persons living in the commune among the people as being sorcerers. But sometimes those fellow citizens are not sorcerers. The names might have been given through intrigue or jealousy. Therefore, we must be very careful not to let ourselves become divided. In my opinion, when a person is sick, it is better to look for a nurse or doctor first. And, in addition, we know of many beneficial herbs. It is always possible to go to a witch doctor to discover the identity of a sorcerer. The best witch doctors are those who do not reveal the identity of a sorcerer but who give us herbs, or the solutions prepared with those herbs, to treat our illness. Therefore, I am asking our comrades to be very cautious, very careful not to create enemies among ourselves, among the inhabitants of a given commune. We must all be brothers and sisters, all friends, and strengthen our national unity.

A final bit of advice I should like to give our comrades. There are persons here who are older than I. But even though I am young, I am aware of the responsibility you comrades have given me, and I should therefore like to offer some advice.

I believe that it would be well for the party comrades here to mix more with the workers engaged on this project, particularly with those who have come from other parts of the country. We have our traditional dances, our traditional songs. Why not, on weekends or at least periodically, organize cultural meetings in which we can demonstrate our dances and sing our songs? Songs which speak of national unity, of our struggle, of our difficulties in resolving the people's problems. We have young people, pioneers among us. Many must know how to play soccer or engage in other activities. The comrades might think about establishing arenas here where various sporting events can be held.

DOS SANTOS REPUDIATES 'BLACK SOCIALISM' THEORY

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 29 Oct 80 p 3

[Text of address by President Eduardo dos Santos, in Menongue, date not given]

[Excerpts] During his visit to Kuando-Kubango Province, Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, president of the MPLA-Labor Party and the People's Republic of Angola, presided over a popular rally in 1 August Square, in the city of Menongue. On that occasion he delivered the following address:

Comrade members of the Political Bureau,
Comrade members of the Central Committee,
Comrade members of the government,
Comrade coordinators of the party Provincial Committee and Provincial Commission of Kuando-Kubango,
Comrade officials of the party and government in the province,
Beloved comrades and countrymen,

First, I would like to express very sincerely my great pleasure, and that of the delegation accompanying me, at the warm reception shown us on our arrival at the airport.

We have come to the province to carry out a decision of the Revolutionary Council. As the comrades know, our beloved and Immortal Guide, Comrade President Antonio Agostinho Neto, was here in this lovely city about a year ago, leading a very important party and government delegation. During that visit, after our beloved president held several discussions with members of the Executive Commission of the party Central Committee and members of the provincial secretariat, a work program was drafted to resolve the problems of the people in this province. The program was approved by the Central Committee and the Revolutionary Council. We have now been given the responsibility of coming here to see if the central organs, the organs of the central government and our party leadership, have provided the necessary and sufficient support to implement the programs that were established. Now, what idea will we taken away with us?

Just Criticism

After our discussions here, we can verify that only part of the program has been carried out. The central structures of the government, and even of the party, have not given the necessary attention to this province. This is a just criticism, offered by the comrade officials of Kuando-Kubango Province. There are, however, sectors in which something has been accomplished, and we cannot miss this opportunity to congratulate the comrades in the transport sector, who have made every effort to see that the Mocamedes train makes a stop here in Menongue.

We must also pay great homage to the heroic soldiers of our armed forces, that is, the comrades of the FAPLA [Armed Forces for the Popular Liberation of Angola], the comrades in Security and the ODP [People's Defense Organization], who have struggled courageously to defend our people and the integrity of our national soil. We must also give very special emphasis to this aspect of defense and security, in this province above all. The racist South Africans there in Namibia are training puppet gangs; using lies and terrorism, Savimbi is tricking some of our young people into going to Namibia, where they are trained by South Africa, by the soldiers of the racist South African army, which oppresses the heroic people of Namibia. They are giving weapons to these Angolans. They provide transportation and money and make up propaganda for them, and send them into Angola to attack our people.

And then they say they come here to create a "Black Socialist Republic." But the most absurd thing is that South Africa will not allow Namibia to become independent. This black socialism cannot even be established in Namibia, so why would the South Africans allow it to be implanted here? I think our people are intelligent, and understand these lies of the South African lackey Savimbi. In the end, socialism cannot be black or red or white. There is only one socialism, scientific socialism.

On the other hand, if we were to build a black socialism, does this mean we would have to compete with the whites or those of mixed race in our country? What would we do with those Angolans who are white, or of mixed race? Would they have no right to live in their country?

So we say that these are imperialist maneuvers. Savimbi is a lackey of imperialism, and his masters order him to talk this way in Angola, to fool our people. When he speaks of black socialism, he is seeking to divide the people, and we cannot allow our people to be divided. Ever since the MPLA was founded, we have always fought for the unity of the Angolan people, for national unity. To win our independence, we had to unite all Angolans, all Angolan patriots, into a single organization, to fight against Portuguese colonialism. The comrades can see how our party leadership is constituted. They can see how the FAPLA is constituted. We have members of all races. We have members of all the tribes of Angola. We have members with different degrees of culture and education. This is precisely what gives us the strength to resist the enemy aggression. United, we are strong. If we were divided, we would be weak. We cannot allow the imperialist lackeys to divide us, so we must redouble our vigilance, we must improve our defense and security forces, to insure stability, to guarantee the protection of our people and to enable our people to work to resolve their problems.

We were very pleased here when the comrade province officials spoke to us and proposed that we consider Kuxi as the base for the agricultural development of the province. We will take the proposal back to the higher organs of the party and government, and I think the proposal will be approved. Then we will have to make a greater effort to really develop agriculture and animal husbandry in the province.

We cannot think that imports alone will resolve our problems. Today we import many things. We even import tomatoes, and we have already imported cassava flour. Can it be that we cannot produce this in our country? Can it be that we cannot develop our agriculture to produce more corn, cassava, potatoes and rice?

Do the comrades believe we can, or not? (The crowd responded: "We can.") So what is needed? It is essential that we keep in mind that we are [responsible for] ourselves; we are Angolans, and it is up to us to resolve our own problems.

Well, we are studying these problems and we have made some decisions. The major decision is that we must quickly draft an integrated plan to be implemented within 2 years. We are going to mobilize the central agencies to provide support, but the comrades in the province must also engage in production, in the work required to execute this plan. I have noticed the lively enthusiasm in the province. We were in Missombo and were very well received by the people there. In other words, the people stand behind the party and the party is with the people, so we must go forward together and really solve the problems that remain.

Victory Over Puppets and Imperialists

I would like to take this opportunity to express the satisfaction of our Central Committee at the way in which the comrades have prepared and carried out the tasks for the institution of the provincial assembly. We hail this further victory over the puppets and imperialists.

Dear comrades, as I said, we now have our provincial deputies. The deputies are the comrades or countrymen who were selected to present the people's most troublesome and distressing problems to the provincial assembly.

The comrades and countrymen who are deputies must keep well in mind the importance of their mission. They cannot be preoccupied with their personal problems. First of all, they must be concerned with the problems of the community, the problems of the people.

Dear comrades, we do not want the comrades and countrymen who are deputies to think that, now they have been elected to the provincial assembly, they should vie for a better car, a better house or more privileges. This is not the way, comrades!

This is an evil we are experiencing now in our country. Many comrades, when they are appointed to positions of responsibility, put their own concerns first. We want these officials to make the people their first concern. They must make sacrifices, they must expend an effort, they must struggle to improve the living conditions of our people, from Cabinda to Cunene.

I think the comrades of Kuando-Kubango, and particularly in Menongue, recall what Comrade President Agostinho Neto said here: that it is the fundamental interests of the labor and peasant classes that guide our action. Hence, the party members must work diligently to see that, when we choose among the members of the party, we select as leaders those who can insure the continuity of our policy and our revolutionary line, those who will guarantee the building of socialism in Angola.

Let us not forget, comrades, that we have internal enemies. We have the imperialist puppets, organized in armed gangs, but we also have those who pass themselves off as defenders of the people, which they are not. We have individuals who impede the progress of national reconstruction, who are more sympathetic with the petit bourgeois way of life, who perhaps wish to see Angola take a different path, the capitalist path. We must be on guard against the petit bourgeois sectors that do not observe party directives, sectors that we have considered reactionary sectors of the petite bourgeoisie.

And now I would like to end, comrades of Kuando-Kubango Province, by wishing for your very good work, very good health and, above all, for your great effort, so that we may consolidate our national unity and make steady progress in building socialism.

Long live the MPLA-Labor Party!
Long live the People's Republic of Angola!
For People's Power,
The Struggle Continues!
Victory is Certain!

USSR ADVISORS THANKED AT GRADUATION OF OFFICERS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] Huambo (ANGOP)--The fourth Armed Forces Officers Training Course, which began in July in Juambo Province, ended Thursday in this city with a ceremony led by Lt Col Domingos Magalhaes Paiva (Vunda), alternate member of the MPLA-Labor Party Political Bureau and assistant political director of the FAPLA [People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola].

The course, which was attended by many FAPLA majors, was offered pursuant to a resolution of the first MPLA congress, to increase the technical and scientific knowledge of the military cadres to expand the country's political-combative and defense capability.

Lieutenant Colonel Paiva first reviewed the history of the development of the armed forces in Angola. He noted that high-ranking officers should receive good political and combat training so that they can instill conscientious discipline in the troops.

"It is impossible to organize and develop our army without a large number of trained, firm and ready officers," the FAPLA political officer stressed. He added that military cadres must be suitably trained for greater engagement in the tasks of the party and the armed forces in building socialism and in strengthening the country's defense capability.

Paiva said that "to create and consolidate our army, we will need tens of thousands of new men of all social origins, thus realizing the ideal of beloved President Agostinho Neto, who said that "every citizen is, and must necessarily see himself as, a soldier." Paiva added, however, that these new men "must be duly recruited, helped to understand battle phenomena, to complete their training and find their place among the popular masses in the defense of the interests of the classes that endured centuries of exploitation."

Maj Evaristo Domingos Kimba, director of the fourth course for superior officers, read a report informing that, during the course, the program determined by the armed forces leadership was met, as were the standards established by the directorate of the school, and that the students maintained a dedicated attitude and a satisfactory level of discipline.

The report further indicated that, on the basis of the positive results obtained during the course, it can be assumed that the armed forces has a new group of superior officers, equipped to contribute effectively in raising the country's defense capability.

Kimba thanked the Soviet teachers for the selfless way in which they passed on scientific and technical information and their advanced experience in the organization and direction of an armed force.

Attending the ceremony were Lt Col Andre Pitra (Petroff), chief of the Soviet military mission in Angola, and other officials of the party and government in the province.

YOUTH LITERACY BRIGADES IN WAR-TORN AREAS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 31 Oct 80 p 1

[Excerpts] Under the present conditions of our revolution, party initiatives aimed at minimizing some of the principal difficulties still impeding our country's development are extremely important and are becoming increasingly necessary. One of the worst evils standing in the way of a people's march toward the discovery of new horizons is undoubtedly that of illiteracy and all its disastrous consequences, such as alienation and obscurantism. Moreover, keeping the African peoples in that abyss was and continues to be the principal weapon of imperialism aimed at destroying our national unity.

A serious shortage of teachers is continuing to be felt throughout the country, particularly in the provinces where there are still tensions of war incited against us by international imperialism through its launching point, the racist Republic of South Africa.

The JMPLA [Youth Movement of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola], in a praiseworthy and exemplary initiative, has established a brigade of militant youths from that party organization, called Commandant Dangereux Youth Teaching Brigade. This brigade of young people, aged 16 to 21 years, is composed of more than 300 members scattered throughout the provinces of Kuando-Kubango, Cunene, Bie and Moxico. They come from the provinces of Luanda, Uije, Malanje and others, and their mission is to teach elementary pupils from the first, second and third grades and simultaneously teach adults how to read and write. In Kuando-Kubango Province 80 youths have been sent to the province's cities and communes, demonstrating their support for the watchword, "Teaching Is a Revolutionary Duty," in the certainty that through our own efforts we shall wrest our country from the state of underdevelopment and cultural backwardness to which it was subjected by colonialism for almost 5 centuries of unbridled exploitation.

In fact, this altruistic iniciative by the JMPLA received a public eulogy by Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos, chairman of the party and president of the republic, when he asserted in a meeting in Menongue with a delegation of 80 brigade members sent into Kuando-Kubango that iniciatives of that kind should be encouraged, since they indeed put into practice our watchword, "Teaching Is a Revolutionary Duty."

More than anything else, the JMPLA has, in fact, shown that it is able to guarantee a continuation of the justness of the party's political line just as it knew how to participate in the defense of our territorial integrity against the invaders and mercenaries sent by the imperialists and against the Angolan puppets in the pay of multinationals and South African racists. However, it is now important for party and government organizations to take advantage of the good will of our youth, giving them the necessary support and encouragement inasmuch as the mission of that youth is among the most honorable that the country has ever known. The youth are willing to agree to any sacrifice; it is really important--we wish to emphasize--to give them the proper support.

BIE AGRICULTURAL COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT SHOWS PROGRESS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 28 Oct 80 p 2

> [Excerpt] "The cooperative movement in Bie Province is gradually assuming a relevant weight in the political, social and economic development of the province," declared Ernesto Chicucume, provincial director of the DNACA [National Directorate for Development of Agricultural Cooperativism], in a recent interview with CAMPO magazine.

According to the official, the peasants of Bie Province are showing strong support for collective work, accompanied by an increasingly strong cooperative movement, thanks to intensive organizational work by the provincial structures of the DNACA, assisted by the party, government and mass organizations.

Initiated in 1977, the associative movement in the province now has about 300 associations, with over 34,000 members, producing rice, corn and beans on a collective area of over 700 hectares.

"Their work shows high productivity rates, but to achieve higher profits and a larger volume of production, we are seeking to divide the member peasants into brigades of 30. The brigades are divided into subgroups of six individuals, whose tasks are rationally distributed," Chicucume said, in reference to the work system.

"These measures," he added, "have enabled us to eliminate any lack of work discipline almost entirely, since they enable those responsible for the association to exercise greater control, and so we have good results. For example, the corn crop was previously too small to meet expenses, let alone to distribute among the associates. Today, the situation is quite different."

Government support to this large-scale movement is vast. In effect, the government agencies have provided great material support to the rural workers in setting up the infrastructures for the actual operation, supplying a range of products from hoes and spades to manure, seed and fertilizers.

Regarding the marketing of surplus production from the cooperatives, Chicucume stressed that "although the provincial office of ENCODIPA [National Company for Purchase and Distribution of Agricultural Products] has difficulties moving the products, because of the large workload of the agency, the situation is being overcome, thanks to the high degree of organization that is increasingly evident in the area of cooperative development."

PARTIAL TRADE UNION, SECTORIAL ACTIVITY SURVEY REPORTED

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 9 Nov 80 pp 27-29

[Article by Jose Wolo Kossi: "Developing Our National Resources Through Our Own Efforts"]

[Text] Day by day, the workers of Angola are gradually heightening their consciousness with a view to fulfilling the tasks of national reconstruction.

The National Union of Angolan Workers (UNTA) has already organized three socialist emulation plans since independence. The first was carried out in 40 production units; the second was carried out in 80 national enterprises; and the current plan--a more comprehensive plan--involves 375 work centers. Approximately 100,000 workers are participating in this important plan for strengthening the national economy.

In carrying out their tasks, the workers are facing difficulties of various kinds, notably the shortage of raw materials and spare parts and problems with respect to energy and fuel. None of this, however, makes it impossible for the workers to fulfill their tasks in connection with the effort to increase production. Despite the innumerable deficiencies, an average production of 87 and 17 percent of the production goals established by UNTA for the second stage of socialist emulation (the month of June) was achieved, compared to 81 and 13 percent, respectively, in the first stage.

The third emulation plan was initiated in February of this year. A total of 170 workers were considered and enrolled, and 92 enterprises distinguished themselves as well. In the course of the same month 220 days of volunteer work was performed, with the participation of 20,390 workers.

The Agostinho Neto Column, which comprises a large number of workers, recently rebuilt the city of Mongua, which had been destroyed by the South African racists.

The participation of the workers in the fish products processing industry is also well known. The production of dried and semicured fish was the object of special commendation by the First Congress of the MPLA.

Production in this sector increased from 19,000 tons in 1977 to approximately 23,000 tons in 1979. Restoration of production in this sector has been slow: production in 1979 was 54 percent of the figure for 1973. The first half of the current year recorded a relative improvement over the same period of the foregoing years, with production at 41 percent of the figure for the year 1973.

The fishing sector comprises approximately 20,000 workers. This represents an increase of 30 percent over the figure for 1976--the year the sector was reactivated--and 67 percent of the total number of workers during the colonial period. Fifty-two percent are employed in catching the fish and in ship repair. Sixty-four percent are associated with the state-owned sector; 7.5 percent with the private sector; 1.2 percent with the cooperatives. There are 5,000 artisanal fishermen, of which total only 7 percent are organized into cooperatives.

The fishing sector is striving to implement the directives of the First Congress. Two centers were accordingly created: a retraining center in Luanda and a vocational training center in Mocamedes. The Helder Neto Intermediate Institute was created by the minister of education; it is training specialized cadres for the fishing fleet and for the onshore supporting activities. A total of 108 scholarship holders went abroad to take intermediate, basic and advanced courses of study.

In the agricultural and stock raising sector the production of cassava, fruits and vegetables, and sweet potatoes increased during the 3-year period from 1978 to 1980. The outlook for this year is for a substantial increase over the figures for last year. Based on the data and forecasts for the second half of the year this will be possible, even though production is still below the goals established by the First Congress.

The corn milling industry is also functioning. Its production last year, for example, achieved 60 percent of the goal of 80,000-90,000 tons that had been established. An increase of 18 percent over the 1979 production figure is forecast. For the period from the First Congress through 1979 the increase was 105 percent, and a 142 percent increase by the end of the current year is forecast.

Taken together, these illustrative data provide a general idea of the participation of the Angolan workers in the process of national reconstruction, and testify to the effort by the workers to carry out the policies and directives of the MPLA-Labor Party.

REPORT ON AGRICULTURAL COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT GIVEN

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 9 Nov 80 pp 28-29

[Article by Ambrosio Clemente: "Agricultural Cooperatives: A Leap Forward"]

[Text] The most profound transformation in the domain of agricultural cooperation took place this year with the creation of the provincial farmers' unions--higher forms of agricultural cooperative organization--in Malange, Uige (northern Angola) and Kuanza Sul: Angolan regions which are basically agricultural.

This new impetus provided within the sphere of agricultural cooperation by the farm population has as its object the introduction, within the rural regions, of new production relationships--relationships that do not involve the exploitation of man by man.

This experience (the first in Angola) is an outgrowth of the steady increase in the level of organization of the farmers' associations and cooperatives already in existence in the nation and opens up prospects for a rapid--and more certain--development of agriculture in the coming years by means of agricultural collectivization.

The 3,521 farmers' associations and the 296 first-class agricultural production cooperatives scattered throughout the nation, and the three farmers' unions that have been organized, make it possible today for the Angolan farm population gradually to achieve higher indices of production and productivity in agriculture and thereby to minimize the multiple socioeconomic problems which the nation faces in this phase of national reconstruction.

The fact that Angola boasts farmers' associations that have more than 417,815 members and first-class cooperatives that have more than 50,811 members is an indication that the cooperative movement has made substantial progress just in the 5 years since the proclamation of independence.

Relying mainly on their own experience, the Angolan farmers--supported by various government entities--are orienting their activities basically toward the goal of making agriculture capable of supporting Angolan industry, which is categorized as the decisive factor in national development.

The cooperative movement is, moreover, closely linked to the literacy campaign now in progress. Thousands of Angolan farmers are learning to read and write in worker-farmer elementary schools that have been created throughout the national territory, so that in the rural regions they will be able to utilize modern labor techniques, perfect their own organization and increase their administrative and managerial abilities.

"There can be no socialist revolution without the farm population." This tenet--a legacy of the late President Agostinho Neto--has served as a source of inspiration for all the action designed to improve and consolidate the cooperative movement in the rural regions, where the overwhelming majority of the Angolan people live.

In Angola special attention is given to the rural regions because of the fact that the decision made by the Angolan people to build a socialist state requires that there be a profound change in the economy--a change brought about through planned economic development based on agriculture.

POOR RESULTS IN FORESTRY--A general forestry sector meeting between ENPROF and the National Directorate for Preservation of Nature began yesterday in Luanda, with a ceremony presided over by Manuel Pedro Pacavira, minister of agriculture and member of the party's Central Committee. Opening the meeting, the agriculture minister first referred to the low rate of implementation of plans and guidelines drafted for this sector, owing to the "Let it be" spirit that still prevails among some officials. "Very few steps have been taken to improve the forestry sector. Our forests are still being decimated by the charcoal dealers, and there is not serious attempt by the monitors to control them," the official declared. Pacavira urged the participants to exercise strict supervision to protect the country's environment. The agriculture minister stressed that the reserve parks are in the same condition. Their present status is a good indication of how little effort has been expended in this area. "In environmental protection," he added, "we are witnessing a power struggle, which is simply a reflection of the petit bourgeois pretentions, lack of discipline and disorganization in this sector." In conclusion, the official praised Graciano Mande, vice minister of agriculture for forest resources, for the dynamic way in which he has carried out the tasks assigned to him. Germano Gomes, vice minister of agriculture, attended the opening session. [Excerpts] [Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 1 Nov 80 p 2] 6362

ZAIRE PROVINCE HEALTH PROBLEMS--Mbanza Congo—In a recent rally in this city, Mendes de Carvalho, minister of health and alternate member of the party Central Committee, called the health situation in Zaire Province "lamentable and disturbing." The official led a Health Ministry delegation to Zaire Province to observe at first hand the difficulties the people in that area are experiencing, specifically with regard to health and social welfare. During the popular rally, Carvalho pointed out that when some of our health specialists refuse to work in the provinces, it is because they lack understanding, and he added that his ministry will make every effort to alleviate the health problems in Zaire Province. Regarding the inaction of some provincial officials in carrying out party directives, the health minister said this situation is because of a lack of political courage. Sometimes, he said, the fault does not originate in central structures, but lies with the local structures themselves. During his stay in Zaire, Minister Carvalho met with all the provincial health officials. They discussed the health sector in some detail, the central topic being trypanosomiasis, commonly known as sleeping sickness, which severely affects the municipios of Mbanza Congo, Noqui and Cuimba. The official also met with delegates of ministries stationed in the province and with local health workers, with whom he examined the major problems impeding the development of tasks inherent to national reconstruction in this province. FOUR DEATH SENTENCES CONFIRMED--Luanda, 4 Dec (AFP)--It was learned on Thursday that the Luanda Appeal Tribunal has confirmed the death sentences pronounced last Monday by the session of the People's Revolutionary Tribunal in Kuito (Bie Province, Central Angola) against four members of UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola], which is headed by Jonas Savimbi. Romeu Braga Cangombe, Gabriel Braga Sapato, Paulino Nganza and Jorge Manuel are therefore to be shot. Three of the six other members of UNITA who were judged at the same time were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 12 to 16 years, while the other three were acquitted. In passing its judgement, the Appeal Tribunal made special reference to a statement made by Angolan President Jose Eduardo Dos Santos on 11 November 1979 in which he said that the revolution can never be defended without repression, without exercising democratic revolutionary dictatorship against saboteurs, bandits and counter-revolutionaries. These appeal sentences come at a time when four other members of UNITA network in Lobito (Benguela Province, Atlantic Coast) have been on trial since Wednesday. They are charged with planting bombs on the train that runs between Lobito and Benguela, in a freezer manufacturing factory and in several hotels in Benguela, as well as in a service station in Caala (near Huambo). FRENCH LOAN TO CAR--France has granted a loan of 1 billion CFA francs to the Central African Republic. This loan, which was granted by the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation, is for the acquisition of tankers for the transportation of liquid fuels from Kinshasa and Brazzaville. It was also agreed in principle that a French aid of 450 million CFA francs be granted the CAR to buy equipment for the maintenance of the Berberati-Carnot-Baoro road, measuring 202 kilometers. Other agreements were reached for the granting of more loans to cover different development projects in the country: 25 million CFA for the modernization of Bangui-Mpoko airport and 580 million for the rehabilitation and development of river transport. It has been agreed that the rehabilitation of the telephone network in the Bangui area be postponed and finally a consensus was reached on the need to give periodical technical assistance to cater to the training of Central African cadres. POLITICAL ACTIVITY INABILITY--Sangui, Central African Republic, 1 Dec (AFP)--President David Dacko said Sunday night that the Central African Republic was not yet ripe for political and electoral activity. Speaking on the anniversary of the founding of the republic, he appealed to all those who may have political ambitions of one kind or another to be patient, control their appetites, and wait for the proper moment to campaign for votes. Any social or political agitation at the present time would compromise the chances of building a workable democracy and could lead to dictatorship or civil war, Mr Dacko said. He said the government was responsible for setting up democratic institutions, which in turn would draw up the ground rules for political activity. The president said he hoped the country would not fall victim to hegemonic and destabilizing intentions, which are coming to light in Africa in general and in the subregion of Central Africa in particular. AGREEMENTS WITH FRANCE--On the occasion of the official visit to Bangui--from 27 November to 2 December--of Mr Robert Galley, the French minister of cooperation, two agreements were signed on Tuesday between France and the Central African Republic. PROSPECTS FOR CEASE-FIRE REPORTEDLY DIM

AB011027 Paris AFP in English 0715 GMT 1 Dec 80

[Article by Patrick Van Roeckeghem]

[Text] Ndjamena, 1 Dec (AFP)--Gloom outweighed optimism here following the one-sided signing of a cease-fire to end Chad's civil war.

The cease-fire text was negotiated by an Organization of African Unity (OAU) commission in Lome, Togo.

It was signed on Friday by Goukouni Oueddei, president of Chad's transitional government, but was spurned by the other main belligerent, former Defense Minister Hissein Habre, whose armed forces of the north (FAN) are fighting against a coalition of troops backing the president.

Observers here were skeptical that further negotiations could lead Mr Habre to sign the cease-fire before December 15, when shooting is supposed to stop.

The FAN high command was defiant in a broadcast during the weekend, saying it would agree to no cease-fire until President Goukouni condemns Libya's invasion of Chad.

A FAN spokesman said on Sunday that Libyan troops with heavy equipment had taken up positions at the town of Mongo, 450 kilometers (about 300 miles) east of here in central Chad, to reinforce the transitional government's troops and cut FAN units off from their main rear base.

The rebel forces also accused France, the former colonial power in Chad, of plotting with Libya to divide the country into two spheres of influence--the south for France, and the north for neighboring Libya.

A spokesman for the government said the forces supporting President Goukouni were prepared to observe the scheduled cease-fire, but there were also indications of a hardening line if the rebels would not come to the negotiating table.

The Chadian press agency (ATP), which reflects the government's point of view, said on Sunday that from now on, if the rebels refuse to talk, the force of legitimacy will impose a military defeat on them.

And the progovernment daily INFOR-TCHAD editorialized that the transitional regimes conciliatory and responsible attitude is not a sign of weakness, but rather confirms solemnly the desire to respect any step towards restoring peace.

Meanwhile, in the field, some fighting continued during the weekend. Heavy artillery and light automatic fire was heard here intermittently on Saturday and early Sunday morning. Government forces fired on pirogues paddling across the river frontier between Cameroon and Ndjamena districts controlled by the FAN.

The battlelines in the capital did not appear to have changed, however.

In another dispatch, the progovernment press agency, reporting the stationing of four French Jaguar fighter-bombers in the Gabon capital of Libreville on Saturday, accused France on Sunday of reverting to a dead-end policy for Chad.

At Libreville, the French now seem determined to implement their belligerent designs against the Chadian people ATP said.

The agency said that France had been frustrated by the Lagos conference last spring which set up the transitional government and called for the withdrawal of French troops from Chad.

France has never forgiven independent Africa for having shown its political maturity, ATP said.

GOVERNMENT AIDE DENIES LARGE LIBYAN INVOLVEMENT

LD021005 Paris LE MATIN in French 25 Nov 80 p 10

[LE MATIN interview with Chadian Front for Joint Action Foreign Relations Chief Thiam Tidjani: "Scarcely 1,000 Libyan Advisers in Chad, N'Djamena Official Tells LE MATIN"--date and place not given]

[Text] Thiam Tidjani, foreign relations chief of Ahamet Acyl's Front for Joint Action, the most pro-Libyan faction in the coalition formed around Chadian President Goukouni Oueddei, regards the information given by the Pentagon about the presence of 3,000-4,000 Libyan soldiers some 50 km from N'Djamena as "completely unfounded."

Thiam Tidjani: Of course, Libya is giving us considerable aid in the form of food, medicines and equipment. There are also Libyan fighters, several hundred advisers helping us. However, they number less than 1,000. Hissein Habre has Egypt behind him and two Egyptian aircraft land at Abeche Airport every day. He asked for Israeli aid 2 months ago and was granted it. Why should we not appeal for help from Libya? How can anybody blame us for doing so?

LE MATIN: But does Libya not have designs on Chadian territory?

Thiam Tidjani: It is true that Libya is occupying part of our territory--the Aouzou Strip. However, at present the priority is not Aouzou but our country's unity which is being threatened by Hissein Habre; our people's liberation from the neocolonialist yoke which Hissein Habre represents. However, we are jealous of our independence and once the problem of Hissein Habre is settled we will deal with the Aouzou Strip. We are obliged to act in that way.

LE MATIN: Is there a danger of the conflict being internationalized?

Thiam Tidjani: The game which is being played is beyond our control. However, I can tell you that at present there are no East Germans or Palestinians in Chad, as has been claimed. There are only Chadians with Libyan instructors. The Libyan military forces must not be turned into a bugaboo. There are, I think, 35,000 soldiers in al-Qadhdhafi's army and only 5,000 are operational. Libya has always helped us. There are 1.5 million Chadians living in Chad. It is they who, having realized that the country's unity is threatened by Hissein Habre, have come to help us. They have assumed their responsibilities and are fighting energetically at our side after receiving training in Libya.

KAMOUGUE INTERVIEWED ON COUNTRY'S FUTURE STRUCTURE

LD241029 Casablanca LE MATIN in French 14 Nov 80 pp 1, 5

[Apparent excerpt from an unattributed interview with Chad leader Colonel Kamougue published in the "First Edition" of the new "African" Paris daily newspaper LE CONTINENT: "We Have Knocked at the Devil's Door"]

[Text] LE CONTINENT: In your opinion, in what form could Chad become a viable state?

Kamougue: We must admit that our attempt to create a united and centralized Chad has failed. A federation could represent another solution but, in my opinion, this would constitute a grave danger because some of our neighbors would certainly try to entice regions with which they have affinities. A final dismemberment of our country would follow.

A secession--and we have always opposed any secession--would soon lead to the demise of the Chad state.

We believe that the creation of a unitary decentralized state which would let all regions develop in accordance with their wishes is the only possible solution as far as the immediate future is concerned. The south has been accused of seizing power and keeping it for 19 years. We no longer want power; we want to restore peace in the country. We base our judgment on the fact that the "BET" (Bourkou, Ennedi and Tibesti) has been outside the central government's control since 1978. Since 1979, every region has been more or less self-governing. These are facts. Without calling Chad's unity into question, political leaders should be bold enough to create an organization of a kind which would grant power to the inhabitants of respective regions with a view to ensuring their development.

LE CONTINENT: You have just returned from Cairo. What was the purpose of your visit?

Kamougue: I had received information that Egypt was supplying equipment to Hissein Habre through Sudan. My Egyptian interlocutors assued me that Egypt is in no way seeking to intervene in Chad by either sending equipment or in any other manner.

LE CONTINENT: During your visit to Paris you met the minister of cooperation. What was the purpose of the meeting?

Kamougue: As you know, there are now several hundred French people in Chad's southern region. They work for various companies which have continued with their economic activities. Now the economic life which we are trying to sustain could well disappear for lack of resources and bank help. We have renewed our request for the opening of a bank in the south to stop the complete strangulation of our region.

LE CONTINENT: What are the French authorities' views on Libya's entry into Chad territory?

Kamougue: The French authorities' attitude to the Chad conflict is this: they intend to maintain strict neutrality.

LE CONTINENT: Do you not believe that Libyan presence has altered the premises of the problem?

Kamougue: Yes, obviously, but it seems that this has not aroused any special reaction here.

LE CONTINENT: Why has your government asked for Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's forces' intervention?

Kamougue: In Tombalbay's time Chad asked France for help. Today, after knocking at all doors, we have, in fact, been forced to go and knock at the devil's door.

'RECONSTRUCTION' TO BE PUT BEFORE 'DEMOCRACY'

LD021203 Paris LE CONTINENT in French 19 Nov 80 p 2

[Interview with Equatorial Guinea President Teodoro Obiang Nguema Mbasogo by Farida Moha in Paris: "Political Divergences are Incompatible with National Reconstruction"; date not given]

[Excerpt] [Obiang] "Our country has been ruined by the former regime and national reconstruction is our most important task. Therefore, we are determined to combat any political or ideological divergence. It is impossible to do two things at one and the same time--rebuild the country and establish democracy."

The problem of political exiles, who remain numerous in Europe and Africa, rather appears to surprise President Obiang. "We have launched," he stated, "a general appeal, inviting all refugees, many of whom are in Spain, Gabon, Cameroon and Nigeria, to return home. We have given all necessary assurances and provided all the necessary facilities to enable these Guineans to participate in the task of national reconstruction. All the Guineans who were abroad have returned hom [as published]. Those who remain abroad have done so either for personal reasons or to study or to work."

Under Spanish colonial administration Equatorial Guinea was completely isolated from the rest of the world. No information leaked through a "curtain of silence" which existed for many years. The dictator Nguema's regime increased its isolation even further and contributed to its gradual immuring.

Foreign governments were no longer represented there, and controls carried out by the security services discouraged even the boldest travelers. The country is now gradually emerging from its isolation and lethargy. The head of state had embarked on tours of foreign countries. His official visit to France has followed similar visits to Spain and Morocco. He seems confident and has described the results of his 4-day working visit to Paris as excellent. A certain delay occurred in the implementation of cooperation agreements signed in November 1979 but, he said, "our concern was soon dispelled." Hitherto the country's main supplier and customer was Spain, because language and cultural links have drawn the two countries together. The joint communique published in Paris emphasizes "a strengthening of relations between the two countries." France has decided to finance the building of a hydroelectric power station and will back and support the country's efforts aimed at reconstruction.

However, the private visit which the head of state, accompanied by a large delegation, is to pay to Germany indicates a desire to pursue an even more obviously open-door policy. Some encouraging signs with respect to oil prospecting represent a considerable advantage for Malabo.

"We are ready to cooperate with any country in the oil sphere," Colonel Obiang told us. "We have signed agreements with France and Spain providing for oil prospecting, and we have received proposals from the United States. As for oil exploitation, we are waiting for EEC experts to prepare a law on which they are now working."

Relations between Equatorial Guinea and other African countries are being gradually normalized. Relations with Gabon, where many emigres lived, are excellent, the head of state told us. African countries have been supporting Equatorial Guinea's efforts aimed at national revival, and Equatorial Guinea is an OAU member. The country has established economic cooperation with Gabon, Nigeria, Morocco, Guinea and Cameroon. With reference to recent events in Guinea-Bissau, President Obiang stated that "one of the principles of my foreign policy is noninterference in the domestic affairs of other countries."

PAPERS VIEW ECONOMIC SITUATION, THREAT OF INSTABILITY

AB031658 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Press review]

[Excerpt] The PEOPLE'S EVENING NEWS describes the revised prices of certain commodities announced by the Prices and Incomes Board as an exercise in futility in view of the empty shelves in the stores. The paper thinks the board is not being realistic since goods must be available before prices are fixed. It is the opinion of the paper that governments since 1966 have used wrong methods in their attempts to solve the country's social and economic problems. The EVENING NEWS calls on the government to adopt more positive approaches to solve the present economic mess.

On the topical issue of the devaluation of the cedi, the EVENING NEWS thinks the government should be firm and resist any pressure from foreign financial institutions which use devaluation as a base to grant Ghana loans. The paper recalls that any time the currency is devalued, the government loses its grip on the market and it brings unpleasant consequences to the government and country as a whole. The EVENING NEWS observes that as a result of current rumors of an impending devaluation, prices of the few things have already started shooting up. The paper urges the government to dispel these rumors.

Writing under the heading "Coups in Ghana," the BELIEVER shares the view that nobody in Ghana would want to see a coup d'etat any more. The paper however observes that whenever a coup takes place, it is the political and economic developmental patterns of the country that are the ultimate cause. These developments are characterized by a deterioration in the social standing in all sections of national life. The BELIEVER attributes such causes to the recent coups in Guinea-Bissau and Upper Volta and thinks Ghana could take the same (?process) if conditions remain as they are.

The paper notes that despite the PNP's [People's National Party] campaign promises of having people with proven ability, the party had to rely on outsiders for key ministerial positions. The BELIEVER sees this as an indication that the PNP cannot fulfill its promises without outside help. The BELIEVER thinks the recent cabinet reshuffle is a portrayal of political immaturity and the 2-year agricultural program a failure. The paper therefore says that in order to gain stability and credibility, Dr Limann should portray dynamism and resourcefulness in the handling of national affairs, because a hungry population is an angry one.

In its second editorial, the BELIEVER comments on President Limann's disclosures on the circumstances surrounding Flight Lieutenant Rawlings' visit to Libya. The paper thinks the allegations made by the president are of such a serious nature that if there is indeed evidence to support them, the president should not keep it to himself. The BELIEVER is of the view that when Rawlings was invited to Libya, it was no secret when he returned. It was also made public. There should be no noise about it. The people are hungry, says the BELIEVER, and want to know how they will be fed. This should be the first priority of the Limann administration instead of indulging in words which do not interest the people.

LIMANN'S PROMISE 'FROM WORDS TO ACTION' PRAISED

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 20 Nov 80 p 2

[Editorial]

[Text]

PRESIDENT Limann appears to be a different man. Some African Heads of State are noted for their sensitivity to criticisms — especially when they border on their poor performances.

The Government announced a two-year agricultural programme somewhere along the line; the Government realised there was big difference between statements made on platforms at rallies, and the practicability of the statements.

Now we are told it is no more a two-year programme but a short-term one.

Then came the amorphous cutlasses imported from China. Not only were the cutlasses too heavy to lift, they were unsuitable for anything related to agriculture.

We thought that was a lesson, learnt and never to be learnt again. But we were soon to be told that one hundred out of a number of fishing nets imported into the country were highly unsuitable for local fishing.

So all along, as the President rightly said, we had been content with WORDS not ACTION. We are happy that the President has himself realised the short comings of his Ministers, Principal Secretaries and other officers as far as the agricultural programme goes.

We are again happy that he has come out with a pledge to the nation that he has moved from words to action. We tell him, however, that the movement from words to action should not only take place within the agricultural sector. All sectors need this movement which is long overdue.

NORTHERN MINISTER SETTLES ETHNIC GROUP VIOLENCE

AB031605 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Newsreel]

[Excerpts] Newsreel now throws light on the recent settlement of the conflict between the Gonjahs and the Bators reached after 3 hours of talks between the two groups and the northern regional minister, Alhadji Haruna. Due to transportation and communication difficulties, correspondent Peter (Kurba) has now only been able to come through with this report:

The conflict erupted 3 weeks ago when the Gonjahs, the traditional occupants of the area, called on the Bators, who travelled from the Volta region, to find out why they disobeyed to give part of their fish catch to the Gonjah chiefs, as demanded by custom. This call was on several occasions turned down, with the messenger of the last message beaten up and wounded with gunshots from the Bators. This took place in the Salaga District and exchange of fire left several hundreds wounded and many others killed with their residences burned.

Prior to the 3 hours of talk between the two factions at Damango, the northern regional minister, Alhadji Haruna, addressed the settlement Durbar. He said the government is saddened with the confrontation and explained that he had to step in because of reports that the Gonjah chiefs are further preparing a general mobilization of their forces to attack the Bator settlers along the Volta Lake extending from Makango in eastern Gonjah to Buipe and Bamboi in the west. He said the customary law provides and protects the rights of a citizen and also has provisions for breaches of custom. In a rather mournful voice, the regional minister advised the two sides to settle their disputes at the right forum since he was not there to apportion blame.

[Begin Haruna recording] Sovereign nations with greater coercive or resisting powers than our traditional communities have often submitted their claims to the jurisdiction of the international court, and there should be no reason why our people should not be able to do likewise, that is, to submit their grievances in such matters to the government or the courts for arbitration. Settlement of differences by the force of arms is now outmoded in our present time. We are under the rule of law, and all our actions must be governed by law.

I am here this morning not to apportion blame but confer with you, the chiefs, as to how to avoid the recurrence of such an unpleasant situation. At this point, however, I would like to remind the chiefs and people of the Gonjah traditional area that Ghana remains one united country notwithstanding its ethnic and tribal diversities. Her people have the right of free movement from one end to the other, either in search of jobs or in search of gainful economic activities. These are freedoms guaranteed by our constitution. [End recording]

Alhadji Haruna also advised the chiefs to protect the lives of all settlers within their jurisdiction, just as the Gonjahs elsewhere are protected. He also advised the Bators to conform to and respect the laid down norms and customs pertaining to their area of settlement. The regional minister noted that the government's attention is immediately diverted and distracted from its peaceful planning for development if any part of the country is engulfed in conflicts and skirmishes.

FIRESTONE EXPATRIATE, LOCAL MANAGEMENT DISPUTE

Clash Averted

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 11 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

[Text] A timely intervention of the Member of Parliament for Wassa West, Mr Ronald Atta-Kesson, has averted what could have been a bloody clash between the top expatriate management and the senior Ghanaian management staff of the Firestone (Ghana) Limited factory of Bonsaso.

Reliable sources told the Ghana News Agency reporters who went to the factory at the weekend that since the Ghanaians called for a probe into the distribution of tyres by the company, they had become a target of undue threats and victimization by the expatriate management staff.

The sources said the top management of the company last week issued dismissal letters to some active members of the Ghanaian Senior Staff Association for allegedly absenting themselves from duty "although they were given excuse duty by the company's doctor after reporting sick."

On October 9, the Senior Staff Association, calling for the probe into the distribution of tyres produced by the company, alleged that their poor conditions of service had not only adversely affected morale but had led to low productivity.

They alleged that in the past the factory produced 38,000 tyres a month but at present could hardly produce 24,000.

They also called for the dissolution of the company's board of directors since only one Ghanaian was serving on it "to the detriment of the nation."

Following Mr Atta-Kesson's intervention, the top management staff had withdrawn all the dismissal and suspension letters to avert an attack on the management by the workers wielding cudgles and stones.

Meanwhile, the production of lorry tyres from the factory has dropped from 1,400 a day to only 300.

This was disclosed by the Senior Management Staff Association of Firestone and Ghana Rubber Estates Limited (GREL) at an executive emergency meeting at Bonsaso at the weekend.

Clash Denied

[Text] The Senior Ghanaian Management Staff Association of the Firestone (Ghana) Limited Tyre Factory at Bonsaso in the Western Region has categorically denied the eruption of any clash between its members and the top expatriate management.

The association also denied the reported intervention of Mr Roland Atta Kesson, Member of Parliament for Wassa West, which allegedly averted a clash between members of the association and the expatriate management.

Denial

Mr S.K. [word blurred] chairman of the association, who came to the Times office here yesterday with the denial was emphatic that there had never been any clash between the association and the expatriate management.

On Mr Attah Kesson's recent visit to the factory, the chairman indicated that he went there in his own capacity to settle a misunderstanding between some of the senior Ghanaian management staff and the expatriate production manager, Mr Ken Gerhadt.

REPORT CLARIFIES VICE PRESIDENT SELECTION PROCESS

AB261314 Abidjan Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] Henceforth, the vice president of the Republic of Ivory Coast will be chosen by the president of the republic, and it is this vice president who by right will become president of the republic in the event of the post becoming vacant or of absolute hindrance of the president. This is contained in a bill adopted by our parliamentarians last night. Thus, in the event of the post of president becoming vacant as a result of death, resignation or absolute hindrance, it is no longer the speaker of the National Assembly who by right will become president of the republic, but a vice president who will be chosen by the president and who will be elected at the same time as the head of state. Why was this new measure taken? Following is the explanation given by the government's commissioner, Mr Camille Alliali, who presented the bill to the Ivorian parliament:

[Begin recording] New situations have developed in our country's political life which necessitate a new adaptation of our national constitution. The free choice by the people of their representatives at all levels is going to entail the renewal of our institutions, which are organized on the principle of a balance of powers and of the strict separation of the executive, legislative and judicial powers. Since the executive power is retained exclusively by the president of the republic, who is elected by the people, logic demands that his succession should be ensured by a vice president chosen by him. The president, therefore, proposes to solve the problem of the continuity of the executive by deciding that the vice president, chosen by the president of the republic and elected at the same time as he, should by right become president of the republic in the event of the post becoming vacant or of absolute hindrance. That is the purpose of this bill, the effect of whose adoption will be to fully give to our political regime its true image of a democratic presidential regime because it is freely established by the people in accordance with the principle of strict separation of powers. 'LIBERATION ARMY' OFFICER DISCUSSES STRATEGY AGAINST JONATHAN

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 19 Nov 80 p 6

[Text]

A SENIOR officer of the Lesotho Liberation Army (LLA) told the Rand Daily Mail at a secret meeting in the Maluti Mountains this week that the country's Prime Minister, Chief Leabua Jonathan, was "on the run" and it was only a matter of time before his government was overthrown.

The meeting, on the Lesotho border with the Free State, was the first contact between the LLA — the military wing of the opposition Basotholand Congress Party (BCP) — and a South African newspaper.

The political commissar of the LLA, Mr Naleli Ntlama, likened Chief Jonathan to the former Zimbabwe-Rhodesian leader, Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

"He claims to have the support of the people, but if a general election were held, he would be wiped out."

Mr Ntlama said recent hints by Chief Jonathan that he was considering calling elections were attempts to fool his economic backers, who were anxious for a return to democracy.

The LLA was established in 1975 — a year after BCP leaders fled the country because of an abortive coup. It has been responsible in the past years for sporadic attacks on police stations and government forces' patrols.

Mr Ntlama claimed widespread support for the LLA, which, he said, was operating all over Lesotho. He rejected government allegations that the LLA was assisted by the South African Government.

"If we were supported by the South Africans, or any other foreign power, we could crush Jonathan's illegal regime in a matter of hours," he said.

The LLA either bought weapons from private gun runners or "gangsters" and smuggled them into the country, or captured them from government forces, Mr Ntlama said.

The guerrillas operated entirely from bases in Lesotho.

"We are fighting the war on our terms. We attack Jonathan's forces at will. He does not initiate contacts. He even admitted in public recently that he sometimes has to travel by alternate routes to avoid possible LLA ambushes.

"The situation is very different from a year ago when he tried to ignore us and claimed to have wiped out the LLA in a single battle."

Chief Jonathan was in a "no win" situation, Mr Ntlama said — he lacked popular support, and even with the powerful para-military police mobile unit he would eventually be defeated, as had happened to Bishop Muzorewa.

Mr Ntlama slammed BCP members within Lesotho who were talking of reconciliation with Chief Jonathan.

He accused a group, led by Mr Matela Thabane and claiming to be the BCP executive committee, of being "Jonathan's puppets" used in an effort to fragment BCP support.

"In their statements, this group refers to Leabua as 'Prime Minister', which the BCP has never done. He is only the de facto Prime Minister heading an illegal regime."

Mr Ntlama described the group, and other individual BCP officials who have joined the Jonathan Government, as "dissidents", and not leaders of factions of the BCP as sometimes claimed.

The true leader of the BCP was Mr Ntsu Mokhehle, exiled in Zambia, said Mr Ntlama. He was the supreme commander of the LLA, which he had created under the party's constitution in an effort to save the BCP and liberate the country.

GOVERNMENT COMMUNIQUE CALLS FOR GREATER AUSTERITY

AB011356 Paris AFP in French 1026 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Text] Antananarivo, 29 Nov (AFP)--In a communique issued by the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution (FNDR), the Malagasy people have been called upon to accept increased austerity efforts in the national interests in order to attain a self-sufficient, surplus-producing and unalienated national economy.

In this communique broadcast on three occasions since Friday, THE FRONT (supreme political organ of the republic of which the head of state, Mr Didier Ratsiraka is also the president) considers that the economic crisis in Madagascar is connected with the rise in import prices and the fall in export prices.

Coffee production has increased and its export prices have fallen by half, the fall in clove production has deprived the country of 240 million francs, the oil bill has increased by 280 million francs and the rise in imported products has increased by 20 percent on the whole, the communique adds.

THE FRONT has published the following principles: Rely only on your own strength and over-produce. The priority of priorities, the communique goes on, has been given to essential products. The Malagasy people have been called upon to control the distribution of local products, such as meat, sugar, salt and to counter the black market, the fraudulent maneuvers and all kinds of sabotage from the reactionaries and enemies of the revolution.

Mentioning, moreover, the current protest movement in higher institutions, THE FRONT recalls that it is a domain in which the enemies of the revolution are fond of working in order to undermine the morale of the population and that a step towards the final settlement of the problems posed by education is the establishment of regional university centers in each province.

The situation demands personal discipline, solidarity, concern for national interest as against petty rivalries which agitate revolutionary organizations, and cooperation, for the each-for-himself principle is no longer applicable, the FNDR communique concludes.

REAGAN ELECTION DISCUSSED--Saint Denis de la Reunion, 20 Nov (AZAP)--In an interview he gave to the Reunion Island's newspaper, Mr Gaetan Duval, leader of the PMSD [Mauritian Social Democratic Party] said he was convinced that the Republican Party does not limit the Indian Ocean affair to the problem of the Diego Garcia base alone. The Indian Ocean comprises South Africa, Mauritius and Reunion as well. (...) with Reagan, the French and the Americans, who are the representatives and the defenders of the West in this part of the world will be able to act more efficiently, the leader of the PMSD added. According to Mr Duval the placing of the American base in Diego Garcia is irreversible because the Americans continue to reinforce this base. But he feels that Mauritius should benefit more from the consequences in order to develop and equip the island to prevent it from becoming communist and at the same time to strengthen Diego Garcia's position. In regard to South Africa Mr Duval feels that Ronald Reagan's victory is very important for that country. He further asserts that for South Africa to continue to exist and to conserve its strength it must make concessions especially in the normalization of the situation of the blacks. HOUSING CONSTRUCTION 'BREAKTHROUGH' TO EASE SHORTAGE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Oct 80 p 1

[Excerpts] Beira, 24 Oct—To ease the housing crisis in Manica Province, a pilot project has been in progress in the city of Chimoio since the beginning of this year, aimed at increasing the real property of the APIE [Administration of State Lands and Property]. In its initial phase, the project consists in building 30 dwelling units of the light prefabricated type, also known as "Sandino."

The project was awarded to the Construtora Integral de Manica, and involves an investment of 9 million meticals. According to our information, the homes are the result of a technological innovation in civil construction, one which has proved to be highly practical, simple and economical, both with respect to the materials used and the construction itself. The project is expected to be continued next year, with construction of 60 more of these dwelling units, 90 in all, which will also be provided with their own infrastructures, such as sewers, water lines, sidewalks and other basic requirements.

"The Provincial Directorate of Housing and Public Works in Manica is aware that this is the boldest venture undertaken to date in the capital of Manica Province after national independence, in the area of civil construction and environmental improvement. By its nature, and considering its size and scope, the project should greatly alter the appearance and contribute decisively to the social and economic development of a vast area of the city, which is still filled with poorly alined, unfit dwellings," we were told by an individual connected with the Manica Province Directorate of Housing and Public Works.

EXPANDED MEDICAL COOPERATION WITH ITALY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 8 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] A delegation from the Health Sector of the Department of International Cooperation, of the Italian Foreign Affairs Ministry, retured to Rome last Saturday, following a working visit to our country looking to expand medical and health cooperation between the RPM (People's Republic of Mozambique] and Italy.

During its stay in Mozambique, the delegation studied with our Ministry of Health the implementation of a program providing technicians to assist at the Maputo Central Hospital, specifically in pediatrics and gynecology. Pasquale Murino, chief of the delegation, told us they will study ways of assisting a provincial hospital, consistent with our country's needs.

Medical and health cooperation between the RPM and the Republic of Italy began in 1976, when various doctors and health technicians began to come to our country under the provisions of agreements signed between the two governments and, particularly, as a result of the cooperation that has existed between FRELIMO and the Reggio Emilia and Brescia Communes since the time of the armed struggle for liberation. The cooperation is basically in three areas: 1) support to the Maputo Central Hospital; 2) volunteer doctors (18) to serve in the districts, in a medical program for outlying areas in Cabo Delgado, Niassa, Zambezia and Nampula; 3) a cooperation project in the areas of food and water sanitation.

The delegation gave consideration to a new cooperative program, which is already defined for the next 2 years. According to the program, doctors with university accreditation will soon arrive in Mozambique. In addition to operating a clinic in the Maputo Central Hospital, they will also participate in the training of Mozambican cadres at the Eduardo Mondlane University School of Medicine.

FARMS TO PRIVATE SECTOR--Beira (Bureau)--Nine farms located on the outskirts of the capital of Sofala Province have been turned over to the private sector and another two have gone to the cooperative sector, according to data supplied by a source connected with the Agricultural Office of the Executive Council of the city of Beira. With the exodus of their former owners, some of the production units have been abandoned for some time and others have been underused as a result of mismanagement by the individuals who occupied them or by the sectors responsible for keeping them operative and profitable. With assistance and proper guidance, it is expected that these units can soon contribute to supplying the city of Beira with essential products, and could later go into regular production of vegetables, fruits (oranges, bananas and papayas), eggs, chickens, ducks, rabbits, goats and hogs. DPRK WHEAT DONATION--Kim Il-Song, president of the DPRK, recently offered our country a donation of 3,000 tons of wheat to assist the victims of the drought affecting large portions of our country. The offer is in response to the appeal launched by the highest leaders of our party and government to the international community for its help in mitigating the effects of this natural disaster. Since the Permanent Political Committee of the FRELIMO Party Central Committee launched its appeal for assistance to our drought victims, over 2 million meticals have come into the Office of the Governor of Manica, the result of contributions from communities, workers, state and private companies and individuals. It is an example of the way in which national and international solidarity with the disaster victims is growing day by day. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 29 Oct 80 p 1] 6362

FRIENDSHIP WITH USSR--"Our conversations with the Soviet Association of Solidarity and Peace have greatly contributed to strengthening our relations of friendship and cooperation. We also exchanged views with those counterpart associations regarding the development of relations between our associations," reported Abner Sansao Mutemba, director general of the Mozambican Association of Friendship and Solidarity With Peoples [AMASP], in an interview with the national news media. The secretary general was recently in the Soviet Union, leading a delegation of members of the National Secretariat in the AMASP at the invitation of the sister associations in that socialist country. The visit was within the context of strengthening the friendship that has existed between the two peoples since the armed struggle for national liberation. Referring to his discussions with the Soviet associations, the AMASP secretary general reported that, as a result of those contacts, a protocol for mutual cooperation will soon be signed in Maputo, during the visit by a

Soviet delegation to our country, scheduled for 31 October. Mutemba added: "Starting on 31 October, a group of artists from the Ukranian SSR will be in our country for 2 weeks, during which they will perform Russian songs and dances for the public in Maputo and Beira. STATE SECRET SEMINAR--Government cadres at several levels are taking part in a seminar that began yesterday in the nation's capital, a basic objective of which is to organize a system to insure the inviolability of state secrets. The opening session of the conference, the first of its type in the country, was chaired by Jacinto Veloso, president of the Commission for Implementation of State Security. As Veloso explained at the opening session, organizing a system to guarantee the security of state secrets means imposing work methods to reduce the possibility that an enemy of the Mozambican revolution could gain access to a particular type of information. Referring further to the need to protect state secrecy, the high party and government official declared that achievement of this goal is a great responsibility for the directors of sensitive organs or agencies, because if the enemy succeeds in obtaining classified information, he could use it against us. Created last year, the Commission for Implementation of State Security is chaired by the minister of security and comprises representatives of party and government structures and of the mass democratic organizations. Its duties are to submit, for approval of the president of the republic, proposals for bills and other legislative measures and standards pertaining to security, and to supervise the strict observance, by the party, the government and the mass organizations, of the measures adopted for protection of classified information. POSSIBLE COOPERATION WITH INDIA--The areas for cooperation between Mozambique and India are extremely broad. Specific areas of cooperation have already been found in the railway, agricultural, naval construction and navigation fields. Relations between the two countries could be further extended to health, civil construction (in a general way) and other sectors. In summary, these were some of the points noted by Alcantara Santos, minister of ports and surface transportation, who returned to Mozambique yesterday after a working visit to the Republic of India. "India made an offer of rice and medicines for the drought victims in our country," Santos said further, adding that, as a result of this trip to India, a delegation from that Asian nation will visit Mozambique for a joint study of the areas of cooperation and of the forms in which it will be carried out. It is of particular significance that India will attend the Maputo Transportation Conference, to be held soon in our country as a result of the Lusaka meeting. During its stay in India, the Mozambican delegation made contacts in various areas under consideration, namely agriculture, ports and railways and construction. The possibilities were studied for the training of Mozambican cadres in India, and an agreement was signed between the Mozambican and Indian railways. The delegation also visited factories manufacturing locomotives and railway coaches. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Nov 80 p 4] 6362

ITALIAN TRADE UNION DELEGATION--"In our visits to factories and other production centers, we observed great dynamism, enthusiasm and a lively awareness among the Mozambican workers. We were very impressed." So said Pietro Verzelletti, leader of a delegation representing the Italian Federation of Metalworkers. The delegation has been in our country for 12 days at the invitation of the National Commission for Implementation of the Production Councils. Verzelletti said that "Mozambique is the most internationalist country in the world," and that he was impressed with the determination of our people, who have recognized the meaning of the expression: "The struggle continues." His statements were seconded by the other member of the delegation. The Italian Metalworkers Federation signed a cooperation accord with the National Commission for Implementation of the Production Councils in 1979, and this visit to Mozambique is pursuant to that agreement. Within this framework, Mozambican workers will be sent to Italy to attend courses in theoretical and practical training. The above-mentioned course will begin next January in Brescia, in northern Italy. [Excerpts] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 November 80 p 1] 6362

PCP LEADER'S VISIT--Blanqui Teixeira, member of the Political Commission of the PCP Central Committee, arrived in Maputo yesterday. The purpose of his visit here is to hold discussions with the FRELIMO Party leadership within the framework of existing interparty relations, and to analyze issues related to the international revolutionary movement. At the Mavalane International Airport, the PCP officer, who is also Central Committee secretary for party organization, was welcomed by Joaquim Chissano, member of the FRELIMO Party Permanent Political Committee and Central Committee secretary for foreign relations. Also present were PCP representatives in the People's Republic of Mozambique. "When the FRELIMO Party was created, our relations remained as they had traditionally existed, and were even further strengthened, because we feel the FRELIMO Party is our brother party," Teixeira said. The PCP officer added that the victories achieved by the FRELIMO Party and the progress it has made on the path to socialism "are an indisputable confirmation of correct and creative application of Marxism-Leninism to the specific conditions of Mozambique." REACTIONS TO SENGHOR'S DECISION TO RESIGN

Party Leaders' Comments

AB021915 Paris AFP in French 1614 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] Dakar, 2 Dec (AFP)--The imminent resignation of the Senegalese president, Leopold Sedar Senghor, had not as yet been officially announced on Tuesday in Dakar, where it has given rise to sharp reactions from the opposition parties.

After President Senghor's statement, "I am going at the end of the year," published by the French daily LE MONDE on Monday, no official confirmation has been obtained, and none of the Senegalese media--radio, television or the daily newspaper LE SOLEIL--has mentioned it.

Many Senegalese, on hearing the news, mostly through foreign radios, said they were surprised to have received the news in that way. Some regret the departure of the old man (affectionate term in Senegal); others are happy or think it will change nothing.

The youth anticipate new blood in politics with the accession of Mr Abdou Diouf, prime minister, to the high office. According to the constitution, the prime minister automatically becomes president if the latter resigns.

Others also say that the choice of Mr Diouf is a good one, for he already knows the job, having been prime minister for the past 11 years.

Sharper reactions have come from the political parties. Mr Abdoulaye Wade, secretary general of the Senegalese Democratic Party called in a statement to the press for elections under the control of the army. He explains privately that he does not trust the administration, and that is why he called for the army. Mr Wade, whose party holds 17 seats out of the 100 deputies and is the only political party represented at the National Assembly, demanded that all parties be allowed to operate.

For the moment only four parties are authorized to operate: Liberal, Conservative (Mr Wade's party), Socialist (in power) and Marxist, and it is compulsory for them to keep their labels.

Finally, Mr Wade is opposed to the article of the constitution which makes Mr Diouf the heir apparent. The same view is shared by Mr Boubakar Gueye, a lawyer like Mr Wade, former minister, former deputy and leader of the Senegalese Republican Movement, conservative.

In an interview with AFP, Mr Gueye said: President Senghor, who enjoys a lot of prestige abroad for his intellectual balance and his seriousness, thinks his people are still immature because he has not entrusted them with choosing his successor, as he allowed them to choose himself five times in 20 years. He did not think about the Senegalese people's reaction, nor that of his own party and that of God. It is also very annoying that 6 million Senegalese should learn of the news from foreign media.

Finally, Mr Majhemout Diop, leader of the African Party for Independence, the fourth legal party, (Marxist) told AFP: the time has come for popular forces to set up a strong, well structured and well managed front capable if not of winning victory now, at least of constituting counterbalance that could block the way to blind repression and the voting of (?doubtful), unpopular and antiworker laws.

A roundtable conference of all opposition parties, legal or illegal, is expected to take place in Dakar on 13 December, it was learned from opposition circles.

'LE SOLEIL' Confirms Decision

AB041748 Paris AFP in French 1143 GMT 4 Dec 80

[Text] Dakar, 4 Dec (AFP)--President Leopold Sedar Senghor of Senegal will give up his functions as the head of state at the end of the month of December, the government-oriented Dakar daily newspaper LE SOLEIL confirmed on Thursday.

In a six-column banner headline in large black characters underlined in red, LE SOLEIL announces to the Senegalese people: President Senghor Departs. Under this title, a large photo of the Senegalese head of state at the tribune of the National Assembly is featured with the shadow of his future successor, Mr Abdou Diouf, now prime minister, behind him.

Mr Senghor had wanted to announce his decision in his traditional 31 December message to the nation. But, LE SOLEIL explains, through the indiscretion of the French daily newspaper LE MONDE, with one of whose contributors the head of state held a conversation not meant for publication as an official declaration, the Senegalese president was forced to confirm the decision now.

Mr Abdou Diouf will take the oath of office immediately after the resignation of Mr Senghor, the Dakar newspaper continues. Since the revision of the constitution in 1976, it is the prime minister who succeeds the head of state, in case he resigns, to complete the later's normal term of office. This term comes to an end in April, 1983.

However Mr Leopold Sedar Senghor, who has been the Senegalese head of state since 1960, will remain at the head of the ruling socialist party, which he will represent at international and inter-African socialist meetings.

Soon after his resignation, Mr Senghor will leave for a few weeks' rest, thus leaving the new president to constitute his team and to organize his work.

Senegal is widowed, writes the director general of LE SOLEIL, Mr Bara Diouf, who stressed that Mr Senghor, the first African head of state to hand over power freely, has established the foundations of a new philosophy of power.

Here, people assassinate to live long in power, he writes; there, the elections are falsified; elsewhere, armed and bloody coups d'etat are organized; but here, he is telling us simply that one must learn to leave the table without returning.

LE SOLEIL praises the capacity to renounce, the ability to desanctify the honors and functions of President Senghor, who, it says has constructed a strong and stable nation, endowed with a multiparty democracy and a spirit of tolerance.

The big question, writes Mr Bara Diouf, the great challenge that the people of all continents are throwing at us is to know whether the lesson has been well assimilated.

Evoking the great task awaiting Mr Abdou Diouf, the prime minister and successor, the paper adds: here he is face to face with history; he has to assume the most difficult heritage at a terrible and uncertain time. Can he count on the assistance and the support of all our fellow countrymen to stand the test and win?

WORKERS IN FRANCE--Dakar, 2 Dec (AFP)--Senegal and France have signed an agreement under which Senegalese immigrant workers in France are to be offered job training as an inducement to go home. There are about 30,000 Senegalese workers in France, which is responding to growing unemployment by trying to reduce the number of foreigners in jobs there. Under the agreement, Senegalese workers who want to return are to be trained in fields that will allow them to fit more easily into the economy of their home country. Many of the Senegalese in France work in unskilled occupations. An informal working group is to meet soon in Paris to examine the conditions that will be offered Senegalese immigrants to return, an official statement said here after a meeting of the French and Senegalese delegations. PRESS COMMENT ON IMPLICATIONS OF REAGAN ELECTION

'THE STAR' Editorial

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 8 Nov 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Right On"]

[Text]

ONE of Mr Reagan's policy directions is of immediate interest to South Africa. His administration, says the president-elect, will play down the human rights line that was such a feature of American foreign policy under Jimmy Carter. Human rights — shorthand for the basic freedoms of the individual against the State — are of course a most desirable objective to work for. A country which prizes them highly, such as the United States, is entitled to expect the rest of the world to do likewise. It can even use political leverage to spread its moral example.

Unless that leverage is both effective and determined, however — and consistent, as Mr Reagan points out — the policy tends to rebound. The human rights rhetoric had little noticeable effect on a hard case like Russia. And even with a somewhat more malleable subject like South Africa, the effect of constant needling was to produce more irritation than results.

The West is rightly concerned about apartheid and its daily violations of individual rights. We trust it will continue to make its views known to Pretoria, through various appropriate means — but as a pitch conducive to communication, receptiveness and hard bargaining over realities.

'DIE BURGER' Comment

Pretoria SOUTH AFRICAN DIGEST in English 14 Nov 80 pp 20-21

[Translation of 'DIE BURGER' editorial: "Mr Reagan and South Africa"]

[Text]

It is possible that South Africa will get on better with the Reagan administration. But it is not at all certain. Moreover, what has happened in the United States now is not as important to South Africa as what is happening and is going to happen here.

The Carter administration, in its approach to South Africa and Africa as a whole, created the impression that it did not want to see reason. It made it an aim to ascribe what it called credibility to Africa and for this purpose it did everything in its power to oblige the Black States in this part of the world, also in their feud against South Africa. Whether this brought about anything tangible is to be doubted. Nothing that has happened up till now has created the impression that the Carter administration has gained friends for the United States in Black Africa who would stand by it in unfavourable circumstances — rather the opposite. A striking example is the way in which Nigeria with its oil only the other day tried to blackmail the United States to force it into further action against South Africa.

This extortion will not lessen when Mr Reagan is in power. It could even become worse and United States dependence on Nigerian oil could even make it necessary for the new regime to take account of the demands of this country and other black states in Africa, even if it is not quite as indulgent.

One area where the Reagan administration could be expected to act differently from the Carter administration is the Soviet Union's attempts to suck Africa into its sphere of influence. The Carter administration did little to counter this; the Reagan administration, reinforced by the changes in congress, could exert itself more strongly.

At this moment one can only speculate over the details of the stand which the new regime will take towards South Africa. It would be foolish, however, to expect a basic change, and moreover, it is not something on which South Africa should place its hopes. Even if the United States should get a government overflowing with good-will towards South Africa, it wouldn't help one iota to solve the problems facing this country.

Only South Africa, all the people of South Africa, can ensure the future of South Africa. If they cannot agree with one another, if they cannot create a basis for orderly co-existence, peace and prosperity, nothing that happens or is done anywhere, can save them. What can be hoped for is that the Reagan administration will be less meddlesome and more prepared to give the people of South Africa an opportunity to work out their own salvation.

'THE CAPE TIMES' Comment

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 17 Nov 80 p 8

[Editorial: "Reaction to Reagain"]

[Text]

MORE THAN a week after the event, world reaction to Mr Reagan's electoral victory has become clearer. The first reaction was surprise, the surprise shared by the pundits, experts and public-opinion pollsters whose predictions of a neck-and-neck photo-finish were so spectacularly wrong. After the initial shock first impressions have been modifed and the opinion in most countries is that American foreign policy in the next four years will be directed far more from the centre than from any hardline right wing. The announcement of Mr Reagan's advisers has been reassuring. They include men of reputation and quality, unlikely to sacrifice pragmatism to ideology. Senator Jackson, for instance, a possible choice for Secretary of State or Minister of Defence, is a Democrat who has consistently rejected the naive near-isolationism that has weakened the United States.

Lord Carrington, the British Foreign Secretary, expressed widely-held opinion when he said he expected a difference in emphasis but not a revolutionary change in foreign policy. He believes that vigorous statements made in electoral opposition seldom coincide with explicit decisions come to with governmental responsibility. And, as a practical matter, Mr Reagan did not have the ambassadors' secret reports, the sources of expert information and analysis, that must determine explicit national policy. This is not to say that a change of administration, any change, does not introduce an uncertain factor in a world situation that for decades has not been as difficult, dangerous and complicated as it is now.

The Reagan administration faces massive problems. After Afghanistan, Salt II has run into the sands but control of the nuclear horror is still the world's top priority. It has still to be seen whether the Russian response to Mr Reagan's offer of a Salt III will enable something to be saved from the wreck. The initial failure of the Madrid conference on the Helsinki treaty to get off the ground — although there are now some signs that it may be doing so — was a setback to what remains of detente. What is to be done about the hostages, with two acceptable and two unacceptable conditions stated by the Iranians? Can the Camp David process for the Middle East survive? Poland has within it the seeds of international tragedy. Mr Reagan's pledge to increase defence spending by five percent could gravely strain the Nato alliance, committed to spending another three percent, but with Britain and West Germany already in difficulties and Belgium, Denmark and Holland having long since given up.

'DIE BURGER' COMMENTS ON TRIBAL CLASHES IN ZIMBABWE

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 12 Nov 80 p 7

[Translation of 'DIE BURGER' editorial 11 November: "Ethnic Clashes"]

[Text]

THE bloody clashes of the past few days in Zimbabwe between Zipra and Zanla supporters offer no reason for malicious joy among South Africans. But it does serve to emphasize a new certain African truth that is too easily ignored, by super-idealist armchair liberalists.

The outburst in Zimbabwe — almost purely according to ethnic divisions — was not unexpected. All the elements have been there for a long time.

If even highly developed Western countries experience serious problems after a long war in "deprogramming" their ex-soldiers from war machines into law-abiding citizens, how much more difficult would it not be in a country like Zimbabwe? Thousands of black bush-fighters who were taught nothing else but to terrorise and kill, are now herded together with no prospect of work. Add to this that they are still armed to the teeth, and one has a recipe for an explosion, with the tribal friction between the Shonas and the Ndebeles as the natural fuse.

Then there are still those who believe or pretend to believe, that South Africa's problems will be solved by the establishment of a so-called black majority government. Repeatedly it has been emphasised that in this country there is no black majority group, only various minority groups.

Even certain black leaders concede this. Last month the Ciskeian Minister of Agriculture and Forestry told representatives of French Protestant Churches in Paris that in South Africa a black majority simply does not exist. When years ago he was a founder member of the ANC, the election of officials time and again resulted in a deadlock because the Zulus, the Xhosas, the Tswanas, the Sothos etc. all voted only for those nominated from their own tribes. "The ability, leadership qualities or status of the respective candidates were not taken into consideration at all".

As far as Zimbabwe is concerned, South Africans can only hope that matters will not get out of hand irretrievably, for chaos on the northern border would certainly be to the detriment of the southern neighbours as well. In addition, it would almost inevitably lead to a massive white exodus from Zimbabwe, which would only result in that country's reverting to the jungle.

JOHANNESBURG COLORED LEADERS SEEK GREATER ROLE

City Council Membership Issue

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 14 Nov 80 p 5

[Article by Sean O'Connor]

[Text]

THE hotly-contested issue of opening the Johannesburg City Council to members of the Coloured Management Committee (CMC) flared again yesterday, amid new demands that coloureds be given direct participation in the city's decision-making process.

Earlier this week the CMC unanimously voted to press for representation in the council and the right to have a coloured representative at all Johannesburg management committee meetings.

But Mr Francois Oberholzer, Johannesburg's management committee chairman, stuck to his guns yesterday, saying he was not prepared to consider coloured representation in the council.

"I don't believe it would be of benefit to them or to us," he said.

He added that even white city councillors were not permitted to attend Johannesburg management committee meetings unless they applied to be present when a specific item was raised on the agenda.

However, he said, when an issue arose which concerned the coloured community, the matter was immediately referred to the CMC and was not discussed by Johannesburg's decision-makers.

But the vice-chairman of the CMC, Mr Ralph Peffer, said yesterday it was essential that his committee be permitted its own representative at Johannesburg management committee meetings.

At present, Mr Peffer said, their interests were conveyed to the city management committee by the council's director of housing, Mr Mathys Wilsnach.

"Although we have nothing against the individual, his first loyalty must obviously be to the city council — it can't be possible for him to have dual loyalties," Mr Peffer said.

Mr Oberholzer said the coloured management committee, like Johannesburg's management committee, had representation at State Committee meetings and was given an opportunity to make points on issues which concerned it.

At last month's council meeting, Mr Oberholzer lashed out at calls by the opposition councillors for CMC representation in the council, saying the "salvation" of the country was embodied in the local government system, "and each to his own".

If this was not the case, Mr Oberholzer said, "you cannot survive — you will have majorities bullying minorities". And there would be such a degree of friction that the Government would not be able to function efficiently, he said.

His angry outburst in the council was triggered by a speech by Progressive Federal Party councillor, Mrs Janet Levine, who wanted it pieced on record that the PFP found the system of coloured and Indian management committees "iniquitous and unfair".

Protest Against Rent Changes

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 80 p 9

[Text]

The adjustment of rents for council housing schemes from January was totally rejected by Johannesburg's coloured leaders yesterday.

Coloured Management Committee members objected to the fact that they had not been consulted about the rent changes, and had only been sent the revised rents "for information".

They said this was another example of how the city council "rides roughshod over our people" and did not consult CMC leaders before making decisions.

The meeting yesterday was characterised by anger and frustration the way the council's management committee seemed to ignore CMC recommendations and often did not consult coloured leaders.

Leaders were particularly bitter about the fact that the management committee had without consulting the CMC overruled its objections to the sale of business sites in Klipspruit West to the Development and Finance Corporation (formerly the Coloured Development Corporation).

The council approved the sale at its last meeting.

PAPERS DISCUSS TREURNICHT'S VIEW ON COLORED REPRESENTATION

'DIE BURGER' Comment

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 21 Nov 80 p 5

[Translation of 'DIE BURGER' 20 November editorial: "A More Meaningful Dispensation"]

[Text]

ELSEWHERE in this issue we publish a report of a difference between Beeld, sister paper of Die Burger in the north, and Dr A P Treurnicht, leader of the National Party in the Transvaal, with reference to an opinion of Dr H F Verwoerd on the future political rights of the brown people.

In a letter which Dr Verwoerd as prime minister wrote in 1960 to the Australian premier of the time, Sir Robert Menzies, he held out the prospect of direct representation for coloureds in Parliament. Dr Treurnicht's objection is that it "is not a reliable rendering of Dr Verwoerd's standpoint on the matter" and he referred to statements which Dr Verwoerd subsequently made in public.

It is often possible in politics to carry on an entire debate with quotations from the past that are without rhyme or reason. What is, however, significant in this case is what Dr Verwoerd wrote privately in a letter as the political future of the brown people, in sharp contrast to the policy that was pursued in practice at the time.

It is of essential interest to remember that the National Party later abandoned that practice as inadequate. And the road that was followed with the brown people afterwards, also came to a dead end. Nothing came of the high expectations of the Coloured Representative Council, which is a tragedy, for the coloureds might otherwise have progressed much further in the political field.

Who and what were responsible for these failures is not the point now? What is necessary is to search urgently for alternative ways to make provision for white and brown in a common father land. And then it is of more than academic interest what alternative Dr Verwoerd already saw in those days.

But let us go further. Apart from what Dr Verwoerd or anybody else said in the past, South Africa must find answers that are relevant to the present in which it finds itself as well as to the future for which it is inevitably heading. This means another, more meaningful dispensation for brown political rights than anything tried in the past.

Direct representation for the coloureds in Parliament is one such possibility. After all, it is unthinkable and unrealistic to expect that the President's Council will not consider this possibility with the greatest earnestness.

'THE CAPE TIMES' Comment

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 21 Nov 80 p 10

[Editorial: "Nationalist Quarrel"]

[Text]

THE HOSTILITIES which have broken out in the National Party of the Transvaal appear to be in deadly earnest. The struggle is complex and subtle with all kinds of rivalries and undercurrents. But it is the question of coloured political rights which could bring matters to a head in the new year, once the President's Council has made its recommendations. The long-heralded Nationalist split may be closer than is generally realized. It may be noted that the current round of in-fighting originated in a deliberate flushing-out operation mounted by P W Botha loyalists to counter the ascendancy of anti-Botha forces in the party structures in the Transvaal, where Mr Pik Botha himself cannot even secure election to a senior post in the provincial hierarchy.

Now the newspaper Beeld has succeeded in getting no less a fish than Dr A P Treurnicht himself to rise to the bait. Dr Treurnicht, while choosing his ground with care, appears to be taking a stand against direct coloured representation in Parliament — on the grounds that Dr Verwoerd had opposed such representation in principle. The Beeld, which is owned by the Cape-based Nasionale Pers, had pointed out that Dr Verwoerd, in a private letter, said in 1960 that this form of representation was certainly an option for the future. In singling out the coloured vote, Dr Treurnicht has chosen his ground well. There is a considerable body of Nationalist opinion which will find it difficult to swallow a restoration of the coloured vote in Parliament in any meaningful form. But Dr Treurnicht's stocks are not particularly high at present, even among hidebound conservatives. He has sat uneasily on the fence in the National Party for much too long — ever since the Hertzogite breakaway in the late 1940s, when many people thought he would follow Dr Albert Hertzog into the wilderness. Dr Treurnicht has temporized for so long that his credibility as a potential leader has faded. The Botha plan is to ease out Dr Treurnicht without precipitating a serious split in the party, which may be more easily said than done. Against this background, there is no longer much doubt that a split in the Nationalist leadership is close to the surface. The outcome of this struggle for the soul of Nationalist Afrikanerdom could have a critical influence on South African history in the decade ahead. Direct representation on a separate roll falls rather short of the coloured leaders' demands for common-roll rights on a basis of equality with whites. But direct representation is only a start. If it is too much for the Treurnichtites to accept, and Dr Treurnicht decides to kick over the traces, there could be spectacular ructions in the party.

BLACK COMPULSORY EDUCATION RAISES COMPLEX ISSUES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 14 Nov 80 p 9

[Article by Patrick Laurence]

[Text]

THE announcement by the Department of Education and Training that a start will be made on the phasing-in of compulsory education for blacks next year contains an element of irony.

It comes at the end of a year characterised by sporadic but recurring stay-aways in black schools throughout the country and by a sustained boycott in the Western and Eastern Cape, where secondary schools were closed by the department in September.

Since the September closure, the boycott has spread to primary schools in the two Cape regions. The number of schools which have been closed officially has risen from 77 to 84 and the number of scholars affected has increased from 38 000 to 40 000.

The department has tried to minimise the extent of the boycott-inflicted crisis by stressing that only 4% of the total number of pupils and teachers are involved and a mere 1% of the schools.

Even allowing for the department's perspective, the spectre of empty classrooms is hardly an auspicious sign against which to initiate a programme for the gradual introduction of compulsory education in the black community.

In theory the two events — the boycott of schools in some areas and the decision to introduce compulsory education in other areas — may be related: redundant teachers from troubled areas may be shifted to stable areas and thus provide sufficient teachers to make compulsory education practical.

The troublesome areas would be punished — or would punish themselves — whereas the stable, low-sliding areas would be rewarded with the realisation of the oft-repeated black demand for free and compulsory education.

But the situation is not as simply as that: most teachers in the troubled areas have not been transferred. Moreover they have warned that they will resign from the department if any attempt is made to relocate them en masse.

Observers point out, however, that the prospect of making education compulsory in selective areas will polarise the black community on a geographical basis into areas favouring and opposing boycotts as a weapon for obtaining redress of black grievances.

Another division may emerge in response to the introduction of compulsory education: parents, who generally favour making use of the education system, however imperfect it may be, may find themselves pitted against their children, who have repeatedly reverted to boycotts as a means of protesting against the black man's lot.

Compulsory education may shift the role of controlling restless black youth from police to parents, a possibility which seems plausible when the enabling section of the Education and Training Act is examined.

Section 37, which empowers the Minister of Education and Training to making schooling compulsory for children up to a specified age in a defined area, puts the onus for ensuring school attendance on parents and guardians.

Failure to do so means a fine of up to R10 or imprisonment of up to one month for a first offence. For a second offence punishment is maximum fine of R40 or imprisonment for a maximum of two months.

There is a third potential advantage for the authorities. It will give them an additional legal weapon with which to combat boycotts. Not only will parents be vulnerable to official action, but anyone obstructing the work of attendance officers will be liable to.

a fine of R20 or imprisonment for one month.

But Mr Gerhard Engelbrecht, a senior liaison officer with the department, presented a perspective which is free from the manipulative connotations of realpolitik associated with the above view.

There is, he stressed in an interview, nothing sudden or opportune about the decision to initiate selective introduction of compulsory education next year. It is a move by the department to honour a commitment to make education free and compulsory for blacks as well as whites, he added.

Nor, he said, was there any question of cynically using black adults to control black youth, as the areas where compulsory education will be introduced are areas where the black community has pressed for it.

By the same token, black parents are unlikely to feel pressured by the department, or to come into conflict with it on compulsory education, as they will come from areas where "90% of the parents are already sending their children to school voluntarily".

Mr Engelbrecht saw the scheduled start to compulsory education as a major step toward fulfilment of offical pledges to the black community to "equalise education" between South Africa's races. Since education is compulsory for whites, equalisation implied making it compulsory for blacks, he reasoned.

Professor Michael Ashby, dean of the education faculty at the University of Cape Town, disagreed that compulsory education is a top priority in the present situation, particularly in the context of the unresolved grievances underlying the boycott.

He said compulsory education should not be introduced until about 90% of the children concerned are at school and only a "fringe group" needs to be brought in.

Instead of making education compulsory in the present unsettled climate and thereby risking "political confrontation" with those sections of the black community who see the present education system as "Bantu Education" by another name, the department ought to concentrate on "building up the infra-structure".

Improvements to the infrastructure would include repair to schools damaged during the unrest, building of new schools and classrooms, elimination the double session and platoon systems, increasing the supply of teachers and raising the level of their qualifications, and reduction in the high drop-out rate.

The shortage of school accomodation and the make-shift measures of the double session and platoon system are interlinked problems.

Double sessions (one teacher uses one classroom to teach two sets of classes in succession) and the platoon system (two sets of teachers and two sets of classes use one classroom at different times) were introduced in response to the shortage of classrooms.

In June last year the then Minister of Education and Training, Mr "Punt" Janson, told Parliament 7 000 additional classrooms would have to be built to eliminate double sessions in black schools.

The problems of the supply of teachers relative to the number of pupils and of teacher qualifications generally are implicit in figures quoted in the 1979 Annual Survey of Race Relations.

The teacher-pupil ratio in 1979 was 1:47.5 compared to 1:19.6 for whites. The proportion of black teachers whose teaching certificate was based on Standard Six was about 15%. These graduating from a teacher training course on the basis of a Standard Eight certificate accounted for just over 30%.

Figures collated by the institute's research department highlight the drop-out problem. Of the total number of black pupils who entered Sub-A in 1967, only 15% reached Form Three in 1977. To put it differently, 85% dropped out along the way.

These figures bring Prof Ashby's fear that compulsory education may divert attention from more urgent needs into sharp focus. They also raise the question of whether the money and talent would not be better directed in combating the drop-out rate before Standard

Right — whether the priority should not be keeping those at school there longer rather than bringing more into schools?

A statement issued by the Minister of Education and Training, Dr Fanie Hartzenberg, in September at the height of the boycott crisis in the Cape, puts the situation in a different light.

Dr Hartzenberg was convinced that objective analysis would prove that his department was undertaking far-reaching reforms which held out the prospect of equalising education for the races and which laid the foundation for the introduction of compulsory education.

He stressed the increased financial input to black education both in proportional and absolute terms: his department's budget rose by 37% in the latest financial year against an average departmental increase of between 11% and 13%; in money terms it rose from R27-million in the financial year 1972-1973 to R268,3-million in 1980-81.

One benefit was expansion in school buildings: from April 1979, when the department received Cabinet approval to erect its own schools, 77 new community schools (equivalent to 1 040 classrooms), and 814 additional classrooms were built.

Dr Hartzenberg added: "In the present financial year no less than 78 schools, consisting of 1 488 classrooms, and 1 701 additional classrooms at existing schools (giving a total of 3 187 classrooms) are being erected."

The Minister went on to refer specifically to compulsory education and to list the steps which he believed made its introduction possible.

They included: lowering the age of admission to school from seven to six, reduction of the teacher-pupil ratio from 38:1 in 1980 to 35:1 in 1980, provision of "sufficient classroom accommodation" and, consequently, near "elimination" of double sessions, and supply of free textbooks.

The reduction of the teacher-pupil ratio is quoted by the department as evidence of the increasing supply of teachers. There are presently seven teacher training colleges in white-designated South Africa. Two more are scheduled to open next year.

The rising number of black matriculants is cited as a hopeful sign, the presumption being that a fair proportion will end up as teachers. The number of matric candidates rose from 675 in 1955 to more than 43 000 in 1980.

From the welter of argument and counter-argument the complexity of the debate on whether the introduction of compulsory education is appropriate in the present climate is evident.

But amidst the controversy — and black education is controversial subject — one point seems to be clear: blacks have a strong and apparently ineradicable suspicion of a racially separate educational system.

As Dr Franz Auerbach, a prominent scholar of black education, pointed out in a perceptive article last year, blacks equate separate education with Dr Hendrik Verwoerd and his "infamous 1954 Senate speech," in which he said: "There is no place for the native in the European community above certain forms of labour."

Dr Hartzenberg was warned last month by a delegation from the the South African Council of Churches that his attempts at reform would have a negligible impact as long as blacks were offered racially separate education.

More than 25 years have passed since Dr Verwoerd's speech on the new system of Bantu Education, but the bitter suspicion of separate education, however it may have changed, lives on.

To quote Dr Auerbach: "Subsequent improvements cannot erase the memory of a system that deliberately lowered the quality (of education) to get more educational activity from the same sum of money."

BLACK EDUCATION IN CAPE AREA HAS GLOOMY PROSPECTS

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 20 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

WITH the new school year approaching, there is growing concern about the future of black education in the Cape Peninsula after a year in which schooling in the townships ground to a halt.

At this stage, neither the education authorities nor parents or pupils know whether or when schools will reopen.

And if schooling is resumed, no one knows whether the pupils will return.

There also is a possibility that pupils over 18 will be declared adults and not readmitted to the high schools.

It is not clear either how the education process would cope with the backlog.

Whatever the reasons behind the school boycotts, school closures and the cancellation of examinations, thousands of black pupils have lost a year of education which many will never make up.

More than 11 000 pupils were affected by the September closure of the ten African higher primary schools and four secondary schools in the Peninsula, while attendence at most lower primary schools fell below 50 percent.

The Minister of Education and Planning, Dr Ferdie Hartzenberg, has still to make a decision on whether to reopen the schools.

This could be any time within the next two months, according to the department's deputy chief public relations officer, Mr J A Schoeman.

And the go-ahead depends on the "co-operation of parents and willingness of pupils", he added.

Interviewed by the Cape Times this week, both Mr Schoeman and the Cape director of the department, Mr D H Owens, anticipated accommodation problems if schooling was resumed.

The worst-hit would be the Std 3 classes — the entrance level for higher primary education.

With this year's pupils having to repeat, schools would have to contend with pupils having completed lower primary education.

To cope with this, Mr Owens said, the department was considering the introduction of a platoon system in which classes would be held twice a day.

Mr Schoeman said a possible solution to overcrowding in the higher levels was that pupils over the age of 18 would be declared "adults" and would not be readmitted to school.

Those affected could complete their education at the department's "adult education training centres", one of which was the Langa Centre.

Miss Nombeko Mlambo, who is involved in a community education research project by the University of Cape Town's Department of Extra-Mural Studies, said yesterday she could not predict what the pupils' reactions would be if the schools were reopened.

Several pupils spoken to this week said they would not return unless their grievances were met by the government, and the detention of pupils had only served to strengthen the pupils' determination, they said.

Miss Mlambo said their "animosity" had been sharpened by the government's failure to make "a committment" and the community had little hope that their demands would be met.

The school issue had resulted in heightened awareness by the pupils of their position, and not only in the area of education. But she predicted a large number of "drop-outs". "Some are already working and they won't go back to school."

Most pupils had been idle since September, she added. The education gained in cultural activities by some was "a drop in the ocean".

On the situation generally, she said the pupils were becoming more and more militant, parents were divided and teachers were caught in the worst position of all, "rejected by pupils and pressurized by the authorities."

'WHITE HOMELAND' ORGANIZATION CONTINUES PLANNING

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 20 Nov 80 p B3

[Text] The "Orange Society" (Vereniging van Oranjewerkers) claims to be making good progress with plans for a white homeland and hopes to establish its first exclusively white settlement next year.

The society is strongly sponsored by the Verwoerd clan, with at least four relatives of the late Prime Minister and high priest of separate development, Dr H.F. Verwoerd, actively involved in its organisation.

His widow, Mrs Betsie Verwoerd, is honorary president; his son, the Rev H.F. Verwoerd, is general secretary; his son-in-law, Professor C.W.H. Boshoff, chairman of Sabra and head of the Broederbond, is a committee member, as is his daughter, Mrs Anna Boshoff.

Mr Verwoerd has resigned as a Dutch Reformed missionary to take the post of general secretary.

Interviewed on his society's plans, Mr Verwoerd said the aim was to first establish exclusively white growth points. Areas likely to be considered include the Orange River region, the Vaal River and, possibly Oudtshoorn.

These areas would serve as a heartland for whites, with no people of other races allowed to live or work there. These would be gradually extended into whole regions where only whites would be allowed, he said.

The organisation's head committee would meet before the end of the year to consider which area would be best suited for the purpose, he said.

Implication

Some farmers had already expressed interest in the scheme, he said. This would mean they would have only white farm workers, but other possibilities that could be considered included greater mechanisation, ploughing or cultivating their lands on a cooperative basis, or having students and pupils work on their farms, he said.

Mr Verwoerd said the society preferred not to refer to the scheme as a "white homeland" as this could be seen to imply that whites were relinquishing their claim to the rest of the country.

The society is continuing with its plans in spite of firm rejection of the idea of a white homeland by the Prime Minister, Mr P.W. Botha.

VORSTER WARNS AFRIKANERS TO PRESERVE IDENTITY

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 7 Nov 80 p 4

[Text]

PORT ELIZABETH. — The former state president, Mr B J Vorster, last night warned Afrikaners that if they sacrificed their identity in liaising with other groups over South Africa's future, they were doomed.

Addressing members of the Afrikaanse Skakelkommittee at the Parkheuwel Ned Geref Kerk Hall in Port Elizabeth, Mr Vorster said that South Africa had put its language problems behind it.

"But other problems lie ahead."

The Afrikaans cultural organization invited Mr Vorster to unveil a plaque to commemorate his and Mrs Vorster's contribution to the Afrikaner cause in Port Elizabeth during their brief residence in the city from 1939 to 1941.

The plaque is to be erected at the Harmonie Building where Mr Vorster was employed by a legal firm.

Mr Vorster, apparently referring to the quest to find a new constitutional dispensation in South Africa, said that if it was to be successful, the problem had to be dealt with in the same way that the English-Afrikaans language issue was resolved.

"We decided, as civilized people, that as we were to live together, each language group must have the right to retain and protect its own identity.

"This question that lies ahead of us must be treated in the same way. If you sacrifice your right to your own identity, then you sacrifice your very existence."

While liaison must take place, liaison should not be allowed to lead to loss of identity.

"There must be a place in the sun for all. But you must be sure there is a place left in the sun for yourself too.'

'MUSLIM NEWS' CONDEMNS PARTICIPATION IN UNREPRESENTATIVE 'COUNCILS'

Capetown MUSLIM NEWS in English 31 Oct 80 p 20

[Editorial: "Reject Racism"]

[Text]

Every Azanian is prepared to rid himself of all traces of racialism and not work in the direction whereby his actions would only benefit the particular ethnic group he represents. Yet, the chairman of the South African Indian Council, Mr Y S Chinsamy, had stated that he expected the Council to become a fully-elected body by October or November next year.

Even the occupiers of the 'paper palace', members of the former Coloured Representative Council, have discarded intentions of being party to a council whose powers are minimal compared to the weight of words wasted as they discussed items that could never be projected into reality.

Like the Coloured Representative Council, the Indian Council will be elected by a minority of those whom it purports to represent.

It is obvious that dummy representatives are not accepted by the majority of Azanians. Members elected to the Coloured Representative Council and those that will be elected to the Indian Council, were and will be elected by non-whites — a term of contempt used by Azanians towards those eager to wrap themselves in ethnic clothing.

There is no place in our society for an Indian Council. What is demanded is full citizenship and all the rights normally accorded to a citizen.

Being an Azanian does not mean the negation of a group's culture. But group culture would not be exploited to result in the domination of one group over others so that the dominant group could enrich itself at the expense of the rest. The main thing is that one would be an Azanian with full human rights not to be supressed, by repressive laws enacted by the dominant group.

As Allah says in the Holy Qur'an:

O mankind! We created you from a single (pair) of a male and female, and made you into nations and tribes, that you may know each other (not that you may despise each other). XLIX: 13

Here we are reminded that it is our common origin that is important and not 'cultural' or 'ethnic' identities.

This also brings to mind the reported statement by Johannesburg's Chief Rabbi, Dr B M Casper, who said that apartheid fostered the Jewish identity. Of course, it is this type of thinking that gave birth to Zionism.

Muslims cannot reason in the same manner as the Chief Rabbi. If they do, they are rejecting a fundamental Islamic principle. Islam does not need apartheid to act as a crutch. On the contrary, the spirit of Islam sincerely upheld cannot but destroy apartheid.

Rather than accepting an ideology that has caused so much tumult and oppression as a blessing, Allah asks the Muslims:

And why should you not fight in the cause of Allah and of those who, being weak, are ill-treated (and oppressed)? - Men, women and children, whose cry is: 'Our Lord! rescue us from this town whose people are oppressors; and raise for us from Thee one who will protect; and raise for us from Thee one who will help!' AZAPO OFFICIALS ARRESTED IN NORTHERN TRANSVAAL

Johannesburg THE VOICE in English 12-18 Nov 80 p 3

[Text]

IN AN apparent move to completely eradicate the Azanian People's Organisation (AZAPO) in the Northern Transvaal, the two remaining executive members of the Seshego branch were last week detained under the Internal Security Act.

Mr Harry Madikoto (secretary), together with treasurer Mr Sello Rasethaba, were picked up at their place of employment in Pietersburg.

They were then driven to their respective homes where they collected their clothes.

According to Mr Rasethaba's detention warrant, he is being held at Victor Verster Prison, in Paarl near Cape Town.

His detention period expires on April 30, 1981.

The Seshego Branch chairmen and his vice Mr Mamabolo Raphesu, and Mr Moses Moalusi, respectively, are believed to be held under section six of the Terrorism Act.

Together with them are five members of the Lingenye Branch near Tzaneen in the Northern Eastern Transvaal. Only one member in Mahwelereng, near Potgietersrus, is also being held under section six.

Last week four members from the Mahwelereng branch were so said to have been detained.

The four are Miss Mapula Mogodi, Perry Kekana and Holly Kekana, who at the time were busy with their final matric examinations.

They were attending school at the local Gojela High School.

The fourth is Mr Jan Thobejane.

According to their relatives they were also asked to take along some of their clothes and books.

The detentions are seen as an attempt by the authorities to curb the activities of Azapo in the Northern Transvaal.

The boycott against Lebowa Transport buses, now in its 13th week in Seshego, and eight in Linyenye, is being spearheaded by Azapo together with the Seshego Village Committee.

The workers in both areas have since demanded that the Government-owned buses, (Lebowa Transport), be replaced by Black-owned ones.

In Seshego commuters use the Black-owned "Hamba Buya", and these buses do not operate in the townships.

For a month now commuters could not hold meetings as these were being banned every weekend by the Lebowa Government.

Also detained under section six is Seshego Village Committee chairman and "Mayor", the Reverend M P Malatji.

In Linyenye commuters travel long distances outside the township to board Black-owned buses.

'THE CITIZEN' DISCUSSES CONSTITUTIONAL REFERENDUM IDEA

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Dec 80 p 6

[Editorial: "Referendum?"]

[Text]

IN NORMAL circumstances, we would say the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, is right to put any drastic constitutional problems to the country in a referendum.

Supposing, in any case, that what emanates from the President's Council justifies such action.

And supposing, as the Prime Minister, Mr Botha implies, the policy is to have Whites, Coloureds and Indians in the same political structures (the suggestion being, according to Nationalist newspapers, that there should be a single Parliament with White, Coloured and Indian Chambers).

But there are some overriding questions. For example, can anybody really anticipate what the President's Council might propose?

Surely, if it is to be independent, it should have the right to bring forward ideas that are not necessarily canvassed by any party or section of a party?

Next, we must be satisfied that a referendum is not just a means for overcoming the ruling party's internal problems.

The argument against this kind of action is as follows:

The conservatives have made it clear that they are against any dispensation which will bring the Coloureds back into Parliament.

They want Parliament to remain White and the White man's sovereignty to stay untouched.

Verligtes are urging a three-Chamber Parliament in which White, Coloureds and Indians will be represented.

That is a radical departure from accepted Nationalist policy, though in keeping with the spirit of change that is abroad.

With the Transvaal firmly in the hands of the conservatives, as shown by the elections at last Saturday's head committee meeting, Mr Botha can either resolve the issue within the party, which is the democratic thing to do, by taking up the conservative challenge and beating them on the issue, or take the matter beyond the party to the nation.

One can assume that by addressing a national audience rather than just a party one, the Prime Minister would be able to get a favourable decision.

The NRP would no doubt welcome the suggested changes.

The PFP would not be able to boycott a referendum, as it did the President's Council, but would be forced to take a positive stand (or would it advise its members to say "no" to the proposals, or to abstain, which would finish it off completely in White politics?)

So we now get to the situation where the Prime Minister, who has tended to bypass National Party congresses, which have not had a say in recent political changes, will bypass the party and the House of Assembly by going straight to the country in a referendum.

We wonder whether the tenuous National Party unity could be maintained with such a manoeuvre.

In the circumstances, therefore, the Prime Minister might be better advised to push the three-chamber idea within the party itself, using his considerable power and prestige as Prime Minister to convince as many people as possible within the party that there must be such a change — and that it is justified.

At the same time, he should tackle the conservative revolt within the party, which is mainly confined to the Transvaal, by spelling out in detail his 12-point programme, so that there can be no confusion over what he means.

Then, instead of being able to say, "Well, we support the Prime Minister's 12 points, which are traditional National Party policy, so you can't accuse us of opposing the Prime Minister," the conservatives would have to accept the policy as defined by Mr Botha or follow their own personal inclinations.

What should not be allowed to continue unresolved is an incipient revolt in which one section of the party whispers against the policy that the Prime Minister is following, while at the same time paying lip service to party unity and to the Prime Minister.

That way, nobody knows where he stands. And not just the party, but the Government, which is more important, suffers.

Our own view is that there must be change, but that the National Party must be strong enough to bring that change into force, since a weakened Government cannot act decisively.

Against this background, the referendum appears to be only a way of sidestepping an issue which the National Party itself must resolve.

Therefore, on balance, we would say that a referendum would not be wise.

However, if a referendum is held, we hope that it will be for constitutional changes which are pertinent, acceptable to other races as well as Whites, and capable of setting South Africa on the road to a new dispensation and a peaceful future.

Let there be no mistake about this:

Whatever happens, South Africa cannot go back to the time when apartheid reigned supreme.

Nor can it maintain the status quo.

Nor can it avoid making the changes that the times in which we live demand.

Therefore, the National Party must move forward, whatever the consequences for itself, because, without change, South Africa cannot survive.

That, referendum or no referendum, is the clear warning.

PFP APPEALS TO KOORNHOF ON PRETORIA PARKS ISSUE

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 19 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by Gerald Reilly]

[Text]

THE Northern Transvaal branch of the Progressive Federal Party (PFP) has called on Dr Piet Koornhof, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, to take a public stand urgently on the petition which some Pretoria city councillors are circulating for support to have the city's parks closed to blacks.

A spokesman for the branch, Mr Eberhard Bertelsmann, said in a letter to the Minister that the parks were opened to all races during the South African Games in 1973 — an action which was acclaimed worldwide as a forward step.

And he reminded the Minister that he had associated himself with open parks.

"Since then you have indicated that you are a supporter of a speedy elimination of unnecessary and irritating discrimination," the letter said.

"We can scarcely imagine a more serious example of offensive petty apartheid than the action of Councillor Denyschen and his supporters in circulating the petition."

Mr Bertelsmann said this was not only because the whole motivation was racist. It could only give the impression to black citizens that there was an attempt to introduce again the crassest forms of apartheid — and the issue could again make South Africa the skunk of the world.

Mr Bertelsmann said Dr Koornhof had been asked before to comment publically on the issue, but had not done so.

"We want to express our concern over the action of Pretoria's city fathers — and the quiet approval of the city's MPs — and ask you in the interests of South Africa to act to stop this obvious disservice to our country."

In a letter to Pretoria city councillors, Mr Bertelsmann said there were no reasons for again closing the parks to blacks — it appeared there was a resurgence of old-time apartheid.

To close the parks would lead to a further deterioration in race relations, Mr Bertelsmann said — something which South Africa could ill-afford. There was no alternative but to allow working blacks to use public parks and squares.

PRESS COMMENT ON KOORNHOF'S REFORM BILLS

'THE CAPE TIMES' Comment

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 5 Nov 80 p 12

[Editorial: "The Koornhof Bills"]

[Text]

WHILE Dr Koornhof's reform bills are receiving close attention from interested parties, it remains to be seen how the new legislation will be received in the black community, the people most directly affected. The success of these measures will depend on the measure of support Dr Koornhof is able to muster among blacks, once they have digested the proposals and put forward their comments. The bills are avowedly designed to ease the intolerable burdens which, it is widely agreed, have weighed heavily on blacks in recent decades, particularly the pass-law measures which have broken up black families and prevented blacks from selling their labour and skills in the best market. If Dr Koornhof can convince blacks that his bills are in their interests, and they pledge their co-operation, this will be progress indeed. If he cannot secure such support, he would be advised to take his bills back to the drawing board and start again.

An urban élite

Without anticipating black reaction, which will speak for itself, there are aspects of this legislation which may be pondered by the whole community, not only by blacks. In the first place, it appears that the thrust of this legislation is to divide the black community, creating a privileged urban elite, a black middle class, whose lot will be significantly improved by the Koornhof bills. The others, blacks who do not qualify, such as the unemployed and unhoused masses in the rural areas and elsewhere, will find the odds heavily weighed against them. The poor and unemployed will find influx control being applied with renewed vigour and increased penalties. The tightening of the influx control screw, thrusting the unemployed masses out of sight, is not likely to work all that efficiently. Desperate people whose children are hungry are highly resourceful in circumventing restrictions on their movement and employment. It is a matter of life and death. But the influx control axe will nevertheless fall heavily on the rural poor, many of whom will have no choice but to stay put and fend for their families as best they can.

This course offers a number of drawbacks. To tolerate the existence of a large pool of unemployed rural poor, and to keep them in this state by strictly enforced controls, is a procedure fraught with risks. From a security point of view, this will provide the water in which the guerilla fish will be able to swim at will. In this dispensation, the rural areas will be ripe for destabilization by committed revolutionary cadres from over the border.

Secondly, it seems inescapable that police harassment of blacks will continue if not intensify under the new system. If a punitive system of influx control is to be enforced, there is no other way of doing this effectively. The requirement that blacks must produce passes or reference books on demand by the police and other officials is an essential part of enforcement. Unless police have this right, and exercise it, there is no watertight way of enforcing influx control. But this is the aspect of the system which causes most grief and resentment — the summary arrest of pass offenders. If the new, amended system does not do away with summary arrest, it will be of marginal value. But without such arrests, can there be effective influx control? Dr Koornhof's dilemma is manifest. Should he not consider the benefits of taking the plunge, applying the free market philosophy and scrapping controls?

What needs to be considered is the possible consequences of black disillusionment if the new bills, as finally enacted, do not measure up to black expectations. A pending reform of discriminatory legislation had been announced with great fanfares. But will these bills do? Will the black political leadership accept the principle of establishing an urban black elite at the expense of the impoverished masses? Is this principle a wise one? In the light of national security? Are not the drawbacks of abolishing influx control vastly outweighed by the benefits of abolition? In terms of improved morale and goodwill in the black community?

THE SOUTH African Council of Churches has hit the nail on the head when it says that Dr Piet Koornhof's new draft legislation is in line with the Government's "total strategy".

We take the matter even further by suggesting that the overriding concept in the Minister of Development and Co-operation's "new deal", is that of divide and rule.

Unless otherwise persuaded, we suspect that the creation of a kind of privileged Blacks buffer also falls in perfect line with the total strategy of divide and rule.

If this is seen in the context of the creation of the President's Council which only includes Whites, the so-called Coloureds and Indians, then the whole thing begins to make sense.

Part of the total strategy seems to be that of weakening and undermining Black unity as much as possible.

We maintain that if Dr Koornhof was sincere in eradicating apartheid, and, thereby embarking on a deal era for the hitherto voiceless Black masses, he would have done this with (and not for) authentic Black leaders.

We however, seriously doubt whether Dr Koornhof, in his capacity as Minister, has any power to deviate from the stated Nationalist Party policy of apartheid. Good intentions he might have, but as long as he is with the Nationalist Party, he has absolutely no room for any independent manoeuvre.

He simply must toe the line.

[Editorial: "The Illusion That Apartheid Is Dead"]

[Text]

WE want to see peaceful progress in South Africa. We want, that Nationalists to get a move on and bring about racial change. When they do so, we are glad to applaud them and to support them. We are desperately conscious of the need for change if conflict and catastrophe are to be avoided.

But it must be real change and it must be honest change. It must certainly not be the pretence of change contained in the Black Community Development Bill.

At the end of last month, when Dr Piet Koornhof, the Minister of Cooperation and Development, announced this Bill and two others, he presented them as a major step forward in giving blacks a new deal. They were seen as extending significantly new freedoms to city blacks. Even while Dr Koornhof acknowledged that the planned legislation was not perfect, he described it as part of the process of reform.

But a close look at his key Bill reveals an entirely different picture. The detailed assessment we published yesterday shows that little of substance is in fact being extended; whereas, on the other hand, a great deal that is repressive and objectionable is being retained or introduced.

As the main conclusion of the assessment stated:

- The situation of blacks who already qualify to be in the cities is barely altered. There is no major, fundamental improvement for them.
- Life is going to be tougher for those in the rural areas who want to get to the cities.
- The dompas will continue, if only in another guise. So will legal sanctions against offenders.
- The Minister, officials and policemen will continue to wield their vast powers.

None of this can give heart to blacks that improvements lie ahead for them. None of it can persuade anyone that the Nationalists actually mean to put into practice their words of glowing promise.

Indeed, to attempt to pretend that the planned legislation represents any kind of a new deal is iniquitous. It arouses hope where there is no hope. It arouses expectations which are going to be drabed when people suffer the actual consequences of the legislation.

How did Dr Koornhof come to perpetrate this planned legislation, and to surround it with so much glitter? Is it conceivable that he simply did not understand the complexity and tangled language in the Bill?

Whatever the answers might be, the overriding point is that he should not proceed with the legislation. If he insists on doing so, he must drop the pretence that it is progress. He cannot now avoid acknowledging it for what it is.

He cannot bluff people that apartheid is dead when legislation of this sort proves that is it alive, and well.

KOORNHOF ON COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT SCHEME

LD021456 Johannesburg International Service in English 1100 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] The establishment of a committee for the joint promotion of community development among the black peoples of South Africa has been announced by the minister of cooperation and development, Dr Pieter Koornhof. Dr Koornhof told a news conference in the city of Pretoria that the committee would consist of 16 members. They would represent the Department of Education and Training, the Department of Health, Social Welfare and Pensions, the Department of Foreign Affairs and Information, the Economic Development Corporation, the Bureau for Economic Research, Cooperation and Development and the Council of Chairmen of Administration Boards.

The Council of Chief Ministers of the National States has been invited to nominate three representatives to serve on the committee. Three chairmen of community councils and four members of the Department of Cooperation and Development will also serve on the committee.

Dr Koornhof referred to the government's attitude towards the importance of the private sector in the development of Southern Africa and the establishment of a multilateral development bank in Southern Africa and a development corporation for small businessmen. He said community development and the method of development was closely linked to this trend.

Black communities in the national states and urban areas outside the national states have to take the initiative to speed up their own development. However, it was necessary that the authorities should take steps to promote the community initiatives and to support them. Dr Koornhof said the committee would probably be established early next year.

The report of the committee investigating community development was also released at the news conference. The committee recommended among other things that the administrative setup in urban areas inside the national states should receive serious attention and that viable projects for community development in black urban areas should be investigated.

MINISTER REVIEWS MANPOWER STRATEGY FOR CONSTELLATION

THE Department of Manpower Utilisation was busy with a comprehensive manpower strategy as part of a total strategy for South Africa — and eventually — a Southern African Censtellation of States, the Minister of Manpower Utilisation, Mr Fanie Botha said yesterday.

Officially opening the Manpower 2000 convention in Pretoria, he said the administrative and organisational infrastructure required for this had already been developed to an important extent through:

- The reviewing of legislation;
- Rationalisation of the civil service;
- The introduction of a National Manpower Commission;
- The introduction of an industrial court; and
- Launching of the Manpower 2000-project.

"I am thankful to say that I and my department, in co-operation with the private sector, has been working for some time now on such a strategy," Mr Botha said.

"Without going into too much detail I want to give you the assurance that the following programmes specifically were on vital importance to the manpower strategy:

- The training and retraining of managers, labourers, matriculants and jobless people in a variety of careers. "I hope to make some more announcements in the near future in this regard."
- The co-ordination of training and the maintaining of standards. The national training board would play an important role in this regard.
- The creation of job opportunities. The NMC had in co-operation with the Prime Minister's economic advisor already begun with an investigation in this regard and further investigations were under way.
- The improvement of productivity. The national productivity institute would play an important part in this regard.
- The provision of more effective job reservation services to joboeekers of all races. The necessary legislation in this regard would be tabled early in 1981.
- The maintaining of labour peace. This programme also provided among other things for the training of people to

- Co-operation between South African and the self-governing independent states on the manpower terrain, especially with regard to the training and retraining of people with the eye on labour relations.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE, INCLUDING DEFENSE, HIGHER THAN FORECAST

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 21 Nov 80 p 19

[Article by Harold Fridjhon]

[Text]

GOVERNMENT expenditure for the first seven months of the current fiscal year is running nearly 22% above the total for the comparable period of last year — in spite of Senator Horwood stating in his Budget speech that the 1980-81 spending would be only 14% higher than last year.

Total payments made by the Exchequer in the seven months were R7 863-million compared with R6 453-million last year. If spending were proportional over the period the seven-month expenditure should have been R7 [illegible]-million.

But expenditure does not occur evenly over each month of the fiscal year and during the next five months it is possible that the rate of spending will slow down and that the outcome might be closer to Senator Horwood's Budget of R13 143-million.

Numerically the biggest excess in expenditure was in the Defence vote. In the seven months to October, issues to Defence amounted to R1 [illegible]-million against R1 [illegible]-million last year — an increase of 31%.

Expenditure by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries was 64% more in seven months this year than last year with a total of R275-million.

Commerce and Consumer Affairs have topped their last year's spending by 32% and Community Development is 54% up with a total of R142-million against R92-million in the first seven months last year.

Indian Affairs is 33% up and police expenditure at R268-million is running 48% higher than last year for the first seven months.

Education and Training at R147-million is 33% above the last year's figure.

The higher Defence figure is understandable in the current climate and so are the increases in Community Development, Coloured Relations (up 18%), Indian Affairs and Education. These increases suggest that the Government is putting its money where its mouth is.

With total expenditure at R7 863-million and total revenue during the seven months amounting to R6 946-million, there is a deficit of R917-million. Net borrowing totalled R798-million, leaving a bottom-line deficit of R119-million.

But the Treasury had R2[illegible]-million cash in hand. This suggests that the Exchequer did not have to look for additional finance from the banking sector which might have aggravated the money supply position.

NEW WEAPONS ON SHOW AT BOTHA FAREWELL PARADE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Nov 80 pp 10-11

[Text]

MEMBERS of the public on Tuesday saw for the first time some of the latest additions to South Africa's military muscle-power during a mechanised march past at a farewell parade for the former Minister of Defence, Mr P W Botha.

All the vehicles and weapons on parade were developed and made in South Africa by Armscor.

The new additions are: the 155 mm G5 field gun, the 127 mm artillery rocket system, a range of military vehicles named the Samil (SA Military) and a new tank named Elephant.

The rocket system, which has been called South Africa's "Stalin Organ" surpasses its Russn counterpart in striking distance, accuracy and fire-power.

Both the G5 field gun and the Samils were designed in South Africa with local conditions and our type of warfare in mind.

Other locally made weapons on parade included the Ratel infantry combat vehicle, the Ratel armoured car, the new generation R4 rifle and the Cactus missile system.

The Elephant tank is to replace the British-made Centurion tanks.

"For its internal security," the new Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan, said yesterday, "South Africa no longer has any need of armaments from outside and, in this respect, our country can no longer be isolated by arms boycotts.

"South Africa is today, thanks to Mr Botha, not only independent as regards to its basic armament needs, but has even entered the export market," he said.

The chairman of Armscor, Commandant P G Marais, said that South Africa had succeeded in neutralising the arms embargo to a very large extent and that the SADF was far better equipped today than it was before sanctions were imposed against South Africa.

The new Elephant tank which packs a powerful punch was also displayed for the first time yesterday.

The new Samil gun tractor towing the locally designed G5 field gun.

The new generation South African-designed and manufactured troop carriers — SAMIL — drive past the dais in the amphitheatre in front of the Voortrekker Monument.

Two trucks equipped with the new multiple 127mm artillery rocket system which were shown to the public for the first time yesterday. The rocket launching system is another new South African development which has been designed and developed over the past few years. It is South Africa's answer to the "Stalin Organ" which was used during the Angolan War by the enemy.

SHORTAGE OF CIVILIAN, MILITARY PILOTS DISCUSSED

Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 12 Nov 80 p 13

[Text]

CIVILIAN pilots who learn to fly at their own expense and constitute a potential reserve of combat aviators can be regarded as "a dwindling and endangered national resource", according to a contributor to Militaria, the official professional journal of the South African Defence Force.

The "continually escalating" cost of flying lessons "has effectively put pilot training out of the financial reach of many would-be airmen, while at the same time making it extremely costly to the qualified pilot to maintain his wings", says Lieutenant E H Ward SAN in the latest edition of the journal.

Lieutenant Ward's article suggests that the Defence Flying Club, a recreational private club, should be used as a "supernumerary squadron" to build up the country's reserve of operationally trained pilots.

According to Lieutenant Ward, most Western air forces are experiencing a "critical shortage" of qualified pilots, and at the same time aircraft have become so much more complex to fly that a pupil pilot can no longer be brought to a state of operational efficiency by a mass-production crash course.

It was obvious, therefore, that air forces would have to be able to draw on "substantial" reserves of trained airmen in order to cope with "the exhausting demands posed by potential combat situations".

This was why the SAAF had part-time squadrons consisting of ex-military and civilian pilots. But there were fewer and fewer civilian pilots left, "and the question is, can any air force afford to lose this potential reserve?"

The Royal Air Force, Lieutenant Shaw noted, was fighting a pilot shortage by sponsoring 18 university air squadrons (UAS), manned by full-time RAF instructors and operating 81 BAe Bulldog training aircraft which provided training for 600 students — "the largest flying training organisation in the RAF".

According to Lieutenant Shaw, there are two categories of UAS members:

- Undergraduates who wish to fly, and may eventually join the RAF — a group constituting more than half of the UAS membership.
- RAF-sponsored university cadets.

The UAS flying syllabus allows for 55 hours' training over three years, all of it up to RAF standard.

The result, according to Lieutenant Shaw, is a supply of potential entrants with a thorough academic and aeronautical background, and also "a reserve of military-oriented pilots" on which to draw in an emergency.

It was not practical to start a similar scheme in South Africa at present, thanks to the "astronomical financial implications" and the critical shortage of manpower and military aircraft, Lieutenant Shaw said, but added that certain measures could be applied to the Defence Flying Club (DFC).

This was a purely recreational private flying club for off-duty SADF personnel, who could train as pilots and then take courses in advanced navigation techniques, advanced aircraft handling and instrument flying.

The DFC received no official support except an annual grant from the Defence Sports Club and the use of hangerage and runways at Swartkop Air Force Base; for maintenance and the purchase of fuel, aircraft and spares it had to rely on its own resources.

According to Lieutenant Shaw the recreational nature of the DFC's flying indicated that its value as a potential reserve pool had been overlooked.

"Surely if courses in the operational flying of light aircraft were to be offered to the members of the club, these pilots could be used to fly the many light aircraft communications flights during any operation, thus releasing the highly trained regular pilots for other operational duties.

"Further, if the SADF was to make fuel and maintenance facilities available to the DFC at Swartkop at SADF tariffs, the club would be able to reduce the cost of training offered, thus making it available to a greater number of potential pilots at no extra cost to the SADF."

MINERAL SALES EXCHANGE EARNINGS SHOW INCREASE

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 20 Nov 80 p 28

[Article by Geoff Shuttleworth]

[Text] Foreign exchange earnings from mineral sales have surpassed the R10 000m mark, rising to R10 192m for the first three quarters of the year and handsomely surpassing last year's total of R8 500m.

When local sales are added in, the nine-month total for 1980 rises to R11 351m compared with the whole of last year's R9 768m.

Export sales in September amounted to R1 231m compared with R1 135m in August but fell short of July's record total of R1 424m.

Sales for the final quarter of 1980 should make certain that the Minerals Bureau's projections of a R14 500 to R15 000m 1980 total will be comfortably exceeded.

The increase in the September sales was almost entirely due to gold which fetched R967m compared with August's total of R876m.

Significantly, diamond sales have continued to decline since July. The September total was R48,4m against August's R55m and July's R77,1m. Latest sales, are, however, higher than the rockbottom sales of R12,7m in May this year.

Sales of antimony on export markets were R66 622 in September compared with R313 902 in August and confirm the gloomy picture painted by Cons Murchison when it suspended part of its mining operations.

Nickel sales were sharply higher at R15m compared with only R6,1m in August and R1,1m the month before. Copper also rose significantly to R19,8m from R9,4m in August and R12,3m in July.

Sales of coal and anthracite fell to R53,5m in September from R60,6m in August and R52,3m in July.

Manganese sales fell sharply to R7,4m, nearly half the August total of R14,5m and compared with July's R13,1m.

TRANSKEI ECONOMY VIRTUALLY STAGNANT

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 20 Nov 80 p 31

[Article by Pieter de Vos]

[Text]

Transkei seems to have little to offer to industrialists. While South Africa has experience one of the world's highest growth rates this year, its economy was virtually stagnant.

No figures are available, but growth was "very low," according to a Government spokesman.

Though Transkei has the agricultural potential to become the pantry of Southern Africa, farming generates very little wealth. In fact, there is a shortage of food with some essential like vegetables, milk and even maize being imported from South Africa.

The rolling hills are defaced by donges caused by erosion of the fertile farming soil.

Animal husbandry practices are of a poor standard. Animals are allowed to roam free with fencing only around the small patches set aside for household vegetable gardens.

About 90 percent of agricultural production is for subsistence purposes alone. The major cause of Transkei's ailing economy seems to be an ancient system of land tenure, with virtually no private land ownership.

Jobless

The country's employment potential seems to be dismal. Annually about 25 000 people enter the labour market, but most must find work in the Republic. The country has a potentially economically active population in excess of 1-million people, but there were only 122 000 jobs created by the private sector, public authorities and Government by 1977.

Two thirds of all males under the age of 65 were registered as migrant labourers in 1977. Paid employment in Transkei accounted only for 13 percent of the labour force while the remainder was engaged in traditional agriculture.

The earnings which migrant labourers send back home account for more than half of Transkei's net national income. Its domestic labour force is largely untrained, while illiteracy among adults is still a problem.

Surprising

It is therefore with surprise that one learns that the Transkei Development Corporation is currently investigating 29 new projects from various industrialists — most of them South African — who wish to establish industries in Transkei. Of these, 12 are expansions to existing industries involving an estimated R13m.

There is also a strong interest in Transkei from Taiwanese businessmen. By May next year, it is expected that five Taiwanese industries will have been established in the country.

Transkei's head of state, President Kaiser Matanzima, says he would like to open another area for industrial development — on the Transkeian side of the border near Queenstown.

There are at the moment four industrial areas in the country: two at Umtata and two at Butterworth.

A total of almost 100 industries has already been started in Transkei with the assistance of the Transkei Development Corporation.

The basic task of the Corporation is to develop the economy of the Transkei, including the planning, financing and implementation of undertakings.

Incentives

It draws industrialists to Transkei with some strong incentives. These include:

- The Corporation will erect a building to the specifications of the industrialist, who leases the building. The annual rental for the first ten years is 5.8 percent of the construction cost. After the ten-year period the Corporation may increase the rental at its own discretion.
- The Corporation can finance up to 50 percent of the capital required for machinery, equipment and working capital. The annual interest charged during the first ten years is 2.8 percent. After expiry of this period, this may be increased at the discretion of the Corporation.
- Altogether 30 percent of the value of the manufacturing machinery and equipment and 50 percent of the wages paid to Transkeian employees in the first seven years after establishment can be deducted from tax payable. If the industry is not liable for tax during the initial years of operation, these amounts can be claimed in cash.
- The Corporation makes housing available to key personnel at an annual rental of 2.5 percent of the cost of the dwellings.
- An industrialist who relocates his factory or part thereof from the PWV or Durban-Pinetown area will be fully compensated for the direct costs.
- A railage rebate of 40 percent is offered on goods manufactured in Transkei and railed out of the area and a rebate of 50 percent is offered on manufactured goods shipped from East London harbour to other South African ports.
- In respect of projects involving a total investment of more than R3m, concessions will be considered on merit.

The Transkei Development Corporation has made significant progress with the industrial development of the Transkei in the past year, says Mr Roy Gammie, managing director of the Corporation.

Optimistic

A total of 14 new industries representing an investment of R15.6m have been established. About 1 000 job opportunities for Transkeians have been created.

Mr Gammie is optimistic that more South African and overseas investors will in the near future invest in Transkei as a result of the upturn in the overall economic conditions in Southern Africa.

Recently I visited some of these pioneer industries in Transkei.

They represented textile and clothing, woodwork, engineering and agricultural factories, started by Taiwanese, German, Italian and South African businessmen.

Mr Andrew Ou, a Taiwanese industrialist, pointed out that the tax concessions were highly competitive compared with concessions granted in other regions in the world earmarked for development.

President Matanzima points to three advantages which the Transkei offers:

- Ample labour
- Ample water and electricity
- No trade unions.

"We," he says, referring to the Transkeians, "live a very normal life."

However, some exporters appear to be battling against the rising value of the rand (which means that their exports earn less overseas) and the lack of export incentives. Export incentives only apply to South African exporters.

Mr Cecil Kessler, owner of the Chet group of companies with most of its interests in Transkei, threatens to stop exports of a R30m West German order by March next year should he get no relief.

Another problem is the high rate of personal tax for people in the higher income groups. "It is killing," says Mr Gammie. It keeps managerial talent out of the country.

These industries, which have mushroomed from the veld in recent years, could be but the beginning of industrial development in Transkei.

But without development of its own resources such as agriculture, regional growth seems set to remain patchy, its workforce largely dependent on the South African labour market, and its industrial growth the result of subsidised investment.

FURTHER PROPOSALS OF WIEHAHN COMMISSION ON LABOR RELEASED

Details of Recommendations

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 25 Nov 80 p 7

[Text]

FAR-REACHING recommendations relating to the employment, social security and the health of workers in South Africa are contained in the report of the Commission of Inquiry into Labour Legislation (parts 3 and 4) released in Pretoria yesterday.

According to an accompanying white paper to the Wiehahn Commission report, the Government is in earnest in its efforts to bring about the required changes by means of the necessary legislation as soon as possible.

"An attempt will be made to have as much of the legislation as possible ready for tabling during the 1981 session of Parliament."

Sheltered work

Part three of the report deals with the existing sheltered employment schemes, the wage subsidy schemes, the question of subsidising workshops for the blind and the position regarding the employment of handicapped persons.

Part four also contains far-reaching recommendations relating to the amendment and remaining of the Factories, Machinery and Building Work Act, 1941, its consolidation with the Shops and Offices Act, 1964, and the provision in the new Act for the safety aspects relating to wiring and wiring work in regulations under the Act.

Regarding part three, the Government has accepted that:

- There should be an improvement in the quality of employment and vocational guidance services.
- The Government accepted this recommendation, but stressed that the rate at which this development would take place would be determined by the availability of funds and accommodation.
- There should be an investigation by the National Manpower Commission into the system of employment in South Africa.
- There should be compulsory registration of work-seekers and utilisation of employment and vocational services.

The Government also accepted a recommendation that there should be a utilisation of employment services by the public sector, except that the South African Police, because of its particular staff needs and suitability requirements as well as the security screening that has to be carried out before employment, will have to continue its own recruitment efforts.

The South African Defence Force at present also has its own recruiting offices throughout the country, and the Government has decided that these should also be continued.

The Government also accepted a recommendation that the existing sheltered employment scheme should be expanded, but pointed out that the rate at which implementation could take place would depend on the funds available and on orders for work which could at present be received only from State and State-aided institutions and provincial administrations.

As insufficient orders for work were received from this source the possibility of carrying out work for private undertakings in sheltered employment factories would have to be investigated.

The Government further accepted that:

- The sheltered employment scheme should be modernised and reviewed;
- control of the sheltered employment scheme should not be enforced by legislation;
- the wage subsidy scheme should be reviewed and modernised to cater for all population groups;
- the wage subsidy scheme should continue to operate and be controlled by the Department of Manpower Utilisation;
- serious consideration should be given to improving the present rates of remuneration;
- the present procedures relating to workshop for the blind be retained, but that the subsidisation by the Department of Manpower Utilisation be extended to all workshops for all population groups;
- legislation should not be introduced at this stage to compel employers to employ a certain percentage of handicapped persons, but that attention should be given to the provision of appropriate incentives to encourage employers to employ handicapped persons in large numbers;
- the position in regard to the employment of handicapped persons should be constantly monitored with a view to the introduction of suitable legislative provisions should these prove necessary;
- the social security schemes negotiated under the auspices of industrial councils should continue to operate and should be strongly encouraged, and that;
- all population groups should be represented on unemployment benefit committees.

On the recommendation by the commission that the abolition of the wage ceiling be examined by the Unemployment Insurance Board, the Government said it was doubtful whether this was desirable, but the Government had no objection to such an investigation.

The Act in any case makes provision for the wage ceiling to be amended.

The government also agreed that:

- The introduction of contingency schemes to alleviate unemployment be given top priority by the Unemployment Insurance Board in conjunction with the National Manpower Commission; and
- the various administrative problems and other matters raised be attended to by the Unemployment Insurance Board.

The Government accepted a recommendation that all population groups, as well as appropriate specialists, be granted representation on the Unemployment Insurance Board, subject to the proviso that the specialists as recommended, like actuaries and economists, would only take part in proceedings of the board in an advisory capacity when this was considered necessary and that they would not be entitled to vote because the composition of the board is based on equal representation of employers and contributors.

The Government rejected as undesirable the commission's recommendation that a Workmen's Compensation Board consisting of all population groups and appropriate specialists be established to exercise functions in respect of the act similar to those of the Unemployment Insurance Board in respect of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

It also rejected recommendations that:

- The Workmen's Compensation Board be entrusted with the hearing of appeals and objections, and
- The Workmen's Compensation Board continuously review the practical administration of the Act and the compensation payable in terms thereof.

The Government accepted recommendations that:

- In order to rationalise the efforts regarding occupational health and safety, a Directorate of Occupational Health and Safety be established within the Department of Manpower Utilisation to take over and control as much as possible of the existing State machinery at present engaged in this task and to coordinate the efforts of other organisations.

Control of Migrant Workers

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 20 Nov 80 p 6

[Article by Patrick Laurence]

[Text]

NEIGHBOURING states are certain to resist South African plans to deport migrant workers who take part in illegal strikes, Dr Deon Geldenhuys, of the Institute of International Affairs, said yesterday.

His prediction was given immediate backing yesterday when Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, Chief Minister of KwaZulu and leader of the Inkatha movement, condemned plans to apply a similar policy to South Africa's black homelands.

Dr Geldenhuys made his forecast in response to intended changes in South African labour legislation which the Minister of Manpower Utilisation, Mr Fanie Botha, outlined to newsmen.

A key point related to migrant workers from neighbouring states and homelands.

The right of migrant workers to participate in trade union activities would be enshrined in law, but in return, South Africa wants to persuade neighbouring governments to agree that migrant workers should not take part in illegal strikes — and if they did, they should be deported.

Dr Geldenhuys said: "If the neighbouring states enter into the proposed agreements, it will imply approval of South Africa's labour legislation, which is seen as a vital element in the socio-economic order."

Rather than confer "legitimation on South Africa's labour legislation", the neighbouring states — Botswana, Lesotho, Swaziland, Mozambique and Zimbabwe — would resist attempts to persuade them to sign formal agreements, he predicted.

But he conceded that, to the extent that they depended on South Africa to provide work for their growing populations, they would be vulnerable to South African pressure.

However, these states had participated in moves to set up a counter-constellation to South Africa's proposed "Constellation States", he said.

Dr Gavin Maasdorp, of the University of Natal, described the relationship between South Africa and neighbouring suppliers of workers as one of interdependency, which meant the states could counter moves to get them to sign unwanted labour agreements.

Though there had been a sharp reduction in South Africa's dependence on foreign labour since the mid-1970s, it still relied on some foreign workers — particularly skilled Lesotho migrants on the mines, said Dr Maasdorp.

According to figures quoted by Dr G M E Leistner, of the Africa Institute, there were more than 327 000 registered foreign black workers in South Africa in 1978, of whom more than 208 000 were in mining and quarrying.

In briefing newsmen, Mr Botha made it clear that it was the intention of his department to seek the same sort of "illegal strikers" agreement from leaders of South Africa's "homelands".

He has had a rebuff from Chief Buthelezi.

"I have espoused the formation of black trade unions, but under no circumstances will I be a party to any agreement which makes punitive deportation of members of these unions a matter of agreement between me and the South African Government," said Chief Gatsha.

"No member of any other race group is subject to deportation, and I do not see why Africans should be singled out for this kind of arbitrary action by the Government.

"It is iniquitous to try to use blacks who are heads of their governments against their own people . . . the deportation plan is a sting in the tail which will not help South Africa against the worldwide trade union movement."

NEW LAWS PLANNED TO CURB ILLEGAL STRIKES

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 8 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by Drew Forrest]

[Text] The Government is drawing up tough new laws to curb the wave of illegal industrial strikes.

Also planned are reforms to make union registration and the official bargaining system more palatable to black unions.

The proposed changes--announced by the Minister of Manpower Utilisation, Mr Fanie Botha, in a policy speech in Johannesburg yesterday--will form part of a single consolidated law on labour relations to be introduced during the next parliamentary session.

Details of the legislation were still being sifted by the National Manpower Commission, Mr Botha said.

He told a large group of top businessmen that the Government had to uphold the "principle of order and discipline in the manpower field." To this end legislation curbing illegal strikes would have to be introduced.

The Government would seek bilateral agreements with independent black states providing for the immediate deportation of contract workers from these states.

Tighter controls would be imposed on union strike funds, he said.

The "subsidisation of strikes by external forces and bodies" would have to stop.

The Government was considering ways of extending control over strike ballots so that ballots could not be conducted by those who instigated strikes. Although he did not give details, the Minister said that measures aimed at curbing union political activities were likely.

New laws would also take account of the views of some black unionists and progressive employers who felt that the current framework of labour law was too restrictive.

Among reforms envisaged are:

--The right of unions to set conditions for membership and the appoinement of executive members. At present unions need ministerial permission to register on a non-racial basis.

--An end to the discretionary powers of the Minister and the embodiment of trade union rights in law.

--The extension of registered union rights to foreign contract workers.

On the issue of whether employers should deal with unions which reject registration, Mr Botha said unions would not be forced to register. But he made it clear that in the interests of "good order" all unions should be brought "under the discipline" of the proposed law.

Employers should use their "leadership qualities" to guide unions to registration, he said.

CISKEI DENIES CRACKDOWN ON TRADE UNION

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 7 Nov 80 p 5

[Article by Chris Freimond]

[Text]

TWO trade unionists detained in the Ciskei this week were arrested because of alleged involvement in student unrest and not for union activities, the secretary of the Ciskeian Intelligence Service, Brigadier Charles Sebe, said yesterday.

The men, both senior officials of the South African Allied Workers Union (SAAWU), are Mr Thozamile Gqweta, the national organiser, and Mr Sifa Njikalana, secretary of the East London branch.

Brig Sebe denied yesterday that the detentions were part of a crackdown on the union by Ciskei authorities.

"Their arrest has nothing to do with trade unionism. They are involved in student protest in the Ciskei. We are up to our necks with student protest in the Ciskei," he said. Their activities were being investigated, and it was possible they would be charged.

Brig Sebe attacked "Marxist" agitators, whom he claimed were using the students ostensibly protesting against "Bantu education" — to cause civil unrest.

"We are prepared to clamp down on any Marxists. Change will not be brought about by Marxists, but by the internal people."

He said his government's attitude to trade unions had been spelt out in the past, and he was not prepared to repeat it.

In February, Mr Gqweta was refused permission to open a union office in the Ciskei.

An appeal to Brig Sebe for assistance was turned down, and Mr Gqweta claimed that he had said that he and the Ciskeian Government were against unions in the homeland.

Brig Sebe later denied this, but was quoted as saying he believed trade unions in the Ciskei were "redundant".

The general-secretary of the SAAWU, Mr Samuel Kikine, denied earlier this week that Mr Gqweta was involved in student affairs.

Mr Gqweta's devotion to his union duties left him no time for student politics, Mr Kikine said.

NEW ORGANIZATION FORMED TO PROMOTE TRADE WITH PORTUGAL

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 25 Nov 80 p 8

[Article by Aida Parker]

[Text]

ALTHOUGH unofficial estimates place the number of Portuguese-speaking residents in South Africa at 600 000, there has until now never been a Portuguese-South African Chamber of Commerce and Industries.

With the assistance of the South African Ambassador in Lisbon, Mr W Maian, and Mr Orlando Damasio, SAA's Sales and Administrative Officer for Portugal, this major gap has now been closed.

The new chamber, which has already signed up 200 members in Portugal, faces a formidable task.

Despite the strong person-to-person links between the two countries, the trade connection has remained singularly static.

According to Safto in 1979 South Africa imported a total of R14,1-million worth of goods from Portugal, while South African exports to that country stood at R57,6-million.

According to the National Statistics Institute in Lisbon, South African imports represented a mere 0,53 percent of total Portuguese imports; while Portuguese exports to South Africa represented 0,4 percent of total Portuguese exports.

Mr Damasio, who came to South Africa to complete the formal arrangements for the new link-up on this side, said that while South Africa had concentrated heavily on trade links with Latin-American countries in recent years it had tended to neglect Spain and Portugal.

"Through the new chamber we hope to correct that. We will conduct information campaigns in both countries. We will maintain regular contact with both the South African and the Portuguese governments and with Assocom, the Handelsinstituut and other important groups in commerce and industry.

"We also intend to arrange for the exchange of trade missions, visits of prominent people in both the commercial and industrial sectors and to organise conferences.

"Through its information services the chamber will acquaint members of import-export opportunities, of exchange control requirements in both countries and transport facilities.

"One problem in particular we wish to tackle as soon as possible is customs tariffs. Customs duties on both sides are at present prohibitively high in many categories."

Mr Damasio said the chamber would exhibit at the Portuguese Pavilion at the next Rand Show; and, for the first time in many years, South African industrial and commercial firms will be represented at the Lisbon International Fair, to be held in June next year.

The address of the Portuguese-South African Chamber in Portugal is Ninth Floor, 182 Avenida da Liberdade, Lisbon 1000.

RE-REFINEMENT OF USED OIL SAVING MILLIONS OF LITERS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 27 Nov 80 p 21

[Article by Gordon Knowler]

[Text]

ABOUT 45-million litres — 70 percent of used oil in South Africa — is re-refined by the country's seven private refineries.

Biggest among the users of the re-refined product are the State, mining houses and transport companies, according to Nick Kruger, general manager of Chemico, the largest of the refiners, with factories in the Transvaal, Cape and Natal.

He said the other 30 percent of the oil was mainly held by the farming community and the "do it yourself" motorist and this was the sphere from which any additional used oil had to come.

Offence

At present the use of re refined oil in this country represented a saving in foreign exchange of about R7-million. The collection of used oil had been had been helped by the promulgation in July this year of an act making it an offence to waste or burn used oil.

A new nationwide collection organisation, Oilkol, has been formed to assist with the collection of used oil, acting on behalf of the refineries.

Collection

Mr Kruger said Chemico had three refineries in the group, and the other four were Transvaal Oil, Condor and Durol in the Transvaal, and Lubex Oil in Natal.

Farmers could assist with the collection of used oil by delivering it to their co-operatives where it would be collected by the collection agencies.

Mr Kruger said about 30 percent of the oil was lost during the processing. This necessitated first dehydrating the oil to remove the water, followed by an acid clay treatment to remove the old additives, filtering and then the re-blending process.

Refiners were paying up to R12 for a 200 litre drum of used oil but, said Mr Kruger, transport cost was high. Supermarkets were also playing their part in the collection of oil.

PRODUCERS CAUTIOUS ON COAL EXPORTS TO TAIWAN

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 20 Nov 80 p 15

[Article by John Mulcahy]

[Text]

SOUTH African coal producers obviously welcome any new demand for coal from Taiwan or anywhere else, but they are inhibited by the shortage of handling facilities, and on the other hand will be reluctant to put all their eggs in one basket.

Taiwan's Deputy Minister of Economics, Mr William Wei, announced this week that South Africa and Swaziland had agreed to export more coal to the Republic of China for power generation.

The Taiwan Power Co, the major coal consumer in that country, is negotiating with mines in South Africa for supply on a regular basis.

The Republic of China will require at least 30-million tons of coal annually within a decade.

South Africa's target export quota for coal is 44-million tons a year from 1985. The programme is for 27-million tons in 1981, 28-million tons in 1982 and further increases from 1983 to 1985. Maputo's coal export handling capacity is being increased to 8-million tons a year.

It is likely that a part of South Africa's exports is exported from Maputo, but there is not a significant amount of capacity available for further exports until the enlarged infrastructure is in operation.

The overseas coal market has been developed by SA producers over many years and any immediate increase in supplies to one customer would require a reduction in exports to others, possibly comprimising hard-won relationships.

The latest Government commission into the coal industry is expected to report early next year, and its findings will probably relate more to the problems faced by individual producers than to the overall view, which is seen by some producers as inadequate.

Further exportable coal production is expected to come on stream in Australia soon, and if this happens, the advantages for Taiwan in terms of transport savings alone are obvious. It is easier to leave a market than to regain one, and South African producers will undoubtedly look for strong guarantees before reducing sales to traditional markets to satisfy increased demand from Taiwan.

SAFETY OF CAPE VERDE AIRPORT QUESTIONED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 24 Nov 80 p 7

[Article by David Douglas]

[Text]

RUMBLES of what happens at Sal Island have been reaching AIR SPACE recently, and in the light of what a City businessman said about South African Airways using a foreign landing facility which was not equipped to handle large-scale aircraft emergencies.

Answering the complaint, a spokesman for SAA said that the airfield in question was no worse than most on the African mainland used by airlines flying to and from the Republic.

The businessman, who preferred to remain anonymous, was on a SAA jumbo jet which had to return to Sal Island airfield soon after take-off because its port inboard engine had caught fire.

The man said that the aircraft had just taken off from Sal when the captain said calmly: "There has been a small technical problem." It meant they would have to turn back and dump 84 tons of fuel.

The man went to watch the fuel streaming out of the wings and saw sparks coming from the port inboard engine. The captain said that a landing would be made at Sal in 10 minutes and that there was danger of fire.

"There was a deathly silence in the aircraft," he said.

The captain made an "incredible landing — he seemed to touch down like a feather". After a 12-hour delay, the journey was continued.

While he had only praise for the pilot and the cabin crew, who worked non-stop for 30 hours, he was worried about the lack of disaster facilities.

Several fire tenders had been present but only one had come to meet the aircraft, and "there are no rescue or medical facilities. At one stage there were three SAA jumbos on the tarmac. How can we allow such huge human cargoes to go through Sal without proper facilities?"

A spokesman for SAA said that any airline would prefer to have the most modern facilities wherever its aircraft landed, "but often one has the situation where an airport authority or government controlling a foreign airfield has gone as far as it can".

SAA had been using Sal since 1963, "and in this time we have found we can provide quite a high standard of safety and economy there.

"One thing we have adhered to is that we would not use airfields without safe facilities."

Sal did not possess many emergency facilities, but in time of need such facilities could be speedily flown in from neighbouring areas.

MITCHELL'S PLAIN COMMUNITY LEADER--The Western Cape region of the South African Society of Journalists (SASJ) yesterday protested against the banning of the Mitchell's Plain Community leader Mr Johnny Issel. A statement issued by the SASJ vice-president, Mr John Battersby, referred to Mr Issel's work as a full-time organizer of the community newsletter Grassroots and said the society regarded the banning as "an arbitrary and vindictive action." "In the absence of any explanation it must be seen as an attempt to cripple an important and widely respected publication. The society notes with alarm the history of banning and detention that Mr Issel has been subjected to. [Excerpt] [Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 24 Nov 80 p 13]

FATTIS, MONIS UNION RECOGNITION--One year after the Fattis and Monis strike and boycott ended, the firm has recognized the workers' unregistered union and negotiated an agreement with them. In a statement issued at a press conference in Cape Town yesterday, Mr Jan Theron, secretary-general of the African Food and Canning Workers' Union and the Food and Canning Workers' Union, praised Fattis and Monis, and particularly Mr Peter Moni, for their "brave step" in recognizing the union. The statement said the agreement placed the pasta firm in the vanguard of progressive employers. It recognized the union as spokesman of the coloured and African workers at the company's Bellville plant, the site of the original dispute, and at Isando, Johannesburg. "No distinction is made between the registered union, legally for 'coloureds' only, and the unregistered union, for Africans--a division forced upon the union by the segregatory labour laws." The first part of the agreement, a recognition agreement of indefinite duration, provided facilities for the union and for the recognition of a union committee elected by the workers under the auspices of the union. The committee would have regular meetings with management instead of the discredited liaison and works committees. The second part related to wages and conditions of work, to apply at both factories. "The minimum wages for a general worker from November 1 will be R45 and in case of women R40 a week. [Excerpt] [Capetown THE CAPE TIMES in English 15 Nov 80 p 1]

PRIEST FLEES TO BOTSWANA--Gaborone--The banned rector of St. Mary's Anglican Church in Orlando East, the Rev. Drake Tshenkene, has arrived in Gaborone after fleeing South Africa. He left the country two weeks ago by skipping across the border into Lesotho and from there flew straight to Botswana. His family--a wife and two young children--went straight to Gaborone from Johannesburg. Mr Tshenkene was detained during the South African Police crackdown on Black Consciousness groups in October 1977 and spent about 13 months in jail. After his release he was banned to the

Johannesburg district. He is to continue his studies at the University of Glasgow and is awaiting a visa from the British authorities. [Text] [Johannesburg THE STAR in English 17 Nov 80 p 3]

MATANZIMA WARNING TO STUDENTS--Umtata--The Transkei Prime Minister, Chief George Matanzima, yesterday urged all Transkeian students who left the University of Fort Hare during this year's class boycotts, to re-apply for admission to the university for 1981. Chief Matanzima also directed a stern warning to Transkeian students at Fort Hare to abide by the rules and regulations of the university to avoid being dismissed. "I have no doubt that the University of Fort Hare will show the same benevolence in this matter as in the past and will favourably consider the applications for re-admission. "The schools unrest which flared up in many areas in South Africa, and particularly at Fort Hare, during 1980 ruined the academic careers of many Transkeian students, some of whom were Government bursars. "Government funds cannot, however, be expended on futile exercises," he said. Chief Matanzima said it was appropriate to reflect on the problems of 1980 and to instil new attitudes in the country's youth for the year 1981. His government had made available every year a large number of bursaries for fulltime study at various South African universities in an endeavour to improve Transkei's human potential.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 26 Nov 80 p 8]

TRANSKEI RELEASE 'POST' JOURNALIST--The Post journalist, Mr Marcus Ngani, who was detained last week in Transkei, was released yesterday and immediately deported to South Africa. Mr Ngani, who was based in Umtata, was arrested on Wednesday last week and held incommunicado. He was the fourth journalist to be detained in Transkei this year. All four have all been released without being charged. Mr Ngani was declared an undesirable person under the Transkei Aliens Act and an order for his deportation was signed in Umtata yesterday by the Interior Minister, Miss Stella Sigcau. His Transkeian citizenship papers were also withdrawn by Miss Sigcau. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 7 Nov 80 p 3]

UNION LEADER MPETHA DETENTION--The Attorney-General, Mr D.G. Rossouw, this week confirmed that investigations were in progress concerning Mr Oscar Mpetha, 71, the detained national organizer of the African Food and Canning Workers' Union. However, he said no decisions had yet been made on what might happen. There were a number of matters that had to be followed up. He confirmed that part of the investigations involved the Terrorism Act, but as far as he knew, no charges had been laid. Mr Mpetha, chairman of Nyanga Residents' Association, was detained on August 13 with the vice-secretary of the NRA, Mr Leon Mqhakayi, a day after he made a statement to the press that the confrontation of the police with "pirate" taxis sparked off the violence near Crossroads in August 11. FOUR ANC MEN JAILED--Pretoria--Four members of the banned African National Congress (ANC) have each been sentenced to six years' imprisonment with four years suspended for five years, in the Odi Regional Court for being in possession of illegal ANC pamphlets. Alpheus Mathope, 23, Karabo Madiba, 19, Gerald Seobela, 21, and Emmanuel Madiba, 29, all of Ga-Rankuwa, pleaded not guilty before Mr P.W. van Niekerk. PETROL BOMB INCIDENTS--A petrol bomb exploded in the Pretoria suburb of Erasmia early today damaging part of a shopping complex. The explosion, at about 4 am, damaged the exterior of a supermarket but quick action by police and the fire brigade prevented the blaze from spreading. The owner of the complex, Mr Fon Koutzayiotis, said today's attack was the second in 15 days. Another shopping complex nearby was damaged two weeks ago when a petrol bomb was placed on the roof during the night. "Somebody is out to get me. I have been in this area for eight years now and I own both shopping complexes. "I don't know who the attacker is, but I think he is white," Mr Koutzayiotis said. BOMB AT DRIVE-IN THEATER--The Police Directorate of Public Relations said yesterday that it was too early to tell if the White Commando had been responsible for the blast at the Baragwanath drive-in cinema at the weekend. A spokesman said the investigation was still in its early stages and it was not possible to say if the commando, which had claimed responsibility for a bomb blast at Pretoria University, was responsible. Afternoon newspaper reports said the White Commando claimed responsibility for the blast in the projection room of the drive-in, which had recently been opened to all races. Meanwhile Colonel Hennie Muller, Security Police chief for the Witwatersrand, confirmed yesterday that explosives were used in the blast. He said the police were still investigating and could not reveal the origin of the explosives. The explosion occurred early on Sunday morning. 'THE VOICE' EXEMPTION--The Voice newspaper has been exempted from being boycotted by Black readers and that its staff members take part in the present labour strike by the Media Workers' Association of South Africa, against English newspapers. One reason for the exemption is that The Voice is entirely a Black effort. That it is, wholly owned and controlled by the Black people themselves. Mwasa took the decision on Monday after having invited all media workers to join in the national strike. It has also called upon the Black readers not to buy any White-owned newspapers during the strike. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg THE VOICE in English 12-18 Nov 80 pp 1, 5]

INDIAN NAVAL TRAINING--Durban--Compulsory training for volunteer Indian national servicemen to the South African Navy will be extended from 11 months to two years from the beginning of next year. The two-year training is a prerequisite for those wishing to make a career in the Permanent Force, and apart from other routine tests applicants must have a minimum academic qualification of a standard seven certificate. Revealing details for the recruitment of Indians into the navy, Commander I. Manning of the Naval Corps in Durban said the intake would be restricted to about 225, and those between the ages of 16 and 21 would be eligible. "I want to assure prospective applicants that once they qualify for the Permanent Force they could rise to the highest rank in the navy." While Indians wanting to make a career in the Permanent force can rise to the highest rank in the Navy, those with inclinations for the other branches of the armed forces are prevented from joining the Army or the Air Force through government legislation. However, Commander Manning said, those in the Permanent Force undergo the same training as their white counterparts and enjoy the same facilities both in Durban and at naval headquarters in Simonstown.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 28 Nov 80 p 8]

MULDER-HNP CONTACTS--The Herstigte Nasionale Party and Dr Connie Mulder's National Conservative Party have progressed towards an election pact for the coming by-elections. Dr Mulder has twice met the HNP leader, Mr Jaap Marais, to negotiate the pact, says Pretoria sources. It seems that the two parties will not oppose one another in any of the by-elections expected to take place in March or April next year. But the number of seats to be contested by the HNP will far outnumber those contested by Dr Mulder's party. The spokesmen said they expected the pact to take the form of an understanding rather than written agreement. "It could be expected that some HNP members would not want to vote for Dr. Mulders' party, and vice versa," one spokesman said. [Text] [Johannesburg THE STAR in English 7 Nov 80 p 9]

THIRTEEN SCHOOL COMMITTEES DISBANDED--Port Elizabeth--The Department of Education and Training has disbanded 13 school committees at boycott-hit schools in the Eastern Cape and will hold elections for new committees here on November 30. The Port Elizabeth circuit inspector of Education and Training, Mr Steve Buys, said yesterday that the committees of schools in Port Elizabeth, Uitenhage and Grahamstown had been disbanded so that new ones could get a new mandate from parents to negotiate with the department on educational matters. Pamphlets had been distributed in the townships advising parents that they could participate in the elections at the schools where their children were enrolled. The chairmen of some of the committees said that they had received letters from the department saying that the committees had been disbanded with effect from November 13. Two weeks ago they had received letters saying that the Minister of Education and Training, Dr Ferdie Hartzenberg, might disband the committees "as a result of the events which led to the closure of your schools." FARMER PRICE INCREASE DEMANDS--Farmers will be clamouring for even bigger price increases next year to compensate for what are expected to be record production cost levels, a South African Agricultural Union spokesman said in Pretoria yesterday. This year the prices of fertilizers, animal feeds, vehicles and vehicle parts, seed and other production-linked costs rose by a conservative 18%, and farm requisites by 26%. Demands for increases in Government-administered food prices will be lodged in the first half of next year by maize, dairy, wheat and other producers--and it is certain their demands, at least to the limit of higher costs, will be met. The SAAU spokesman said on a base of 100 in 1970, agricultural prices had risen to 274.9 on the index last year. Farm requisite prices rose to 331, while between 1975 and 1979 producer prices rose by only 44%, and farm requisite prices by 68.9%. The SAAU food basket for August--it includes grain products, all meats--including poultry, cooking oils, dairy products, fruit and vegetables--for an average white home cost R149.60. Of this amount the farmer got an estimated R80.92--54.1% of the family's expenditure. [Excerpt] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 7 Nov 80 p 3]

SHIP REPAIR INDUSTRY--Despite a 15 percent increase in repair costs in South Africa in the past few months. Durban and Cape Town are still recognized universally as the cheapest marine repair depots in the world. The main competitor is Singapore, since prices at Taiwan increased 47 percent in the same period to make them comparable with Hong Kong. A new wage determination influenced prices in South Africa in the past year but the level of repair costs here is still about 60 percent below that of Britain and Europe. The flow of repair contracts through South Africa is likely to increase as a result of the competitive prices. South African depots have been hard-pressed in recent weeks to provide reasonable service to clients because of the acute artisan shortage, however. The snowballing of industry and the number of other jobs which offer continuity of employment compared with the feasts and famines of the ship repairers leads to problems when port facilities are under pressure. The R300 000 bottom repair contract in the dry dock to the Norwegian liner Thor 1, and the R600 000 refit to the rig tender Dave Dodge have drawn heavily on available artisan resources and the two main complexes are sharing burners and welders. ZIMBABWEAN TOURISTS, IMMIGRANTS--South Africa was swamped with Zimbabwean visitors last August, making up more than a third of total tourists, according to the Department of Statistics in Pretoria. There were 20 880 visitors from Zimbabwe out of a total of 61 109. AGREEMENT ON LAND MOVES--Senior South African Government officials and the Government of the Ciskei are in general agreement on the Van Der Walt Commission's proposals on Ciskeian land consolidation. This was announced by the minister of cooperation and development, Dr Piet Koornhof. The statement was issued by the Borough Council of King William's Town, a white town which, in terms of the proposals, is to be incorporated into the national state. It was the first time that the level of agreement between South African Government officials and the Ciskeian Government on Ciskeian land claims was made public. The land claims formed one of the cornerstones of the Ciskei comprehensive independence plan for the area. The statement said that the Southern Regional Committee, the Federal Consolidation Committee, the Commission for Cooperation and Development and the Ciskeian Government had reached unanimity with regard to proposals. Dr Koornhof emphasized that the South African Government had not yet made a final decision in this regard. He said that to speed up the final decision the Van Der Walt Commission would now be giving priority to further consultation with all those involved in the consolidation plan. He said that the 1980 Van Der Walt Proposals could as a result be considerably amended. [Text] [LD021102 Johannesburg International Service in English 0400 GMT 2 Dec 80]

BRIEFS

FOREIGN MINISTER REMARKS--Dar es Salaam--The foreign minister, Ndugu Salim Ahmad Salim, has said that Tanzania was looking forward to successful talks between racist South Africa and SWAPO on Namibia's independence to be held in Maputo. Speaking at a farewell dinner in honor of the outgoing Belgium ambassador to Tanzania, Mr Eric Kobia, Ndugu Salim expressed his optimism that the talks would end up with free elections in Namibia, paving the way for the country's independence. The minister called on all peace-loving nations to cooperate on the issue and urged apartheid South Africa to leave Namibia to allow for free elections and later independence to the United Nations trust territory. He said that Tanzania believed that Namibia's independence was not very far as a trend has already been set with the independence of Zimbabwe, which has been a joy to the international community as a whole. On relations between Belgium and Tanzania, the foreign minister said that there was great potential ahead for better bilateral relations. INTERVIEW WITH CEAO SECRETARY GENERAL

Niamey SAHEL HEBDO in French 3 Nov 80 pp 22, 23

["Exclusive interview" with CEAO Secretary General Moussa N'Gom after closing of CEAO Summit Conference, by Assane Sadou: "Our Austerity Budget Answers the Economic Conditions in Each State"]

[Text] [Question] Mr General Secretary, what are the most important decisions which have marked this Sixth CEAO [West African Economic Community] summit?

[Answer] Before answering your question, I wish to thank the media who covered this event. I thank you in the name of the Community for giving the people an opportunity to experience this conference.

To answer your question, I shall say that this summit is important because the heads of state have decided to continue. They have decided to continue at a time when one could have doubts about pursuing this small experiment of six states meeting in the CEDEAO [West African States Economic Community] and meeting again in the African Common Market after the Lagos summit. And it is significant that the last word at the Conference has been what President Senghor told me, "we shall pursue our effort." Until now, this effort has been measured in concepts, in intentions. Now, each state is able to measure what the Community can give to it immediately and in the near future. This, thanks to a quantification of exchanges. It has become possible to measure the impact of the implements of customs cooperation on the volume of our exchanges: it increased by 241 percent between 1977 and 1979. It is now possible for each country to measure what it can expect from the CEAO by looking at the first economic development operations which have given priority to the water. In fact, water supply is the priority of priorities in the five Sahel countries. It is now possible for each country to measure what it can expect from the Community because, for the first time, thanks to our community educational institutions, we are about to master our future development by educating--on our soil, with our own resources, in our environment--the future managers of the various sectors of our economy: underground, water resources, atmosphere, etc.

This is why we have firm hopes that we shall soon achieve a true community, at the conclusion of the second stage in the progress of our institutions, which shall start on 1 January 1986.

[Question] Mr General Secretary, could you be more precise concerning the decision on the free circulation of goods produced in the Community, without any restrictive quotas?

[Answer] Our objective--to create a customs union--supposes the free circulation of goods, the free circulation of individuals and property, the free circulation of services. Until now, our primary objective has been the free circulation of goods, so as to establish commercial exchanges which would provide us with resources for our development. This was made possible by the regional cooperation tax which, when granted to a product and to a company, makes it possible for this company to export to the other countries and makes it possible for the exported product to be regarded as a product of the community, i.e. to be subject only to a regional cooperation tax and no other, except for internal taxes.

In certain sectors which are highly sensitive to inter-community competition, especially the textiles, we noticed that protectionist reflexes would occur here and there to answer well-defined national needs resulting from economic conditions.

For some time now, disputes have been examined bilaterally and more and more frequently they are settled by mutual agreement. However, we do not wish to progress from agreement to agreement until Article 5--guaranteeing the free circulation of goods-is emptied of its content. This is why there has been a firm reminder that, if the Community is going to continue, we must maintain the fundamental principle of the freedom of exchanges. Agreements can be tolerated but the states must come back to the orthodox text and take the necessary steps. We all know that this depends mainly on differences in development policies. As long as our investment codes and internal taxation systems have not been harmonized, there will always be a disposition of global taxes. This is why these agreements can still be understood even though not justificatory.

It has also been requested that exchange evaluation be improved by a census of national statistics departments which must make it possible to get a clear picture of exchanges and to make all commercial surveys necessary to improve the regional cooperation tax and the Community development fund.

Finally, 1 January 1986 has been maintained as the deadline to arrive at a customs union, i.e. a common external tariff. Any product which would enter the Community's customs territory would have to pay the same tax at all points of entry. Inside the Community the taxes would be the same.

[Question] Mr General Secretary, the Council of Ministers has recommended that the Secretariat no longer grant compensatory settlements to the states who have not paid all their dues. What are the states and the amounts involved?

[Answer] At the level where I am, I do not have the figures. First, let me state the problem. You know that our Community lives only from its resources which are the Community Development Fund and the operating budget.

The economic conditions which have prevailed in the past two years have hardly induced the states to pay their dues on time.

President Kountche, with his usual severity, has made a point of reminding the states--which should pay their dues on time--to take the necessary steps. Besides, this will enable them to receive compensatory payments. Until now, we did not look whether a state had paid its dues before paying back to it the deficit amounts, i.e. the "two thirds," but the state of our finances is making these gestures of solidarity increasingly harder, and we have started to put some pressure to arrange for these payments to be made first to those who have paid their dues.

You will readily understand that I cannot tell you that such and such a state have not paid their dues.

No state likes to be at fault, it is just a result of economic conditions. A schedule has been set for the payment of the dues.

[Question] The Conference has adopted an austerity budget. Why?

[Answer] It is an austerity budget because it corresponds to present economic conditions in each of the states and because, for the past three years, we have had budgets which have enabled us to determine what our actual requirements are. This budget has been submitted by the general secretariat. It is a result of the new flowchart which we have adopted this year and which had been under study since 1978; its objective was to rationalize the activities of the general secretariat by ensuring a certain interpretation of the structures, comparing them to the various sectors of activity: development, exchanges and management.

Through this budget, we want to show that we are decided to live through the same difficulties as the national administrations.

The budget includes several elements:

There is the operating budget, amounting to nearly 800 millions. There is the equipment budget which covers property, and finally the investment budget which covers the one third of the Community Development Fund devoted to community action and projects. The last part of the budget covers compensatory payments. These are said to total 8 billions.

[Question] Mr General Secretary, what are the actions of the Community that will affect the rural world during the coming years?

[Answer] We have a first program which deals with water supply to villages and pasture land. Then, we deal with several sectors of development which affect the rural world. For storage, we have a project in progress, in cooperation with CILSS [Inter-State Committee to Fight the Drought in the Sahel], to improve the storage of crops. We also have a program for agricultural mechanization to improve production conditions, and also a program dealing with seeds. We have therefore covered all four main production factors: water, seeds, tools and fertilizers.

The rural world will thus receive some assistance in two important fields. In the field of health we shall promote the traditional pharmacopeia, traditional medicine. Finally, we must develop the cultural and geographical resources of the rural world by developing tourism. Therefore, we are going to initiate touristic cooperation.

Essentially and in the near future, these are the various sectors for our activity in the rural world.

But we know that, while the rural world represents about 90 percent of our people, 90 percent of all profitable activitites are exerted by the urban population. This is why we must already now start working toward the final objective of our cooperation, namely industrial integration.

In Niamey, we have just adopted the guidelines for our first industrial integration program which, with the assistance of UNIDO [United Nations Industrial Developemtn Organization] is covering all sectors where industrial cooperation is feasible. The exploitation of our energy resources and the transformation of our crops, livestock and fishing production into an agricultural industry, both in the form of units, of small and medium-size enterprises, and also as regional units which will remain open to neighboring countries, especially this regional solar energy research and production center.

These are the activities on which we have been asked to orient most of our efforts, without neglecting other, auxiliary, sectors such as information, education, continuing education of cadres, as well as other operations of a national character in which FOSIDEC [Solidarity and Action Fund for the Development of the Western African Economic Community] should participate. You know, as the latest slogan will have it: "Small is beautiful." We must start with small actions before performing big ones.

CILSS SECRETARY HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE ON SAHEL PROJECTS

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 6 Nov 80 p 3

[CILSS Secretary's Press Conference on Sahel Projects: "We Are Looking for Money"; date and place not indicated]

[Text] On the occasion of the meeting of the executive committee of the Agrhymet program, the executive secretary of the CILSS [Inter-State Committee to Fight the Drought in the Sahel], Mr Seck Mame N'Diack, held a press conference during which he developed several themes concerning Sahel countries' priority projects. He also discussed the decrease in the international aid to Sahel countries and in the financing of some projects which are stagnating.

[Question] Mr General Executive Secretary, you have mentioned first-generation projects which have been financed to 40 percent. What are those that have been completed, and what are those that remain?

[Answer] These projects are extremely varied. I told you that, strategically, we have several priority sectors, especially agriculture. Agriculture includes the irrigated sector and the fluvial sector, it includes livestock farming, fishing, water supply to the villages and to pasture land, education, health; all these sectors, taken as a whole, cover about 620 projects in all. In each sector, two or three projects have been financed...

We have prepared documents showing all the projects that have been financed, those that have not, those in progress and those nearing completion. They only represent a sprinkling of the whole lot.

[Question] Mr Executive Secretary, when discussing the question of food in certain Sahel countries, one mentions projects for the construction of hydroagricultural dams which are now in progress and will both help solve the water problem and produce electricity. What would be the CILSS's participation in the financing of such projects?

[Answer] In agriculture, the CILSS's priority of priorities is to gain control over the water. As we have said, in the Sahel countries there is no longer a lack of water, just a lack of control over it.

Our objective is to give greater priority to irrigated crops which alone can protect us against climatic variations, and to let fluvial crops regress because they remain vulnerable to the whims of dry weather.

In gaining control over the water, dams are an essential element and, in fact, our major projects now involve river basins.

Certain very important dams are under study; others, on the other hand, are at the ground-breaking stage.

However, only water-controlling dams require enormous amounts of money. This is why we are asking for the assistance of donor countries to stress the idea of financing studies for these projects.

Unfortunately, we must recognize that our irrigated cultures have been marking time for some time, the financing of our irrigation projects has been marking time at the expense of CILSS countries.

Secondly, lacking means, the CILSS has taken again its steady amount of dossiers on an international scale; we are going around the world: Mexico, United States, United Nations, Canada. The incumbent president and myself went to Rome.

We are now going to Kuwait especially to mobilize all of the donors, and later on we shall go to The Hague, to the World's Food Conference.

The CILSS is getting active to face certain climatic hazards. And especially so with respect to planned irrigated cultures, to [solve] the problem of agricultural technology.

[Question] During your trip to Rome, the incumbent president made a plea to donor countries. What have been the results of this plea?

[Answer] The results have been very encouraging. I told you that financing had been stagnating and that assistance had decreased; this is because we had noticed some lack of interest from donor countries. We are now seeing again some international and general awareness concerning the problems of the Sahel.

With respect to food assistance, we have received assurances in Rome, and the donors are ready to face the situation. In other words, internationally, people have become increasingly conscious and, as far as food assistance is concerned, we [as published] are lavishing advice.

[Question] Could you remind us of the needs?

[Answer] I shall take last year. We had a deficit of 890 million tons. These 890 million tons were covered only to 19 percent. This year, estimates have not yet been made; we have asked to have them made as soon as possible so we can express our needs.

In view of the present situation, only Niger has had relatively normal rainfalls, the other countries have not been that lucky: i.e. the rains came early; at any rate, generally speaking, the situation is rather difficult.

[Question] What do you think of artificial rains?

[Answer] These are still at the experimental stage. They have been tried in some countries but the results were not conclusive because this science has not been mastered yet.

[Question] Mr Executive Secretary, could you tell us if the expansion of the Agrhymet Center has been adopted during your first working session? If it has, exactly what do you plan to do?

[Answer] The expansion work of this Center is one of the mainstays of our discussion. It is very likely to be adopted; it will have to go to the coordination committee and to be approved by the Council of Ministers to be held soon at Praia (Cape Verde).

[Question] Finally, Mr Executive Secretary, could you tell us if the Agrhymet Center is open to other countries, which do not belong to this sub-region?

[Answer] Yes, this Center is open to other countries, which do not belong to this subregion. We have accepted students who are not from CILSS countries, for instance from the Ivory Coast.

TOGO-NIGER JOINT COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

Lome LA NOUVELLE MARCHE in French 14 Nov 80 pp 1, 6

[Text] Within the framework of periodic consultations between the leaders of the two countries and in keeping with the policy of good relations followed by Togo and Niger, Col Seyni Kountche, president of the Supreme Military Council and chief of state of Niger, went to Togo on 12 November 1980 for the purpose of a visit of friendship and work to his brother and friend, Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, president and founder of the Rally of the Togolese People (RPT) and president of the republic.

The two chiefs of state were accompanied during their talks by other officials. Representing Niger were Daouda Diallo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation, Garba Sidikou, minister of higher education and research, and Jean Poisson, chief of staff of the president of the Supreme Military Council. The officials from Togo were Ayite Gachin Mivedor, member of the Political Bureau and permanent director of the RPT, Yaya Malou, member of the Political Bureau of the RPT and director of the Police School, Kpotivi Tevi-Djidjogbe Lacle, member of the Political Bureau of the RPT and minister of interior in charge of information, Barry Moussa Barque, member of the Political Bureau of the RPT and minister of mines, energy, hydraulic resources and public works, and Boumbera Alassounouma, member of the Central Committee and minister of third and fourth degree education and scientific research.

Presidents Eyadema and Kountche engaged in a lengthy discussion of the state and prospects of development, bilateral cooperation between the two countries and the major international problems in the world.

Bilateral Cooperation

Concerning bilateral cooperation, the two leaders expressed their satisfaction over the excellent relations of friendship and cooperation existing between the two countries and reaffirmed their firm determination to work tirelessly to strengthen them.

Presidents Kountche and Eyadema agreed to take all necessary measures in order to bring the Niger and Togolese peoples closer together and ensure their general well-being. They decided to call a ministerial meeting as soon as possible in order to examine the ways and means to ensure better circulation of persons and goods between the two countries. In this connection, the two leaders examined possibilities of intensifying their scientific, technical and cultural cooperation. With regard to the examination of international issues, it led to overall agreement, particularly on African problems such as the situation in Chad.

Chad

President Eyadema informed President Kountche of the recent work of the OAU ad hoc committee on Chad. President Kountche congratulated the OAU ad hoc committee under the leadership of Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema for the courage, devotion, patience and self-denial it has demonstrated in its many efforts and attempts to reach a peaceful settlement of the fratricidal war that has already caused so much loss of human life and material damage in that country. The Niger chief of state emphasized the fact that the different meetings of the OAU ad hoc committee have taken place in Lome, bearing witness to the determination of the Togolese chief of state to do everything possible to see that the opposing parties accept a ceasefire agreement in order to put an end to the suffering of the Chadian people.

Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema then congratulated the Niger chief of state for his neutrality as a signatory to the Lagos agreements and for the efforts he has made in order to make a contribution to the search for a solution to this grievous problem. The two chiefs of state are firmly convinced that only an African solution will make it possible to reconcile the opposing sides.

Actually, the two chiefs of state believe that the procedure for the ceasefire recommended by the OAU ad hoc committee is the best way to bring peace to Chad. They are therefore issuing a solemn appeal so that everyone will make a cooperation effort so as to facilitate the task of the OAU ad hoc committee. They reaffirm their conviction that the Lagos agreements constitute the proper framework for any lasting solution of the Chadian problem. They urgently ask all countries to abstain from any attempt to interfere or intervene in any way.

Western Sahara

Concerning the Western Sahara, the two chiefs of state recognized the need for the two parties involved to begin negotiations as soon as possible in order to put an end to the conflict.

Decolonization of Namibia

Col Seyni Kountche and Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema congratulate the secretary general of the United Nations for the tireless efforts he has made in order to bring about the decolonization of Namibia. They urge the Western powers to bring pressure on the racist authorities in South Africa so that they will understand that the time has come for Namibia to have independence and so that they will cease their dilatory maneuvers aimed at hindering the irreversible process of the decolonization of that part of Africa.

ECOWAS

The two chiefs of state noted with satisfaction the positive evolution of the activities of the Economic Community of West African States. Once again, they reaffirmed the confidence and hope they place in this regional organization which is called upon to play a prime role in the evolution of West Africa.

OAU Economic Summit Conference

The Niger and Togolese presidents appeal to all chiefs of state within the Organization of African Unity to coordinate their efforts and aid the secretary general of the OAU to find the ways and means of carrying out the proposal of the first economic summit conference of the OAU which met in Lagos, Nigeria, on 28 and 29 April 1980, to gradually establish an African common market.

International Problems; Iraqi-Iranian Conflict

The two chiefs of state expressed their great concern over the prolongation of the armed conflict between Iraq and Iran. They joined together in examining the effects of the war on the world economy and the economies of their countries. They appeal to these two countries to put an end to the conflict. They welcome the efforts at mediation undertaken by nonalined countries and the Islamic conference in order to halt the fighting.

Situation in Afghanistan

Once again they condemned the intervention of Soviet troops in Afghanistan, intervention which constitutes intolerable interference in the internal affairs of a sovereign nation and a flagrant violation of human rights and the rights of nations to determine their own fate in keeping with the UN Charter.

North-South Dialog

The two chiefs of state deplored the manifest bad will of certain wealthy countries. The establishment of a new economic and social order is a matter of justice and equity between nations. The continuation of the North-South dialog appears necessary to the two chiefs of state in order to avoid a general conflict between the rich and the poor and in order to ensure peace among the world's nations.

President Seyni Kountche thanked his brother and friend, President Gnassingbe Eyadema, the Rally of the Togolese People and the Togolese Government for the very warm and fraternal welcome reserved for him and his aides in Lama-Kara.

CONGO'S SASSOU-NGUESSO MAKES 'BUSINESS TRIP' TO ANGOLA

Brazzaville LA SEMAINE AFRICAINE in French 6-12 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] On 25 October 1980, Sunday, the Congolese Chief of State, Col Denis Sassou-Nguesso made a brief business trip to Angola, invited by the President of Angola, Jose Eduardo dos Santos.

The communique which announced this visit stresses the identity of points of view of the two Chiefs of State, concerning all problems discussed.

After a "long exchange of points of view about the experiences of the MPLA-Labor Party, Congolese Labor Party, the two parties agreed to research ways and means of reaching continued and harmonious development of our bilateral relations, based upon settled agreements."

The two parties "are engaged in continuing cooperation and strengthening the defense and security of common borders."

Analysis of the international situation has allowed President Sassou-Nguesso to become informed about the latest violations of Angolan territory by the South African Army and to condemn these acts. This analysis has also caused the two Chiefs of State to be concerned about what is going on in Namibia: The development of discussions between the UN Mission and the South African regime.

"In this crucial period of the Namibian people's fight against the outlaw South African, the two Presidents reaffirmed their support of SWAPO, the one and only legal representative of the Namibian people."

Concerning Chad, the two parties expressed their opinion on the Lagos agreements and manifested their concern in the face of a renewed outbreak of hostilities. They expressed their support of the National Union Government led by Mr Goubouni.

The two presidents also "reaffirmed their support of the right of the Saharian and East-Timor people to self-determination and their support of the fight of Palestine's Arab people.

The two Chiefs of State wish that the Iraq-Iranian conflict is solved by "peaceful means, in accordance with UN's and the Independent Movement's principles."

Talking about the new international economic order, President Dos Santos and President Sassou-Nguesso expressed their wish that it will be "progressist, free of exploitation and founded on the rights of the people to the protection of their natural resources."

Trade increase, technical, cultural and scientific cooperation, such are the wishes expressed by the two Presidents, in the frame of Inter-African cooperation.

CONGOLESE DONATION TO ALGERIAN EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Brazzaville LA SEMAINE AFRICAINE in French 6-12 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] The earthquake which put the Algerian Republic into mourning constituted one of the important items on the agenda of the Council of Ministers, presided by the Chief of State, Col Denis Sassou-Nguesso. An aide has just arrived from a visit to the Al Asnam disaster victims. The government spokesman presented the following report:

"The Council has decided to send the sum of 1 million dollars to the brother-government of the People's Democratic Republic of Algeria, that is, 210 million CFA francs. This modest sum, very modest indeed when viewed as a contribution to mass disposition, in view of the pending aid to Al Asnam disaster victims. This Congolese donation, despite its small amount must be perceived as the token of solidarity which has always marked and characterized friendly, fraternal and active camaraderie relations between the Congolese and Algerian peoples.

"This active solidarity, which has always borne fruits in normal times, in times of happiness, has never been forgotten in times of sadness and tribulation. The Congolese and Algerian people have wept in one breath and with the same emotion for Presidents Marien Ngouabi and Houari Boumedienne.

Today the Algerian mourning is also felt by Congolese masses. The Congolese people were stunned by news of the tragic event in Al Asnam. Despite geographic distance the Congolese people resolutely stand at the side of the Algerian people in this hour of grief and tragedy. The people remained attentive during all phases of the event and seize upon this occasion to renew their sympathy to their Algerian brothers.

GDR FOREIGN MINISTER RECEIVED BY KEREKOU, MAKES PRESS STATEMENT

AB041305 Cotonou Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 3 Dec 80

[Text] President Kerekou this morning received the GDR foreign minister, Comrade Oskar Fischer, who is heading his country's delegation to the People's Republic of Benin. Later, at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation, the East German minister signed a protocol accord between the German Democratic Republic and Benin. After the signing ceremony, he made the following statement to the press on the purpose of his visit:

[Begin recording in German with subsequent translation] Allow me to tell you that I was very happy to have the opportunity to meet this morning your respected president, Comrade Kerekou, with whom I had a thorough and cordial exchange of views. I also had the opportunity to deliver to him a personal message from Comrade Erich Honecker, secretary general of the Central Committee of the Socialist Party of Germany and president of the State Council of the German Democratic Republic. And I can tell you that Comrade President Kerekou received the message with great pleasure.

As I told you on my arrival, the aim of this first visit to the People's Republic of Benin as foreign minister is to deepen political cooperation after holding more consultations. And I can now assure you that we have been very successful in this field. We have already had a thorough exchange of views on international matters and all the talks were held in a frank and constructive atmosphere Taking part in these talks were, of course, the minister of foreign affairs and cooperation, the minister of trade, the minister of public works, housing and construction, the minister of popular justice, the minister of information and propaganda and the minister of higher education and scientific research. It was a regular exchange of information and experiences, an exchange which is quite natural and necessary between countries that wish to build something new and progressive.

The German Democratic Republic is a socialist state with a solid anti-imperialist tradition. The recognition of the GDR policies in the Republic of Benin gladdens our heart. The German Democratic Republic supports all those who militate and fight for peace, freedom and independence. [sentence indistinct] Since the People's Republic of Benin is an emancipated and anti-imperialist state, nothing can be closer than this great cooperation between our two countries. I can also assure you with pleasure that bilateral relations between our two countries are developing steadily; this can be seen in political, cultural and economic cooperation as well as in other fields of intergovernmental cooperation.

Concerning the relations between the Socialist Party of Germany and the People's Revolutionary Party of Benin, I could say that they played the role of a locomotive engine. [as heard] As far as the tangible results of this visit are concerned, we today signed a working plan between the two governments concerning cooperation in the cultural, scientific and technical fields for 1981 and 1982 as well as a protocol on the first session of the joint commission which met within the framework of the GDR-Beninese trade agreement. I think these documents and the exchanges of opinions and experiences which have taken place can further develop and perfect our relations.

Concerning international politics, we have noted a certain number of tensions caused by [word indistinct] policies. [sentence indistinct] We were of the opinion that efforts should be continued in favor of peace, disarmament and detente. We also agreed that the anti-imperialist solidarity should be strengthened. In this connection, I can tell you that as in the past the German Democratic Republic will ever remain a reliable partner. We are leaving your country with a feeling of satisfaction and I am anxious to wish the Beninese people new successes in the construction of their new life. [end recording]

FAN SPOKESMAN DISCUSSES SITUATION AFTER LIBYAN INTERVENTION

Dakar LE SOLEIL In French 7 Nov 80 pp 1, 10

[Interview with Mahamat Saleh, minister of finance and commissioner for foreign relations of Command Council of the Armed Forces of the North of Hissein Habre by Babaca Touri: "We Are Fighting the Regular Libyan Army"]

[Excerpts] "We are facing not the Chadians but the Libyan occupation army, of which 3,000 troops have invaded Chad since 19 October 1980."

This was an exclusive statement to LE SOLEIL made by Mahamat Saleh Ahmat, minister of finance and foreign relations commissioner of the Command Council of the Armed Forces of the North of Hissein Habre. Following his arrival in our capital last Wednesday, Hissein Habre's deputy, accompanied by Michel Froud, director of political affairs and information commissioner of the CCFAN [Command Council of the Armed Forces of the North], was received yesterday by Prime Minister Abdou Diouf.

[Question] The military situation in the northern part of Chad seems to have experienced changes in favor of FAP (People's Armed Forces) commanded by Mr Goukouni, according to sources of the National Union Government (GUNT). Do you confirm this change, particularly in Borkou, Ennedi and Tibesti provinces and Faya Largeau Prefecture?

[Answer] The situation in the north does not make us face the Goukouni forces but the regular Libyan Army which invaded Chad on 19 October 1980. The invasion occurred in three specific areas:

1. An initial contingent of 850 Libyan troops helicoptered from Sebha (Libya) were dropped 60 kilometers away from N'Djamena.

2. Other elements of the Libyan army attacked Faya Largeau from Libyan bases located on Chadian territory in Wour, Bardai and Zouar (BET).

3. The third point of penetration was Oumchalouba-Kalaide, in the northeastern part of the country.

There, the Libyan presence, which has been mentioned for some time, is quite factual. We have come here to bring proof, all the necessary specific, tangible and irrefutable proofs of the presence of 3,000 soldiers of the regular Libyan army which invaded Chad on 19 October. However, despite this direct and massive war declared by Libya, no changes on the terrain have taken place.

[Question] According to some sources the FAN seemed to be losing momentum in N'Djamena as confirmed by the strengthening of FAP cadres by mercenaries and the fact of Libyan intervention.

[Answer] I have already told you that we continue to maintain our position of strength on the military level, both in N'Djamena as elsewhere in the country. In N'Djamena itself the 850 Libyan soldiers who attacked the capital on 19, 20 and 21 October were thrown back and defeated by the FAN with the support of the population. The 6 October general offensive enabled the FAN to assume control over the gendarmerie, the air force area, and the airport sector, i.e., the key positions of the N'Djamena coalition. Furthermore, our forces have encircled the old French base in Farcha. We have not only retained these gains but have consolidated them since then. Everything I am telling you has been noted by the press. That is why the imaginary victories announced by the coalition do not excite us. Their purpose is, rather, to promote confusion and doubt concerning the Libyan presence in Chad. We left N'Djamena on 24 October and at that time there had been no changes in the northern part of the country or in N'Djamena.

[Question] In your view, what is Qadhdhafi looking for in Chad or in Africa? What could the result of the Goukouni-Qadhdhafi alliance be?

[Answer] We have always said that what Qadhdhafi wants is to occupy Chad, set up a puppet government and, using our country as a base, implement his dream of founding the "United States of the Sahel." As far as Chad in particular is concerned, Qadhdhafi would like total control over its considerable ground resources. We are certain, however, that this target will never be reached, for we are enjoying in our fight the total support of the population and we are certain of the victory of our struggle for the liberation and total independence of Chad.

[Question] What do you think of the recent charges leveled by Qadhdhafi against Niger and Mali?

[Answer] I would have preferred not to answer this question. Qadhdhafi is engaged in a diversion. He had already leveled the same charges against Chad. Once again, it is a diversionary maneuver aimed at concealing Qadhdhafi's basic target. By this means he hopes to mislead public opinion in order to be able to pursue his plan which, I repeat, is the military occupation of Chad and the conquest of the Sahel with our territory as a starting point. As to Goukouni, it is obvious that he is pro-Libyan. However, above all, he is a puppet in Qadhdhafi's hands. Without him he is nothing, he can do nothing. The proof is that he called for Qadhdhafi's troops as a result of our 6 October offensive.

[Question] Following the two Lome meetings, what point has been reached on the political level in the search for a negotiated solution? Could Lome II be considered a failure?

[Answer] The second Lome meeting was not a failure. The ad hoc committee of the OAU is continuing in the Togolese capital to make considerable efforts to restore the peace in Chad. The parties to the conflict also have their delegations in Lome. However, we must strongly emphasize that it was the very day of the second Lome meeting, i.e., of 15 October, that the Libyans mounted their action in Chad.

This clearly indicates that the coalition and its master do not want peace in Chad. Nevertheless, the efforts in Lome are continuing with our support. The key to peace in Chad, however, does not depend on us alone.

[Question] What is the specific reason for the obstructions which hinder the efforts of the OAU ad hoc committee on the Chad?

[Answer] The main obstacles blocking the peace are mainly three:

1. The legitimacy of the Chadian government based on the Lagos accords. This legitimacy is exclusively based on the acceptance of the various currents which were represented in the conclusion of the Lagos accords. No other interpretation is possible.

2. The role played by Benin, both as member of the control commission and as a country which could provide the neutral force in Chad, as stipulated by the OAU. We reject Benin which has officially opted in favor of the coalition. We shall accept Benin neither as member of the control commission nor as part of the neutral OAU force, for one cannot be both judge and plaintiff.

3. Libya, whose definitive condemnation we have demanded, for by massively and directly intervening in the Chad, it violated both the spirit and the letter of the Lagos accords and the OAU charter.

[Question] Therefore, what conditions would be required for a new basis for national reconciliation in Chad?

[Answer] The only solution to the Chadian drama is political. In order to achieve a political solution it is necessary, first of all, for the fighting to stop and a cease fire respected by all to take place. Then, all the signatories of the Lagos accords should consult with a view to finding a definitive solution.

Such a solution should eliminate any direct or indirect foreign interference in Chad. In our view, this is the way to be followed by all Chadians who want peace, freedom, and the preservation of the national integrity of their country. In other words, we must achieve the unification and reconciliation of all Chadian patriots in order to build a united and strong Chad.

[Question] It is said that following his latest tour of Africa, Hissein Habre has had difficulties in returning to his headquarters in N'Djamena. According to some sources he is blocked in north Cameroun and unable to cross the Chari River . . . .

[Answer] Should I bother to give you an answer? This should not even be asked, for it is a question, no more and no less, of imaginary rumors which, in fact, are proof of pure intoxication. Let me assure you that I entered N'Djamena with Comrade Hissein Habre and that it was he personally who directed our victorious offensive in the capital on 6 October. Actually, everyone knows that we can move in and out of N'Djamena at will and at all times.

[Question] What are the results of Hissein Habre's tour?

[Answer] The purpose of the trip was one of information and promotion of awareness. It was constructive and definitely consolidated the position of the patriotic forces abroad. It seems to us that the state of the Chadian drama, which is that of the Balkanizing and destabilization of the Chad, has been better understood by the African states and African public opinion. The number of such missions will be increased to the extent of our possibilities, involving both Comrade Habre and other officials. We believe that the drama experienced by Chad is not one of its people only but also the drama of Africa which has experienced unfortunate adventures such as those of Biafra and Katanga, for example.

REPORTS OF 'SECRET' ETHIOPIAN-ERITREAN TALKS

Negotiations Reported in Damascus

LD011551 Kuwait AL-WATAN in Arabic 21 Nov 80 p 13 LD

[Report by AL-WATAN correspondent: "Secret Talks in Damascus Between Eritrean Revolutionary Council and Ethiopia"]

[Text] London--Well-informed Western sources said here that secret negotiations have been taking place in Damascus for the past 3 days between representatives of the Eritrean Liberation Front [ELF] (the Revolutionary Council) and representatives of the Ethiopian regime. The sources said that the ELF wants to end the prolonged war against Col Mengistu Haile Mariam's regime, which is backed by the Soviet Union.

But the same sources said that the Eritrean Popular Liberation Front is not represented in these negotiations and is still opposed to a cease-fire and to negotiations with the Ethiopian regime. The sources add that some Revolutionary Council members who want to carry on with the war have recently joined the Popular Front.

The sources add that the reason for the Revolutionary Council's desire to negotiate with the Ethiopian regime is the losses its fighters suffered as a result of clashes throughout last month with Popular Front fighters.

Only 2 weeks ago Popular Front troops attacked one of the Revolutionary Council's major bases in the mountains north of Barentu and killed a large number of council forces. Two officers who were in the camp--(Muhammad Muhammad Dad) and (Fayi Shiklay) escaped to Sudan after the attack.

The Revolutionary Council delegation that went to Damascus for negotiations consists of Council Chairman (Ahmad Nur) and his deputy ('Id al-Idris). The Ethiopian regime is represented in the talks by two members of the ruling dergue.

Western sources add that officials from South Yemen and the CPSU attended the first meeting. In addition, the meeting was attended by Gian Carlo Pajetta, in charge of foreign policy affairs for the Italian Communist Party. Pajetta was holding contacts with the parties concerned with a view to ending the conflict.

The sources say that the proposed peace treaty provides for Eritrean fighters to hand in their weapons to the Ethiopian Army on arrival at specified assembly points

(as has happened in Zimbabwe). As for the Eritrean fighters who are in Sudan, they will be allowed to return to their homes after reporting to assembly points. All Eritrean prisoners, including the Popular Front fighters, will be released if they accept the peace treaty.

Under the proposed political settlement of the problem, the Ethiopian authorities will give the Eritreans the local administration of towns and villages but will not grant them political or military autonomous rule.

Eritrean Front Denial

LD221206 Kuwait KUNA in Arabic 0827 GMT 22 Nov 80

[Text] Kuwait, 22 Nov (KUNA)--One of the two largest liberation fronts in Eritrea has today denied reports which said that it is having secret negotiations with the Marxist Ethiopian Government with the Soviet blessing. The Eritrean Liberation Front, through its spokesman, said: "These claims are false and without any foundations of truth and are the concoctions of imperialist quarters and plotting elements."

Their spokesman was commenting on press reports from Khartoum that a delegation from the front left for Damascus to hold secret negotiations with representatives of the Ethiopian Government with the blessing of the Soviet Union which backs the government and with the participation of two representatives from the Italian Communist Party and the Government of South Yemen.

The spokesman stressed the aim of the Eritrean revolutionaries, who have been fighting for 19 years for the independence of Eritrea from Ethiopia. He said: "The Eritrean Liberation Front will not (?relinquish) in any event the national cause for complete liberation of Eritrea and will not exchange the national target of liberation and independence with any forms of political solutions which will not comply with the full and complete aspirations of the Eritrean people."

MENGISTU SPEAKS ON 'EXPANSIONISTS, SECESSIONISTS'

Strengthened Ties With Neighbors

LD292057 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 1700 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Excerpts] Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile Mariam today said that our revolutionary army would go to the extent of sacrificing lives to ensure proletarian peace and has lived up to this noble aim in the past 6 years of bitter struggle.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile Mariam, chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council and commission for organizing the party of the workers of Ethiopia and commander in chief of the revolutionary army, said this in an address he made while presenting awards and ranks to cadet officers who have completed their advanced military training.

In his address, the comrade chairman noted that our revolutionary army is advancing from one victory to the next on all fronts, adding that the doomsday of expansionists in the south and east and of secessionist bandits in the north is approaching and that the prophesied hopes of imperialism in Ethiopia were getting daily fainter. Hence, the comrade chairman said, the present weeks and months could be described as a period of mourning for our enemies.

The comrade chairman also stressed that our revolutionary army would take unwavering revolutionary measures against individuals taking bribes, robbing, cheating and committing subversive activities against the workers, and against imperialist agents and so-called heroes.

Noting that peace is among the basic principles of our revolution, the comrade chairman said the atmosphere of understanding with Sudan, Kenya and Djibouti is being strengthened after great efforts to live in peace and good neighborliness with countries surrounding us. In addition to this, he noted that steps are being taken to make possible cooperation in the fields of development that are of common interest to those peoples.

Relations With Somalia

LD251404 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 0400 GMT 25 Nov 80

[Interview with Mengistu Haile Mariam, chairman of Provisional Military Administrative Council; date and place not given]

[Excerpt] Comrade Chairman Mengistu has described the good relations linking the Democratic Republic of the Sudan, the Republic of Kenya and Socialist Ethiopia as an embryo or example and as constituting a first step for the other countries of the region.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile Mariam, chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council and of Commission for Organizing the Party of the Workers of Ethiopia and commander in chief of the revolutionary army, said this in reply to questions put to him by journalists of the Democratic Republic of the Sudan who had accompanied his excellency President Ja'far Muhammad Numayri, president of the Democratic Republic of the Sudan and of the SSU and commander in chief of the country's armed forces, on his visit. Comrade Chairman Mengistu noted in his statement on the strengthening of relations among the three neighboring countries that the application of tripartite relations at ministerial level was in response to the strong desire of the countries concerned. He expressed the hope that this desire on the part of their people would soon be realized.

Replying to a question on the prospect of improving relations between socialist Ethiopia and Somalia, Comrade Chairman Mengistu said that there is no doubt that the peoples of Ethiopia and Somalia wished to live peacefully together, in a friendly manner. However, members of the Somali ruling class did not have this kind of goodwill.

The comrade chairman added that prior to the occurrence of misunderstandings between the two countries, many alternative methods and steps had been taken by Ethiopia in its genuine search for peace. But Somalia's answer, he said, had been aggression and war.

He went on to say that as a result of the erroneous line pursued by the Somali ruling class, the peoples of the two countries had been dragged into a fire they did not want. Although damage was suffered by both, it was greater for the Somali people, he said.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu said that socialist Ethiopia had shown its wish to co-exist peacefully with Somalia by taking the necessary steps, without plans to avenge the wrongful steps the Somali ruling class had taken in their bid to implement their illegal expansionist aims, in violation of international agreements they had entered into.

The communist leader said that members of the Somali ruling class are even now committing acts which had catastrophic consequences for the peoples of the two countries.

He explained that they are not only worsening relations between the two countries, but also creating a dangerous situation for world peace by selling Somalia's territory to American imperialism.

He confirmed that Ethiopia would be ready for peace whenever Somalia created legitimate and favorable conditions for it.

Six Somali 'Bandits' Surrender

LD292036 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 1030 GMT 29 Nov 80

[Text] Six fully-armed Somalis, who had been among the bandits taking military training under the Somali ruling clique with the intention of disturbing the peace and realizing its expansionist aims in revolutionary Ethiopia, have surrendered this week to the Diredaw, Isa and Gurgura provincial administrative headquarters after escaping from their training camp.

The individuals affirmed that they had surrendered after realizing that the aims of the Somali reactionary ruling clique were futile and detrimental to the oppressed Somali masses.

Receiving these individuals, who surrendered peacefully, Comrade Abera Kebede, administrator of Diredaw, Isa and Gurgura Province, pointed out that the major aim of the revolutionary government was to administer the masses in a just, egalitarian, peaceful and democratic manner and accordingly to receive and welcome all those who want to live in peace and give support to them.

For his part, Dejazmatch (Ugal) Hasan Hirsi, chief representative of the Isa nationality, said that these and other individuals who had previously surrendered to the Ethiopian revolutionary government, were at present making a living leading stable lives without fear.

ELF LEADER REJECTS INTERNATIONAL REFERENDUM ON ERITREA

LD301334 Kuwait KUNA in English 1058 GMT 30 Nov 80

[Text] Kuwait, 30 Nov (KUNA)--A revolutionary organization fighting for the independence of Eritrea Sunday rejected a proposal announced by a rival faction to settle the Eritrean problem through an internationally sponsored referendum.

The leader of the Eritrean Liberation Front, Ahmad Nasser, in a statement to Kuwait News Agency said that his organization was not consulted about the proposals. These contain a seven-point plan announced by the People's Front for the Liberation of Eritrea in Khartoum a week ago.

He explained that the liberation front is not against a peaceful solution for the 20-year long Eritrean crisis. But it asks for negotiations with the Ethiopian regime without pre-conditions and not through a referendum.

Nasser accused the people's front of launching a major offensive against the liberation front's forces in cooperation with another faction fighting against Ethiopia, the People's Front for the Liberation of Tigre.

The people's front forms together with the liberation front the two strongest revolutionary groups struggling for the independence of the strategic region of Eritrea on the Red Sea.

The people's front had called on its proposals for holding a referendum in the region under the auspices of an accepted international committee granting the Eritreans the right to choose between full independence from Ethiopia, uniting with it or autonomy rule.

The proposals also included an item calling for a cease-fire before the referendum under the supervision of a committee formed by either the United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the Arab League or the non-aligned movement.

Nasser told KUNA that these proposals completely destroy the Eritrean revolution's representation of the Eritrean people.

He said "we refuse to have any referendum under any supervision except that of the Eritrean revolution."

He added "we are not against negotiating with the Ethiopian regime with a unified delegation representing the Eritrean revolution with no preconditions from either party. Representatives from the U.N., the Arab League and the Organization of African Unity could attend as observers," he said.

Casablanca L'AVANT-GARDE in French 20 Sep 80 p 10

[Text] The General Union of Workers of Eritrea held its Second National Congress on the liberated territories of their country 18 to 22 August.

The imperatives of the people's fight against colonialism dominated the congress. This was reflected in the final resolution which stressed "the necessity to continue the liberating battle and to sabotage all the plots aimed at continuing Ethiopian domination."

This congress, which was held on the eve of the 19th anniversary of the beginning of the armed struggle against the colonizer, adopted other resolutions supporting the peoples' fighting for liberty and social progress. BONGO CALLS FOR GREATER EFFICIENCY IN GOVERNMENT

Libreville L'UNION in French 7 Nov 80 p 4

[Text] At a recent Cabinet meeting, President Bongo told members of the government of his "disappointment over the fact that he was too often required to solve all problems, small or large, urgent or unimportant, by himself." This sad observation caused the chief of state to send to the prime minister and all other members of the government a circular, whose reception they must acknowledge, reminding them of his disappointment and asking them to assume more responsibility.

Aware that "such stewardship does not always follow," the chief of state nevertheless deplores the fact that "the lack of mobilization and failure to accept responsibilities are increasing within the government."

President Bongo sees three reasons for this lack of "diligence, rigor and efficiency" and explains the "demobilization" as follows:

"First of all, there is, we must admit, the indolence and more generally, the probable lack of awareness on the part of some. Then there is a certain discouragement due to the fact that people may sometimes have the impression that objections raised or problems brought up two or three times give rise to no reaction, even though these things are deemed serious. Finally, there is a certain feeling of helplessness when, with respect to problems having financial consequences, it is feared that the Ministry of Finance, which may not have responded to previous requests, might not approve.

"I believe that these last two justifications might cause some individuals to let situations get worse and to follow the 'policy of the abyss,' believing that when things are indeed worse, the chief of state will find or impose a solution, even if it implies the immediate release of large sums not included in the budget.

"This is obviously a poor policy. It is not only the 'policy of the abyss,' but that of 'forward flight.' It overloads me and often does so abruptly.

"In order to remedy this state of affairs, I have decided that interministerial meetings, even if very limited in scope, will be held more frequently, at the rate of two a month, so as to handle certain matters within their competence or to propose solutions.

"These meetings will be presided over by the prime minister and will bring the ministers who handle money (Finance and Planning) together with other ministers involved.

"The minister secretary general of the Office of President, the minister counselor to the president for economic and financial coordination, and the minister secretary general of the government must always be asked to attend these limited interministerial meetings.

"The prime minister will forward reports on these meetings to me as rapidly as possible and the proposed solutions he will have found will enable me to see how certain problems develop and to envisage a final solution at my level in a more rational fashion."

COMMENTS ON FUTURE OF U.S. ELECTORATE

Libreville L'UNION in French 6 Nov 80 p 5

[Article by Daniel Okale]

[Excerpt] There is a tendency now to criticize Jimmy Carter for his election tactics. The President had in fact tried to "demolish" Ronald Reagan by striking out at him. He presented him as a frightening spectre, irresponsible, a dangerous cowboy too quick to draw and too tempted by the use of force. Many observers believe that this method finally turned against Carter, pointing up his weaknesses when a large proportion of average Americans were looking for a saviour, a strong man.

Could Jimmy Carter have done otherwise — that is, wage a positive and concrete campaign, revealing his vision of America and describing a precise program? His apprenticeship completed and unbothered by any worry of reelection — a president cannot be elected to more than two terms — Jimmy Carter wanted to make certain major decisions and take on the fight with Congress to impose certain key ideas. Was it perhaps that he was too afraid to go against the current and thereby forge an inevitable defeat? This would explain why he did not choose to unveil such a program, choosing to wage a personal fight against his adversary, denying his ability or qualities for toverning. But we shall never know whether Jimmy Carter had a vision of America and whether history would have remembered him, after his second term, as a great president.

In contrast, Ronald Reagan, without proposing any real detailed program either, did speak loudly and evoke grand memories. But in the corridor, his entourage and advisers hastened to explain, mainly to the press, that Reagan is above all pragmatic, that words are one thing and action another, that there was no reason to have such fear of an aging Republican coming to power. As proof, they pointed to his administration of California for 8 years, which was generally satisfactory but scarcely in keeping with his initial program.

One therefore has to regret that the two candidates did not fight it out on real programs and that the long election campaign turned into a personal rivalry, a matter of charm and charisma, with great use of television. Is politics becoming a great game of chance in which, in order to win, one dares not say what one thinks, do what one says, and in which one conceals one's real intensions. In order to win, has one but to flatter?

Is the electorate a kind of wild dog that must first be petted and tamed before the collar is slipped on? One that the master may treat as he wishes once it is firmly in hand? And what is to be done with it later?

Will it be trained to be a guard dog, but a well-fed, sociable doggie-woggie that gets on well with children and the neighbors? Or is it to be turned into a fearful cur whose master can scarcely keep it in check and which is not content to bark, but rather, likes to sharpen its teeth on anything that moves?

BRIEFS

FRG BANK'S TRANS-GABONESE LOAN--On Friday, 31 October, a loan agreement was signed at the Ministry of Economy and Finance by the Gabonese Government and the West German Development Bank (KFW). The Gabonese Government was represented at the ceremony by Jean-Pierre Lemboumba, acting minister of economy and finance, accompanied by Albert Keba, general director of the Autonomous Amortization Fund. The West German bank was represented by its proxy, Werner Sahulte. The German loan, for a total amount of 1.6 billion CFA francs, is for 5 years. It will enable the Gabonese Government to finance the work on the Transgabonese Railroad, or more specifically, the sections completed by the two German companies, HP Gauff GMBH [expansion unknown] and GERI Consult GMBH, to wit: Booue-Mbongo Badouma and the Liyami variant. It was to finance these projects that Gabon requested financial aid from the KFW. [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 3 Nov 80 p 1] 11,464

COOPERATION WITH USSR NOTED IN COOPERATIVES FIELD

Bamako L'ESSOR in French 24 Oct 80 p 6

[Text] The international cooperative movement, grouping hundreds of millions of men and women, is now an influential social and economic force. It makes an important contribution to the fight for peace, the democratization of international relations and their liberation from inequality and political and economic dictates.

The 27th Congress of the Cooperative Alliance (ACI), held in Moscow, reaffirmed the determination of cooperative members from all continents to participate actively in the solution of the basic problems of contemporary times, to increase the contribution of cooperation to the establishment of a more just and solidary community of men and to fight to extend and strengthen relations between nations.

Meeting with the APN correspondent, Zakaria Traore, general director of cooperation, made the following remarks: "The cooperative movement in our country is still young, but we attach great importance to its development. For us, cooperation is an effective means to improve the standard of living of the rural population of Mali, to liquidate the shameful heritage of the colonial past in economic, social and cultural life."

Mali considers its participation in the work of the Moscow congress as an important boost to the country's cooperative movement, a perfect possibility to learn about achievements in this domain by countries belonging to the ACI. The African nations welcomed the decision of the Alliance to open regional ACI offices for the countries of West Africa, which will definitely help to spread the cooperative movement in the region and make it possible to make broad use of its development experience in other countries.

Concerning Mali, Traore emphasized that we have already achieved some success in this field thanks to the close and fruitful contacts established between our leaders and Centrosoyouz, the Organization of Soviet Cooperatives which has been a member of the ACI since 1921. It should be noted that cooperation with Centrosoyouz is planned. Since 1978, it has developed on the basis of protocols on joint activities, including exchanges of delegations and the participation of Malian cooperative members in regional seminars organized in the USSR within the framework of the ACI program of aid to developing countries.

National leaders of cooperatives in the Republic of Mali and Centrosoyouz officials will soon sign an agreement on cooperation between cooperatives in the two countries.

Centrosoyouz is helping Mali train cadres for its national cooperatives. Dozens of Malian citizens are now enrolled in Centrosoyouz educational establishments.

Many Malians have completed 10-month training programs at cooperative study centers in the USSR.

"Cooperation between Malian and Soviet cooperative members is going smoothly," Traore emphasized, "and has promising prospects. In this connection, it is significant that the chairman of Centrosoyouz, A. Smirnov, in speaking before the 27th ACI Congress on development and cooperation of socialist nations by the year 2000, said that the cooperative organizations in socialist countries were optimistic about the possibilities of developing cooperation with cooperative organizations in developing countries."

COMMENTARY ON UPCOMING NAMIBIAN CONFERENCE IN MAPUTO

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 2 Dec 80 p 4

[Column by Bill Hulme: "Firing Line..."]

[Text] FOR THE Great Pow-wow on Namibia, the date is set, Wednesday the 7th of January 1981.

But that, unfortunately, is about the sum total of what is certain about it at this stage.

HARD

The only other snippet of hard information, is that UN Assistant Secretary General, Brian Urquhart, is to be chairman.

VENUE?

Not even the venue is certain. It seems the UN intends to hold this conference in either Lusaka, or Maputo, with the latter capital being tipped as the stronger possibility.

(There is, however, some difficulty with Maputo as venue, partly because of the food shortage in that part of the world, and also because of society reasons as the place is reportedly teeming with East Bloc spies!)

The South Africans surely will prefer another venue such as Mauritius, but whether that is to become a reality, is very much in doubt.

Up to a few days before the "conference" starts there is bound to be a lot of doubts even about such basic things as the venue, and the parties attending, and, you've guessed it, about whether the "conference" will come off at all.

NAME?

There isn't agreement on a name for the "conference", for instance.

It's been called "pre-implementation talks," and "all-party conference", a "multi-party conference", a "Namibian Lancaster House conference", and the "conference of credibility".

Well, what's in a name?

But, in this case a lot depends on the name agreed on for the Great Pow-wow.

It will, for instance, be an indication as to the parties which should be attending and to their status at the meeting. Also, it will be an indication as to what should be discussed... and which parties should be talking to one another.

AGENDA?

Needless to say, with so much still in the air at this stage, there is no certainty as to the status of the parties, or the agenda.

Strong presssure has been asserted to get the discussion of a constitution onto the agenda, but so far both Swapo and the UN have been firm in their protestation against that. (Part of the reason being, of course, that a dicussion of that kind can drag on for a hell of a long time!)

WHAT HAVE YOU?

So you've got a meeting, conference, talks, whatever, without an agreed venue, or name, or agenda, and the greatest possible doubt about who will actually be recognized as "parties".

Only Swapo and South Africa?

Or Swapo, South Africa and the DTA, the governing party in the Turnhalle?

Or Swapo, South Africa, the DTA and the other parties in the Turnhalle?

Or Swapo, South Africa, the DTA, the other parties in the Turnhalle and all the other parties and factions of parties, many of which are in existence on paper only.

WHO'S SAYING WHAT?

Now, Swapo's saying it is only talking to South Africa!

South Africa is saying it isn't talking to Swapo!

The DTA is saying it is talking on behalf of the nation, even if included in the South African AG's delegation!

The other parties and factions are saying that they won't be talking at all if not invited by the Secretary General himself!

And the UN is saying that it agreed with South Africa that the latter will be talking to Swapo, AND that there will be talks between the two of them ONLY!

ARE THEY SERIOUS?

We've got some sort of a "conference," without an agreed venue, name, agenda, or list of participants.

Hilarious... no, it's not!

This Great Pow-wow on Namibia can be a total disaster, or it can be a major propaganda coup for someone. Unfortunately, that someone is at this stage likely to be Comrade Nujoma!

WELL...

For some odd reason, the DTA apparently agreed to go to Maputo as part of a South African delegation, led by the AG, Mr Danie Hough.

WORLD MEDIA

Now remember, the world media will be congregating in Maputo, or wherever the "conference" is being held... and all the dear Comrade needs to do is to point is finger at Mr Hough's "South African" delegation and shout: "I told you so! There they are, the bunch of colonialist puppets! There you can see for yourself who they are... and what they are."

REFUSE

After that all he needs to do is refuse to talk to the DTA representatives and the "conference" is torpedoed. (See, the South Africans are insisting that the "representatives of the democratic parties" should do the talking).

That way, Comrade Nujoma is going home with a major propaganda coup in the bag!

He knows South Africa wants the DTA to talk to him, and he isn't going to allow that to happen. Why should he? It will simply take Swapo down a peg or two in status and there is, for him, very little to be gained.

In other words, one doesn't really need to be a political genius to predict that if the dear Comrade does go to Maputo knowing this, his strategy will be to try his damndest to make the DTA look a stupid and insipid puppet of the South African AG.

With things loaded against the DTA the way it is, that won't prove too difficult, even for Comrade Nujoma!

BRILLIANT

One never knows what people have up their sleeves going to the great diplomatic pow wows...

But, this time its not all that difficult to see that it will take some really brilliant manoeuvring to avert a bad blow for the DTA.

By the way, the last word on this we've had from the South African Government is from its UN ambassador, Mr Koedoe Eksteen: He does not see serious problems at the "conference" concerning the status of the democratic parties.

Its an opportunity to cut Swapo down to size, the ambassador said.

That remains to be seen.

USTN SECRETARY GENERAL DISCUSSES UNION'S ROLE

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 7 Nov 80 p 2

[Article signed K.Y.]

[Text] Yesterday morning, the president of the Supreme Military Council, Head of the State, received in audience the board of the USTN [Trade Union of Nigerian Workers]. The minister of Public Service and Labor, Mr Issoufou Mayaki, was present at the conversations which focused on the participation of USTN to international meetings, on labor problems in Niger, on the meetings which will be held in Niger by the OATUU [Organization of African Trade Union Unity], and on the measures which could improve the safety and working conditions of workers.

"The new awareness of the unions must extend to all that has to do with the economy, for national development requires us to unite our efforts."

This statement of the USTN's general secretary summarizes the objective of USTN in organizing a high-level national economic seminar.

The national economic seminar, organized by USTN and the Afro-American Center for Labor is now in its fifth day. On Wednesday, the 23 participants heard an account of the farmers' cooperative movement in Niger. This came at the right time because "the cooperative movement and the trade-union movement are brothers," Mr Boureima Mainassara told us. "They are two associations which have become aware of their weakness."

The dynamics of the new USTN (a union which still suffers from the lack of a national basis) is to go beyond the industrial sector, i.e. the sector of salaried workers, to include the rural sectors of development, i.e. the cooperatives. Is it not the rural sectors which satisfy the food requirements of the people?

Therefore, they must be organized, for we must not forget that cooperatives are one of the pillars of our future development society. For its part, the USTN has already thought of these fields of activity to help farmers take better care of their interests. First of all, when it comes to setting agricultural prices.

"When the union is allowed inside the price-setting commission, it will be able to help the farmers' action to obtain better prices," the USTN secretary general said.

In arranging for the presentation of this account of the farmers' cooperative movement in Niger, the USTN's intention was to sensitize future union leaders to the future orientations of our country. The seminar participants will get additional information on these orientations tomorrow, when the national president gives an account of the installation of the development society.

Yesterday afternoon, union member heard a conference on the economic situation in Niger.

Therefore, this seminar will cause the participants to become aware of development problems and to reflect on the future of the country.

To this end, the USTN, which has advocated "responsible participation," must reorganize its affiliated unions, "unions which ignore all of the problems of their members." Before the end of the year, the USTN will have reduced the number of its affiliated unions from 22 to 15. This will be done by merging trade unions of the same nature or belonging to the same ministry (e.g. the agriculture, the livestock farming, the water resources and forestry unions, the UNCC [Niger Credit and Cooperation Union]) which, at present, have one general secretary each. The USTN will, therefore, organize union federations which will have a greater influence on grassroots union members.

The USTN, which has just been elected assistant general secretary of the OUSA (Organization of African Trade Union Unity) which is to be host to the OAU union council meeting during the second half of April, and which will hold its national week from 24-30 November, is now getting reorganized to perform its functions to the fullest extent.

COOPERATION WITH FOREIGN OIL COMPANIES ESSENTIAL

Paris LE MONDE DIPLOMATIQUE in French Nov 80 p 29

[Article by Marie-Claire Debackere]

[Text] Both the civilian and military governments that have held power in Nigeria since independence have always cherished the goal of "Africanization" of the petroleum industry, that is the gradual transfer of all oil operations to the state. In the implementation of this policy, the authorities have generally shown themselves to be pragmatic. Also, despite its increasingly marked nationalistic bent, Nigeria continues to call on the services of the international oil companies, at least in some fields. Their activities are apparently indispensable, given the size of the investments at stake, the experience and technical resources at their disposal and the random character of the discovery and commercialization of oil.

Confronted with the dilemma of many developing countries--attracting oil companies and interesting them in oil exploration and development, while continuing a long-term policy aimed at the establishment of a national oil industry and even at taking charge of all the oil installations--the government alternates between periods of imposing more strict conditions on exploitation, and periods of flexibility and encouraging the pursuit. In reality, Nigeria has two major trumps: on the one hand, the quality of its oil, light and with low sulfur content, out of which comes a crude that is much sought after on the western market; on the other hand, a better geographical position than the Middle East countries (proximity to primary consumers and security of maritime routes). So it has been able to profit handsomely from recent fortuitous developments in the oil situation.

Even before it joined OPEC in 1971, the state had acquired a 35-percent share in all of the concessions of SAFRAP, a subsidiary of the Elf group, then a 33.3-percent share in those of the AGIP-Phillips group. The same year, anticipating other members of OPEC in this respect, Nigeria created its own company, the Nigerian National Oil Corporation (NNOC), which in 1977 following its placement with the federal ministry of oil resources, the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC), a state company intended to participate as a majority partner in all sectors of oil activity.

The following year, in 1972, the government announced that it would no longer grant new concessions to foreign oil companies, NNOC being the only entity vested with the power to hold mineral rights; however, the concessions granted before that date remained valid. In 1973, it was the Shell-BP group, the principal producer and entrepreneur of the first deposit discovered at Oloibiri in 1956, that was to cede a 35-percent share to NNOC, soon to be followed by Mobil and Gulf. In 1974, this share was increased to 55 percent, despite the previous accords. On 1 July 1979, the government decided that NNPC would henceforth hold 60 percent of the capital of all the producing companies, namely, in order of [descending] importance: Shell-BP, Gulf, Mobil, Agip-Phillips, Elf and Texaco-Chevron. In August of the same year, the nationalization of the assets of BP in retaliation for its deliveries of oil to South Africa brought to 80 percent NNPC's share in the capital of the local Shell-BP company.

Profits Judged Inadequate

Parallel to the taking over control of the majority of production, the Nigerian authorities implemented with no delays the successive price increase decided by OPEC, following the lead in this respect of the hard-line countries, and in particular those of the Mediterranean area. Very constraining fiscal measures were also implemented: a rent tax of 20 percent and an 85-percent tax on the gross profits of the companies. Nigerian crude thus became one of the most costly and the margin of profit of the companies was reduced to 50 cents per barrel, a level comparable to that in the Middle East, where the conditions of exploitation are much easier. But the results were not what had been expected: in 1976, exploration was down considerably, and production declined in 1978, entailing a disturbing decrease in oil revenues. Fiscal measures were taken in 1977 in order to encourage the oil companies operating in Nigeria: improvement of amortization terms, handling of exploration costs through imposts, the growth of the profit margin. The effects made themselves felt rapidly: seismic work resumed, and 114 wells were drilled in 1979.

Subsequently, the government announced that "new type" contracts would be accorded for the development of the NNPC reserve territory to "companies of good repute." To date, only three companies have signed contracts: Agip and Elf, both state companies, and one independent, the American company Nigus Petroleum. Though the zones offered may be attractive, the terms proposed, service contracts and a share of production, leave only a small volume at the disposal of the exploiting companies, and the risks incurred seemed to them disproportionate. NNPC recognizes that these new conditions have attracted fewer takers than expected, and that a larger share of the benefits, in the form of oil, must be granted in order to attract the companies.

One might however ask today whether this policy of openness will really be pursued. The accusation brought against the three main production companies--Shell, Gulf and Mobil--in the recent oil scandal--"Oilgate," as it is dubbed by the press across the Channel--could jeopardize relations between the companies and the state. The affair started with the "disappearance" of $5 billion in the accounts of NNPC over the period 1975-1978. The commission of inquiry told to look into this "scandal," while reproaching the Nigerian company for its lack of organization in the way it keeps its books, also accuses the 3 companies of having despoiled the state by keeping 183 million barrels which should have gone to the national company and which at present prices represent about $6.5 billion. The companies protest their good faith and give to understand that NNPC failed to sell the oil it was getting (55 percent at the time, compared to 45 percent for its partners), because its price was excessive in comparison with competing crudes. Negotiations are presently in progress between the government and the companies, but the latter are still quite cautious about [predicting] their outcome.

In the refining sector, since the nationalization of BP's assets, NNPC controls both the refineries presently in operation, with the exception of a 20-percent share still held by Shell in the Port-Harcourt refinery. Construction of a third refinery at Kaduna by a consortium of Japanese companies will enable the NNPC, when it becomes fully operational, to begin processing domestically all the crude it needs for the internal market, and also to free up a surplus of products for export. Construction of a fourth refinery is even envisaged in the fourth development plan.

Continuing its policy of direct exploitation of all sectors of the oil industry, the state has not neglected the sector of distribution. Beyond the shares it holds in the subsidiaries of the foreign companies--Mobil, Agip, Elf and Texaco--the state company itself distributes products through Unipetrol, bought from Exxon in 1976, and holds a share in African Petroleum (ex-BP).

Beyond Extraction Activities

Plans to exploit another great Nigerian resource, natural gas, are also progressing. Starting on 1 January 1984, the flaring of associated gas--as it has been done since production started--will be prohibited. A gas supply agreement has been signed between the Bonny L.N.G. company (NNPC 60 percent, Shell 10 percent, Phillips 7.5 percent, Agip 7.5 percent, Elf 5 percent) and a European consortium that includes Gaz de France, SNAM (Italy), Distrigaz (Belgium), Gasunie (Netherlands), Enagas (Spain) and 3 German companies (Thyssen Gas, Ruhrgas and Brigitta). Implementation of this contract will require the construction of a factory with 6 liquefaction lines; 16 methaniers [translation unknown] each 130,000 cubic meters large will effectuate the transport.

A petrochemical project basically intended to supply local industry is also in the design stage. It will enable the state to control the oil chain all the way from extraction to the most diversified and profitable uses.

It is obvious, on the other hand, that Nigeria will benefit from the present situation to make the most of the assets it has. The largest producer of oil on the continent, the country also has significant reserves of natural gas (2,000 billion cubic meters) which make it potentially a major supplier to Europe and the United States.

In the short term its especially good geographic position, in light of the Iraq-Iran conflict, should enable it to increase its revenues, which are already estimated at $25 billion for 1980. Revenues which are indispensable to the economic growth of this country of more than 80 million people the development of which can only be assured through oil.

VERGES ADDRESSES INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC CONFERENCE IN BERLIN

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 28 Oct 80, 29 Oct 80, pp 8, 9

[28 Oct 80 pp 8, 9] [Text] Party's International Position Analyzed

> The International Scientific Conference, organized by the SED [Socialist Unity Party of Germany] of the GDR ended in Berlin on Friday. The topic of the meeting was "The Common Struggle of the Worker Movement and the National Liberation Movement against imperialism and for social progress." In the name of the SED Political Bureau, Herman Axen during the closing session on Friday presented the overall review of the activities that took place during 5 days of discussion. In the afternoon, Erich Honecker, SED Secretary-General, gave a reception for the particpants. We recall that Reunion was represented at this conference by our comrade Paul Verges and by Marcel Soubou, president of the UGTRF [General Union of Reunionese Workers in France], mandated by the FRAPAR [Anticolonialist Front for the Self-Determination of Reunion].

The Berlin Conference is original for several reasons. It is characterized by its broad range and by the diversity of the revolutionary forces from the five continents who were represented there.

116 Delegations Present

There were 116 delegations present. The three components of the revolutionary movements (the socialist countries, the progressive movements in the capitalist countries, and the liberation movements) were widely represented. FRELIMO [Mozambique Liberation Front], MPLA [Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola], the PLO, and POLISARIO [Popular Front for the Liberation of Saguia el Hamra and Rio de Oro], considered among the most representative and the most powerful liberation movements, attended the work of the conference.

Following the opening session on Monday, the participants were subdivided into three committees. The first one took up "The Struggle for Peace and Socialism" and "The Struggle for National Independence"; the second one addressed itself to the "Struggle for a New International Order"; and the last one took up the topic of "Experiences and Problems in the Fight for National and Social Emancipation." All in all, there were 196 speakers. This means that everybody had a chance to speak in his own name.

The conference which did not come up with a final document, nor with a definition of a line committing the various parties--which is something new--thus was an opportunity for a broad and free exchange of views. The transactions were conducted in a spirit of wide-open approach, as well as equal rights for every participant. They enabled certain people to introduce different interpretations which were recognized as such.

During the opening session on Monday, Erich Honecker spelled out the meaning and objectives of the conference. The meeting, he said, offered a possibility for an exchange of views in a great spirit of comradeship on a large number of issues concerning our respective struggles. Following the collapse of the colonial system, he added, "worldwide developments are increasingly determined by the forces that want to change the world in the direction of progress and wellbeing of humanity."

Convergence of Interests

During the opening session, Boris Ponomarev presented the viewpoint of the CPSU on the development of the relationship of the international forces through specific examples backed up by statistics; he showed that it is the socialist countries and not the multinational corporations which enable the underdeveloped countries to equip themselves in various key sectors. Following him, Maxime Gremetz, speaking in the name of the PCF [French Communist Party], emphasized that the presence of a large number of representatives of parties and movements from the various corners of the globe was a "sign of the profound agreement of interests and actions of the revolutionary forces." The French representative more specifically reviewed his party's thinking regarding the fundamental demand for the construction of a new worldwide political and economic order.

Sergio Vieyra, of FRELIMO, presented the case of a country--Mozambique--which, after having defeated Portuguese colonialism, is now facing the problem of building a socialist society.

These three presentations to some extent were designed to serve as guidelines for the work of the committees and to get the debates going. It would be difficult for us here completely to review the questions and problems taken up. We would simply like to note that subjects such as "How to Speed up Decolonization," "Concrete Solidarity for the Peoples of the Developing Countries and the Working Classes in the Capitalist Countries" were examined.

Speaking in the second committee, Paul Verges delivered a very remarkable address. In his closing remarks on Friday, Hermann Axen outlined the lessons which the SED was drawing from this meeting. We have a whole series of materials here--he said--which should help in the political and theoretical thinking of all of us. This is an effort which must necessarily be continued according to suitable methods.

Hermann Axen indicated that the development of such a meeting is a source of mutual enrichment because it brings out the desire to take joint action, the need for exchange of information on the experiences of each and every one, their difficulties and their successes. Mutual understanding should thus promote joint action against imperialism.

As far as the SED leader was concerned, the meeting showed that, in spite of different conditions and methods of struggle, the fight against imperialism has gained experience, breadth, cohesion, and influence. Although no common line was drafted, the meeting showed that there was a desire and a capacity for together accomplishing the biggest tasks, primarily ways of fighting for disarmament and for a new economic order, in order to check the imperialist designs.

Text of Speech by Paul Verges

Comrade President,

Dear Comrades, Dear Brothers and Sisters:

The delegation from Reunion must first of all express its satisfaction over the fact that such a conference is being held and that it is participating side by side with almost 120 delegations who have come from all over the world.

The fact that such a conference is indeed being held on "the common struggle of the worker movement and the national liberation movement against imperialism" is in line with a real need. For that, the SED Central Committee and the management of the new international magazine deserve our thanks.

The format adopted--a vast exchange of opinion where everybody can express himself without any plans to put out a final document--seems to us to be particularly suited for the purpose we pursue.

But the very success of the conference confronts each delegation with an evident difficulty: Due to the extraordinary broad range of the problem on the agenda and the large number of participants, each delegation consequently and with good reason has a relatively short time for its remarks.

This is why our delegation chose to speak out in the second of the three committees, the committee on "The Struggle Against Neocolonialism for a Democratic Organization of International Economic Relations" and we ask you to excuse the perhaps simplifying character of our presentation.

Dear Comrades,

We would like above all to confirm that, while the situation on the Island of Reunion, which we represent here, is one of considerable complexity, Reunion is definitely the very type of a neo-colony and, in spite of enormous difficulties in one field or another, it is a microcosm of all of the fundamental contradictions of countries which we list among the Third World.

This rather well characterizes the context of our struggle.

Let me add only two points:

The influence of the Communist Party and the other organizations of the "Anticolonist Front for Self-Determination of Reunion" is considerable.

The French Government several years ago established bases on Reunion where it is stationing almost 4,000 men from various strategic strike force units; there is talk of reinforcing these forces with other troops currently based on Dijibouti. This is a serious threat to the people's struggles on Reunion and to the anti-imperialist forces, whether they are in power or not, on the neighboring islands or on the African continent and there is no need to underscore their role in the current accelerated militarization of the Indian Ocean.

Dear Comrades,

When we place our struggle within the framework of the general struggle against neocolonialism, the current struggle and the struggle yet to come, we start with a certain number of facts which are essentially in our view.

(1) The current crisis of the capitalist system will be long and will characterize the decade of the Eighties.

The disorder in the monetary system established at Bretton Woods, the instability of the dollar, rising inflation, spreading unemployment, the redeployment of monopolist capital in search of maximum profits throughout the entire world, with industrial reorganization and the growing role of the multinational corporations, the ever higher cost of energy--all these represent the inability of the capitalist system to resolve its contradictions; but as far as the peoples of the capitalist countries are concerned, this is also expressed by increasingly difficult living conditions.

The socialist countries must face the consequences of this crisis in one or another field of their activities.

This crisis is of an economic, financial, social, political, and cultural character; it will be a long crisis and it will shake the very structures of imperialist exploitation.

(2) The arms race is being speeded up and the danger of war keeps growing.

Imperialism is dreaming of escaping from its contradictions and regaining lost ground through a policy of tension in all parts of the world. This is a policy that is dangerous to peace in Europe, in the Middle East, in Asia, as well as in Africa, Latin America, and in the Caribbean.

(3) The crisis of the capitalist system has its most disastrous consequences in the countries of Africa, Asia, and Latin America.

The countries of these three continents were parts of the great colonial empires established between the 17th and 20th centuries by the big countries in Western Europe and Japan. The crumbling of the Japanese, British, French, Dutch, Belgian, Portuguese, and Spanish colonial empires in Asia and Africa, together with the victory of the revolution in China in 1949 and the rebellion in Cuba in 1959, brought about the greatest historical change of this century, following the October Socialist Revolution and the birth of the international socialist system.

But political independence did not all at once wipe out the heritage of many decades and sometimes centuries of colonial exploitation.

Within arbitrarily drawn boundaries, social structures were made to disintegrate, cultures were denied and downgraded, self-sufficiency in terms of food was compromised, and all economies were turned outward to the exclusive profit and satisfaction of the needs of the colonizing home countries. We must never forget that those countries achieved their accumulation--as the foundation of their industrial development today--due to the overexploitation of their proletariat on the one hand, and the pillage of the colonial peoples and countries, on the other hand.

I would like to concentrate my presentation on Africa but the profound trend, which emerges from this analysis, in our view, also applies to Asia as well as Latin America and the Caribbean.

I would likewise like to introduce some perhaps numerous statistics and I would like to ask your pardon for this but I want to emphasize that all of them are official figures.

The question facing us is this: How could countries and entire continents, under the conditions of the last two decades of the 20th century, overcome the obstacles on the way to their economic and cultural development? The situation they find themselves in is historically without precedent.

Centuries of colonial exploitation caused the economies of the colonized countries to become part of an international capitalist division of labor. Those countries had to supply one or more basic products on the world market dominated today by the powerful multinational corporations. Although independent, the countries of Africa and the other two continents are subjected to the prices imposed on the world market or on markets organized by the industrialized capitalist countries.

Inequality of Terms of Trade

Sugar accounts for 90 percent of the export earnings of the Island of Mauritius; copper accounts for 84 percent of the export earnings of Zambia; peanuts and peanut oil account for 85 percent of the export earnings of Gambia; and I could go on giving you examples like these.

In half of the developing countries which do not produce petroleum, more than 50 percent of the export earnings come from one or two agricultural or mineral products.

Now, these prices are unstable and they are determined by commercial and financial circuits dominated by the multinational corporations. The exporting countries presently get less than 25 percent of the final consumer price.

The developing countries are therefore forced to step up their exports in order to get foreign exchange and by the same token they become increasingly integrated into the capitalist world market. At the same time, inflation in the developed capitalist countries weighs increasingly heavily on the price of imported equipment and manufactured products.

The result of this inequality in the terms of trade is the measure of the degree of colonial exploitation maintained over the nondeveloped countries. The socialist president of Senegal, Senghor, declared that this kind of trade was even worse--because of its consequences for Africa--than the first kind of trade--the slave trade.

Indebtedness

To cope with the consequences of this system, the undeveloped countries are going into debt with the governments and banks of the developed capitalist countries and, in the end, it is the World Bank and the IMF who dictate terms to them.

This cumulative indebtedness of the undeveloped countries keeps growing: $87 billion in 1971, 180 in 1975, 334 in 1978, and 391 in 1979; the figure will be far beyond $400 in 1980.

I would like to compare this figure to the $400 billion in armament expenditures for the year 1979 alone to underscore the obvious relationship between the struggle for disarmament and the struggle of the countries of Africa, Asia, and Latin America for their development. Here is another comparison: Public aid from the 17 most highly developed capitalist countries, grouped within the OECD, to all of the undeveloped countries in 1972 came to $22.3 billion or less than 6 percent of their foreign debt.

Finally, let me make one specific point on this subject: In the beginning of the Seventies, the credits of the private sector represented one-quarter of the debts of the undeveloped countries; today they represent one-half.

This is the characteristic feature of the way in which direct domination by international banking capital over those countries is being strengthened.

If we look at the statistics on the balance of trade and the balance of payments of the undeveloped countries which do not produce petroleum, that is to say, the vast majority, if we examine the decline in their food output, and if we then look at their per-capita domestic gross product, we can see that, with a few exceptions, all of these countries are experiencing growing dependence.

Permanent and Generalized Famine

Compared to the capitalist countries of the West, they are in fact on the road of relative underdevelopment.

The social consequences of this excessive exploitation are staggering because population growth gives them a new dimension. That brings up the problem of hunger, of health, of education, of urban development in the countries of Africa, Asia, and Latin America. This brings us to the problem of the life and survival of hundreds of millions of people whose lives are indeed at stake.

While the OECD announces a figure of $7 million unemployed in the nine countries of the Common Market and 23 millions in the 17 countries of the OECD--which reveals the seriousness of the crisis--Africa, with much less population than those 17 countries, starting in 1973, according to the ILO, had a total of 10 million unemployed and 53 million seriously underemployed.

Over a period of 10 years, from 1962 until 1972, food imports in West Africa went up 35 percent while per-capita output declined by at least 4 percent. The situation has gotten worse since then.

The statistics for the entire continent are just as alarming. Although it had been exporting cereals half a century ago, although it was self-sufficient in 1950, Africa today suffers from a growing shortage: 10 million tons in 1975, 12 million tons in 1978, and 45 millions over a period of 10 years.

Considering the shortages in Asia and Latin America, these quantities could not be obtained on the international level and that causes permanent and general famine.

Public opinion in the West is shaped by the big information media which are dominated by the reactionary powers; public opinion is not familiar with the famine in the countries of Asia or Africa, except now and then. But it is unaware of the fact that undernourishment and malnutrition each year kill more than 50 million persons in the underdeveloped countries. That is as much, each year, as the total losses during World War II in Europe. That represents one Hiroshima every two days.

[29 Oct 80 pp 8, 9]

> [Text] In yesterday's edition, the Tuesday edition, we published the beginning of the important speech by our comrade Paul Verges at the International Scientific Conference in Berlin. Unfortunately, numerous mistakes (phrases cut off, typing errors, etc) marred it because of the late hour at which this speech reached us. We are sking our readers to excuse us. Below we present the continuation and end of this address. Talking about permanent and general famine, Paul Verges recalled that more than 50 million persons die each year of malnutrition and undernourishment in the underdeveloped world. As many, each year, as all of the casualties during World War II in Europe. This represents one Hiroshima every 2 days.

The Situation Will Get Worse

This situation is going to get worse rapidly because population growth, as we said before, lends a new and historically unprecedented dimension to all of these problems.

Africa has about 340 million inhabitants as of 1980. Within 20 years, it will have 600 million inhabitants.

In 1940, the world's population was 2.3 billion, including 36 percent in the developed countries and 64 percent in the undeveloped countries.

Today, 40 years later, the world has something like 4.4 billion inhabitants, including 27 percent in the developed countries and 73 percent in the developing countries.

In other words, an additional 2 billion inhabitants in just 40 years--almost as much as for the preceding hundreds of thousands of years.

Two Billion Inhabitants More in 20 Years

UN estimates for the year 2000 raise the current figures to 6.5 billion inhabitants, including 22 percent for the developed countries and 78 percent for the developing countries.

In other words, 2 billion inhabitants more in just 20 years.

And that means tomorrow.

At that rate, the world of the poor, the world of the undeveloped countries, will represent 80 percent of humanity by the end of the century and 90 percent by the end of the next century.

This population growth problem seems to us to be underestimated in terms of the consequences which it implies in the analyses of the Communist Movement; nevertheless, some statistics among hundreds of others are quite eloquent!

China grew from 650 million to 970 million inhabitants between 1949 and 1979, in other words, 300 millions more in 30 years.

India grew by 13 million inhabitants per year and will reach a figure of 900 million inhabitants within 20 years.

This phenomenon is general in Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

Tanzania, which presently has 18 million inhabitants, will have 36 millions within 20 years and 87 millions in another two generations.

And what can we say about this rapid urban growth, without simultaneous industrialization, as in Europe about one or two centuries ago?

Mexico [City]: 15 million inhabitans today, 30 millions in 20 years.

Cairo, Calcutta, Seoul, etc., between 15 and 20 millions in the year 2000.

Abidjan grows by 200,000 inhabitants each year.

Colonial Heritage

Within 20 years, the majority of the big metropolitan areas will be located in the undeveloped countries and that will pose many almost insoluble problems.

Now, we know that population problems cannot be controlled in 10 years and that their consequences are making themselves felt over a spread of several generations.

These consequences are countless in all fields.

I would like to mention only the statistics on the food shortages in the developing countries because those shortages reveal the dramatic character of the colonial heritage and the responsibility of the colonizing countries.

The cereal shortage in 1970 came to 15 million tons.

It is 80 million tons today and it will be 94 million tons in 5 years, if international economic trends continue. It will be impossible to cope with this food shortage.

Also please keep in mind that the international wheat price rose from $63 per ton in 1970 to $154 in 1979.

In 1976, the undeveloped countries--excluding the petroleum-producing countries--spent more than $10 billion for their food imports alone, and that was equivalent to 80 percent of internationalist aid for development during that same year. The situation has gotten worse since then.

No Historical Precedent for Reference

Dear Comrades,

We think that humanity is in the midst of the greatest change in its history. This change is taking place before our very eyes.

There is no historical reference precedent. We must, I believe, tackle this phase with the awareness of the immense dangers of catastrophe but also with confidence as to the outcome of the struggle.

The reactionary powers in the West are increasingly afraid of this evolution. They want to maintain the old order of things.

They caused the failure of the sessions of the UNCTAD at Manila and of the UNIDO in New Delhi as well as the recent special session of the UN on development.

Social democracy is assigning increasing importance to these problems and has taken numerous initiatives.

The Lome II Convention, linking the nine countries of the European Common Market, including the old colonial home countries, on the one hand, and the 60 countries of Africa, the Caribbean, and the Pacific, the former colonies, on the one hand, is an example of the way in which new relations are being set up to arrange the old colonial order.

But at the same time we can detect the outline of the logical framework of the alliance between the Worker Movement of the Europe of the Nine and the anti-imperialist forces of the 60 ACP [African, Caribbean, and Pacific Countries].

Dear Comrades,

We must be more on the offensive.

In a world as unstable and dangerous as this one and in an evolution as accelerated as this one, in the face of the inability of the capitalist system to solve the problem of the life and survival of hundreds of millions of people, it is up to us to make sure that this change in the history of humanity will take place under the influence of a worldwide and powerful socialist system and that, by virtue of this fact, real independence for the countries of Africa, Asia, and Latin America can be achieved only the socialist way. There is no other solution to the alternative facing us.

But the struggle and success in that struggle are possible only if the establishment of a new worldwide economic order is conceived as process of rupture and not a process of arrangement; this implies the realization that the worldwide economic order cannot be separated from a new social order on a worldwide scale but also and above all in each country.

A new economic order, a new cultural order, a new moral order must be established. On this latter point we must be aggressive, concerning, for example, the struggle for human rights. The first right is the right to life and that right is denied the majority of humanity by imperialism.

New Mental Order

But this exalting revolutionary perspective must not cause us to fail to see the countless and enormous problems to be solved.

We must break away from the Eurocentrism of some and the narrow vision of others. We must ourselves set the example for this new order which we want and which implies also a new mental order.

Dear Comrades,

A new internationalism must be born,with a degree never attained so far.

It must create much closer ties in the struggle of the revolutionary forces of socialism and of the international workers movement and those of the national liberation movements.

A French revolutionary, during the Grand French Revolution of 1789 proclaimed that happiness was a new idea in Europe and that this idea of liberty turned Europe upside down, then we think that today the idea of equality of all men and all peoples is a revolutionary idea which will sweep the majority of mankind along.

Movement of Nonaligned Countries--A Symbol

In the struggle to get out of the current barbarism of imperialism, which kills scores of millions of human beings each year, and to establish a system of real equality among men and peoples with socialism, the movement of the nonaligned countries, with differences of all kinds among its members, is today the symbol of that struggle of the undeveloped countries.

The vast regions of Asia, Africa, and Latin America will experience considerable changes in the next 20 years. The objective conditions forcefully pose the need for strengthening the alliance of those peoples with the international worker movement.

If we work together, we shall win together. If not, the failure will weigh heavily on the struggle of the others, very heavily.

Will imperialism, in the current stage of human history, succeed in replacing the old colonialism with a new type of colonization on a worldwide scale or will it, on the contrary, see its plans frustrated by the common struggle of the worker movement and the national liberation movement?

It has been said that the current history of mankind if the history of the transition from capitalism to socialism. We are experiencing this transition. Let it be the fruit of our common struggle.

Dear Comrades,

This is our modest contribution to the discussion. We ask you with respect to examine it, to criticize it, or to enrich it.

Maloya for Liberty

"Maloya for Liberty" was introduced and applauded in Berlin. The delegations were put up in three different hotels. The delegation from Reunion was lodged in the "Hotel of the Party."

On Wednesday evening, a movie showing was organized in the latter hotel. It was commented on by Paul Verges himself. The film by Jacquelin Meppiel was a definite success. Paul Verges was warmly congratulated by numerous delegations. Others, who were unable to attend the showing for various reasons, were sorry that they were unable to be present. The FRELIMO delegation ordered a copy for showing in Mozambique. Finally, "Maloya for Liberty" will be shown at the Leipzig International Festival.

BARRE ON BASES, REGIONAL TIES, ETHIOPIA

LD011641 Abu Dhabi AL-ITTIHAD in Arabic 24 Nov 80 p 7

[Interview with Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre by Taha an-Ni'man in Abu Dhabi on 23 November]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr President. I find that the easiest subject with which to begin this interview is the issue of the military "facilities," which has been preoccupying the Arab and foreign press recently. In an interview with an Arabic paper, you said that "there is no American presence in Somalia" and that the Americans have asked you "if their ships and planes could possibly be supplied with fuel from your ports and airports whenever they needed it," but that you have "not given any bases." Will Your Excellency be kind enough to give us a detailed explanation of the difference between "bases" and "facilities" in the political and military sense? Does not Your Excellency believe that both serve the same purpose in the end--the purpose of getting forces and vehicles to the field of operations at the required time?

[Answer] First, I would like to emphasize first of all that every independent country has the right to establish relations and conclude agreements which it believes serve its aims and interests. This is one of the sovereign rights which must not be disputed. We deal with other states on this basis and we do not interfere, either by word or by deed, in what other states do in this connection.

Second, the Somali republic is known in the international, Arab and African forums to be against the establishment of foreign bases on its territory. Somalia has often stressed this point, and we are emphasizing it again today.

Third, for a long time now, Somalia has been subjected to regrettable propaganda campaigns aimed at distorting our position and our international and Arab relations. The talk that is going on in many places and in foreign and Arab newspapers is contrary to the truth.

We have invited many press and information quarters, Arab and foreign, to come and see things for themselves on the spot, although we know that this is none of their business. However, we only wanted to give them a chance to see at close range the falsehood of the unjust campaign to which Somalia is being subjected.

We say frankly as we said openly from the beginning that we have given the United States port "facilities" and that we are used to giving such facilities owing to our special position with regard to international air and sea traffic. The United States is not the only country which finds such facilities in our country. We have given such facilities because we believe that national exigencies demand that we do so. Everybody should know, however, that by doing so we are not compromising our principles, viewpoint or sovereignty.

And we are confident that those abroad who are saying that Somalia had turned its territories into bases for the Americans will one day discover the bare truth.

We also know and we are fully aware that the Americans have an interest in our country, just as they have an interest in all or most Arab countries, because there is another big power, the Soviet Union, which has acutal and direct presence as well as "bases," and not only fuel and water supply facilities, in other Arab and African countries.

I would like to emphasize also that under the concept of national sovereignty and should our security situation and national interests make it necessary--we hope that this will never happen--we will not be afraid to give even "military bases." I am saying this only to reply to those who are talking in such a way as to distort the real stand of Somalia and who are portraying our country as one that has been turned into an American colony. Those who have foreign military bases and forces on their own territories, which everybody can see, have no right to talk about others. A thief should not turn himself into a judge to judge others. This is a ridiculous situation, really.

As for the difference between "bases" and "facilities," "facilities" expresses a friendly relationship which does not jeopardize independence or detract from sovereign rights. As for foreign "military bases" in the true sense of the word, this means giving or ceding part of its land and subjecting it to the sovereignty of another country. States which give bases to another country are practically and legally renouncing the land on which the base is established.

[Question] How do you view the future of the people of Western Somalia, within the context of the present international and Arab circumstances, and the issue of the unity of the Somali regions?

[Answer] I would like to assert first of all that the Somali Democratic Republic has no ambitions of any kind in another country. However, there is an issue represented by the presence of a people, the people of Western Somalia, who are fighting to liberate their country just like any other people who have struggled to achieve independence. This is their legitimate right, they have been struggling for a long time and they will continue to struggle until they attain their legitimate rights. Their enemy, represented by Ethiopian colonialism, is trying to intimidate them and working to perpetuate the wings of the empire.

As for us we have supported the movement for the liberation of Western Somalia and we will continue to support it, just as we support any other liberation movement; except that the people of Western Somalia are closer to us.

[Question] But Mr President, when I visited Somalia when the Ogaden war was at its peak, I felt that the issue was a national one as far as Somalia and the Somalis were concerned and not just one of support for a national liberation movement.

[Answer] The fact is that there are two aspects to the matter: the origin of the inhabitants is one aspect. The people of Western Somalia are Somalis, originally. However, we do not decide their fate. They alone decide their future relationship with the Republic of Western Somalia [sentence as published]. If they opt for unity voluntarily, they are welcome, for we are part of them and they are part of us. But if they choose to live independently, we will not intervene to force them into joining us. That is what we did in Djibouti, which chose to be independent and to continue its friendship with France. We neither objected nor interfered. We will not change our stand.

[Question] Somalia is one of the few states which expressed reservations about the strong denunciation of As-Sadat's initiative and his visit to Jerusalem while it is under occupation, as well as of the Camp David accords. Two years after the Egyptian-Israeli treaty, what is your assessemnt of the results of Camp David, especially in relation to the Arab situation and Arab rights?

[Answer] If you want to learn the truth about the Somali stand, I will tell you. What prompted us to adopt a special stand on Camp David is the fact that we do not only look for interests. There are other considerations which fall within the priorities that determine the stands and crystallize the decisions. It is in this context that the question falls of the age-old relationship, that dates back thousands of years, between the Egyptian and Somali peoples. That is what made us adopt our stand. It is a fact which we never forget. Furthermore we believe, as I have already told you, that every state has the right to conclude any agreement which it believes serves its interests and the interest of its people.

As for the effect of the Camp David agreements and the reaction of some Arab states to it, I say that, as far as we Somalis are concerned, we do not join nor cooperate with those who jeopardize Arab unity. That is our line of action. To whoever wishes to learn about the Somali personality and Somali policy we say that we are for united Arab action and Arab solidarity and that we do not interfere in Arab disputes or support any one side in disputes among Arabs. When members of the same family quarrel, it is wrong to support one member against another. I believe that no one understands this aspect of Somalia's policy.

I again say that we are free, just as every country is free, to choose our relations and friendship. We have said openly and forcefully from the beginning that we support the Arabs' right to liberate the occupied territories, and we have called for complete Israeli withdrawal from these territories, including Jerusalem. We also clearly and strongly support the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people.

[Question] Do you believe that it was the situation that evolved in Ethiopia following the downfall of Emperor Haile Selassie and the new regime's inclination toward Moscow that prompted Somalia to mend its fences with the West, particularly the United States. If so, does this mean that ideological values no longer constitute a sound basis for the adoption of stands in international politics and that only tangible interests dictate the policies of states?

[Answer] In the past we used to believe that ideologies dictated the policies of states. Regrettably, however, after going through the corridors of international politics and playing the game of relations among states, it became apparent to us that states, particularly big states, do not recognize ideological values or principles. Their interests alone dictate their actions.

Our problem with the Soviet Union is primarily one of conflicting interests; our problem with Ethiopia is one of colonialism. I tell you frankly that in the present circumstances we cannot agree with the Ethiopians because we are a progressive democratic force and the Ethiopians are a colonialist force, whatever slogans they raise, be they red, black, progressive or otherwise.

We have always called for a peaceful and political solution to the problem with Ethiopia, because we believe that guns and uniforms do not solve the problem. We advocated this during Haile Selassie's days and we are still advocating it. A military solution is not the way to end the problem. We do not want or seek problems but, when problems are brought to us by others, we cannot but confront them. I believe that this situation will not last long. In any case, our aim will always remain the attainment of a peaceful and just solution to the problem of Western Somalia.

They proceeded to sign the loan agreement for the Lome Port project (fourth phase of construction for 50 million German marks (about 5.5 billion CFA francs). The delegations exchanged views on future financial cooperation between the two countries beginning in 1982. Actions will deal with sectors of rural development, the economic infrastructure, renewable energy, and so on, while the technical cooperation program will be accelerated. Negotiations took place in an atmosphere of friendship and mutual understanding. The next negotiations between the two governments are planned for the spring of 1982 in Lome. AGREEMENT REACHED ON BORDER MEETINGS WITH SUDAN

LD231526 Kampala Domestic Service in English 0400 GMT 23 Nov 80

[Text] A member of the military commission and deputy minister of defense, Col William Omaria, has expressed the need for good-neighborliness along the Uganda-Sudan border. The minister, who was speaking at a meeting on the Uganda-Sudan border conflict, expressed concern over the recent incidents in West Nile and Madi Districts, which resulted in heavy loss of life and property and displacement of local population. He expressed satisfaction at the measures to be taken by the Ugandan and Sudanese governments with regard to the border meetings and international law.

In reply, the Sudanese delegation, led by the state minister, member of the Central Committee of the SSR and commissioner for Eastern Equatorial Province, Mr (Balasia Aloro), assured the minister that Sudan had no hand in the [word indistinct] incident that took place in West Nile and Madi in October this year. He reaffirmed his government policy of good-neighborliness and noninterference in the internal affairs of neighboring countries.

In a statement issued after the meeting, both sides agreed that regular meetings be convened between the two countries by administrators of both sides, preferably every (?3) months. However, in any case of emergency, this can be called any time, but appropriate measures should be taken to contain and eliminate the practice of cattle raiding by tribal elements on both sides of the border.

The Sudanese authorities will continue to resettle and repatriate Ugandan refugees in accordance with the international convention and through the office of the UN High Commission.

The property belonging to either government or individuals in either country be recovered and returned through proper channels.

The two countries endeavor to keep all communications between them as free as possible and Uganda Government undertakes to facilitate passage of goods detained in Sudan after appropriate procedures have been worked out and that both sides devise ways and means of stamping out poaching along our common borders.

The ceremony, which was held in a frank and friendly atmosphere at (Chobe) Safari Lodge, was attended by the Sudanese ambassador to Uganda, Mr Muhammad Abdallah 'Uthman; the Sudanese military attache in Uganda, Colonel Isma'il (Zayday); the deputy minister of foreign affairs, Prof Samwire Karugire; the army chief of staff, Brig David Oyite Ojok; the commander of the northern province, Lt Col (Sumayt Opori); Capt (Opor) of general headquarters; the district commissioner, Arua, Mr Opika-Opoka; the district commissioner, Gulu, Mr Peter Teko; and other government officials.

'LE MONDE' UPDATES CHAD WAR DEVELOPMENTS

LD121345 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Dec 80 pp 1, 5

[Dispatch by Philippe Boggio]

[Text] Ndjamena--How disconcerting the Chadian conflict is! Almost 8 months after the beginning of the fighting for control of the capital the two camps, the National Unity Transition Government [GUNT] allied forces and Hissein Habre's Northern Armed Forces [FAN] still maintain that they are waging "total war." According to them the time is no longer right for negotiation but for a "struggle to the death," from which a victor and a vanguished must necessarily emerge. Attempts to reach a political settlement have been exhausted. Mediation is pointless. The promises of a "multiple and unified" Chad have been forgotten. It is time for fighting. Only a military solution, they say, is capable of changing things in a country which has been torn by hatred and split for 2 years by religious, ethnic and political antagonism and by rival territorial sovereignties and conflicting interests.

However, in the past few weeks the fighting has been sporadic and the combatants have shown no real determination. In the capital, attacks have been rare or have resulted in the derisory capture of a villa or a garden. The heavy weapons fire stops, without apparent reason, after 10 minutes. A silence which sometimes lasts several days is established after the deafening fury of the mortar shells fired randomly at one district after another. The conflict stops for tea, lunch or dinner. Whether because of the gunners' bad luck or deliberate calculation, the respective headquarters, which have remained unchanged for months and whose location is known to every Chadian, are never hit. The Ndjamena electric power station, an important strategic target, has been miraculously spared.

Could there be a shortage of munitions? One of the warring sides at least--the allied forces--has considerable firepower thanks to Libyan aid. In any case it is enough to attempt to "physically eliminate" Hissein Habre, as GUNT Vice President Colonel Kamougue has admitted he wished to do. Despite constant increases in armament, the government is waiting to launch its "big offensive," thought to be imminent and announced 10 times but looking more like an African Arlesienne [allusion to Bizet opera character who fails to put in an appearance] each week.

"Total war?" Never! When you know the difficulties of staffing the Chadian factions it is hard to understand the coalition leaders' repeated absences. During the last week of November, President Goukouni Oueddei was in Lome; Colonel Kamougue, who had been appointed coordinator of military operations in Ndjamena 1 week earlier, had left again for a tour of inspection in southern Chad; Acyl Ahamat, leader of the Joint Action Front [FAC] and foreign minister, was staying in Tripoli. No less than seven ministers and six top officials from the united general staff were occupied...abroad.

"These warring sides gave the impression that they were tearing each other apart." The opinion of the Chinese diplomat who regularly comes to follow the progress of the Chadian conflict from the Cameroon bank of the Chari, illustrates the observers' general feeling. This war does contain an element of acting. It is a free and whimsical adaptation of somebody saying: "Restrain me or I'll hit somebody." Indeed it is increasingly apparent that the two sides, despite the arrogance of the statements and the triumphalism of the communiques, do not seem very anxious to conclude their military engagement rapidly.

Caution predominates. Each of the main factions is aware that it is difficult, if not impossible, to wipe out his adversary. It is better, the Chadians say, to "fix" the enemy in Ndjamena rather than be drawn into a desert war which has been unsuccessful in the past under President Tombalbaye's and General Malloum's successive regimes. "Chad is too big," one of President Goukouni Oueddei's advisers confided in us recently. "Even if he is defeated in the capital, the enemy will still be able to flee into the desert, regroup, and reappear within a few months." That probably explains why, while announcing a victory in the near future, the armies are all planning for a possible defeat and are carefully and meticulously maintaining their normal retreat routes. The war in Ndjamena cannot be total war because the Chadian capital is too far away from the native areas of the sides fighting there.

The two camps might also have different reasons for moderating their military ardor. For instance, Hissein Habre certainly does not have the means of launching a blitzkrieg. He is officially receiving no overseas aid and is still largely equipped with weapons captured from his adversaries. The equipment which passes through Sudan is apparently paid for with funds collected by Chadians in Saudi Arabia. The defense minister is also regarded, on paper, as the weakest since his men—who do not number more than 7,000--are fighting in a ratio of one to five.

The FAN, however, seem to think that this sporadic war is in their interests. By merely resisting the most violent attacks and digging into their positions they are testing their adversaries without revealing their real strength. The FAN's main virtue is their sense of military secrecy.

"Hissein Habre is waging an urban guerrilla war whose main factor of success is time," a French military expert explained to us. A long war without any major immediate risk above all enables the defense minister to channel his efforts into obtaining support for his cause among the Ndjamena civilian population and, more especially, among the few hundred thousand Chadian refugees in Cameroon, Nigeria and Central Africa.

In fact Kousseri, the border city, and Maroua and Garoua, cities situated in northern Cameroon, are "FAN sympathy areas," according to the restrained expression used by a Dutch diplomat. Hissein Habre's official organ AL-WATAN (THE NATION) has a wide distribution there.

The defense minister enjoys a much wider audience than the government as well as the goodwill, discreet of course, of the Cameroon authorities. The stray bullets and shells which explode in Cameroon are, 9 times out of 10, fired from the allied forces' positions. A large number of civilians also die in the FAN camp or on the section of the river which they control.

The defense minister's adversaries are also growing accustomed to this insidious war. None of them conceals the fact that the struggle against Hissein Habre is the only thing holding their alliance together. If the FAN leader were killed and the war won, the allies would quickly return to their former rivalries, poor north against opulent south, Muslims against Christians, "pro-Libyan supporters of Acyl" against "nationalist supporters of Goukouni."

The Libyan—The 'Worst Ally in the World'

Some people close to the leaders of these factions make no secret of the union's fragility. There are numerous cases of friction. Road blocks give rise to interminable quarrels. Not all the passes have the same value. As soon as the president goes away the vice president is accused of hatching a plot. Acyl Ahamat, nicknamed the "treasurer-paymaster" is suspected by the two others of distributing the Libyan manna unevenly.

On the allied side the "total war" is more an affair of mutual surveillance. The structure of the government, which was already precarious before fighting broke out, now survives in appearance only. Each of the allies has his own diplomacy and a separate headquarters.

The appeal which the coalition made to Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi and the Libyan military intervention have further accentuated those discordant notes. For instance, according to some officers the Chadian Armed Forces [FAT] and, more generally, the "southerners," especially the intellectuals and cadres, are finding it difficult to accept this massive Libyan presence on the national territory. Their camp needed material aid, not "this outright interference." Colonel Kamougue himself told us recently that he did not know of the existence of a Chadian-Libyan treaty signed 15 June.

The pact with Tripoli is having a dangerous influence on the most nationalist part of the alliance. Therefore, Goukouni Oueddei is already paying for his request for aid from Libya. Several hundred People's Armed Forces [FAP] fighters have preferred to desert or request postings to garrisons far away from the capital rather than fight alongside the "Islamic legions." "The Libya is the worst ally in the world," one of Goukouni Oueddei's loyal supporters was quick to say, bearing in mind that the Chadian National Liberation Front [FROLINAT] from which the FAP was formed always had tricky relations with Tripoli in the past. "Al-Qadhdhafi always accompanies his dinars with military interference." Many fighters remember the two battles at Faya-Largeau during summer 1978 between the FAP and 1,000 Libyan soldiers who had entered Chad officially to transport heavy weapons.

Indeed the government coalition's pro-Libyan clan boils down to the FAC and a few of the head of state's advisers including Ibrahim Youssouf who signed the 15 June treaty on Chad's behalf. According to reliable sources, the president himself only accepted Libyan aid under extreme pressure after his own troops in Ndjamena became exhausted in the spring. According to some people he may also have been overconfident: accustomed to regularly defeating Libyan soldiers or Acyl Ahamat's "columns," the FAP are still convinced that they will be able to repel attempts at interference when the time comes.

This optimism is not spared by everybody. The Libyan army's discretion in the fighting in the past few weeks lends some credibility to the theory held by those in Chad who think that Tripoli has already taken its allies in, and that Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi is more anxious to gain a foothold in the north and center of the country than in directly helping the allied forces.

Did Hissein Habre sense that the Libyan army's intervention would spark off a new split in the government camp? The defense minister is stepping up his efforts to reach agreement with some officials, former ministers and liberal figures who are natives of the south. "Behind Kamougue there are Chadians," he confided in us. The dispute with the latter is based on disdain and misunderstanding "maintained by the FAT," he said, a good image and a code too strongly marked by Islam, a personality unanimously deemed too intolerant.

Hissein Habre is seeking to reduce the fear he has inspired in the south since the first war in February 1979. To do this he is increasingly playing down his leaning toward a Muslim revolution and is trying to play on nationalist feelings in Chad's southern zone.

Several civilian figures whom he met in Maroua respond rather favorably to this unexpected proposal of a holy alliance. A former finance minister, conscious of the defense minister's diplomatic isolation in Africa and especially in France even proposed to plead the FAN's cause in Paris. "I did not like Hissein Habre," he explained. "I thought he would never win support among the southerners. However, present events show that he is the only Chadian politician with national stature. He is the only politician, although this may seem paradoxical, who is inspired by nationalist feeling and the only one not prepared to sell off Chad."

AB261234 Paris AFP in French 1111 GMT 26 Nov 80

[Text] Luanda, 26 Nov (AFP)--The MPLA-Workers Party of Angola has sent a message of solidarity to Mr Aristides Pereira, President of the Republic of Cape Verde and Secretary General of the PAIGC [African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde] following the coup that occurred in Guinea Bissau on 14 November, the official news agency ANGOP announced in Luanda on Wednesday.

The agency stated that Mrs Antonio dos Santos Franca (NDALU) and Alfonso van Dunen (MBINDA), members of the Angolan official delegation that went to Cape Verde on Saturday, delivered that message to Mr Pereira.

The message expresses the MPLA-Workers Party's concern over the risk of disunity within the PAIGC (the political party of both Cape Verde and Guinea-Bissau) as the result of the coup in Guinea. It adds that Angola is ready to contribute to defending the unity of the five former Portuguese colonies in Africa, that is Mozambique, Sao Tome and Principe, Guinea Bissau, Cape Verde and Angola.

ANGOP sources also say that the MLSTP (Movement for the Liberation of Sao Tome and Principe) has also sent a message of solidarity to Mr Pereira.

LD281218 Luanda Domestic Service in Portuguese 0530 GMT 28 Nov 80 EA

[Summary] An Angolan delegation led by Lucio Lara, an MPLA Political Bureau member and organizing secretary of the Party Central Committee, visited the People's Republic of the Congo [PRC] from 25 to 27 November. They had discussions with a delegation from the Congolese Workers' Party and met President Denis Sassou-Nguesso, to whom they handed a message of friendship from President Dos Santos. A joint communique was issued at the end of the visit, saying, among other things:

"The two delegations have resolved to commit themselves to the active promotion of the continuous and harmonious development of cooperation between the People's Republic of Angola and the PRC, such cooperation being in the interests and for the mutual benefit of the two parties.

"Having analyzed in depth the defense and security of the Congolese and Angolan revolutions, both delegations resolved to cooperate in these fields in order to strengthen defense and security along the common border.

"On international issues the two delegations voiced concern over certain current international developments which are a threat to man's right to freedom of action and progress. Both sides condemned South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia and its delaying tactics meant to frustrate rather than implement the UN plan. They declared their support for the UN plan for implementation of Resolution 435 on immediate dependence [as heard] for Namibia and reiterated their unswerving support for SWAPO as the sole, legitimate and authentic representative of the Namibian people."

"On the Middle East situation, the two delegations reaffirmed their vehement condemnation of the Camp David agreement and reiterated their unwavering support for the PLO and the Palestinian people's right to build an independent and sovereign nation.

"Analyzing the Chadian drama, the two delegations expressed grave concern over the conflict and firmly supported the resolution on Chad adopted at the 17th OAU heads of state and government summit in Freetown of 1-4 July 1980 and expressed their support for the government led by President Goukouni Oueddei.

"The two sides expressed grave concern over the armed conflict between Iran and Iraq, calling on these two brotherly nations to find a rapid solution through negotiation."

MUGABE HITS AT SOUTH AFRICA

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] SOUTH AFRICA was daily promoting subversion against the Government of Zimbabwe so that apartheid could last a little longer, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said last night.

Saying there were still more than 5 000 dissident recruits from Zimbabwe in the Transvaal, Mr Mugabe added these "aggressive antics" would not deter Zimbabweans from their "noble responsibility" to work for the freedom of Namibia and South Africa.

"The South African regime has with impunity and arrogance erected itself as this region's aggressor, from the Indian to the Atlantic Oceans. Daily it is promoting the subversion of our democratic governments so apartheid can have a longer lease of life," he told a dinner in honour of President Nyerere.

Mr Mugabe demanded that the proposed conference on the independence of Namibia be held with a definitive view to working out the necessary means for implementing United Nations Resolution 435.

"As far as we are concerned, the chief negotiators are SWAPO on the one hand and South Africa on the other. We hail SWAPO for adopting a most reasonable posture in agreeing to the inclusion, by South Africa, of puppet representatives in the latter's delegation."

The Prime Minister expressed the hope that the U.N. Secretary-General, Dr Kurt Waldheim, was ensuring that both the parameters and composition of the proposed Maputo conference on Namibia would be correct in terms of structural relationship.

Welcoming Dr Nyerere's message to Zimbabweans to remain united, Mr Mugabe pointed out that in the circumstances in which the enemy was trying to destabilise Zimbabwe, "It would be extreme folly for anyone to cherish divisive schemes and designs".

Reconciliation could not be a one-way endeavour, he said. "Loyalty is the key to the sustenance of our peace and independence, while disloyalty is not only incompatible with that peace, but also anathema to it."

In keeping with the policy of reconciliation, it was imperative that Zimbabweans ceased dwelling on the past, its evils and contradictions, and worked together for the furtherance of independence in the spirit of oneness.

In thanking Tanzania for its military, political and diplomatic support during the independence struggle, Mr Mugabe said Dr Nyerere's visit enabled the two countries to work out a joint economic programme.

"Our political struggle is only partially won unless the independence it bequeaths can translate itself into more tangible economic goods and benefits for the masses than the mere political freedoms and civil liberties enshrined in our constitution."

The Prime Minister spoke of Zimbabwe's satisfaction in being associated with other SADCC members in their effort to achieve economic inter-dependence and co-operation.

Turning to the State visit, Mr Mugabe said the people of Zimbabwe had sought to demonstrate the sincerity of their warm feelings and appreciation of friendship and solidarity which had grown between them and Tanzanians.

They had also tried to show by their welcome their sincere gratitude for the "immense assistance unstintingly given by Tanzania" for the prosecution of the armed struggle.

They had also paid tribute to Dr Nyerere as a person and had done so in the joy and realisation of the unity that had been forged between the two states.

Zimbabweans look upon the Mwalimu not as a mere visitor but as one of them. "They hold you dear, in both your capacity as the President of Tanzania and as the father, now perhaps the grandfather, of the revolutions and struggles that have brought and continue to bring winds of political change to East, Central and Southern Africa," the Prime Minister told Dr Nyerere.

MAPUTO ROUTE TRAFFIC--Zimbabwean exports through Maputo are not expected to increase much above the present 2 200 tonnes a day until the Mozambique Railways receive the diesel locomotives it has on order. A National Railways of Zimbabwe spokesman said yesterday that since early October, when the first train from Zimbabwe since February 1976 had gone to Maputo, an average of one train a day had been running to Chicualacuala (formerly Malvernia). There it was picked up by a locomotive of Mozambique Railways and taken to Maputo. "On occasions, we run two trains a day from Rutenga to Chicualacuala, but this depends on the traffic available. "The frequency is dependent on the capacity of Mozambique Railways to clear the traffic from Chicualacuala. It would be in the interests of export-importers and the railways to use the Mozambique route to the coast, the spokesman said. It offered a quicker turn-round of wagons and was much cheaper than the route to South African ports. Exports being carried on the direct line to Maputo are mainly steel, asbestos and sugar. Return trains carry anhydrous ammonia and fertilisers. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Dec 80 p 4]

POLITICAL BUREAU COMMUNIQUE HITS ANTI-GABONESE ACTIVITIES

AB291150 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 28 Nov 80

[Final Communique issued in Libreville on 27 November Following Meeting of Gabonese Political Bureau Central Committee--read by Political Bureau spokesman]

[Excerpts] [Begin recording] Final communique: The political bureau of the Central Committee of the Gabonese Democratic Party met this day, 27 November, 1980, at 0900 hours at the Renovation Palace, under the high patronage of His Excellency el-Hadj Omar Bongo, founding secretary general of the Gabonese Democratic Party.

It then proceeded with a broad review of current issues in Africa and the rest of the world. Thus, special emphasis was laid on relations between Gabon and the other African states. Concerning Gabon, the Gabonese people, the Gabonese Democratic Party and the government of our country, under the enlightened leadership of the great Comrade el-Hadj Omar Bongo, have always founded these relations on the basis of the intangible principles of the UN Charter and the OAU Charter on the respect of the sovereignty of each country. Unfortunately, one cannot help observing that certain countries, jealous of our political stability, jealous of the national unity and the cohesion of the Gabonese people, jealous of the prosperity and happiness of Gabonese men and women, persist in a shameless, mean and hypocritical manner, in soiling the good name of our country through a systematic campaign of disparagement. These countries dare describe Gabon as the lackey of certain powers whereas it is notoriously known that these very countries behave towards these powers as veritable footmen. They even go as far as to worry about the economic and financial health of our country, which, as every one knows, is by far the best in the continent, as proven by the good report of the International Monetary Fund on our country.

In reality, the ultimate objective aimed at by these countries is the destabilization of the renovation regime using all means including especially, enrolling of young people and engaging them in special militia and commandos for subversive activities directed against Gabon.

The political bureau once again denounces these vile, odious and retrograde maneuvers. It warns these troublemakers that they would do well to get busy with the development problems of their own countries, which, we know all too well, subsist on alms and wallow in misery. [Few words indistinct] consequently, the political bureau requests its government and more particularly, the Minister of National Defense and the Minister of National Orientation to intensify the measures of the surveillance of the national territory and to systematically repel all foreign nationals who are suspect and lack the required documents for entry into our country and to expose publicly from now on, any foreigner accused of any subversive acts and all the material proof supporting the case.

'PUNCH' REPORTS LIMANN INTERVIEW ON EXPULSION OF LIBYANS

AB281715 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 28 Nov 80

[Press Review]

[Excerpt] The PUNCH has a report on its front page of an interview with President Limann in which he talks (?fully) of the reasons behind the expulsion of Libyan diplomats from Accra. According to the PUNCH Dr Limann reveals that, in view of the economic constraints, one of the conditions for the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries was an initial arrangement for the accomodation of diplomats by the host countries.

The president is however reported to have said that the Libyans came unceremoniously and made their own accomodation arrangements without consultations. This he noted was done without the normal protocol and diplomatic [word indistinct].

The PUNCH says President Limann charged that while in the country the Libyan diplomats has been dealing directly with private persons and subversive organizations whom he said were known to be totally opposed to constitutional rule in the country. Dr Limann is reported to have specifically mentioned the invitation extended to the Chairman of the erstwhile AFRC [Armed Forces Revolutionary Council] Flight Lieutenant J.J. Rawlings by Colonel al-Qadhdhafi to visit Libya. The PUNCH quotes the president as saying that there was evidence from what is referred to as our Togolese counterpart that Flight Lieutenant Rawlings clandestinely passed through Togo where finance for creating confusion and establishing a moslem state in Ghana was granted. The paper further reveals that President Limann was particularly sore about the way Colonel al-Qadhdhafi snubbed Ghana's ministers by refusing to see them or [word indistinct] while he rolled the red carpet for private individuals from Ghana. This he sees as a serious affront for the Ghana Government.

The PUNCH also quotes the president as declaring that Ghana is not faced with an economic crisis that is so serious as to warrant what President Limann refers to as a political disaster of devaluing the Cedi. The president criticized foreign experts who offer wrong economic prescriptions that vary in the local situation.

BRIEFS

PAPER AGAINST CURRENCY DEVALUATION--The ECHO comes out against any devaluation of the Cedi as a cure for the country's ailing economy. It says although economists and financial experts pounce on devaluation as a panacea for the weak economies of Third World countries, their prescription has turned out to be wrong. The ECHO observes that while its worth in the industrial countries is to attract more markets by devaluing, developing countries gain little from it because they are still tied to the apron strings of their ex-colonizers. They dictate the price for raw materials from the Third World countries and manipulate the prices to their disadvantage. Devaluation therefore tends to harm their import oriented economies. The ECHO cautions the government that before it devalues the Cedi, it should weigh the political consequences carefully. It says the president should not be deceived to take that action, because at a time of low productivity very little will be gained from it. The ECHO reiterates that the task facing the nation is great, but the temptation to take short cuts is dangerous. It goes on to suggest that more enthusiasm should be put into export promotion of nontraditional goods. The ECHO adds that with the drop in the price and the reluctance of the United States to join any cocoa price stabilization scheme, the country should intensify its efforts in other areas. [Excerpt] [AB301217 Accra Domestic Service in English 1100 GMT 30 Nov 80]

NO JUSTIFICATION FOR DEVALUATION--The President, Dr Limann, has made it clear that there is no need to devalue the Cedi. He said Ghana is not faced with the threat of any imminent economic earthquake that could warrant any government rush into the political disaster of devaluing the Cedi. The president, who was speaking in an interview with the PUNCH [newspaper], said the country's most immediate problem now is how to get the factories working again in order to produce at full capacity to boost exports instead of devaluation. Dr Limann noted that devaluation was never part of the PNP's [People's National Party] commitment and promise to the electorate during the last election. In any case the government does not consider the review of the exchange rate of the Cedi a priority at the moment. The president referred to the Tanzanian cold war with the International Monetary Fund. He said his government cannot [few words indistinct] of unacceptable and unrealistic obsolete economic theories from outside. Dr Limann criticized foreign economic experts who offer wrong economic prescriptions that are totally at variance with our local situation. NEWSPAPER UPSET WITH FALLING COFFEE PRICES

AB111845 Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 11 Dec 80 p 3

[Editorial: "Unfair Situation"]

[Text] The prices of coffee are now at their lowest level in 4 1/2 years. They have fallen by over 30 percent since the beginning of this year.

The economies of most African countries are, therefore, suffering from rough treatment and these countries cannot do anything about it.

The coffee trade, which is the world's most important market of food products, should be beneficial to both sides.

It is, therefore, a pity to observe once again that the consumers be bent on disregarding the real problems of the producers.

This is the first time, it must be recalled, that the prices of the two principal produce of most of the African countries, cocoa and coffee are simultaneously suffering from a severe fall.

The situation is all the more serious since it weakens the economies of these countries immediately and could create, in the short term, unbearable living conditions which breed disorder and rebellion. As was said by the head of state in his address to the nation on 6 December, "Do the United States and their allies not understand all too well what we keep repeating to them, namely, that we are not asking for charity."

"As for those of us who are lucky to work and produce, what we want is simply more fairness to be able to achieve for all a suitable living standard that will generate social peace."

This statement by President Houphouet-Boigny is even more important as the effects of a deteriorating exchange rate are felt. The weak are being exploited today even more than ever. No, the consumers must be more fair; the interests of all are at stake.

MOI COMMENTS ON REPORTS OF UGANDA STOPPING GOODS SENT TO KENYA

LD301544 Nairobi Domestic Service in English 0400 GMT 30 Nov 80 EA

[Excerpt] His Excellency President Daniel Arap Moi has said that Kenya was studying reports from Zaire and Rwanda, that Uganda had blocked their goods destined for Kenya. President Moi, who was addressing a mammoth crowd at Kabarak high school during the funds drive in aid of the school yesterday, said he was closely studying the situation and would take appropriate action. President Moi said that Kenya allowed smooth transportation of Uganda goods from Mombasa, because Uganda was a landlocked country, saying that Kenya was committed to maintaining friendly relations with her neighbors.

President Moi called on the local press to desist from publishing stories by nationals of neighboring countries living in Kenya that were critical of their government. He warned such nationals to stop using Nairobi as a launching-pad for attacks against their home government.

President Moi also hit at the Kenyatta University students for boycotting lectures, demanding that the government increase their allowances. Saying that he had been taken aback by their ridiculous demands and their unruly behavior, the president recalled that it was only recently that he increased their allowances. The president said that while the country is faced with a shortage of qualified teachers, he wondered why the students did not accord respect to their principals and other senior college officials as they accorded him as their chancellor.

AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH EGYPT--Kenya and Egypt today signed an economic and technical co-operation agreement. Commerce Minister, Mr Eliud Mwamunga, who signed for the Kenya Government, said that the volume of trade between the two countries is remarkable but noted that there is still room for expansion. PRC TO SPEAK THROUGH CHAIRMAN DOE ON POLICY

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 18 Nov 80 pp 1, 2

[Text] "From now on, the People's Redemption Council will speak with one voice on matters of policy through its Chairman," the Head of State and Chairman of the PRC M/Sgt. Samuel K. Doe declared yesterday.

"All letters coming from the Council on matters affecting the operation of government business, commerce, investment and labour will carry my signature, approving same in my capacity as Chairman" M/Sgt. Doe said.

He said the Council was the highest decision-making body in the country, and the move to speak with one voice was necessary to restore confidence of the business community and foreign investors in "our economy and how to manage and regulate same to our mutual benefit."

M/Sgt. Doe said it was essential to define and qualify the role that the PRC, collectively and individually, "is expected to play in leading us in this era of redemption and reconstruction."

He said the Council was the only body empowered to make and amend laws of the country.

Head of State Doe reminded members of the PRC that they are motivators and crusaders of the revolutions as well as protectors and guarantors of the rights and freedom of the Liberian people.

"We will therefore continue to participate actively in programs designed to solve problems affecting our nation," M/Sgt. Doe pointed out.

MINISTER PRAISES 'NEW LIBERIAN,' 'REDEEMER' NEWSPAPERS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 21 Nov 80 p 6

[Text] The Minister of Information, Cultural Affairs and Tourism, Gabriel Nimley, has said that the people of Liberia have every right to know what is happening in their country and therefore must be properly informed accordingly.

He said the practice of hiding from the people the truth of existing situations is often counter-productive, and such a trend, he said, has been responsible for the downfall of many a government, the erstwhile TWP administration being a typical case.

Answering questions during ELBS 'Meet-the-Press' program, on ELTV last Sunday night Minister Nimley emphasized that a free press is what a healthy nation needs, adding "I will do everything in conjunction with the PRC to achieve this goal."

He said the policy of the PRC government as regards the dissemination of information is not to encourage undue praises heaped on it, but rather to urge journalists to be objective in their news coverage and freely present facts as they are.

Minister Nimley denied that there are plans to introduce censorship, particularly so in the case of the foreign press. "There has been no talk of censorship," he said, "but we require that journalists must be responsible for what they say or write."

On the question of whether Government, as the owner of the NEW LIBERIAN, usually pressurize the NEW LIBERIAN into being its mouthpiece, Minister Nimley said this is not the case. He referred to the Esther Doe case as an example of the freedom the NEW LIBERIAN and the REDEEMER newspapers enjoy, and also cited the Readers' Forum in the papers as an outlet for the people to talk to the PRC.

Taking the opportunity of the program to acquaint the Minister with the state of affairs as affecting the NEW LIBERIAN, Editor-in-Chief, Lamini A. Waritay, who was one of the panelists told the minister of the need to make the paper autonomous, so that it will be in a much better position to acquire the facilities it so badly needs.

Mr Waritay regretted that the national newspaper of NEW LIBERIAN's stature, cannot boast of basic transportation facilities, or a much more conducive environment to work in. He appealed to the Minister to make a representation to the PRC on their behalf.

Minister Nimley promised that he would do his best to see to this. He praised the editors and reporters of the NEW LIBERIAN/REDEEMER newspapers for what he called "their very good performance in adequately informing the people and the Government."

He said the papers are now correctly serving as the channel of communication between the PRC Government and the people which, he said, is a healthy exercise.

FRG AID TO FORESTRY INDUSTRY, AFFORESTATION NOTED

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 21 Nov 80 pp 1, 6

[Text] Bonn (DaD)--Forestry in Liberia in the past 15 years has progressed considerably. The number of wood concessions and options rose from six to over 50, annual felling from 30,000 to 600,000 cubic metres and state income from forestry rose from 0.1 to about seven million US dollars per annum.

It would hardly have been possible to cope with such rapid growth without help from outside. The purpose of the exercise was to keep the use of the woods under control and at the same time to implement a national afforestation programme. Furthermore forestry administration had to be reorganized and extended.

Despite considerable wood reserves forestry had previously played a comparatively minor role in the Liberian economy.

This changed after Liberia, with aid from the Federal Republic of Germany, had implemented its wood inventory Liberia project (1960/67), which was followed in 1972/75 by the "forestry counselling programme."

In 1975 the Liberia Afforestation programme began, which Bonn is backing with funds and personnel until 1981. Furthermore the World Bank, the US Peace Corps and other organisations are contributing to the development of the country's forest and wood industry.

In the implementation of the programme the West German advisers cooperate closely with the Liberian Government. As a member of the national afforestation committee, thy German project leader works closely with the university and the wood research institute attached to it.

Outside work is concentrated in the south east and north west areas. In the Zwedru/Grebo national forest region the exploitation and thorough rejuvenation of the natural forest has priority. In the Bomi Hills/Cape Mount region the unproductive secondary woods are being transformed into fast growing, productive fibre wood plantations.

Some results of cooperation: 3,000 hectares reafforested and thus 1,000 jobs created. Forestry officials, fellers and specialists have been trained, better working methods have been introduced and the cultivation of native woods has begun in two forestry schools.

The estate and land cars from West Germany as the well as short wave radios [as published] performed sterling services as did forestry equipment, emergency generators, equipment for workshops and offices. Bonn is investing over DM3,600,000 in afforestation and will also aid the build up of the wood industry.

COCA COLA WORKERS TO BE REPLACED IF STRIKE CONTINUES

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 18 Nov 80 pp 2,8

[Article by T. Maxson Teah]

[Text] The Labour Ministry has threatened to replace workers of the United States Trading Company (USTC) Coca Cola Plant if they do not resume work by today.

Labour, Youth and Sports Minister Fred J. Blay said his Ministry would send a truck load of job-seekers to take over the duties of the striking workers because they have not heeded appeals by government.

He said since Friday, his Ministry has been doing everything possible to negotiate with the angry workers in order to have them return to work.

The Minister said that while the People's Redemption Council (RC) decree number 12 which put a ban on all strike was still in effect, the workers of the plant had vowed not to return to their jobs unless their demands were immediately met.

This act, Minister Blay said, tends to affect the economy of the State. He cited as an example the acute shortage of soft drinks on the local market as a result of the workers' strike action.

He said that his Ministry would continue to adhere to the existing labour laws in order to guide the nation's economy.

In this respect Minister Blay therefore warned any group of workers against acts not compatible to the labor laws of the country.

Workers of the Coca Cola plant last Friday put down their tools and demanded the reinstatement of 40 of their colleagues who were declared redundant by the management of USTC and immediately replaced by casual workers.

Coupled with the demand, the workers called on management to provide medical and transportation facilities.

They also demanded the abolition of casual labour employment and payment for extra time spent on job during 'lunch period.'

The Spokesman for group, Mr James Kollie, said he has appealed to the workers to return to work, but they continued to maintain that their problems /must be solved before they resume work.'

He said the workers have, however, said they would return to work if management could guarantee that their requests would be looked into without delay.

Mr Kollie explained that in 1978 the workers at the plant filed a complaint with the Labour Ministry against management's policy of recruiting casual labourers to replace employees.

This complaint, he said, was investigated by the Government and the USTC management was asked to desist from said practice. Instead, they have continued to ignore the ruling of the Ministry, he said.

Last September according to the spokesman, the workers again filed same complaint with the PRC Chairman on Labour, Youth and Sports, but "nothing has been done...."

Efforts go get in contact with the Chairman on Labour, Youth and Sports to clear the air as regard the workers' allegation did not materialize up to press time.

Early yesterday, the Assistant Minister for Labour Standards at the Labour Ministry, Mr Menyongar, appealed to the workers to return to their jobs, promising them that everything would be done to have their demands looked into.

However, he warned that if the appeal was not heeded to, the workers will be fired and immediately replaced.

CHISSANO NOTES CHANCE OF JOINING CEMA

LD292016 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 0800 GMT 29 Nov 80 EA

[Text] Joaquim Chissano, Mozambique Minister of Foreign Affairs, has said that the sanctions against South Africa should be applied in the first instance by all the countries who have economic power inside that country.

Speaking to reporters who had covered the Maputo conference, Chissano added that the connections which Mozambique maintains with South Africa are physical and geographical, while in relations with Western countries Mozambique's ties are economic.

The head of the Mozambique Foreign Service said that Sweden has given an example in the struggle against apartheid. He advised other Western countries to desist from investing in South Africa. Sanctions mean struggle and a struggle demands sacrifices, said Joaquim Chissano, adding that some countries are not prepared for these sacrifices.

On the question of Mozambique not being a member of the Lome Convention, Joaquim Chissano said that our country needs time to study the advantages (?to make a decision). Mozambique thinks that there are many other ways of cooperating with the EEC and its members.

Meanwhile, he said that there are possibilities of Mozambique becoming a member of CEMA, which would permit it to be directly connected to the socialist countries.

COMMENTARY EXAMINES LIBYAN 'UNDIPLOMATIC BEHAVIOR'

AB031130 Accra Domestic Service in English 1800 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Text] Colonel Al-Qadhdhafi has said Libya is not involved in the war in Chad. He said he would commit Libya if he is asked to. He gave no reason, however, for his admission about the presence of Libyan guards and military personnel at the Presidential Palace in N'Djamena. His silence on that aspect leads to one or two assumptions. The Libyans were invited. That is probably since they are appearing on the side of the government. It is possible on the other hand that Col Al-Qadhdhafi offered like Nyerere did in Uganda, but unlike the Russians in Afghanistan. Such response to a proper invitation to help dislodge [words indistinct] is challenging a legally constituted government who is host in this instance as seen from the outside. Without that interpretation, the OAU charter and international law would say Libya is guilty for interfering in Chad.

But cases against Libya from elsewhere support their meddling. In addition, there are the recent admissions by Al-Qadhdhafi himself and President Senghor about the dangers of colonization of Africa by Africans plus a ready catalogue which reads: The Gambia, Ghana, Senegal and Gabon. All of them have in succession broken off relations with Libya and expelled their diplomats for undiplomatic behavior within a month. Nigeria has threatened similar action for just about the same accusation, except in one detail. This is that the Libyans are buying large quantities of food from Nigeria without license. That tiny detail is intriguing because it appears to suggest answers to two significant questions.

One is about Libya itself. Until currently, Libya's green revolution was being praised as the latest North African economic miracle which, in fact, some people had urged Ghanaians to copy. Alas! Where have all the super harvests gone to necessitate shopping for food in Nigeria? The most reasonable explanation leads to the second puzzle: might they be sending the food to Chad? The Nigerian warning said so. The inference from the Nigerian opposition is that they do not wish to be involved directly or indirectly in the Chad war.

On its own, Nigeria has good reasons to resent Libya. It is or must seem obvious to Nigeria that their earlier [word indistinct] efforts to settle the Chad dispute were frustrated by Libya. One suspects that the [word indistinct] succession of OAU mediation and settlement plans failed the same. That suspicion has a foundation which is a triangle. At the base, on one leg is Al-Qadhdhafi's own internal troubles with latent discontent at home being (?run) by academics inside and political exiles. He needs a diversion. The external is the best. On the other foot at the base is his ambition to lead the Meghreb--the Arab North--and Islam, ultimately using anti-semitism to win a following. Both have failed.

The apex of this tripod is the other aim to lead the Afro-Arab nonaligned movement in a shift to the political left. In other words, Al-Qadhdhafi firmly believes like Cuba's Fidel Castro that the nonaligned movement's content is inherently anti-imperialist. That principle and interest impel nonaligned countries to forge a natural alliance with the communist world. Incidentally, that idea was rejected at the summit in Havana last September 1979.

Meanwhile, something has been happening throughout the world. Russia's invasion of Afghanistan, the death of Tito and Poland have forced the United States to redraw their global strategic map while the Cubans who have been Moscow's proxy in Africa had not made any more headway since Angola, which was itself now asking for good relations with the West. It seems it was at this stage that both Havana and Moscow picked up Al-Qadhdhafi, friendly all along, instead of busy Colonel Mengistu of Ethiopia to replace them in Africa. He was a good choice since he is ruthlessly in control at home and has the petro-dollars to cover up the funding. [as heard] [sentence indistinct] one by one, Al-Qadhdhafi's revolutionaries were exported to Africa disguised as diplomats, ardent Moslems, philanthropists and [few words indistinct] All are being sent back post haste. Apart from the rebuff to Al-Qadhdhafi, the ejections are also a warning to Moscow directly and indirectly to the others that undiplomatic behavior is more than [words indistinct] Africans could bear.

ISSUES ON REVENUE ALLOCATION DEBATE SPELLED OUT

AB021934 Lagos International Service in English 1630 GMT 2 Dec 80

[Station Commentary]

[Text] It was only to be expected that the issue of revenue allocation would arouse keen public interests and generate widespread discussions which might bring out some divergence of views. After all, the revenue to be allocated is the means for providing social services and carrying out development projects. All citizens therefore have a stake in the system used to share the revenue accrued into the federation's account. They might naturally be tempted to speak in favor of much money being made available to the sector where they stand to benefit most.

It is because of this vested interest that the question of sharing funds from the nation's account has always generated controversy. The bill now before the national assembly is based on the white paper of the Okigbo Commission, which was the fourth attempt toward finding an acceptable formula for revenue allocation. Naturally, the same criteria, such as the principle of equality of the component parts of the federation and that of derivation, population and need, have always formed part of the report of the various panels, though with modifications. Each time there has always been controversy over the criteria. Today, however, it is comforting to realize that with regard to the bill now before our legislators, the area of controversy has been considerably reduced in comparison to previous occasions. The criteria for allocation have not at all been the target for criticism, except of course for a few critics of the principle of derivation.

The main issue has been the proportion of allocation to the three tiers of government, that is those at the federal, state and local government levels. Under the proposals in the bill before the national assembly, the federal government is to have 55 percent from the federation account, while the state government will get 34.5 percent and the local government 8 percent. Two and a half percent will go to the initial development of the new federal capital.

The bill specifies that the 34.5 percent put down for the states will be subdivided to give up 30 percent to the state and 4.5 percent to a special fund which will take care of awards on the basis of derivation and other continuing ecological problems.

The main center of controversy has been the amount of allocation to be made to the federal government on one hand, and the state and local governments on the other. In this regard, it has been suggested that the state and local governments should have more than the allocation proposed for them, while the share of the federal government should be reduced. The main argument is the claim that the state and local governments have more to do directly for the people than the federal government. Besides, the fear has been expressed that the federal government would be too powerful.

One important impression emerges from all these differences of opinion. It is the feeling that there is a wish at the various levels of government to render as much service as possible to the people and to fight for the means to do so. The minister of finance, Professor S. M. Essang, in a statement, draws attention to reduction of about 20 percent with the present figure representing the allocation to the federal government as compared with its share in previous years. Any proposal for a further cut would therefore appear not to have taken into account this reduction already effected.

The fear by some people about the federal government becoming too strong runs counter to an accepted principle of federalism. In any viable federation, the federal government must stand capable to act as a government of the last resort, always ready to bail out state and local governments which may find themselves in economic difficulties.

OBASANJO SAID ADVISED TO WITHDRAW BOOK

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 15 Nov 80 p 3

[Text] A FORMER Governor of the defunct Western State, retired Major-General Adeyinka Adebayo, has advised General Olusegun Obasanjo to voluntarily withdraw his book 'My Command' from circulation.

Retired Major-General Adebayo threatened that if the author did not withdraw the book he would appeal to 'some other quarters.' He did not elaborate.

He described 'My Command' as a provocative book which should have not have been written by someone like General Obasanjo, who knew the background of the civil war.

The retired major-general, who claimed to be the most senior Nigerian army officer living, said that 'a lot of water passed under the bridge' during the 30-month Nigerian civil war and that 'nobody should claim credit for anything.'

He expressed the opinion that the history of the civil war should be left to historians.

'As a matter of fact,' he said, 'Professor Ade Ajayi and others have been commissioned to write the history of the civil war and some of us have made materials available to them.'

The former governor said that General Obasanjo should have passed the book's manuscript to people like him for vetting before publication so that he could give him the correct perspective.

Talking about the inadequacies of the book, General Adebayo stated that General Obasanjo did a lot of things which he did not include in 'My Command.'

For example, he disclosed, General Obasanjo did not include the historic battle of Ore which he led and lost.

Major-General Adebayo is the fourth retired high-ranking officer of the Nigerian Army to criticise General Obasanjo's book.

IMPORTS REPORTED 100 PERCENT OVER LAST YEAR

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 14 Nov 80 p 7

[Article by Moses Olorode]

[Text] NIGERIA's Import Bill now stands at 1,200 million Naira per month, the Minister of Finance, Professor Sunday Essang disclosed yesterday.

This, the minister said, represented a 100 per cent increase over last year's figures.

Professor Essang made this disclosure while testifying before the Senate Joint Committee on Finance and Appropriation, Commerce and Industry currently meeting to consider the 1980 finance bill.

In view of this high import bill, the minister noted, it would be wrong to accuse the Federal Government of planning too many obstacles in the way of importers.

Explaining the implications of this high import bill on the nation's economy, the Governor of the Central Bank, Mr. Ola Vincent who accompanied the minister to the meeting noted that when considered along with Nigeria's economic strength, there would be no cause for anxiety.

He told the committee that the nation's economy had improved considerably in the past months, adding that the rate of improvement would have been faster if debates on the 1980 appropriation bill had not been so protracted.

Mr. Vincent disclosed that there was considerable reduction in the amount of money going out of the country, thus strengthening the nation's foreign reserve position.

On the controversial form 'M', Mr. Vincent said that it was not true that the CBN was making it unnecessarily difficult for prospective importers to obtain the forms.

On the benefits of form 'M', Mr. Vincent said that the system had saved for the country 111 million Naira of foreign exchange since January this year.

Through the system, he added Nigeria had been able to obtain goods at prices different from what other OPEC countries paid for the same goods.

He said that the government was planning to break the monopoly now being enjoyed by the company appointed to inspect goods imported into the country to minimise delay encountered by importers.

At the moment only one company, Societte Generale, is responsible for inspecting all goods coming into the country.

He said that three companies were being considered by the Ministry of Finance for appointment.

At this point, Professor Essang cut in to say that a memorandum was already before the Federal Executive Council to consider breaking this monopoly, and noted that a bill to that effect would soon come before the National Assembly.

On the controversy over the importation of rice, the minister said that the issue was not whether rice was staple food or not but whether it was wise for Nigeria with "an agrarian revolution and plenty of land to rely so much on outsiders on matters of food."

OIL PIPELINE REPORTED BLOWN UP; THIRTEEN ARRESTED

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 14 Nov 80 p 3

[Article by Friday O. Paul]

[Text]

From FRIDAY O. PAUL, Ahoada

THIRTEEN persons, including a traditional ruler have been arrested in the Rivers State for allegedly blowing up an oil pipeline and causing a major oil spillage.

The incident occurred at Odemerenyi near Ahoada in Ahoada Local Government area of the state.

Among those arrested are nine women. The suspects were alleged to have blown up the oil installation in order to create a disaster and make claims for the resulting damages.

The spillage polluted farms and lakes, destroyed marine life and is now causing economic hardship to fishermen and other inhabitants in the area.

The blown-up pipeline runs through Odemerenyi and terminates at an oil well belonging to Elf Nigeria Limited — an oil prospecting company.

The names of the suspects are still being withheld by the police, but a police source told the New Nigerian that the incident had been thoroughly investigated.

The police and the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) were also understood to be currently investigating another oil spillage which occurred at Ekpena near Ahoada, recently, to ascertain the causes of the spillage.

Police sources said that there were reports that incessant oil spillages in the area were being caused by "unscrupulous elements" and some prominent chiefs in and around Ahoada had been questioned on the issue.

Contacted, the Divisional Police Officer for Ahoada (DSP), Mr. Joe Biovo, did not deny the story but said: "I don't grant any press interview, I have always told you, I am not in a position to speak to the press. Go to Port-Harcourt and meet the Police Public Relations Officer."

And contacted yesterday, in Lagos, NNPC Public Affairs Manager, Mr. Alex Nwokedi said they had not got the report yet but it could be true because people in that area were in the habit of blowing-up oil pipelines so as to cause spillage and claim compensation.

OGHORODE PORT, BENDEL STATE, TO COST OVER 49 MILLION NAIRA

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 18 Nov 80 p 13

[Article by Andrew Isibor]

[Text] THE new port under construction at Sapele in Bendel State will cost the Federal Government over 49 million Naira when completed.

This was disclosed by the Minister of Transport, Alhaji Umaru Dikko when he laid the foundation stone of the port at Ogherode near Sapele.

Alhaji Umaru Dikko further said that the amount did not include the necessary equipment, which would enable the port become operational.

He expressed the hope that the port would be ready within a period of two years, adding that when completed, it would be commissioned by President Shehu Shagari.

The minister deposed that the contract for the construction of the port was awarded to a competent firm — Julius Berger. He added that geographical consideration had compelled the Federal Government to seek a better site for the new port, which would have a total quay length of 1,183 metres, with five berths of 200 metres each.

He said that the land on which the new port was going to be constructed was already the property of the Nigerian Ports Authority, adding that the problems of land acquisition and payment of compensation had been eliminated.

Alhaji Dikko said that the new port would be of great advantage to importers and exporters by making evacuation of cargo easier and faster.

Earlier, in his welcome address, the General Manager of the Nigerian Ports Authority, Alhaji B.M. Tukur, noted that other ports had been commissioned in Warri and Calabar.

He expressed the hope that the new Sapele Port, when completed, would tap the water resources in the delta areas and also help to boost the Green Revolution programme of the Federal Government.

He said that the port would be provided with facilities such as transit sheds, a warehouse, an administrative block, offices for shipping agencies, customs office and a police station. Others are a staff canteen, engineering workshop and an emergency clinic.

TIGA DAM EXPENSES SAID ONE-HALF MILLION NAIRA ANNUALLY

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 18 Nov 80 p 15

[Text]

ABOUT half a million Naira is being spent annually by the Hadejia—Jama'are River Basin Development Authority to maintain the Tiga Dam in Kano State.

This was disclosed by the secretary of the authority, Malam Usman Alhaji, while speaking at the launching ceremony of the Kano River Project Co-ordinating Committee, which took place at Kadawa near Kano.

According to the secretary, the authority was faced with the problems of land acquisition from farmers for its development, adding that only through the monitoring of such problems that the authority would be able to solve them.

He further said that the authority's ultimate objective was to establish farmers' co-operative society to enable the authority to procure bank loans for the farmers in the state.

The secretary revealed that plans were under way for the authority to import machinery for the tomato processing industry at Kadawa, which he said, would take off next year.

He said the authority had plans to set up an action committee to monitor its activities and also to influence the establishment of the proposed farmers' co-operative society.

Commenting on farm products, the secretary said that the authority had advised farmers not to plant guineacorn during rainy season.

Some of the products, he said, were perishable ones and the authority would not encourage farmers to plant them in large quantities without adequate plans made for their storage.

He then announced that the authority has set up a marketing department for the various products.

On the construction of dams in the state, he revealed that the authority had at one time or the other, been severely criticised over the amount of money being spent on dams and appealed to the news media in the state as well as the state's legislators to help the authority in educating the public on the importance of dams.

IMO STATE REPORTED PLANNING FULL INDUSTRIALIZATION

Kaduna NEW NIGERIAN in English 19 Nov 80 p 9

[Text]

THE Imo State Government has announced plans to fully industrialise the state, beginning from the 1981—85 fourth national development plan period.

Under the programme, various industries are to be established in parts of the state.

Governor Sam Mbakwe announced this while laying the foundation stone of an industrial complex being undertaken by a private company — Margil Industries Limited — at Atta in the Mbaitoli/Ikeduru Local Government area of the state, last week-end.

He named as some of the industries to be established a flour mill, a vehicle assembly plant, a brewery and soft drink plant, a corrugated aluminium factory, a paint factory and an iron and floor tile industries.

He, however, refused to disclose the sites for the proposed industries, saying 'that is my secret'.

In order to further boost the economy of the state, he said that the state government encourages private, enterpreneurs to set up industries and expressed happiness that the message of industrialization was being gradually received by some businessmen in the area.

Mr. Mbakwe saw all efforts towards industrialization by indigenous industrialists as a justification of the nation's strategy of indigenisation.

In a welcome address he read earlier, the Chief Executive of the company, Mr. E.C. Iwuanyanwu described the ceremony as a fulfilment of the continuing desire of his company to vitalise the rural economy.

According to Mr. Iwuanyanwu, the effort to set up the complex was in recognition of the crying necessity to ebb the increasing flow of young people to the urban cities in the state and keep them gainfully employed in the rural areas.

RECONCILIATION, REVENUE ALLOCATION--The DAILY STAR focuses on the activities of the present federal administration and commends its efforts in the area of national reconciliation. The paper points out that the Federal Government has been responsive to the governments of the [civil] war-affected areas and hopes that it will continue in this direction in order to quicken their reintegration into the country's social and economic mainstream. The STAR makes a general appraisal of the achievements of the federal administration in this regard and urges it to extend its magnanimity toward the members of the armed forces and prison officials who were affected by the war. The Nigerian CHRONICLE reflects on a statement credited to a senator that the principle of derivation in revenue allocation contributed to the civil war, as well as the threats of secession in some regions. The paper disagrees with the senator, pointing out that there are other overriding political reasons which led to the crisis. It argues further that it would be unfair to the mineral-producing states to be denied the principle of derivation in allocating revenues. The CHRONICLE contends that what the states request of any allocation formula is compensation for ecological disturbances. Still on revenue allocation, the Nigerian HERALD says that in arriving at a formula, members of the House of Representatives should consider the need to keep the country as a corporate body. The paper recalls that under the old regime, the Federal Government had 75 percent of the total revenue and thinks that a drastic reduction would threaten the existence of the country as a federation. The HERALD warns about the dangers of having a poverty-stricken center when the states thrive in opulence. The paper believes that the center must have a reasonable share of the revenue to execute all the responsibilities which the constitution lays on it. On allocations to local governments, the HERALD feels that they must be sufficiently funded to improve their efficiency. [Excerpt] [AB041644 Lagos Domestic Service in English 1200 GMT 4 Dec 80]

REDUCTION REQUEST FOR ABUJA--The acting Governor of Niger State, Alhaji Idirs Alhassan Kpaki, has said that the state's request for a reduction in the size of the new Federal Capital, Abuja, should not be seen as an opposition to the project. Rather, he said, it is in the interest of the Abuja indigenes, who formed 80 per cent of the population of the displaced persons in the territory. Speaking while receiving the presidential committee on the new federal capital in Minna, the acting governor said that though the state would want the federal capital to move to Abuja, the displaced persons should be allowed to decide where to re-settle. He said that the problem of rehabilitation and re-settlement was enormous and required assistance from the Federal Government. Responding, the Chairman of the committee, Senator Ahmed Rufai, said that members were committed to finding the best way of making the Abuja project a reality. COMMENTARY ON ETHIOPIA'S INTERNATIONAL AIMS

LD041624 Mogadishu Domestic Service in Somali 1700 GMT 3 Dec 80 EA

[Text] The visit of Mengistu to Kenya is part of the Addis Ababa regime's plan to fan the flames through the region. This is the topic of our commentary tonight, written by Abdi Idris Dualeh and read by Mustafa Abd al-Rahim Shafi.

From the archaic kingdoms which founded Abyssinian imperialism up until today, in order to get help and assistance for their expansionist and colonial policies, the Abyssinian leaders have always run around the world with baseless lies of external invasion. The Abyssinians swaying and leaning to the colonialists made of each successive Abyssinian ruler a colonial tool and a stepping-stone for the division of the continent of Africa and, in particular, of the neighboring countries of the region.

Since the acceleration of the liberation struggle by those it colonizes and the Abyssinian people fighting against the misguided revolution, the Abyssinian regime has exerted pressure to make the world believe that it is Somalia that is waging war against Abyssinia. This was aimed at covering up the internal crises.

In months past, the Abyssinian regime dispatched various high-level delegations to various parts of the world. These delegations' missions completely failed to make the world believe that it was Somalia who was the aggressor. The failure of these delegations did not satisfy Mengistu so this forced him to go to Moscow personally to take fresh orders and plan a new strategy.

Well-informed politicians in the Horn of Africa report that the new planning strategy comprises:

1. Strengthening the Russian forces in this region. This was clearly indicated by the defense pact signed by the PDRY and the Addis Ababa regime after Mengistu returned from Moscow.

2. The strengthening of the Kremlin's forces in occupation of the PDRY's island of Socotra and the Eritrean Dahlak Islands colonized by Abyssinia.

3. It is also believed that part of the plan was to launch an offensive against the Somalia Democratic Republic, this being clearly shown by the assembling of arms and troops in the border areas--Abyssinian Army forces combined with those of their backers.

4. The land and air invasion of the Somalia Democratic Republic following Mengistu's visit to Moscow.

5. It is believed, moreover, that the plans Mengistu brought back from Moscow included creating crises and misunderstandings among the countries of this region, particularly between Somalia and Kenya.

6. The sole purpose of Mengistu's visit to Sudan was to do everything he could to damage relations between Somalia and Sudan.

7. Mengistu has started sending mercenaries to Kenya's north-eastern region in order to create tension between Somalia and Kenya.

8. Mengistu's present visit to Kenya is in further pursuit of his plan to create tension between Kenya and Somalia. As has been clearly stated by the president of the Somalia Democratic Republic, Challe Siad, the Somali government has warned the Kenyan government about the wicked plans to damage relations between the two governments.

The Somali government has done everything in its power to establish meaningful relations with Kenya, but reports from Nairobi say that Mengistu is putting heavy pressure on the Kenyan government and people to adopt a hostile attitude toward Somalia.

We ask: Who stands to gain if relations between Kenya and Somalia are restored on the basis of mutual respect? There is no doubt that the peoples of the two countries, Africa as a whole and other peace-loving peoples will. Conversely, the confusion, crises and tensions Mengistu is stirring up in Nairobi will benefit neither the two countries nor the region in general. Only the enemy of the region, who is manipulating Mengistu and his country stands to gain. We therefore advise the Kenyan government and people carefully to scrutinize the baseless lies and fabrications Mengistu is trying to spread between the two countries. Kenyans must realize that their real enemy is the Abyssinian regime, which is responsible for all the problems, crises and tensions affecting their country.

PHATUDI REPORTS ON EUROPEAN ATTITUDE TO SA

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Dec 80 p 3

[Article by Marilyn Cohen]

[Text]

DRAMATIC and rapid changes in South Africa are essential if this country is not to lose the support of European leaders, Dr Cedric Phatudi, Chief Minister of Lebowa said yesterday.

Speaking at a Press conference at Jan Smuts airport on his return from an extended tour through Europe as a guest of the South Africa Forum, Dr Phatudi said South Africa still had friends in Europe.

"However they more than once said the moves away from apartheid were too slow and unless changes were instituted more quickly, their support for South Africa would be rendered less effective," he said.

Dr Phatudi was a member of a South African delegation which also consisted of Dr Dennis Worrall, chairman of the Constitutional Committee of the President's Council; Mr Bill Sutton, chairman of the New Republic Party; Dr Alex Boraine, deputy leader of the Progressive Federal Party; Professor Willie Esterhuizen, professor of philosophy at the University of Stellenbosch; Mr I Mayet, chairman of the Indian Council; and Dr F Quinn, a Coloured educationist.

Although the group was "a rather mixed bag", Dr Phatudi said each member was able to express his individual point of view on the South African situation to leaders of parties represented at the European Parliament in Strasbourg — except the Socialists who refused to meet the South Africans — leaders of Nato in Brussels, members of the Conservative, Labour and Liberal parties in Britain, and German politicians.

All these people had agreed that any changes made must come about from within South Africa and that while the question of sanctions had not been specifically discussed, Dr Phatudi said he gained the impression that European leaders were not at all in favour of sanctions.

"They realise that South African and European interests are intertwined and they cannot impose sanctions without harming themselves. They also emphasised the strategic importance of the Cape sea route."

One issue which had been extensively discussed was the question of the President's Council and why Black leaders, in particular, had rejected it.

"My reply to these questions was that Black leaders want one citizenship for all South Africans. The arrangement of a Black sub-committee is unacceptable because it gives the impression of the other groups 'ganging up' against the Blacks. We don't want to be secondary — we don't want things done for us, they must be done with us," Dr Phatudi said.

His suggestion that a federal arrangement as the only system which could "accomodate the realities of South Africa" appeared to be fully acceptable to the overseas leaders.

"They were also interested to hear that the two largest homelands, KwaZulu and Lebowa, are not prepared to opt for independence and that we in Lebowa, are trying to correct the mistakes of separate development and encourage changes.

"Many industrialists expessed an interest in the possibility of investing in Lebowa and said they would like to come out here to investigate the possibilities further," he said.

BOTHA PROMISES REFERENDUM ON ANY DRASTIC CHANGES

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Dec 80 p 2

[Text]

LADYSMITH. — The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, at the weekend pledged to call a referendum should the President's Council propose any drastic changes in the country's constitutional dispensation.

Addressing a National Party rally in Ladysmith, Mr Botha said voters in the last general election and National Party congresses had approved the party's policy platform for accommodation of Coloureds and Asians.

They had accepted the proposal for an executive State President elected by an electoral college representing Whites, Coloureds and Asians and the Government still stood by this proposal.

The country had also approved the proposal for assemblies for Whites, Coloureds and Asians and a consultative cabinet committee of members of all three.

Mr Botha said that if proposals by the President's Council deviated in minor detail from the National Party proposals, the Government would deal with them.

If however, they deviated on matters of principle he would have to go back to NP congresses.

"And I will have to accept their decisions and I expect others to do the same.

"If drastic changes are proposed by the President's Council I will call a referendum to let the nation give its verdict in the matter."

Mr Botha said if he encountered opposition he would have the issues tested and would accept it if he were rejected.

He was not in favour of a unitary or a federal system of government for South Africa.

A one-man-one-vote system would simply bring to South Africa the same misery and strife it had brought to many other African countries.

South Africa was made up of various ethnic minorities, each of which deserved the rights to self-determination and the opportunity to develop to its fullest potential.

"The fight is not between White, Black and Brown, but between the forces of stability, economic development and progress on the one hand and Marxist democratisation."

Whites, Coloureds and Asians could not have their own separate states as the Black nations could, but they could have separate residential areas, schools and cultural regions.

A political system had to be developed through which these issues could be solved and through which there could be consultation concerning common interest. —

NATAL NP ELECTS PARTY OFFICERS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Dec 80 p 7

[Text]

THE Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, Mr F W de Klerk, has been elected vice-chairman of the National Party in the Transvaal.

At a chief executive meeting of the party in Pretoria at the weekend, Mr De Klerk was elected to succeed Mr Braam Raubenheimer, who is now a member of the President's Council. The two other vice-chairmen, Mr Fanie Botha and Mr Hendrik Schoeman — both Ministers — were re-elected.

At the meeting a motion of full confidence in the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha and the chairman of the National Party in the Transvaal, Dr A P Treurnicht, was adopted. Also, full support was given to the principles of the NP and the 12-point plan of the Prime Minister.

The chief executive also unanimously adopted a motion regretting the confusion concerning NP principles cause by some newspapers.

In Ladysmith, Mr Renier Schoeman, private secretary of the Minirter of Finance and leader of the NP in Natal, Senator Owen Horwood, was appointed the party's provincial secretary.

His appointment was confirmed by the full head committee of the party in Natal at a meeting in Ladysmith at the weekend.

Mr Schoeman (35), who had been private secretary to Sen Horwood for the past eight years, replaces Mr Niel Rossouw, MPC for Umlazi, who announced his resignation as secretary earlier this year.

The post, which was widely advertised after Mr Rossouw's resignation, drew a field of 17 candidates. This was narrowed down to two — Mr Schoeman and an unnamed party organiser from the Cape who eventually withdrew his application in favour of Mr Schoeman.

KOORNHOF DISCUSSES COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PLANS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Dec 80 p 11

[Article by Johan Kloppers]

[Text]

THE Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof, said yesterday that community development was regarded as the cornerstone of healthy national growth and that communities themselves should become actively involved in it.

Addressing a Press conference in Pretoria, he said community development as a means of achieving development tied in closely with the announcement of a multilateral development bank of Southern Africa and a development corporation for small business concerns.

His department wanted to give a helping hand towards community involvement and said a 16-member committee had been established for the overall promotion of community development.

"Mr Gilles van de Wall, an experienced director in the Department, who is thoroughly conversant with the principles of community development is the chairman," he said.

"The committee will co-ordinate the functions of the various directorates within the Department insofar as they affect development."

The following Departments and Government bodies have been invited to nominate representatives to serve on the committee:

Education and Training, Health Welfare and Pensions, Foreign Affairs and Information, the Corporation for Economic Development, the Bureau for Economic Research Co-operation and Development, Council of Chairman of Administration Boards.

Dr Koornhof said the Council of Chief Ministers of the national states has been invited to appoint three people to the committee and three chairmen of Community Councils have also been invited to serve on the committee.

Members

"The committee will comprise of four members from the Department, three from other Government Departments, three from Government bodies, the three nominees of the Council of Chief Ministers and the three chairmen of Community Councils.

"The Co-operation and Development Amendment Bill that was recently published in the Government Gazette, provides that the Development Boards, which are to replace the Administration Boards, must each establish a regional and planning committee.

"These committees are expected to include Black leaders from the Community Councils as members.

"They will inter alia be responsible for the promotion of community development in their respective regions, and will provide the logical regional links for the overall promotion.

Keen

"As far as the national states are concerned, the community development function in their areas obviously rests with them."

Dr Koornhof said that the facilities of the overall promotion of community development in the Department were at their disposal as a supporting function, and they were free to make the fullest use of them.

"The leaders of the national states are very keen on the promotion of this aspect of development," he said.

"The Department therefore anticipates that the offer will be taken up, and that the national states will also establish their own local co-ordinating committees where necessary, with which liaison can be established in this connection."

He said the decision to lift community development out and give it very special attention, follows inter alia on the receipt and consideration of the final report of the Committee on Community Development (Kigo).

Pleased

"The Department is very pleased with the Kigo report and wishes to express its thanks to professor R D Coertze, of Pretoria University and the members of his committee.

"What is now being envisaged, a more scientific application, and a quickening of pace in the process of the self-reliant development of the Black people themselves."

Dr Koornhof said community development had always been the background philosophy of the Department.

"What is now being envisaged, with reference to local communities, is a new dedication, a more scientific application, and a quickening of pace in the process of the self-reliant development of the Black people themselves," he said.

Important

Some of the more important recommendations of the final Kigo report were that:

- The implementation of a community development approach should be proceeded with, taking into account and guidelines laid down by the committee.
- The administrative arrangement in urban areas within the national states deserved urgent attention, and
- The promotion of community development required the attention of an expert stimulatory body.

With the adjustment of the administrative arrangements in the national states, the report recommended that:

- No new legislation was necessary. A clear policy statement was sufficient.
- The inhibiting effect of existing legislation must be judged by the district co-ordinator.
- New personnel was not needed. It only required the inclusion of a district co-ordinator.
- Effective co-ordination on different levels was required.
- The ability of the authority to react speedily to requests for aid was important. An adjustment in the budgetary structure was therefore recommended.

MINISTER MEETS SOWETO COMMITTEES ON COMPULSORY EDUCATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Dec 80 p 10

[Text]

THE MINISTER of Education and Training, Dr Ferdie Hartzenberg, said in Johannesburg this week that relations between his department and those Soweto school committees which had rejected the introduction of compulsory education in their areas would continue as usual.

"These schools will continue to receive assistance from my department. I do not intend compelling Black schools to introduce compulsory education against their will," he said.

Of 24 suburbs in Soweto, only two — Jabulani and Klipspruit-Pimville — have accepted compulsory education from next year to be introduced in sub-A classes.

The 3½-hour meeting Dr Hartzenberg held at the Johannesburg City Hall on Monday night with Soweto school committees, revealed that most schools were in favour of the introduction of compulsory education.

Out of 287 school committees which attended the meeting 144 accepted compulsory education. Eighty-three sent their views in writing.

But the Department of Education's difficulty in carrying out the wishes of the consenting ones, is that Dr Hartzenberg has ruled that all schools in an area or suburb have to agree to the introduction of the system. Smaller towns have one school to deal with.

Soweto has 24 suburbs comprising about 20 000 families each, with more than 10 schools each.

For Soweto Dr Hartzenberg has ruled that all schools in a suburb have to agree to the introduction of compulsory education in their area.

Because one of two schools have objected to the compulsory education system, most suburbs cannot be accorded it.

Another obstacle was that in some suburbs, though lower primary schools had accepted (they are the ones to be affected by the system first), their secondary schools had objected.

About 57 school committees were declared undecided because they had not held meetings with parents to hear their views. Parents had failed to attend meetings when called.

Dr Hartzenberg told a Press conference that areas with mixed feelings were still free to hold meetings until all the committees had agreed to the system.

But because time was running out, areas deciding later to accept would be accommodated in 1982 as compulsory education areas.

Objections raised by schools which have rejected compulsory education were:

- Prosecution of parents of truant children.
- Acceptance of compulsory education would be tantamount to an acceptance of the "unpopular Bantu Education system."
- A demand for one education system for all races.

TWO PARACHUTE BATTALIONS RECEIVE COLORS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 29 Nov 80 p 5

[Article by Andre de Bruyn]

[Text]

AT a parade at Voortrekkerhoogte yesterday, the Prime Minister presented Colours to No 2 and No 3 Battalions of 44 Parachute Brigade.

"Just as some of our weapons were made and developed in South Africa, this group of men is unique for its training, knowledge of war and combat experience," said Mr P W Botha.

It was the first time in the history of the SADF that Colours were presented to two battalions at the same parade.

The parabats also for the first time were their new maroon cravats and shoulder flashes on their combat "browns" on parade. They sang their marching song "Bearers of the Red Beret" during the march-past when Mr Botha took the salute.

Every member on parade were the Pro Patria medal for the combating of terrorism and there were several silver Honoris Crux decorations for exceptional bravery to be seen.

The relatively new brigade's battle honours include the Angolan war and the airborne raid on Cassinga, Angola in May 1978.

Commandant Monty Brett commands No 2 Battalion and 3 Battalion is commanded by Commandant G J Steyn. The Brigade is commanded by Colonel Jan "Bruinman" Breytenbach.

The motto of 2 Battalion is Caedes de Caelo (Death from the Sky) and the battlecry and motto of 3 Battalion is "Strenue", the nearest Latin word which could be found to mean "Vasbyt".

"These soldiers can be compared with the best in the world," said Mr Botha. "They have taken on the enemy in well dug-in positions while outnumbered ten to one."

MANIFESTO OF DEMOCRATIC PARTY PUBLISHED

Kampala THE CITIZEN in English 18, 24 Nov 80

[18 Nov 80 pp 3, 6-7]

[Text] The Democratic Party (DP) was founded in 1954 and made its first public appearance at a rally held in 1956 at the "tree of liberty" (currently Nakivubo taxi park), Kampala. In April 1960, the party published its first manifesto, "Forward to Freedom," this being the first manifesto to appear in Uganda. In 1961 the DP won Uganda's first nation-wide General Election and formed the country's first African Government headed by our beloved late leader, Benedicto K.M. Kiwanuka, who successively became Chief Minister and Prime Minister. The DP Government led the way in negotiating for Uganda's independence from Britain; and it was during the party's tenure of office that agreement was reached at Lancaster House, London, to grant independence to the country on October, 9th 1962.

The attainment of national independence was a major objective of the Democratic Party. But the Democratic Party never looked to independence as an end in itself in independence, among other things was, to be a measure of security, respect and dignity for the individual, and a means to social justice. It is a matter of serious regret that for the lot of our people these twin fundamental objectives, without which life becomes meaningless, are as distant today as the stars.

Since independence, Ugandans have been oppressed imprisoned, murdered in cold blood, and defrauded without any hope of redress. They listen daily to the chorus of violence and blood-shed; they helplessly watch the corruption and injustice and the complete erosion of their cherished institutions and accumulate their impotent resentment. Two dictatorial regimes have been removed from office by force yet violence continues. Ugandans everywhere feel and are indeed extremely insecure, deprived, degraded and humiliated. The root cause of all such suffering has been a succession of undemocratic regimes motivated by personal interests.

In this, our plight, the Democratic Party now remains the country's main hope for security and justice, for democracy and probity, and for development and prosperity.

The Democratic Party is Uganda's main hope because, firstly, it is a party which has proved most consistent in pursuing democracy. The DP has, for the greater part of its life, been grappling with tremendous odds but has always emerged stronger and more committed to democracy. The DP was systematically persecuted throughout the 1960's and banned and its leadership imprisoned in 1969 but only to resurface stronger and more committed than before in 1971. Throughout Idi Amin's reign of terror Democrats, rank and file, were imprisoned and such as was the fate of its leader, Chief Justice Benedicto Kiwanuka, murdered, but these traumatic experiences notwithstanding the Democratic Party, has reappeared and made its mark on the politics of post-Amin Uganda.

Secondly, and more particularly, the Democratic Party remains Uganda's main hope for security and justice because it is a party whose policies and programmes are ultimately based on a well-thought out theory of human nature and society.

The Democratic Party believes in certain universals about human nature and builds on these to evolve policies and programmes which help bring about genuine unity, brotherhood and cooperation between all our people across diverse tribes and religious affiliations. No wonder the DP enjoys far greater internal unity than any other Ugandan party can rightfully claim.

The Democratic Party believes in man's abilities to think and act rationally and to exercise his free will. For this reason the party pledges itself to liberate the individual, and to establish and encourage political, economic and social institutions in which the individual can participate actively and autonomously rather than passively under tight direction and control from above.

The Democratic Party believes in man's social nature, and therefore pledges itself to endeavour to formulate policies and set up and promote programmes which foster peace and communications between the individual and his fellow men. In this regard also, the Democratic Party is committed to a policy of promoting good relations between all officers of the State, particularly members of our disciplined forces, and the ordinary civilians.

In 1961 and 1962 most Ugandans went to the polls to vote for independence. In this election of 1980 most Ugandans ought to vote for security of person and property, and for a just government. Ugandans will be voting for democracy and peace. These are the cardinal ends to which your Democratic Party is committed.

SIGNED
Paul K. Ssemogerere,
PRESIDENT GENERAL

INTRODUCTION

Pursuant to the party ideology as defined in the foreward, the policy of the Democratic party is to create and develop a democratic state based strictly on parliamentary democracy. The party's vision is based on the following principles:

1. Principles:

a) Every citizen has the right to life, dignity, and respect as ends in themselves.

b) All human beings are entitled to equal opportunity.

c) Every citizen has the right to freedom of expression, of movement, of religious belief and conscience, of owning property, and association within the context of the established law and without infringing on the rights of other citizens.

d) The individual has the right to receive from the state protection of his life and of property.

e) Every individual has a birth right to occupy, till or otherwise make use of any portion of the land upon which he has been placed by nature without hindrance from the state or his fellow citizen so long as his occupation, tillage or use of that portion of the land does not in anyway infringe on the rights of others.

f) All Ugandans together own all the mineral resources in the country.

g) Every citizen has the right to participate fully in Government from the grassroots up to the apex.

h) The state is charged with the duty of facilitating the right of every citizen to participate in the Government.

i) Religious bodies have a role to play in the moral and spiritual rehabilitation and or development of the citizens who believe in their doctrines and have the freedom to educate and guide such citizens to live according to the doctrines.

j) It is the responsibility of the state to plan, coordinate, and oversee the overall economic development of the country to ensure equitable distribution of the country's resources.

2. Aims and objectives:

For the purpose of implementing the foregoing principles the Party pledges to:

a) Transform Uganda into a united state in which people are entitled to equal opportunity and live in harmony without fear, want, or discrimination of any form based on tribe, religion, sex, class or race.

b) Maintain a parliamentary democracy.

c) Protect this state as an independent sovereign country and the freedom of the peoples who reside in it.

d) Maintain unscrupulously the rule of law based on the recognition and respect of human rights.

e) Create facilities whereby every individual can attain the benefits of all social and utility amenities.

f) Re-organize and improve upon the education and training of our disciplined Security Forces.

g) Preserve, promote and develop our indigenous languages.

h) Continue to use English as the official language and to encourage the teaching and learning of Kiswahili in order to promote better understanding and unity in the country and with our neighbors.

i) Promote our African Cultural heritage.

j) Promote a mixed form of economy.

k) Direct the economic development of Uganda through the diversification of production and increasing the purchasing power of the population to establish a system of fair remuneration for workers as well as fair distribution of goods and services throughout Uganda, and to eliminate current malpractices in the economic system.

l) Cooperate fully with and assist, all liberation movements in Africa engaged in the battle for decolonization.

m) Cooperate with and support all Human Rights Organizations throughout the world. Support the O.A.U. the Commonwealth, the non-Alligned Movement, the United Nations Organization and other International Organizations.

n) See that Uganda prospers and advances in all spheres and attains a dignified position in the civilized community of the world.

The Democratic Party Government will ensure that these aims and objectives are fulfilled and adhered to so that the people in Uganda may live in love, peace, tranquility and prosperity.

II. POLITICS AND GOVERNMENT

The Democratic Party believes in a man-centred society in which the individual is recognized as a human being with a soul, conscience and free will with all the attendant rights, hence the party's support for sacred and inviolable human rights.

The party also believes in the communal nature of mankind. Man is, by nature created to live, not alone, but with others either in stable communities, as in the African village or in a dynamic way in social and functional organizations of various types. This belief leads us to support local and functional autonomy.

The Democratic Party, therefore, accepts the challenge to devise ways and means whereby individual human rights and social rights can both be upheld and promoted and at the same time so related as to encourage harmonious relationships between the individual person and society.

The Democratic Party believes that the citizens are supreme and that they should be involved as much as possible in the decision making processes of government through direct and democratic representation or referenda. The people should participate in their government at the various strata of representation as this is a basic requirement of a democratic society.

The Democratic Party Government will work for the estqblishment of a better local government system beginning with a Parish Council to the District and Urban Councils.

1. The Constitution:

The country has no constitution generally acceptable to the people. The Democratic Party will therefore, undertake to set up a constitutional review commission at the earliest opportunity to deliberate on the mechanics and issues of the Constitution acceptable to the people of Uganda. This Commission will consider such issues as:

a) The powers of the President.

b) Tenure of presidency.

c) Division of powers between the central and local Governments.

2. Political System:

The country has experienced systematic violation of human rights and gradual elimination of political choice through the establishment of political monopolies of an imposed one party system in which and the development of a personality cult under the pretext of fostering unity. The recent political history of Uganda shows how easily an imposed one party system breeds dictatorship.

The D.P. Government:

4) Pledges to safeguard freedom of association and expression including the notion of political choice through the multi-party system and other devices.

5) Rejects the personality cult concept such as the "Father of the Nation" and indispensibility of the individuals.

6) Insists that the life of Parliament is five years at the very maximum.

7) Will ensure that members of parliament who cross from one party to another should first resign and seek a fresh mandate from the electorate in their parliament and respective constituencies.

8) The Presidency:

The Democratic Party advocates for an executive presidency whose powers as provided for in the Constitution. We believe in a parliamentary democracy and it is through this arrangement, that a strong and effective government can be ensured.

The President shall not serve for more than two consecutive terms. The President will have the power to appoint Cabinet Ministers but before such appointment is published it will first go the Central Executive Committee of the Party for scrutiny and approval.

9) The Rule of Law:

Since independence this country has witnessed gross abuse of human rights and decency by leaders. Arbitrary arrests, and detentions and executions without trial carried out by security agencies on behalf of the executive authority have become common.

Disappearances of persons and illegal acquisition of property by officers of the state have not been uncommon. This is an alarming situation, and the Democratic Party is determined to promptly and firmly restore the rule of law in this country by ensuring that:

a) Punitive measures are administered only after the due process of the law.

b) Judicial powers are not usurped by the executive authority.

c) Emergency powers are not allowed to become a constitutional conduct of despotism and suppression of human rights.

d) Justice is done and is seen to be done through open trials in courts of law or judicial tribunals assisted by the jury system if need be.

e) Those who cannot afford to get private legal representation are accorded legal assistance by the state and that nobody is denied legal assistance.

f) The legislature shall be the supreme law making body.

10) The Judiciary:

The judiciary has often been abused and by-passed in the past by the Executive. Accordingly the judiciary has not always been the respected arbitor bet between litigants as it should be.

The Democratic Party attaches great importance to the judiciary and promises to reinstate its status and function by:

a) Jealously safeguarding its independence and security.

b) Ensuring that corruption does not erode it.

c) Making the courts of law the guardian of the Constitution and freedom or liberty of the individual.

OBOTE: DEMOCRATIC PARTY SPLIT INTO TWO FACTIONS

Kampala UGANDA TIMES in English 20 Nov 80 pp 1, 8

[Article by (Editor) Ilakut Ben Bella]

[Text]

THE Democratic Party (DP) leadership is split, Dr Milton Obote disclosed here today.

He said one faction was being led by Dr Paul Kawanga Semogerere, the president general of the party, and the other by Mr Francis W. Bwengye, the secretary general.

"There is division in the DP," the Uganda People's Congress (UPC) president declared in the first of five rallies he is scheduled to address in Mpigi and Masaka. Tomorrow he addresses another rally at Kanoni in Mpigi West.

Obote then asked the DP members in the Central Mpigi Constituency to re-examine the quality of their leadership.

He said the issue in the December 10 national elections was about the peasant's house — not State House, Entebbe.

Semogerere has been telling his supporters that he would meet them at State House after December 10.

Obote pleaded: "The issue of the elections is about the peasant's house. The issue is to give a decent house to the peasant not the big man's house at Entebbe.

"The UPC promises to stock the people's houses with salt, sugar, cooking oil and security," Obote declared.

He went on: "My interest is one — for the people again to live well and secure.

"I am pained when I hear somebody's home has been burnt down. I am pained when I am told that someone has been killed.

Obote also disclosed that some relatives of the chairman of the Military Commission, Mr Paulo Muwanga, had been killed in cold blood by unknown gunmen. He did not elaborate.

The UPC leader also said that he did not mind increasing the price of coffee two or three-fold, if only it helped Ugandans lead a decent life.

He promised that if the UPC came into power farmers would be paid their money on the day they delivered their produce. "Chits will stop on December 12."

Obote challenged the Baganda to come forward to rebuild the economy of Uganda and to play a key role in nation building.

"The Baganda have the greatest number of educated men. They have the greatest number of businessmen and technicians.

"Now that the Asians are no longer here, let Baganda experts take over."

Obote warned that if Semogerere's DP was voted into power the people of Uganda would be "forgotten."

"Semogerere has forgotten Yusufu Lule. Lule is a distinguished Ugandan. He was a minister during the colonial era. He was the principle of Makerere University (in 1960s), he then joined the Commonwealth secretariat in London, later becoming the head of African Universities before taking over Uganda's presidency in April last year.

"If the DP can forget Lule what about you — the peasants, the workers, the youth.....?"

Obote cautioned Ugandans against wasting their votes on the Conservative Party (CP) and the Uganda Patriotic Movement (UPM).

He said the two parties were non-starters. For any party to form a government it needed 64 seats, in parliament, he said.

"I have not seen the CP in western, northern and eastern Uganda.

"As for the UPM, only five delegates from each district could manage to attend delegates conference.

"The UPC had 15 delegates from each parliamentary constituency — not from the district."

Obote also criticised the CP chief, Mr Mayanja Nkangi, for uttering that Uganda had not been liberated. He said the removal of dictator Idi Amin from Uganda was a major action in the liberation of this country.

Mayanja probably does not see this because he took no part in last year's war that drove Amin out of Uganda.

"Where did Mayanja and Semogerere fight Amin," Obote asked.

He told the Baganda to vote for UPC, because the ballot would be secret. He said those who intimidated his supporters would be dealt with later — meaning after the elections.

Anybody who propagated that the Baganda should not vote for the UPC because its leader came from the north was mistaken, Obote warned.

This is an apparent reference to leaders like Semogerere and Mayanja Nkangi who appear to be whipping tribal sentiments to win votes.

The DP split came on to the surface over the issue of ballot boxes.

While Semogerere would want to go along with four boxes as stipulated by the law the Bwengye group has been pressured by the UPM to boycott the elections altogether.

The Bwengye group is reportedly firmly under the thumb of Yoweri Museveni, and this explains the recent press conference at which Bwengye and Bonafice Byanyima declared that the DP would boycott the elections over the ballot box issue.

Semogerere was not allowed by the two men to attend that press conference, but reporters were horrified when they saw Semogerere being led into a side room and guarded there by the DP militants.

The UPM is clearly pitted against the elections probably because it sees itself unable to win any seats at all.

An extra-ordinary delegates conference for the DP was scheduled for this weekend, but Radio Uganda yesterday announced that the meeting had been called off.

If this is the case, then the Bwengye-Byanyima axis has had the upper hand — and the DP could be doomed, observers said.

SUPPLIES TO FAMINE AREAS--Ouagadougou, 4 Dec (AFP)--The Military Committee of Redress for National Progress (CMRPN), which has been in power in Upper Volta since 25 November, has decided to send immediate relief supplies to the people of three regions hit by famine, it was learned from the Upper Volta capital on Thursday. This decision was taken during a meeting of prefects held in Ouagadougou on Wednesday. Drought was hit hard in three regions--the Sahel, the north central and the northern--and villagers are deserting their villages to look for food in towns. According to the minister of rural development, Upper Volta currently has 13,000 tons of cereals, donated by the Federal Republic of Germany, in stock. It is estimated that Upper Volta's food deficit for the year 1981 will be about 100,000 tons. The annual production and foreign aid yet to be delivered is about 1.2 million tons, while national needs--annual consumption, replenishment of reserves, food for live stock--is estimated at 1,315,200 tons. A conference of Upper Volta leaders and representatives of international specialized agencies is scheduled for next week. [Text] [AB041949 Paris AFP in French 1456 GMT 4 Dec 80]

BEITBRIDGE, GWANDA POLLS POSTPONED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Dec 80 p 3

[Text] BULAWAYO.

ELECTIONS for the Gwanda and Beitbridge district councils have been postponed indefinitely, the Matabeleland South Provincial Commissioner, Mr P. L. Butchart, has announced.

Nominations for both local authorities closed on Wednesday with the Patriotic Front unopposed in 25 of the 28 seats in Gwanda, and no ZANU (PF) nominations in Beitbridge.

The only announcement made by the district commissioners in each area was that the elections had been postponed.

The District Commissioner of Gwanda, Mr I. A. Matheson, said yesterday: "Obviously we can't make any announcement when the elections have been postponed."

In both areas the elections had been scheduled for January 31.

The District Commissioner of Beitbridge, Mr Lew Watson, said 16 nominations were received for the council's 13 seats. He would not say which political parties had candidates unopposed.

The Patriotic Front administrative secretary for Beitbridge, Mr Jeckonia Nare, said: "We registered 13 candidates, and we also had a few reserves in case of mishaps, but these were not registered.

"There were no ZANU (PF) nominations. The ZANU (PF) chaps were there with us at the district commissioner's office and they told us they had caused the elections to be postponed."

"They said they had done this because in this area their supporters were not free. We replied that we could not accept this allegation as Patriotic Front supporters are in the majority here and there is no intimidation. We said we could not understand the allegation," Mr Nare said.

Repeated attempts to contact ZANU (PF) officials in Beitbridge and Gwanda were unsuccessful.

Neither the Minister of Local Government and Housing nor the Deputy Minister could be contacted.

The decision to postpone the elections was sent to the Provincial Commissioner for Matabeleland South by telex on Tuesday. No reason was given in the message.

Arrangements for elections in Plumtree, Matobo, Mzingwane and Insiza during January remain unchanged, Mr Butchart said.

In Mzingwane (local authority area Essexvale) the District Commissioner, Mr Tony Hunt, announced when nominations closed on Wednesday that the 20 seats had been won by 20 Patriotic Front candidates who were returned unopposed.

"I made the announcement in terms of the relevant Government notice and duly declared them elected," Mr Hunt said.

Nominations for Bulalima-Mangwe District Council (Plumtree) close today. If a poll is necessary, it will be held on January 12, the District Commissioner, Mr Dale Curtis said.

Nominations for the Insiza Council close on December 9. Elections for 18 councillors are scheduled for January 20, 21 and 22.

INSTRUCTIONS SOUGHT ON POLL DATE MIX-UP

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 2

[Text]

THE Provincial Commissioner for Matabeleland South, Mr Peter Butchart, said yesterday he had asked for instructions on whether a new nomination date was to be set for district council elections in Gwanda and Beitbridge.

The gazetted closing date was Wednesday December 3, but the Government has postponed the elections. They were due to be held on January 31 1981.

Mr Butchart was asked to comment on a claim by the ZANU (PF) political co-ordinator in Matabeleland South, Mr John Mbedzi, that nominations had not closed and that ZANU (PF) were still registering candidates.

Mr Butchart replied: "I have asked for further instructions and am awaiting them."

Mr Mbedzi said there was widespread intimidation of ZANU (PF) supporters in Beitbridge and Gwanda "but the police have made no arrests".

It was because of the intimidation of his party's supporters that he had asked the Minister of Local Government and Housing to postpone the elections, he said.

ZANU (PF) supporters were "running scared" in the two districts, he claimed. Houses had been stoned, windows shattered, and people stoned and beaten. Some even had guns fired at them, he said.

He recalled that on November 20 the ZANU (PF) offices in Beitbridge has been damaged by an explosion.

Police in Gwanda and Beitbridge were asked if there was widespread intimidation. They said both districts were quiet.

"We can confirm two instances: the blowing-up of ZANU (PF) offices in Beitbridge last month, and the stoning of one house in Gwanda," a police spokesman said.

"Police reports indicate that the areas are quiet. If people are being intimidated, would they please report this to the police, who will investigate the incidents, arrest the culprits, and let the law take its course," he said.

When nominations closed yesterday in the Bulalimangwe district, 27 Patriotic Front candidates were unopposed in the 34-seat District Council.

REID-DALY APPEALS OVER 'BUG' RULING

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Dec 80 p 5

[Text] THE former commander of the Selous Scouts, Lieut.-Colonel Ronald Reid-Daly yesterday appealed against a High Court ruling that it has no jurisdiction to adjudicate in a damages claim against former army commander Lieut.-General John Hickman and six soldiers and former soldiers.

At the end of the day's hearing in the Appellate Division of the High Court, Salisbury, the Chief Justice, Mr Justice Fieldsend, reserved judgment.

In July Mr Justice Waddington upheld a special plea in the General Division of the High Court by General Hickman and the soldiers that the colonel could not sue them in the High Court.

Colonel Reid-Daly was claiming a total of $53 000 from the army commander, the soldiers and the then Minister of Defence for tapping his office telephone, surreptitiously removing and copying military and personal documents from his safe and monitoring his movements.

The judge said Colonel Reid-Daly did not deny that the acts of the army officers were to investigate whether he or members of the Selous Scouts were involved in poaching, or smuggling ivory or arms and ammunition.

The colonel had filed an amendment to his plea — that the investigation was done for personal reasons.

Mr Justice Waddington said it was "an almost inescapable conclusion" that in providing special redress procedures in the discipline regulations, the legislature must have intended army officers to be restricted to that procedure.

Appearing for Colonel Reid-Daly Mr Adrian de Bourbon said the regulations did not preclude the civil court from considering the issue.

DISPUTES

"The civil courts have the jurisdiction and the power arising out of disputes between military personnel from actions arising within their duties and it is the civil courts who must determine whether what they did was lawful in terms of those duties or whether they were acting in excess of the powers or without power.

"If you are acting lawfully the other party has no right to claim damages, but it is the civil court who has to determine that issue and the mere fact that the parties are military ones does not preclude the civil court from looking into the issue."

He said section 28 of the discipline regulations did not preclude the civil court from considering the matter.

If it was accepted that General Hickman and the soldiers were acting lawfully then there would be no claim, said Mr de Bourbon, but it was for a trial court to decide this.

"Our contentions is: There is no principle of law and there is nothing in the statute to preclude recourse to the civil courts to deliberate on the factual dispute.

"We ask that on the facts before you you find that we have the right in law to persist in this litigation and are not precluded by section 28 of the discipline regulations from applying for redress to the civil court," said Mr de Bourbon.

Appearing for General Hickman and the soldiers, Mr Richard Jagger said Colonel Reid-Daly was "justifiably annoyed" when he became aware of the surveillance device on his telephone because as he said, he had men on operations in foreign countries whose lives it placed in jeopardy.

The commander and the Selous Scouts had some sort of immunity from investigation to prevent compromising their activities, Colonel Reid-Daly had said.

"The military had reasons to believe that some sort of unlawful activity was going on. The appellant's attitude was 'I have nothing to hide. Please come and see what is going on in my unit'.

"Now he claims immunity on the grounds that any order to survey him and his unit is unlawful and he brings up on appeal that the safety of the lives of his men were endangered and that there was total immunity for him and his unit from investigation," said Mr Jagger.

Colonel Reid-Daly "must surely" have understood that his immunity only extended to cover his military actions, he said.

CONFUSION

He conceded that evidence as to who had ordered the placing of the telephone bug was "confusing" and he had difficulty in determining whether it came from General Hickman.

Mr Jagger said permission to tap a telephone could only be granted by the Postmaster - General acting under a Presidential order within the terms of the Posts and Telecommunications Act and disclosure of that permission was not permitted.

If the military authorities had reason to believe that a unit with a great deal of autonomy was abusing that privilege, on examining the PTC Act they would find themselves in a predicament because of the time factor involved in acquiring bugging authority.

"In my respectful submission, the authorities have the right to assume whatever means possible to check a criminal matter of a grievous nature — that of ivory smuggling and gun-running."

He said he considered Mr Justice Haddington's ruling to have been the correct one in the circumstances because the military code provided the method of redress which "military men subject themselves to when attested and they confine themselves to this mode of redress.

"In colloquial terms, military do not air their dirty linen in public."

He added: "That is why the legislature lays down that the military should deal with domestic matters rather than going through the civil courts."

The Chief Justice sat with the Judge President, Mr Justice Lewis and the Judge of Appeal, Mr Justice Goldin.

Mr de Bourbon was instructed by Coghlan, Welsh and Guest, and Mr Jagger by Mr Allen Mollat of Gill, Godlonton and Gerrans and Mr Terry Scott of Surgey, Pittman and Kerswell.

STARVATION AREAS REPORTED, MAPPED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 9

[Text]

MATABELELAND south is the area worst affected by, under-nourishment, according to research by the Ministry of Health.

An emergency feeding programme for about 170 000 children with arm circumferences of less than 12,5 cm was launched this week by the Ministry.

The man responsible for collating the research at the Ministry in East Grey Building, Salisbury, Mr Norbert Mugwagwa, said that eight teams comprising four health officers each, did their research in the provinces during September.

The data was collected by questioning the people —in villages, around clinics and food distribution centres — on the availability of food and an estimate of how long stocks would last.

Mr Mugwagwa said that in some areas of the Victoria province under-nourishment could be ascribed to dietary imbalance.

In the north of the country, the picture on the map showed widespread cases of less severe under-nourishment due probably to high population settlement.

"The impact of the war," Mr Mugwagwa said, "was more on the children than on anybody else. They were bound to suffer since they could not look after themselves."

SWEDEN SEEKS WAYS TO HELP NATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Dec 80 p 7

[Text]

THE Swedish Minister of Housing, Mrs Birgit Friggebo, assess how best her Ministry can help this country and close ties Sweden formed by supporting the liberation struggle.

In an interview in Salisbury Mrs Friggebo (39) said she would meet the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Eddison Zvobgo, and the Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sydney Sekeramayi, during her four-day stay in Zimbabwe.

She also plans to have talks with the Minister of Youth, Sport and Recreation, Mrs Teurai Ropa Nhongo, and to meet Mrs Sally Mugabe, wife of the Prime Minister.

Earlier this year Sweden launched a programme to help with refugee rehabilitation in Zimbabwe, and yesterday Mrs Friggebo saw the work being carried out at the Camp Haven refugee camp in Shamva.

PLANTED TREE

She also planted a tree, saying she was acutely aware of the importance of afforestation.

"In Sweden our two biggest natural assets are our forests and our minerals," she said.

One of five women ministers in Sweden's 21-member Cabinet, she represents the Liberal Party in the coalition Government.

A former local government employee, Mrs Friggebo was appointed Minister of Housing in 1976. She has been a member of the Liberal Party's youth group since 1958.

"We were actively engaged in supporting the liberation struggle in Zimbabwe by raising money and through other channels for many years, so now we in Sweden are very happy to be able to visit an independent country," Mrs Friggebo said.

She said the main purpose of her visit was to examine problems and determine the best way her Ministry could help Zimbabwe as well as strengthening her country's close links with Zimbabwe.

COMMERCE OFFICIAL ADVOCATES SINGLE BUSINESS ASSOCIATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Dec 80 p 1

[Text]

A SINGLE business association to represent all Zimbabwean businessmen should be formed as soon as possible, the Deputy Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr Moses Mvenge, said yesterday.

Addressing a meeting of local businessmen in Fort Victoria, he said his Ministry tried to help businessmen in every possible way, but this was very difficult if their representatives behaved irresponsibly.

There were a number of these associations which claimed to represent Zimbabwean businessmen, but their executives tended to speak with a number of voices.

This made it very difficult for his Ministry to find out the true feelings of the country's businessmen as it did not know which association was truly representative.

Some of the officials of these organisations had been saying they were officially recognised by his Ministry and that he himself had helped them become established, said Mr Mvenge.

This was not true. The Ministry of Commerce and Industry did not officially recognise any of these organisations and he himself was not in any way connected with any of them, he said.

"Unless there is one single association which is truly representative of the businessmen of Zimbabwe and which could speak to the Government as the voice of the business community, the interests of the individual businessman will suffer," said Mr Mvenge.

It was his intention that such an association would be formed as soon as possible.

Speaking about small-scale and rural businessmen, Mr Mvenge said the Government knew they lacked money and business knowledge. The Government had set up organisations to deal with both these problems, but were hampered by a lack of finance.

Much depended on people like the small businessman in the economic struggle.

"You as individuals can develop upwards by working hard at your businesses, expanding them when you are able to and, above all, by setting an example to others and showing them what can be achieved by hard work and initiative," said the Deputy Minister.

UTUC ACCUSES GOVERNMENT OF ZCTU FAVORITISM

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 8 Dec 80 p 2

[Text]

THE United Trade Unions of Zimbabwe yesterday accused the Government of manipulating the trade union movement in favour of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions.

In a statement issued after a three-hour meeting in Salisbury, the UTUZ said that while it fully supported the formation of a trade union congress, it should not be politically inspired like the ZCTU.

"We full support the formation of a national trade union centre and we possess the nucleus of such a body composed of elected officials under the Industrial Conciliation Act of Zimbabwe."

The UTUZ said the present co-ordinating committee — set up by the Minister of Labour and Social Services, Mr Kumbirai Kangai to work for the formation of a control union organisation — had not made "any attempts to hold discussions with us and our affiliated trade unions".

"The co-ordinating committee has deliberately ignored the Minister's terms of reference at its inaugural meeting in August."

The statement said the UTUZ had volunteered to help the Minister create one centre, suggesting that the co-ordinating committee include representatives from other centres.

"We find that the chief industrial relations officer insists on putting people who do not come from our centres on the committee.

"He also insists that the Minister is the only one who has the right to nominate people to serve on this committee."

The UTUZ also claimed the co-ordinating committee had never held a full meeting since its formation.

TRAGIC

"We deplore with all our might the recent attacks on well established and recognised trade unions of the United Trade Unions of Zimbabwe — especially by persons appointed by the Minister. It is tragic that these individuals are claiming the support of the Minister and the Government in their actions.

The UTUZ pledged its support to "those unions who deserve the Minister's help to expand their membership in their efforts to look after the workers' interests."

It claimed that the recent seminar in Salisbury held under the auspices of the International Labour Organisation was attended by unregistered trade unions selected by the Ministry of Labour.

"No bona fide trade unions from UTUZ attended the seminar."

The statement said the UTUZ would continue to affiliate trade unions to it, as freedom of association was a principle of the ILO and Industrial Conciliation Act

RESERVE BANK ANNOUNCES ACCEPTABLE CURRENCIES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Dec 80 p 4

[Text] Only 17 nominated foreign currencies will be accepted in payment for goods bought from Zimbabwe.

A revised guide to export controls and formalities, drawn up by the Reserve Bank of Zimbabwe, also says that exports sent to 50 specified countries must be paid for in advance.

Alternatively, they must be covered by an irrevocable letter of credit issued or confirmed by "a reputable overseas bank".

In the nine-nation Southern African economic grouping, locally issued irrevocable letters of credit in Botswana and Malawi do not need confirmation by an overseas bank, says the guideline.

But letters of credit are required from Zambia, Angola and Tanzania.

Mozambique is not included in the revised guide because, say banking sources in Salisbury, that country's economy will become buoyant once the ports of Mapouto and Beira start functioning at full stretch and once the oil starts flowing through the pipeline from Beira.

When that happened Zimbabwe would "have nothing to worry about" in terms of payment for its goods, the sources said.

Also excluded from the guide are Lesotho and Swaziland, which are "part of the South African monetary area".

Kenya, Zaire, Ghana and Nigeria are among the other African countries that must provide letters of credit.

Most European currencies, Canadian and United States dollars and Japanese yen are acceptable as payment.

When the guide was first drawn up about six months ago Mozambique, Swaziland, Lesotho and Malawi were listed as being creditworthy.

EXISTING EDUCATIONAL STANDARDS TO BE MAINTAINED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Dec 80 pp 1, 2

[Excerpt] ZIMBABWE'S existing high standards of education would be maintained at all levels, but privilege would be abolished in future, the Minister of Education and Culture, Mr Dzingai Mutumbuka, said in Salisbury yesterday.

In an interview, Mr Mutumbuka disclosed that:

- His Ministry was in the process of changing school zoning laws, but these would not be completely scrapped.
- The fee structure in all but the private schools was now under consideration.
- The school calendar would remain unchanged.
- He would issue a directive on the future of community schools before the start of the January term.

To redress what he termed "the imbalance of facilities", Mr Mutumbuka said all new secondary schools would in future be built in rural areas.

Referring to his weekend announcement that Form 1 enrolment would be quadrupled at the beginning of next year to enable more of the 97 000 children presently completing their final year of primary school to enter secondary schools, the Minister said there were no plans for "busing" pupils from one area to another.

"Busing has unfortunate emotional connotations. We will find methods of transporting children to school and home where necessary, but there are no plans for organised busing."

It was the policy of his Ministry that children living in Harare or in Highlands should attend schools in their home areas.

"Existing zoning laws will be amended, but to scrap them completely would result in chaos. Only where there are vacancies or where classes are being underutilised will these be filled by children unable to find places in schools where they live," Mr Mutumbuka said.

Stressing that in future there would be no discrimination in any school, he said all pupils entering secondary schools in any area would be expected to meet the educational qualifications, wear uniforms and pay fees.

"But we are now taking a serious look at the fee issue which is under active consideration."

Defining "independent schools" as those established with private funds, and mission schools in rural areas, the Minister said they were protected under the Constitution against interference by the Government.

Asked about the future of community schools, he said:

"I shall be issuing a directive about their future before the start of the January term."

To meet the proposed double-sessions of Form 1 classes, 800 teachers sponsored by the Australian Government were now being recruited.

"Teachers will also be coming from Britain. None is coming for a stipulated period and we hope many will remain and settle here."

There was no justification for changing the school calendar at this time.

Describing curricula as "a constantly changing phenomena in any part of the world", the Minister said erroneous facts would be deleted from school history books when they were brought up to date.

"We cannot delete the period of colonial rule—it is part of our history. There are aspects which we find offensive and unpleasant, and if we are to be objective we must teach our children the truth. Mistakes have been written in the past which we will correct for them in the future."

To realise his ambition of having every child in Zimbabwe attending school, he needed teachers, buildings and equipment. More young people were undergoing technical training outside the country than inside but this position was slowly changing.

BUTCHERS COMPLAIN ABOUT QUALITY OF BEEF

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 1

[Text]

SALISBURY butchers have complained to the Cold Storage Commission about the quality of some top-grade frozen beef issued in the past week.

Mr W. H. Lashbrook, chairman of the association of meat traders, said that Salisbury butchers had lodged "numerous complaints" with him about the condition of some of the supplies.

"Many of the butchers have said the beef is not good and some have refused to accept it from the commission," he said.

He said that complaints had been taken to the management of the CSC, who investigated the problems.

Several butchers interviewed in the city said they could not sell the meat as top grade because of its appearance.

"It just doesn't look nice, the customers won't accept it," one butcher said.

Another said: "It looks terrible. It'll taste like blotting paper.

"It's grey in colour and when you break it down it goes all mucky. After a few hours on the counter, it turns black."

Asked to comment, a spokesman for the CSC said frozen beef did not look as attractive as the chilled beef customers are used to in this country.

"It is also appreciated that it is more difficult for butchers to prepare frozen beef into the various cuts," the spokesman said.

He said the frozen beef complained about had been examined by an independent expert from the staff of the Department of Veterinary Services. He said the beef was perfectly fit for consumption.

The spokesman said some butchers had asked the commission to sell the frozen beef at a reduced cost, but the commission had refused.

"This was because of the already low wholesale price for beef and general shortages," he added.

The commission could export the beef at substantially higher prices but this would result in drastic cuts in rationing to butchers and therefore to consumers, the spokesman said.

Frozen beef is included in each butcher's allocation of supplies for the week and the percentage varies according to the amount of beef purchased.

TASK OF RESTORING, IMPROVING ROADS SEEN AS 'FORMIDABLE'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 5 Dec 80 p 14

[Editorial: "Road Links"]

[Text] THE Ministry of Roads faces a formidable task in trying to restore and improve the country's road network before increasing use leads to even quicker deterioration.

Deciding what takes priority must be a major headache for Ministry officials. Some road is always more important to somebody than any other, but in the overall scheme it might be last on the list.

There is also the extent to which the foreign currency-earning tourist trade should influence the road programme as opposed to less romantic minor roads that people need.

It is gratifying that the Ministry is giving attention to what it calls farm-to-market-type roads. With more emphasis on new farming areas, growth points and other rural development the importance of such roads cannot be overstressed.

Figures between $100 million and $200 million have been quoted as the amount needed to get the country back on its wheels. At this juncture, whatever is available for immediate or longer term use is bound not to be enough.

This is where some hope must be placed in international aid following the deliberations in Maputo of the Southern African Co-ordination Conference. There was much emphasis on the need for better transport, particularly in respect of railways and harbours.

Zimbabwe is considered a major food producer in the region. But if countries that need the food cannot get it in good time, much effort — and perhaps actual food — will be wasted.

On these grounds alone Zimbabwe has a good case for outside aid in restoring and building roads. We have the expertise, but on our own cannot be expected to succeed fully in time to satisfy all our commitments.

SURVEY ON CURFEW--Although most people interviewed in a snap survey this week said the curfew here should remain in force, leading community members in the western suburbs expressed concern about continued restriction on free movement. Most residents said it would be premature to lift the curfew now, while traders said it was crippling business. Curbs on movement at night were imposed in the western suburbs last month in the wake of disturbances which claimed 58 lives. Police said the situation was under constant review. Residents, a spokesman said, would be informed when the curfew would be lifted. Residents felt there was still an air of insecurity and suggested that the curfew be kept in force for the next two months. Some called for the intensification of police patrols. A police spokesman in the office dealing with curfew regulations said a special unit was checking reports that firearms had been distributed in civilian homes. Passes had been issued to people working at night to enable them to move in curfew suburbs, and more applications were being received. The secretary of the Bulawayo branch of African Chamber of Commerce Mr Allison Makubire, said the curfew was crippling business to the extent that some traders may fail to pay their annual rent and insurance commitments. Business in the western suburbs was only profitable in the evenings when workers return from industrial sites. A former member of the Advisory Board, Mr Abisha Mutasa, said the curfew was "horrible" as it had whittled away people's rights to free movement. "The freedom of the public has been taken away," he said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 2]

'BAN BEERHALLS' BACKLASH--Salisbury's man in the street yesterday hit back at the Deputy Minister of Posts and Telecommunications, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa, for saying beerhalls should be closed. Dr Nhiwatiwa suggested on Thursday that beerhalls be closed "to curb permissiveness among male Zimbabweans." She also criticized Zimbabwean society for being restrictive against women and permissive towards men. But men interviewed in beerhalls around Salisbury yesterday said Dr Nhiwatiwa was venturing into a subject she did not understand. "I think she and her imported ideas are going too far. She must never equate our situation with that of the Western countries," said Mr J Chivasa from Seke. Women could not be put on the same footing with men, he said, because men paid lobola to get them. If women were allowed to drink and do whatever they liked, then the family life and the society itself would be ruined. "Women play a sentimental role in looking after the children and therefore should always be with the children," said Mr Inos Chatiza from Highfield. Mr George Chawafambira from Highfield said the fact that many women did not frequent the beerhalls did not mean they did not drink. "Most of them send their husbands or children for some." Mr Herbert Maposa, also from Highfield said: "All women who come to the beerhall do so because they want some money from the men. I don't see any reason why my wife should come here when I provide for her and the children." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 5]

MULTILINGUALISM URGED--The Minister of Education and Culture, Mr Dzingai Mutumbuka, called last night for Zimbabwe to become a more multilingual society. "It makes no sense for a Zimbabwean to speak only one language," he said, adding that lack of communication was preventing the people of Zimbabwe from growing together. He condemned those who felt it lowered them to speak another language, saying, "you can't be more ignorant than that." The Minister was speaking at the prizegiving of the Rhobank Senior Schools Essay Competition. He praised the bank for going out of its way to encourage the development of language and suggested that next year the bank might choose themes with a more Zimbabwean emphasis. The competition was won by Claver Chitambo (18) of Mufakose High School, Salisbury, who wrote on the theme, Why I want to be a doctor. Second prize in the competition, which had entries from more than 25 schools, went to Leigh Cremer (16) of Marandellas High and third prize went to Robert Manhundu (18) of Holy Cross High School. The first prize was $100, the second $50, and the third $25, which was given by the bank towards the pupils' education expenses. A corresponding amount was given to the schools of the prizewinners from library books. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 2]

ZCTU CONGRESS--The publicity secretary of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions, Mr E Soko, yesterday said his organization was planning to hold its first congress in February after uniting all splinter groups in the trade union movement. "We hope to achieve unity among all splinter trade union groups by that time. After this is achieved we will invite the top brass of these unions to the congress to elect their leadership." Mr Soko said so far they were making "tremendous progress" in uniting the unions. He attacked Mr Phineas Sithole, who was recently dismissed as president of the United Textile Workers' Union, for alleging that ZCTU was politically inspired. "ZCTU officials are not politicians. They are trade unionists who are working for the interests of the workers." The ZCTU is expected to hold a Press conference in Salisbury on Sunday where wide-ranging issues affecting workers and trade unions would be spelt out. "The Press conference will explain the position of splinter unions and the system and methods of merging them," a ZCTU spokesman said. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 4]

ILO MISSION ENDS--Two representatives from the International Labour Organisation in Geneva left Salisbury yesterday after three days of talks with the Ministry of Labour on matters affecting workers in Zimbabwe. Mr C. Rossillon and Mr N. Rubin arrived on Monday to see how best the ILO could help Zimbabwe on labour matters. "We had very good talks with the Ministry of Labour and we are impressed by what the Government is doing to eliminate discriminatory features in the legislation," Mr Rossillon said. He said they discussed at length future job opportunities for Zimbabweans of all races. "We reviewed the whole situation in depth and made our suggestions which we hope will help Zimbabweans a great deal." Mr Rossillon said their suggestions would be studied by the Ministry as well as the trade unions and employers. "The labour movement in this country needs more assistance and ILO is prepared to do so. There is a real need to strengthen the trade union movement in Zimbabwe," he said. AUSTRALIAN TEACHERS--The Australian Government is sponsoring 100 teaching jobs in Zimbabwe and has received 500 applications from Australian teachers. Altogether the Zimbabwe Government wants 500 Australian teachers and teacher trainers to boost its secondary education and train more local teachers. With teacher unemployment in Australia nudging 20 000, the two-year Zimbabwe contracts are attracting a flood of applicants. The Australian Development Assistance Bureau is providing nearly $1,7 million to bring salaries for the teachers up to Australian levels. This grant will cover 100 jobs. Nigeria is also trying to recruit Australian secondary school teachers but it is not receiving Australian Government help. A Development Assistance Bureau spokesman said the Zimbabwe Government could be planning to hire the rest of the teachers it needs without Bureau aid. The new teachers will start work in Zimbabwe in January. A Melbourne professional recruitment firm, Skilled Engineering, is handling the recruitment of local teachers. DISCUSSION ON ZAIRE-ZAMBIA BORDER DISPUTE SCHEDULED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Dec 80 p 5

[Text] ZAMBIA and Zaire are to meet soon to discuss the Kaputa border dispute, Minister of Foreign Affairs, MR WILSON CHAKULYA, announced in Parliament yesterday.

Mr Chakulya was replying to a point raised in a speech by MP for Chisamba, Mr Saul Chipwaya, moving a motion that the report of the committee on foreign affairs, of which he is chairman, be adopted.

Zaire is flying its flag at Morilo in the Kaputa area and has set up customs and immigration posts about 19 kilometres in Zambia claiming that it was their land.

Mr Chipwaya said to the best of the committee's knowledge, the Kaputa problem had not yet been resolved and there were no indications it would be resolved although Zaire was flying its flag in the area.

"Besides this, matters relating to the infux of aliens from neighbouring countries and smuggling on borders by both aliens and Zambians remained unsolved," he said.

Disregarded

He called on the Government to solve the problem early.

Mr Chakulya told the House the Government had not disregarded the Kaputa problem because Zambia had no land to give away and she did not intend to claim any from her neighbours.

"We are doing everything in our power to settle the Kaputa problem and the matter is being handled on a very high level. No country has refused to meet the other," the minister told the House.

Mr Chipwaya said the country's foreign policy must be to make decisions which would not be laughed at later.

The 1968 recognition of a secession in an African country was a mistake which should not be repeated and that the country should take more care in recognising liberation movement.

He criticised the buying of property by missions abroad which, he said, was done in an unacceptable way. He charged that the purchase of property for the high commission in Salisbury was suspect.

Tendency

Seconding the motion, Kafue MP Mrs Bathsheba Ng'andu, said Zambia had a tendency to criticise other countries over certain issues while it kept quiet when other nations took the same actions.

"If it was a Western country which did what the Soviet Union did in Afghanistan, we would have gone on the anthill to condemn this action," she said.

She said the much-talked about career foreign service should be introduced soon to have the right calibre of personnel in foreign missions.

She was supported by chairman of the Social and Cultural Sub-Committee of the Central Committee, Mr Elijah Mudenda, who said the situation in the world was now complex and required people with the right calibre to understand it.

Mr Mudenda paid tribute to the Lusaka Commonwealth conference which brought about the independence of Zimbabwe.

Mwinilunga West MP Mr John Kalonga said when Zambia respects neighbouring countries, these should reciprocate by respecting Zambia instead of claiming Zambian territory

NYERERE PREDICTS HARD TIMES, URGES SHARING

'Independence a First Step'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] ZIMBABWE must guard against falling into the abyss of corruption, tyranny, exploitation and laziness rampant in some independent African countries, President Nyerere warned yesterday.

Speaking at a rally in Rufaro Stadium, Salisbury, Dr Nyerere told more than 40 000 people that Zimbabwe was now faced with an even harder struggle — that of economic liberation and bringing freedom and justice to the people.

The Tanzanian leader, who ends a five-day State visit today, said political independence achieved this year only marked the beginning of a new struggle — "it is the first step without which justice and freedom of exploitation cannot follow".

"But freedom and justice for the people and progress of the people do not come automatically with independence."

Urging his audience to consider the situation in some independent African countries, the Mwalimu went on: "Look at tyrants and killers like Bokassa and Amin: look at the corruption which exists in Africa where a person who lived on a few dollars a week becomes in a few years one of the richest people in the world."

This was achieved by "stealing the wealth of his country" and using a position of trust to amass personal wealth instead of using it for the people's interest.

"Look at the rich elite in independent Africa and at the condition of the rest of the people who continue to be exploited," he said.

"These things, brethren, have happened in free African states. They are not what the people fought and died for."

As the huge crowd cheered him, President Nyerere said Africans fought for independence not only to get rid of the pinpricks of colonialism and racial discrimination, but they also wanted independence so they could get rid of poverty.

They wanted to have a government responsible to them and which could fight for their interests and in order to live as Africans.

Stressing that true liberation was a long process, Dr Nyerere reminded Zimbabweans that for them it meant making sure that white exploiters were not just replaced by black exploiters.

"We have too many part-time ministers in Africa — too many people who use the people's offices to amass private wealth," he said.

Independence meant ensuring the wealth of the country did not flow out for the benefit of people in Europe and America or elsewhere.

It meant guarding the wealth in a country and making it work for the benefit of the people.

Dr Nyerere pointed out that the next struggle facing Zimbabwe depended for its success on co-operation between the people and their government. That co-operation had to be founded on unity.

He warned ordinary people that freedom did not mean an end to hard work. The farms, factories and businesses in the country had to be kept going.

The services of experts, engineers and technicians would still be required, he added.

Although there had been "a lot of exploitation" in Zimbabwe that was no reason for destroying the foundation for economic progress that had been laid.

"I have been very impressed by what I have seen in the last few days. I am impressed by the seriousness of the new Government, by the planning of the Government and by the Government's commitment to serving the people."

Dr Nyerere also said he had been impressed by the degree of unity and the amount of peace in the new state of Zimbabwe.

Nyerere Says Share

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 6 Dec 80 p 3

THE people of Zimbabwe should share with the rest of Africa the benefits of the strong economy they had inherited, President Nyerere urged yesterday.

Because of the developed base this country had, it could help strengthen other African countries. When one of them was weak, then the whole continent remained weak.

Addressing a ZANU (PF) rally attended by more than 20 000 cheering people at Umtali's Sakubva Stadium, the Mwalimu said Zimbabwe was lucky to have inherited a highly developed mining, communications, industrial, commercial and agricultural set-up.

"But what you have inherited is not only for you, but for the whole of Africa," he told the crowd, which chanted revolutionary songs in his praise and hoisted banners thanking him for Tanzania's contribution to Zimbabwe's liberation struggle.

He said his country was, at independence, a backward country.

In this respect he said, Zimbabwe was luckier.

He called on Zimbabweans to remain united so that they could strengthen their economy further. Zimbabweans of all tribes and races belong to this country and must work together for its good.

Talking of Tanzania's assistance in Zimbabwe's liberation struggle, Dr Nyerere said this was borne out of the conviction that if one part of Africa was not free, then the rest of the continent was equally not free.

This was the basis for the decision by the OAU to back the liberation of those countries under colonial rule.

"We did that because we wanted our own freedom to be complete. It was not because of charity," he said.

He repeated that he was here to thank the people of Zimbabwe for making Tanzania "freer than before".

In his introductory remarks, the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, said the people of Umtali had turned out in their thousands to show the Mwalimu their gratitude to him for his support in the armed struggle.

He also said that all the people of Umtali were a solid united unit and there were no contradictions "such as those in other places".

He said that Tanzanians and Zimbabweans were one people.

Hundreds of school children lined up along the whole route from Umtali Airport to the rally site. Traditional singers and ZANU (PF) provided entertainment at the stadium.

There were deafening roars from the crowd as Dr Nyerere and Mr Mugabe were driven in an open jeep around the stadium.

They later wrote their names on about four placards carried by school children from the nearby Sakubva Secondary School.

Some of the placards described President Nyerere as the "mastermind of Southern African independence" and "the catalyst of freedom from Cape to Cairo".

BRIEFS

TANZANIAN-ZIMBABWEAN ACCORDS--The governments of Zimbabwe and Tanzania yesterday signed five co-operation agreements that will strengthen ties between the two nations. They are the friendship and co-operation agreement; the economic, technical and scientific accord; the air services treaty; telecommunications and trade agreements. The signing ceremony, which took place in the Cabinet Room of Milton Buildings, Salisbury, was the climax of talks with Tanzanian leaders over co-operation issues. Speaking at the ceremony, Mr Mugabe expressed the hope that the accords would be fully implemented for the benefit of all peoples of the two nations. In reply, Dr Nyerere said he hoped the two countries would build on what had been achieved and that the agreements would not merely by paper treaties. The Tanzanian [word indistinct] speaking during a State banquet he gave in honor of President Banana last night, thanked all Zimbabweans for what he had seen during his five-day visit. He alluded to the "surprise" he had found in attitudes of the whites in Zimbabwe who had been "extremely friendly and courteous" during his tour of the country. He urged white Zimbabweans to visit Tanzania to see for themselves what that country could offer, instead of listening to foreigners who painted a bad picture of Tanzania. And President Banana thanked the Tanzanian leader for visiting the country, saying his message of unity to Zimbabweans would be "digested and cherished" for a long time. Earlier, President Nyerere had received a number of gifts at State House from President Banana, who said they were a small measure of thanks by Zimbabweans. LIBERIA TO ECOWAS SUBCOMMITTEE--Liberia has been elected a member of the subcommittee of the mutual defense pact of the Economic Community of West African States, ECOWAS. Defense Minister Samuel Pearson disclosed this today when he addressed some top army officers at the Defense Ministry on the first conference of the defense pact council of the community held recently in Lome, Togo. Mr Pearson and Armed Forces Commanding General Samuel Quiwonkpa represented Liberia at this conference. Minister Pearson said it was Liberia's first participation in a mutual defense pact conference since the council was formed about 2 years ago. ZAMBIAN PASSPORTS' POLICY--People wishing to visit neighbouring countries like Malawi, Zimbabwe and Botswana are not entitled to five year term passports. Minister of Home Affairs Mr Wilted Phiri said this when he toured immigration and passport offices in Chipata on Tuesday. He was speaking when the regional immigration officer, Mr Clever Mtale told him that his office was being called names because it refused to issue people including Government officers travelling to neighbouring countries with five years-term passports. But Mr Phiri emphasised that those travelling to neighbouring countries whether Government officers or not should be issued with emergency travel documents. He said five year term passports should be issued to people in Government and public undertakings who travel overseas on business. These too, he added, needed to show proof that they were going overseas on duty or study tours. The Minister warned that Government officers who get the five year term passports on pretence that they are going on study tours abroad are contravening passports regulations. This, he warned, should stop at once.--ZANA [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 27 Nov 80 p 3]

GUINEA-BISSAU DELEGATION TO GUINEA--Dakar, 4 Dec (AFP)--A delegation of the Revolutionary Council, which has the reins of government after the overthrow of President Luis Cabral on 14 November, and led by Mr Victor Saude Maria, vice president of the council, was yesterday received in audience by President Sekou Toure of Guinea. This is reported by Radio Conakry monitored in Dakar. According to the radio, talks between this delegation and the political bureau of the Democratic Party of Guinea were militant and fraternal, and were centered especially around questions of mutual interest. The radio indicates that the Bissau delegation amply briefed the political bureau of the Democratic Party of Guinea on the current situation in Guinea-Bissau. The delegation of the Revolutionary Council of Guinea-Bissau is made up of six members including Mr Manual Saturnino and Mr Iaiai Camara (members of the council) as well as the state attorney general of the republic, Mr Joao Cruz Pinto. Guinea (Conakry) was the first country to recognize the Revolutionary Council of Guinea-Bissau and offered substantial quantities of foodstuffs to the new authorities in order to overcome the food shortage. BOKASSA TRIAL IN ABSENTIA--Bangui, 10 Dec (AFP)--Former Emperor Bokassa will be tried in absentia by a criminal court in Bangui on 19 and 20 December, it is learned from official sources in the CAR capital. According to the criminal court, the former CAR monarch is accused of the assassination of CAR citizens, concealment of corpses, beating up and wounding people intentionally, misappropriation of public funds, cannibalism and offenses against the individual freedom of the people of the Central African Republic from 1974 to 1979. Well informed sources in Bangui have indicated that the CAR Government decided that the former head of state should be tried by a criminal court (and not a special court) in order to clear the atmosphere and to have a legal ground for the future recovery of part of the former emperor's properties which he stole from the CAR people. MASSIVE WESTERN DEVELOPMENT AID ADVOCATED

[Article by Attoh Quarshie]

[Text] A CAREFUL study of the political climate in the country today shows that all is not rosy for the Limann Administration. So the earlier the President and his team put their feet down to find practical solutions to the country's problems the better it would be for all of us.

The ¢12 minimum wage for workers which was agreed upon between the Government and the Trades Union Congress (TUC) and the Ghana Employers Association (GEA) is likely to create a number of economic problems.

As expected, prices have begun heading for the upward trend. With this, there seem to be intermitent confrontations between traders on one hand and their customers on the other thus making the government the target of attack by both parties.

The Government must know that increase in wages bring in its wake increases in prices of goods and services. For this reason, the government would have to find money through taxes or resort to the printing of more money. Whatever the Government does to generate funds there would be problems for the government to solve.

Those to be called upon to pay more taxes would definitely not be happy while the printing of more currency would aggravate the already precarious inflationary situation in the country. For this reason, there is the need for the Government to seek massive loan from Ghana's friends abroad to back the Cedi.

And in my view, the real friends of the Nation are those developed countries with whom Ghana shares every thing in common and not those who would wish to load us with "ideological phraseologies".

We should therefore either use Britain to ask for massive aid from the Commonwealth; or go independently to our friendly countries like Canada, West Germany or even France for massive aid to help solve our problems.

With the massive aid we would be in a position not only to strengthen our cedis but we would also be able to finance the importation of spare parts to salvage our broken down vehicles; we would be in a position to rehabilitate our factories some ground to a halt and others producing at half capacity; we would also be in a position not only to repair our roads but we would as well be in a position to construct ever lasting roads like the Tema Motor Way and the Ring Road.

It is noteworthy that the West Germans after the Second World War went for a massive aid to rehabilitate their economy.

Cuba today lives on aid; Poland is now asking for 300 million dollars to finance the importation of grain from the United States of America; Zaire also went for aid to be able to raise its standard to the present level.

In the case of Ghana, like West Germany, we have the infrastructure and manpower resources. What is needed is the inputs, and if we don't go for massive aid from the West the East might not grant us aid and we would have to remain in our present condition, losing our skilled manpower to the neighbouring countries till such time that there would be nobody to govern.

When people complain about the present state of affairs, what we keep hearing from certain political circles is that "the PNP knows what it is about: "We will soon solve the problems".

These words keep pouring in and even though they seem to have got Ghanaians to "hold their horses" things are still getting worse and it would soon get to a time when our patience would run out.

Since this fear is hanging over us, Dr. Limann and his benchmen should now enter into a military pact with the western world so that they can intervene to promote democracy, whenever military adventurists attempt to destroy any help they might give to the government. After all, we now abhor coups and want to live peacefully.

I am not a prophet, but only a political analyst yet, my predictions have almost always come true.

I wish to refer to my prediction in the "Beliver' on January 10 in which I said emphatically that war would break out if power is given to either Robert Mugabe or Joshua Nkomo. Today, all that I have said have come to pass. Zimbabwe has been torn apart in conflagration between Mugabe and Nkomo's factions.

There is a bitter struggle in Zimbabwe between Mugabe's faction and that of Nkomo. Perhaps, each faction wishes to claim superiority over the other.

Please, the economic situation in the country is such that government must make a grim choice; Limann has proved to be a good democratic leader but he has to go for massive aid from our western friends or allow the country to plunge into chaos.

ECONOMY VIEWED AS MIX OF SOCIALISM, CAPITALISM AND TRADITION

Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 27 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by Charles Quist Adade]

[Text] Dr Kwame Safo-Adu, a member of the Council of State, has declared that the current debate over the need for an ideology for Ghana is irrelevant and futile because the Third Republican Constitution has already prescribed one for the nation.

This ideology is a marriage of ideas that are part socialist capitalist and indigenous traditional systems and thought, he said.

Dr Safo-Adu, who is also a leading member of the Popular Front Party (PFP), was speaking at the opening of the 1,300 anniversary exhibition of the People's Republic of Bulgaria in Accra last Tuesday.

He noted that the present Constitution adequately represented the political and social aspirations born out of the failures and achievements of Ghanaians for the past 22 years.

Dr Safo-Adu said the Constitution had attempted, with "considerable success, to build a conceptional political framework from the realities of Ghanaian history and character and has wisely avoided the temptation of building a future on an untried and alien ideology".

He noted that Ghana's present problem was, therefore, not ideological. The real task, Dr Safo-Adu said, was to erect an economic system based on the political philosophy of the Constitution.

He said that the first year of experiment with the Constitution had shown that its political thinking was sound and that it had great potential for a free and civilized society.

Dr Safo-Adu, who is also a private medical practitioner, called for a firm economic foundation to consolidate the political stability the country had enjoyed in the past year.

To achieve this goal, he urged, the PNP government must initiate a crash rescue mission to arrest the fast deteriorating situation.

Achievements

He was glad to note that the economic achievements of Bulgaria in about 30 years had been very impressive. Bulgaria, he said, reached its present status by hard-work, and commitment to a great vision.

In his speech, the Bulgarian Ambassador to Ghana, Mr Kostadin Ghisourov, hoped the friendly ties between Bulgaria and Ghana forstered by the visit of the late Osagyefo Dr Kwame Nkrumah in 1961 to Bulgaria would continue to flourish in the years to come.

He said his country's co-operation with others was based on the principles of equality, non-interference in internal affairs and mutual advantage in all spheres of the political economy and cultural life.

NO DECREASE IN OIL CONSUMPTION--Ghana's petrol consumption has not decreased, according to statistics compiled by oil companies operating in the country. As a result, it has become necessary for the Government to take measures to conserve petrol through the rationing system. This was disclosed in Accra on Wednesday to the Parliamentary Subsidiary Legislation Committee considering the sale of Petroleum Products (Control) Regulation 1980 referred to it by Mr A. Appiah-Korang, an official of the Ministry of Lands Natural Resources, Fuel and Power. Mr Appiah Korang told the committee that the measures were necessary because of the experience the country had when there were increases in price of crude oil in 1979. He stated that instead of the consumption coming down, it had slightly increased, and his Ministry was yet to assess the effect of the latest price increase on the consumption pattern of vehicle owners. He said in order to ensure equitable distribution of petroleum products throughout the country, the rationing system would be necessary to ensure that regions or places far away from regional capitals got their fair share of the products. He added that steps would be taken to make coupons readily available to motorists at vantage points.--GNA [Excerpts] [Accra GHANAIAN TIMES in English 28 Nov 80 pp 1, 3]

MORE HALF-ASSINI OIL FOUND--Philips Petroleum Company yesterday announced that it has drilled the country's best oil well so far off the shores of Half-Assini. This was announced by the senior Vice-President of the company Mr Haas at a meeting with the Western Regional Minister, Mr Sam Cudjoe and representatives of oil companies in the country, at Sekondi. Mr Haas said after drilling to the depth of 11 thousand feet the company is very optimistic about oil deposits in the area. He said a series of tests would soon start on the finding and by the end of December it will be possible to determine the real oil prospect of the area. Mr Haas said it would require between 100 thousand and 150 thousand million barrels of oil discovery to commercialise the drill. He said no matter the outcome, the company will open more wells next year and provide funds for geological and geophysical surveys. He said so far the company has spent 60 million dollars on its activities in the country and it would commit 10 million dollars more to the exploration. Mr Haas said his company has confidence in the future and will do everything it could to make its dreams come true. He said what the country needs most is foreign capital. Mr Cudjoe hoped that Philips Company will therefore assist Ghana in her development efforts. [Excerpts] [Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 26 Nov 80 p 8]

NATIONAL DEFENSE MINISTRY TO RECEIVE EUROPEAN ARMORED VEHICLES

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 2 Dec 80 pp 1, 3, 7

[Article by T. Max Teah]

[Excerpt] Meanwhile, Minister Pearson told top military brass in his office that the Defence Department expects shortly some armored vehicles valued nearly $2,245,000 from Europe to buttress the power and efficient operation by the Armed Forces of Liberia.

He regretted that nearly 95 per cent of armored vehicles currently in use by the Liberian Army do not receive routine maintenance due to unfair contract with the manufacturers drawn eleven years ago.

He believes that the new arrangement with new manufacturers will enable the army to possess a few amphibious and additional surface fleet that will make military operation more accurate and efficient.

Minister Pearson said that two experts from the manufacturing company in Zurich are already in the country to assess the operational capabilities of amry vehicles and they hope to report the result of their assessment by next Monday.

The new purchases of military arsenal exemplify the efforts the People's Redemption Council government is making to modernize the Armed Forces of Liberia.

DOE BACKS REACQUISITION BUREAU AGAINST PRC, MILITARY

Monrovia THE REDEEMER in English 4 Dec 80 pp 1, 7

[Article by Sam H. Johnson]

[Excerpt]

HEAD of State, M/Sgt Samuel Kanyon Doe, has appealed to members of the People's Redemption Council (PRC) to refrain from acts that would hinder the operation of the Bureau of Re-acquisition which is entrusted with the management of confiscated properties.

Head of State Doe, reacting to reports of conflicts which have arisen between the Bureau and members of the Council, said in a letter this week to the PRC Committee on Re-acquisition that he had "directed the Secretary-General of the PRC to immediately issue a circular notice to all members ordering them to refrain from taking actions" that would undermine operation of the Bureau.

A similar directive was also given to the Minister of Defense, "warning officers of the Armed Forces of Liberia against ... acts of indiscipline."

The Committee on Re-acquisition had in a letter earlier to the Head of State complained of problems facing the Bureau in managing properties confiscated and "those under suspect" because "certain members of the Council and other high ranking military officers have been separately taking actions affecting properties.

"On many occasions this has caused conflicts between the Bureau and PRC members," the Committee said.

"To remedy this situation and for the Bureau to operate effectively", the committee recommended that all matters pertaining to confiscated properties be referred to the committee through the Bureau and that all assets and information received be sent to the Bureau for documentation and safe-keeping.

Meanwhile, an official of Re-acquisition Bureau has strongly warned the public against impersonating as representatives of the Bureau.

Reacting to reports of intimidation and threats of residents by masqueraders during an interview, recently, the Bureau assistant chief, Mr. J. Yanqui Zaza, said his Bureau would not condone unscrupulous acts and that perpetrators found would be arrested and prosecuted.

All bona fide representatives of the Bureau have been accredited with valid identification cards, he said.

Speaking of an incident in which a number of unauthorized soldiers had forcibly evicted occupants of a house which was not on the confiscation list, assistant chief Zaza asserted strongly that "the rights of all Liberians must be respected, regardless of who he or she might be."

"Soldiers sent to inquire at suspected confiscated houses would always be accompanied by accredited representative of the Bureau," Mr. Zaza added.

PRESIDENTIAL AIRCRAFT TO GENERATE FUNDS FOR AIR LIBERIA

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 5 Dec 80 pp 1, 6

[Text] The management of Air Liberia and a senior member of the PRC have respectively confirmed that Air Liberia's Boeing 737 aircraft will not be sold.

Speaker J. Nicholas Podier of the People's Redemption Council said yesterday that the aircraft, owned by the government of Liberia, would continue to operate with the corporation.

He said the aircraft will now be maintained to generate funds for Air Liberia.

Recently, a special committee headed by the Minister of Finance, Major Perry Zulu, recommended that the presidential aircraft be sold because of financial problems facing Air Liberia.

Meanwhile, the manager of Air Liberia, Mr. Thomas Wede Dueh Harris, said to sell the aircraft means an increase in unemployment because trained Liberian aviation personnel would be dis-

He said Liberia would have faced "foreign drain" in local currency were the committee's recommendation accepted by the PRC because it will mean that "official visits will depend on airlines of other countries".

The General Manager, therefore, said the commercialization of the aircraft would increase government revenue, develop human resources and provide easy movement of citizens.

Mr. Harris, said commercialization of the presidential aircraft would also add to the aviation industry in Liberia.

TWO MINISTERS TESTIFY AT CONFIRMATION HEARINGS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 5 Dec 80 p 6

[Text] Confirmation hearings of officials of the Government of the People's Redemption Council continued recently with Planning and Economic Affairs Minister, Dr. Togba Nah-Tipoteh, and Finance Minister Perry G. Zulu appearing.

Dr. Tipoteh in his declaration said he owned personal effects valued at $6,170 including five acres of land in Niffu Township, Sasstown Territory.

He said he owed utility bills to the Liberia Electricity and the Liberia Water and Sewer Corporations because both corporations erred in billing him.

Dr. Tipoteh said he earned from April 12 when he was appointed Planning and Economic Affairs Minister to November this year, $19,327.14.

According to him, this included his salary, as well as fees paid to him as member of the Providence Shipping Corporation Board of Directors, Lamco Board of Directors, National Housing Authority and Savings Bank Board of Governors.

Dr. Tipoteh, however, said he had spent over $17,800 out of his total earnings to contribute to self-help development projects in Bong, Nimba, Grand Gedeh and Sinoe Counties.

The Planning Minister said he had also contributed to relatives for construction of their living quarters, and the up-keep of dependents.

He said he had also assisted Liberians who completed their studies abroad and returned home recently to seek permanent employment with public and private organizations.

On his political activities, Dr. Tipoteh said he had chaired the coordinating committee of the Movement for Justice in Africa (MOJA), which, he said had been a liberation movement in Liberia for seven years.

Appearing later, Finance Minister Perry Zulu, told the PRC that he owned $500 at the Liberia Trust and Finance Corporation (LTFC), and owned one small Honda car valued at $3,200 which he uses for his private purposes.

In addition, he said he owned a lot in Paynesward which he was about to develop, and two lots in Grand Gedeh County.

Minister Zulu is married with three children.

On his achievement as Finance Minister, Major Zulu said since he assumed the ministerial post, he had travelled in cooperation with other members of government to secure aid, loans and grants from foreign governments and donor agencies.

The Finance Minister said Liberia's present economic situation was due to the failure of the last government to properly inform the nation about shortcomings that had adverse effects on the country.

MINISTER DENIES DISMISSAL OF DARPOH, MERGER OF TWO PAPERS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 5 Dec 80 p 8

[Excerpt] Deputy Information Minister for Administration Lt. Col. Gray D. Allison has dispelled rumours that Mr. Rufus Darpoh had been dismissed from the NEW LIBERIAN and REDEEMER NEWSPAPERS as supervising editor.

Speaking in an interview with LINA in his office yesterday, Deputy Minister Allison said his ministry's decision to appoint a new supervising editor resulted from Mr. Darpoh's recent request to work with a private newspaper as from January next year.

On the Ministry's decision to merge the two papers, Minister Allison said efforts would not be duplicated with the running of only one paper.

He said beginning next January, only one paper will be produced daily if possible.

The outgoing Supervising Editor, Rufus Darpoh told LINA that he requested to work with a private paper because he felt it is good for the nation to have independent papers to complement the efforts of government owned newspapers.

He said local newspapers usually accentuate government efforts and it was necessary to have another paper that would look at "other things" to ensure balanced reporting.

[Excerpt] In her continuing effort to meet and identify with the people, the First Lady, Mrs. Nancy B. Doe, last Friday paid a one-day visit to Varguen, Grand Cape Mount County at the invitation of the residents and their local Lands & Mines representative, Mr. Siah W. Nyoun.

En route to Varguen Town, Mrs. Doe made a brief stop in Tubmanburg, Bomi Territory, where she was accorded a rousing welcome by a large crowd of cheering school children, market women and other residents, led by their mayor Thomas Louis, and Bomi Territory Superintendent, Staff Sergeant Thomas Challah.

In a brief welcome address, Superintendent Challah thanked the First Lady for taking time off to visit their area.

He said the people of Bomi Territory would strive in every way to give full support to the PRC Government in order to achieve the aims and objectives of the Revolution.

Responding, Mrs. Doe thanked the people for the spontaneous warm welcome accorded her, she appealed to them to continue to work diligently and selflessly in the interest of the masses who had for so long been neglected.

In Varguen Town itself, a special welcoming program was organized at which the First Lady was gowned and given gifts for her dedication to the welfare of the people.

Superintendent Nyoun who introduced the occasion noted that the First Lady's concern for the people and the courage she had shown for the Revolution, had won for her a firm place in the hearts of the Liberian people.

The people went on to acquaint the First Lady with their problems which included the lack of a school, clinic, and a healthy water system.

Mrs. Doe promised to bring the problems to the attention of the government, assuring the people that the PRC administration would spare no effort to improve thus living conditions as soon as the country's economic situation improved.

ALL PARTY TALKS SCHEDULED FOR JANUARY 7

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 5 Dec 80 pp 1-2

[Text] A UN-SPONSORED all-party conference on SWA is definitely on the cards.

This emerged in a report last night from the UN Secretary-General Dr Kurt Waldheim.

The report follows the Pretoria talks in late October and negotiations between UN Special Representative Mr Martti Ahtisaari, Swapo and the Frontline States.

Dr Waldheim proposed that the conference should take place between January 7 and 14 next year, that the UN plan for the Territory should begin in March 1981 and that independence should be achieved by the end of next year.

Although the status of the internal South West African parties is not specified in the report, Dr Waldheim said the SA Government had "stated that it gave its assent to the conclusions" set out in his proposals on November 21.

The negotiations that led to his proposals involved the SA Government, Swapo, the Frontline States, African groups in the UN and the five-nation Western contact group.

"While assent was also given by the other parties consulted to the course of action proposed, concern was expressed that if the time frame for starting implementation was linked, even indirectly, to the issue of trust and confidence there could be the risk of a further and unacceptable delay," he said.

The conference Dr Waldheim has proposed, under UN auspices and at a venue still to be decided, is aimed at removing mistrust and to solve the problem of the government's objections about the lack of UN impartiality.

"I believe that we may have reached a decisive phase in the long and difficult effort to resolve this question," he said.

"I hope, therefore, that all concerned will now be prepared to move forward boldly and in good faith along the lines now suggested in order to ensure a sequence of events leading to the start of implementation of Resolution 435 (the plan) in March 1981, and independence by the end of 1981."

Dr Waldheim said he had already contacted the SA Government and Swapo about the composition of their delegations.

This statement indicated the internal parties would be connected to the SA delegation, but Dr Waldheim made it clear they would have a part to play by saying: "A means of facilitating agreement and of creating the necessary climate of confidence and understanding would be a pre-implementation multi-party meeting in which the parties concerned in the envisaged election would be included."

He said he had also contacted the Black Frontline States and Nigeria, the OAU and the five-nation Western contact group about sending observers to the proposed conference.

Although his report said the parties involved had agreed the conference should be held under the auspices of the Secretary General of the UN, Dr Waldheim is not expected to take personal charge of the talks.

Observers here believe the man most likely to be given that responsibility is Mr Brian Urquhart, Dr Waldheim's Under-secretary with responsibility for special political affairs who has been deeply involved in the SWA question.

Dr Waldheim's report, indicating general agreement among the parties involved, is expected to result in the indefinite dealy of a General Assembly debate on SWA.

Dr Waldheim's report dealt in detail with the talks that took place in Pretoria last month between a UN delegation led by Mr Urquhart and the SA Government.

He noted the Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Mr Brand Fourie, had referred particularly during those talks to the question of UN impartiality and equal treatment of the parties involved.

Mr Fourie told the UN delegation there was a "deep suspicion among the namibian people that the UN was not impartial and could not therefore enjoy their confidence in supervising and controlling the free and fair elections to which all parties were committed."

Dr Waldheim's report made no mention of a venue for the conference, but there appears to be general agreement that it should take place in a Black African capital. At this time, Maputo is considered the most likely. — Sapa

ARTICLE SOUNDS NOTE OF CAUTION ON BOTHA'S POLICIES

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Dec 80 p 9

[Article by Hof Meyer: "Is Botha's Bluffing Game Going Too Far?"]

[Text] FOREIGN MINISTER Pik Botha must be careful not to take the games of bluff and double-bluff over SWA so far that he confuses the people he wishes to reassure, and reassures those he would like to see confused.

His defiant growling on sanctions comes very close to doing just that.

Most South Africans would have no quarrel with his premise that Pretoria should not be intimidated by the threat of sanctions into allowing a Marxist terrorist organisation to be imposed on SWA. But would they accept his deduction that "we are going to have sanctions imposed against us" because of differences over a multi-party conference?

Perhaps the West and southern Africa needed reminding that in such a situation South Africa's ability to hit back is not inconsiderable. It seems doubtful, however. In the past month alone the point has been forcefully made by Britain's Foreign Minister, Lord Carrington, and the leaders of Botswana, Lesotho and Swaziland.

REMINDERS

What South Africa's Foreign Minister needs reminding of is that the holding of a multi-party conference was Pretoria's idea in the first place. And that Western governments, by his own admission, have accepted the principle that all SWA's parties — Swapo as well as the internal groups — must be equally represented at it.

He needs reminding that Western anger and confusion over Pretoria's position was precipitated by his own eggdance on the question of South African participation at such a conference. First, his government would "definitely not participate". Then, having stirred up the hornets' nest, he blithely remarked on his return from Europe that it would in fact be present at the conference "as an adviser."

CENTRAL ISSUE

To return to what for South Africans is the central issue: are we prepared to accept mandatory, comprehensive United Nations sanctions over technical hitches in the holding of a multi-party conference on SWA — the relevance of which to the territory's independence process appears to be minimal? Particularly when the hitches appear to be as much the result of our own government's inconsistent diplomatic haggling as of any resist adopted by the Western Five, the potential veto exercisers?

Granted, sanctions would not do Western and southern African countries any good and would do some of them a great deal of harm. That would be small comfort in the midst of the social and economic disruption they would cause for South Africa.

Virtually daring the West to stop using its veto powers in the Security council should surely be a last resort, one to which this country would have recourse only in its most vital interests — fundamental issues affecting its security — were in jeopardy.

SYMPATHY

That can hardly be said about the difficulties in agreeing on a multiparty conference on SWA. At the highest government levels Western and southern African governments have expressed sympathy with Pretoria's insistence that it cannot allow the Marxist organisation, Swapo, to be imposed on the territory by United Nations sleight of hand. Its political and military credibility in the region — and, not least, among the internal electorate — are at stake.

Thus there is at least tacit acceptance that SWA's independence process must be, and be seen to be, properly democratic, and that the UN must publicly demonstrate its abandonment of a policy of favouring Swapo. The multi-party conference is a vehicle towards achieving that end.

LOSING FACE

Accepting those terms of reference, governments have leaned heavily on Swapo to drop its demand that only a bilateral meeting between it and Pretoria can be held. But it was never conceived that Swapo could be forced to lose face entirely by meeting only with the internal parties, with Pretoria altogether absent.

Botha, very properly, is trying to negotiate the best possible bargaining position for his government and SWA's elected leaders, but his clever manoeuvres run the risk of estranging — unnecessarily — those countries that are anxious to help ensure a fair settlement for the territory.

WINNERS

If sanctions should be imposed in these circumstances the only winners would be Swapo and its backers in Moscow. South Africans should certainly be prepared to face up to any level of international pressure, if the danger to their national security warrants it. But acts of bravado are foolish.

NUJOMA OPPOSES EQUAL TREATMENT FOR ALL PARTIES

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Dec 80 pp 1-2

[Text] Swapo has rejected the proposed UN-sponsored meeting next month on SWA if the Territory's internal parties are to be treated as their equals.

In a Press statement issued in Luanda, Angola last Wednesday, the text of which reached New York over the weekend, Swapo's President, Mr Sam Nujoma, also dismissed the UN Secretary General, Dr Kurt Waldheim's report on the subject.

The report, which proposed a meeting between Swapo and SA from January 7 to January 14 to pave the way for a March ceasefire in SWA contained no new elements that indicated SA's readiness to bring the territory to nationhood on UN terms, Mr Nujoma said.

Since the report was issued, SA has said that it would take a back seat at the proposed meeting and that representatives of the Territory's internal parties should discuss the issues with Swapo.

"Swapo categorically rejects the idea of a 'multi-party meeting' if this means that the puppets will participate independently from the SA delegation, on equal footing with Swapo," Mr Nujoma said.

The relevant parts of Dr Waldheim's report therefore were unacceptable, he said.

Objecting to the postponement of the UN General Assembly debate on SWA which was scheduled to begin last Wednesday, but has been indefinitely deferred, Mr Nujoma said the world body should convene without delay to recommend mandatory, comprehensive economic sanctions against SA.

Meanwhile, Swapo was ready to cooperate with the Secretary General and the UN in implementing the Security Council's proposals for bringing SWA to independence.

Mr Theo-Ben Gurirab, the Swapo representative here, sent copies of the statement to the President of the general Assembly, Mr Rüdiger von Wechmar, the President of the UN Council for Namibia, Mr Paul Lusaka of Zambia, and the chairmen of the African and Non-Aligned groups. — Sapa Reuter

Political observers said it would take "hard bargaining and a will to succeed" by all concerned if multi-party talks were to be held next month.

Commenting on Mr Nujoma's latest statement, Mr Hough told Sapa if Swapo did not attend, the reason for the talks would fall away.

"Similary, there can be no conference if the internal parties do not participate," he said.

Multi-party talks were to be held in terms of the UN Secretary- General's report of November 24.

"Our participation in the talks will take place in accordance with his report," he said.

It was, at the same time, for Swapo to decide whether it would attend the conference - whether it accepted the latest report by the UN Secretary-General, Dr Kurt Waldheim.

"There can, however, be no question of amending the report just because Swapo so desires," he said.

If Swapo did not participate, it would show that it was not prepared to be judged by the other parties in public at a multiparty conference.

"It will confirm the suspicion that Swapo will in one way or another try to extricate itself," Mr Hough said.

The only party which stood to lose by such action was Swapo.

"If Swapo does not attend, the reason for the talks falls away," he said. "Similary, there can be no talks if the internal parties do not participate."

Mr Hough said earlier if Swapo persisted with its attitude to talk only with a SA delegation, the question arose whether arrangements for a multi-party conference should proceed.

Meanwhile, two Black nationalist parties in SWA, the Namibian Independence Party and Swapo Democrats, said after talks with Mr Hough they would not attend a multi-party conference under present conditions.

The leader of Swapo-D, Mr Andreas Shipanga, told Sapa after a 30 minute session with Mr Hough that he would insist on a direct invitation from the UN to a multi-party conference.

He had declined when Mr Hough had asked him if his party would be prepared to attend the conference as part of his delegation.

Swapo-D regarded SA as a colonial power and the party would not "sacrifice its dignity" by being led at a multi-party conference by a "colonial governor," an apparent reference to Mr Hough.

The NIP delegation, led by Mr Charlie Hartung, said after their consultation with Mr Hough they refused to be included in a delegation led by Mr Hough, a South African official.

The Federal Party leaders, Mr Bryan O' Linn and Mr John Kirkpatrick, said their party had accepted, in principle, to attend such talks.

BRIEFS

SWAPO VERSUS DTA--Windhoek: The Chairman of the SWA Ministers, Council and leader of the Territory's ruling DTA Mr Dirk Mudge reaffirmed his party's willingness to participate in the UN-proposed all-party talks on the future of SWA even as part of the delegation. Mr Mudge, who was speaking in the SWA National Assembly, said the conference would give the DTA an opportunity to confront SWAPO vis-a-vis its marxist policies. The DTA also did not mind the fact that the internal delegation would be headed by the AG because UN Security Council Resolution 435 on SWA provision for the inclusion of the AG in negotiations on the Territory's future. The only problem that remained to be resolved was the venue for the conference, Mr Mudge said. The DTA rejected Maputo as a suitable venue as the Mozambique Government openly supported SWAPO, he said. An opposition member, Mr Percy Niehaus of Aktur, said the conference was one opportunity which should not be missed by the Territory's internal parties. "But we are certainly not prepared to sacrifice this Country on the altar of recognition," he added.--Sapa [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 8 Dec 80 p 3]

SWAPO IN OWAMBO--Life in Owambo has been seriously affected on all levels by the terrorist war on the border. This was spelt out yesterday in the National Assembly by Mr I Nghihulifua, a member of the DTA during the second reading of the Additional Appropriation Bill. Mr Nghihulifua said the terrorists infiltrate SWA in groups of between 50 and 200 and generally split up into three groups. One group gathers information about the local population, politically-involved people and chiefs; a second group eliminates people on the information obtained from the first group and the third group lays landmines. The infiltrations were in possession of all the necessary identification documents and this made it virtually impossible for the security forces and police to identify them, Mr Nghihulifua said. A close watch was kept on the movements of the security forces and the terrorists could rely on the co-operation of the local population, he said. The situation in Owambo was really bad and he appealed to the House to join the struggle against SWAPO by holding meetings in Owambo and through negotiations. Mr Nghihulifua pointed out that more than 15 schools had to be closed in Owambo because of the war. This affected approximately 20 000 children. In addition the roads in Owambo were dangerous and the one between Oshikango and Oshakati had already claimed the lives of 50 people, while hundreds have been injured in landmine explosions. Medical assistance was nonexistent in some areas, he said. Clinics were burnt down and the local people had to walk 50 kilometres in some cases if they needed medical attention. If they were too ill and couldn't walk they had no alternative but to turn to the traditional witchdoctor. "If one limb is ill, it affects the whole body," Mr Nghihulifua said. "If Owambo has to be lost, SWA is lost." He appealed to the House not to forget the people of Owambo. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 8 Dec 80 p 3]

NUJOMA REMAINS IN LUANDA--London: The SWAPO Chief, Mr Sam Nujoma has cancelled a visit to Britain this week because of what a SWAPO statement here today termed the "serious security situation" in Southern Africa." The statement also said that South Africa had ordered special "killer squads" to assassinate SWAPO leaders before next month's UN sponsored settlement conference on SWA. SWAPO's National Executive had decided in view of the situation that Mr Nujoma should not leave the movement's headquarters in the Angolan capital of Luanda, said the statement. But SWAPO would send a high-level delegation to London to fulfil Mr Njoma's engagements, including talks with the British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington. The delegation would be led by SWAPO's administrative secretary, Mr Moses Garoeb, and include two other members of the movement's National Executive. The statement accused South Africa of launching "an all-out effort to subvert" the UN proposals for a SWA settlement and cited the "killer squads." These units had recently extended their operations to the Black Frontline States which back SWAPO and other countries, said the statement. The leader of the DTA, Mr Dirk Mudge, is also due to visit London this week and is expected to have talks with Lord Carrington. [Text] [Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 8 Dec 80 p 3]

BRIEFS

LIBYAN INTERVENTION--The Nigerian STANDARD strongly criticizes Libya for intervening in the Chadian conflict in defiance of the stand of the Organization of African Unity on the issue. The paper says the Chadian problem is better solved through a negotiated settlement based on principles acceptable to all parties in the strife and not by any military intervention. It adds that the ultimate solution lies in the desire of the people to live together. On Libya's role in the crisis as well as also in the continent, the STANDARD says that her actions have lent credibility to the fears expressed about the viability of Afro-Arab solidarity. It wonders why Libya delights in making her presence felt in the troubled areas of the continent instead of seeking to aid the economies of black African states. The Nigerian TIDE focuses on the disclosure by the nation's chief executive that the country might have to join the nuclear race if the need arises. The paper appreciates the reasons brought forward by those who oppose the idea, the most notable of which is economic, but stresses that the success of the idea will call for the sacrifice of all and sundry. Also, the TIDE hopes that Nigeria's foreign policy, which places Africa as her centerpiece, necessities the association of nuclear weapons to serve as a deterrent to the apartheid regime in South Africa. VIOLATION OF ECOWAS PROTOCOL--The Nigerian CHRONICLE appeals to the Federal Government to investigate reports of violation of the Economic Community of West African States [ECOWAS] protocol on the free movement of persons to ascertain whether the actions are directed mainly at Nigerians. The paper firmly believes that those countries which consider the free movement of Nigerians within the subregion detrimental to their economic interests have no justification to benefit from Nigeria's open door policy. The CHRONICLE notes that since the ratification of the protocol by eight of the 16 member states of ECOWAS, there have been disturbing utterances by some of them which gave the impression that the organization only exists on paper. It however wants them to consider the benefits derivable from such a regional grouping, adding that the agreement has become binding on all the 16 member nations since those which have not ratified it have expressed willingness to do so. REVENUE ALLOCATION FORMULA DEFENDED—The vice president, Dr Alex Ekwueme, today told members of the House of Representatives that 55 percent of the national revenue was an irreducible minimum of what the Federal Government needed to meet its constitutional responsibility. Dr Ekwueme was at the House of Representatives to throw more light on the Federal Government's stand on the revenue allocation bill. He told the members that if the 55 percent minimum demanded by the government were reduced, an incalculable harm would have been done to the existence of Nigeria as one united and indissoluble nation. The vice president reminded the house that what the Federal Government was asking for represented a sharp fall from its share of the national revenue under the old arrangement, which amounted to about 75 percent. And by the new arrangement, Dr Ekwueme continued, the Federal Government would now rely on only one source of revenue--the federation account--unlike the state governments, which have alternative sources. In spite of this advantageous position of the states, he explained further, their share of the federation account was being raised substantially to 30 percent. On the local governments, Dr Ekwueme said that the 8 percent allocation recommended for them in the revenue bill was adequate for now. FUEL SHORTAGE CANCELS FLIGHTS--The former general manager of Nigeria Airways, Capt (Paul Tahau), has described the decision to invite a foreign airline to manage the operations of the airline as a letdown on African nations. He stated this while testifying before the Senate Committee on Transport and Aviation. Captain (Tahau) expressed the view that Nigerians could do better if exposed to the type of conditions in which expatriates operated. He identified some of the problems of the airways. They include tribalism and individualism, as well as too much trust of expatriates rather than Nigerians. In the meantime, all Nigeria Airways international flights have been suspended. This is as a result of the unavailability of aviation fuel at the national oil depot. [Text] [AB031550 Lagos Domestic Service in English 2100 GMT 2 Dec 80]

COUPS, ARAB SUMMIT EVALUATED--The Nigerian STATESMAN reflects on the recent coups in Guinea-Bissau and Upper Volta. While the paper notes that the one in Upper Volta ousted a president who was insensitive to the needs of his people, it laments that the change in Guinea-Bissau had an adverse effect on Africa's efforts at regional integration. The STATESMAN particularly reminds the new ruler in Upper Volta not to overstay his welcome considering the disenchantment of that country's nationals with military rule. The NEW NIGERIAN observes that the recently concluded summit of the Arab League in Amman, Jordan which sat to justify Iraq's war against Iran and also endorsed King Husayn's claim as a rightful representative of the Palestinians failed to achieve its objective. The paper notes that one principal reason for the failure is the fact that the Arab world has been divided into two opposing camps because of the Gulf war. The paper fears that there is an imminent power bloc which will center round Iraq, Jordan and Saudi Arabia because of these developments but cannot clearly see how the Iraqi leader will subject himself to the dictates of those in the group. It wonders what this group of three will present to Washington as its stand on the Palestinian issue. Making a general appraisal of the conference, the NEW NIGERIAN declares that it demonstrates the inability of the Arabs to speak with a single voice. AJAOKUTA PROJECT MANAGEMENT TEAM--A project management team is to be appointed to coordinate the services rendered by contractors handling the civil engineering works at the Ajaokuta Steel Plant. This was made known by the acting minister for steel development, Malam Mama Ali Makele, while inaugurating the reconstituted board of the steel plant. He explained that the team would work in conjunction with the company's management to ensure an orderly implementation of the project. The minister said that the foundation stones of the Jos and Katsina steel rolling mills would be laid early next year. [Text] [AB031554 Lagos Domestic Service in English 1500 GMT 3 Dec 80]

CAMEROON RELATIONS, SENGHOR RETIREMENT--The Nigerian TIDE feels that the reported diversion by the Cameroonian authorities of the flow of a river which serves Nigeria and Cameroon should not strain the existing cordial relations between both countries. The paper notes that there have been several other complaints of harassment in the past against Cameroonian officials, but the paper stresses it cannot be a deliberate policy of the Cameroonian Government to be hostile to Nigerians. The TIDE therefore appeals to the governments of the two countries to investigate the present situation and other sensitive areas that could endanger their relationship with a view to solving them. The daily SKETCH welcomes the announcement that President Leopold Sedar Senghor of Senegal plans to relinquish [word indistinct] next year. The paper remarks that it is a rare occurrence in Africa for a leader to retire voluntarily. The SKETCH explains that this sit-tight attitude has been identified as the main cause of political immaturity in the continent, adding that President Senghor therefore represents a symbol of progress. The paper wants African leaders to appreciate the need to groom a successor and discard the erroneous belief that they are indispensable. The SKETCH hopes President Senghor will fulfill his promise. WHEAT TO BE IMPORTED NEXT YEAR, PROBABLY FROM U. S.

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Dec 80 p 11

[Text] SOUTH AFRICA is planning to import 200 000 tons of wheat next year, probably from the United States, the general manager of the Wheat Board, Mr Dennis van Aarde, said in Pretoria yesterday.

The board took the decision two days ago in the light of the poor South African wheat crop this year which is now estimated at 1 454 000 tons as opposed to 2 035 000 tons the previous season. The country's annual requirement is 1 750 000 tons.

Tenders for wheat imports will be called for through the trade in the second week of January for delivery between March and June, Mr Van Aarde said.

South Africa exported about 142 000 tons of last year's crop at the beginning of this year, but the exports were halted in May when it became clear that climatic conditions were not good for this season.

Normally, a four-month supply is carried over from one season to the next to meet the country's consumption, Mr Van Aarde said. With the 200 000 ton imports contemplated for next year, there will be a carry-over of a 2½ month supply.

The landed cost of the imported wheat is expected to be about R225 a ton as opposed to the present South African producers' price of R215 a ton for the best grade.

However, the price will even out to about the same level, with imports being used in areas closer to the harbour of arrival and a consequent reduction in domestic distribution costs.

At the meeting of the International Wheat Board in London last week, the South African representatives had discussions with the other producer countries.

Australia cannot supply more than she is contracted for, Canada's crop is below normal, Argentina has also suffered crop losses because of drought and the wheat from the European Economic Community is of a type and quality not suited for use in South Africa.

Officials of the US Department of Agriculture have indicated that the US will be prepared to sell to South Africa Mr Van Aarde said. Their wheat is suitable for local use.

Referring to the expected landed cost of R225 a ton in South Africa, Mr Van Aarde said the failure of wheat crops in other parts of the world, including China and Russia, has not only pushed the price of the community up, but has also tended to increase freight costs. — Sapa.

FINE COAL BEING BENEFICIATED FOR EXPORT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 5 Dec 80 p 21

[Text] GOLD Field of South Africa's Greenside Colliery near Witbank is now beneficiating fine coal. This is the first time that this has been possible in this country.

Because fine coal is difficult clean, the material has been dumped in the past or added to steam coal, despite the fact that these fines (0,5 mm) constitute a potential source of high-quality coal.

Greenside now upgrades this product into a low-ash coal in a fines heavy media coal-washing plant on which work began last year. Producing a fines product for the export market, the plant is probably a world first.

Original test work was carried out by Nortons-Tividale of Johannesburg, the Fuel Research Institute, Pretoria and Gold Fields.

The plant produces about 4 000 t/month of low-ash fines. The new plant is integrated with the colliery's No 2 Seam plant which treats about 160 000 t/month and produces a product destined for European power stations. Although integrated with the No 2 Seam plant, the design of the new facility is such that the two plants can be isolated from one another.

Cost of the new plant is some R1,2-million, exclusive of a new control room which serves the new facility as well as the No 2 Seam plant.

The colliery also operates a plant for beneficiating coal from the mine's No 5 Seam and another for processing coal from the No 4 Seam. Greenside's production from 3 coal seams is over 2 500 000 2-5-million t/pa, comprising low-ash coal, metallurgical coal which is sold to Highveld Steel and Vanadium Corporation, power station smalls, and domestic coal.

During the 1980 financial year the after-tax profit of Apex Mines Limited (Greenside) was R9-3 million, and capital expenditure was R5-million.

Apex Mines was formed 87 years ago and produced its first coal 3 years later from a coal deposit on the East Rand. That mine closed down in 1947, and Greenside Colliery was then opened up at Witbank.

NEW FREIGHT-PASSENGER 747--Twelve of South African Airways' weekly international flights will from next week carry cargo as well as passengers when the airline puts its newest acquisition, the 747 Combi, into use. SAA took delivery of two of the more efficient 747s this week. The Combis will perform their maiden flights on the Johannesburg-Madrid-Paris-Brussels and Johannesburg-Windhoek-Frankfurt routes on Monday. The new aircraft, the "Waterberg" and "Helderberg", are unique because of a side cargo door, which enables them to carry passengers as well as cargo. The Combi can carry either a full load of 344 passengers, 210 passengers with six pallet positions for cargo or 136 passengers with 12 pallet positions. The payload of the new craft has increased from 35 150kg on the standard 747 to 53 800kg on the Combi. New lighter and quieter engines have been fitted to the Combi. The engines cost $2,3-million each, but are more reliable and have improved thrust and fuel burn capabilities. The range of the new aircraft will be increased considerably with the addition of an extra 6 500l fuel tank late in 1982. Improvements to the aircraft's engine data processing system and auto pilot have also been made. The Combi has an on-board printer which will spell out to the pilot when his planes' engines are being overtaxed. Diversions to other airfields will also largely be eliminated with the Combi's triple auto pilot system, which will enable the craft to land in poor weather conditions. COTTON GROWING HAS POTENTIAL FOR FURTHER DEVELOPMENT

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 20 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] COTTON growing must be one of the most thriving activities in Swaziland. According to Mike Clark, Executive Office at the Cotton Board in Manzini, over the last twelve years production of seed cotton has risen from 7610 tons to 22600 tons. The 1967-68 crop was worth E935000, and the 1979-80 crop will fetch E10.9 million.

The number of cotton growers has remained much the same over this time and the vastly improved yields are due to better farming. There is better cultivation of the soil and better planting methods. Also, there have been great strides made in development of improved herbicides and more efficient methods of application. Back in the late 1960's spraying was carried out by relatively simple means. Today, spraying can be done in several ways; aerial, tractor mounted, knapsack and hand held methods are all used.

Cotton spraying these days is a very expensive business. Up until a few years ago farmers assumed that regular spraying was all that was necessary. Today, the Cotton Board advises them to make regular field checks to assess current weed or pest problems and to then spray according to needs. This keeps costs down and so improves the profit margin. In fact all costing of cotton growing is essential if profits are to be worth while.

The price of cotton has risen from 13.2 cents per kilo for seed cotton in 1968 to 50 cents in 1980, but at the same time, the cost of inputs has risen dramatically.

The Technical Officer at the Cotton Board is Mr. Tom Jele. Mr. Jele worked at the Big Bend Research Centre for several years. He has a Diploma in Agriculture from Luyengo, and, under the auspices of the Ministry of Agriculture, did a seven month Cotton Training Course in Israel. Recently, he spent three weeks in Communist China studying textile development. The Board hopes to recruit a second Technical Officer next May.

Mr. Clark would like to see specialist technical officers trained by the Ministry of Agriculture who would work and live in the main cotton growing areas. They would be responsible for seeing that cotton farmers were kept to to date with the lates farming aids and techniques.

At the present time, most cotton in Swaziland is planted under 'dry land' conditions; only a small amount is irrigated. Therefore there is always a risk of drought, which makes it very difficult to predict yields. Under these conditions, the Board expects a minimum crop of 15000 tons and a maximum of 25000, depending on the rainfall. Already, the 1980-81 crop is late. There is a need for good, well distributed rainfalls in November, especially in the Low veld.

To increase cotton production in Swaziland to any major extent, more irrigation must be introduced. The Ministry of Agriculture has been engaged in a water usage inventory and a survey of suitable sites for development of irrigation schemes. The board aims to increase production to 33000 tons of seed cotton by 1985. This would provide raw materials for two ginneries, Cotona and the new gin at Big Bend, as well as the oil seed mill to be included in the Big Bend complex.

THERE is also need for future consideration of a cotton spinning factory, says Mr. Clark, to use Swaziland grown cotton and provide work, as this part of the industry is partially labour intensive.

Swaziland farmers have proved dramatically that they can produce the goods, and they may well provide the foundation for an industry which will create jobs and earn foreign exchange for the Kingdom.

DECENTRALIZATION OF ECONOMY URGED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Dec 80 p 2

[Text] THE economy should now be decentralised through workers' participation, Member of the Central Committee Mrs Chibesa Kankasa has said.

In her contributions to a one-day seminar attended by Party and Government officials and Zambia Fish and Marketing Union leaders on the control of prices of commodities Mrs Kankasa said workers' participation would result in low production costs and cheaper goods.

If workers were to decide on wage policy, production targets and set a minimum return on investment by the Government under the decentralised system, it was unlikely employees would demand high wages which would affect prices, she said.

By deciding their own pricing for products, the workers' enterprises would prove their worth as success of their companies would depend on their performance.

"We should consider how centralised control is responsible for the present ills and how best the situation can be remedied through decentralised planning and by encouraging the public sector to plan within this framework."

Mrs Kankasa's recommendations to the preparatory meeting on prices is that more Party women should be employed as price controllers and traders to buy all councils should be compelled to provide scales at markets.

ACCOUNTS REPORT REVEALS STATE OVERSPENT BY K2 MILLION

[Text] THE report of the Public Accounts Committee has revealed yet again scandalous anomalies in Government expenditure and has called on the Government to intensify efforts in the training of officers in Government accounting and auditing in order to minimise financial indiscipline.

Moving the motion to have the report adopted, chairman of the committee Mr Francis Nkhoma revealed that the Government unconstitutionally over-spent by over K2 million during the year under review.

The bank account in Bonn, West Germany, was also overdrawn by amounts ranging from K3,695 to K71,627 during the period of September, 1978 to May, 1979 involving interest charges amounting to K1,410.

In February, 1979, the ambassador requested for further overdraft facilities from the mission's bankers contrary to regulations. The contributory factors for the bank overdraft included payments of the amount of K22,000 as staff advances without authority, special imprests totalling K18,575 and a further personal advance of K6,484 to a senior officer. Mr Nkhoma told parliament.

"This is financial indiscipline of the highest order and I personally feel the ambassador should be held wholly liable for any losses arising from the overdraft obtained." he said.

Nyimba MP, Mr Aston Phiri who is also a member of the committee, revealed in his contributions that a Cabinet minister illegally advanced himself K28,000 when he went outside the country.

"I cannot believe that this Government can continue to condone such indiscipline and prosper," he said.

He added that an individual who was not in the Civil Service but somehow was appointed to the foreign service, also advanced himself K21,000 without authority.

The chairman of the committee also noted that the number of cases involving misuse of Government transport as evidenced by private shopping, illegal carrying of passengers, driving without certificates of competency to drive Government vehicles, personal and domestic delivery of chicken feeds and foodstuffs and delivery of children to and from schools, were rife.

With the current soaring of fuel bills, the misuse of Government transport cannot be allowed to go on unabated. The committee noted with concern that earlier recommendations on the subject have in the main been disregarded," he said.

The Committee has also voiced its concern about the problem of ineffective internal control arrangements prevalent in the Government accounting system and urged the Ministry of Finance to initiate a bill to establish a Zambian body of accountants to rectify the situation.

The committee's report says as a result of the improper functioning of the internal audit section, irregular payments of salary advances and car loans involving senior officers in the Ministry of Finance could not be detected.

• The report was however adopted after a heated debate by several MPs on glaring financial irregularities while the front benchers strongly defended Government handling of the country's expenditure.

SOVIETS TO PROSPECT FOR OIL, OTHER MINERALS

Lusaka ZAMBIA DAILY MAIL in English 1 Dec 80 p 1

[Text]

THE Soviet Union will soon start prospecting for oil, diamond, tin and other minerals in Eastern and Southern provinces, it was revealed in Lusaka yesterday.

This came to light when a Soviet trade delegation, which includes experts in geology, called on President Kaunda at State House.

Leader of the delegation, Mr Karl Gorev, who is that country's economic counsellor at the embassy, told the President that besides developing the agricultural industry, the experts would also prospect for minerals.

Mr Gorev said his delegation had successful talks with Zambian government officials on the establishment of a trade training centre of common crafts and medical school to train medium level medical personnel.

It was also agreed that the Soviet Union should provide specialists to work as consultants in Zambian ministries.

At the moment, there are 85 Soviet experts running diesel power stations, 50 operating drilling rigs and 138 servicing Soviet-made dump trucks.

Drilling operations in areas found to contain deposits of uranium in the Southern and North-Western provinces are currently underway.

An Italian firm, Agip SPA, which is carrying out the operations, has signed an agreement with the Government to develop a uranium industry in the country.

And last week, President Kaunda told a rally in Lusaka's Mtendere township that several mines would soon be opened within the next four years with the help of other countries in a bid to reduce the nation's dependence on copper.

He said the Government was holding discussions with friendly nations interested in helping Zambia exploit her natural resources like uranium, emeralds and other minerals.

Mr Gorev also told the President yesterday that the Soviet Union was now considering setting up State farms so that it could participate fully in the country's agricultural sector.

Dr Kaunda said Zambia had great potential in agriculture but as a developing country which had devoted her energies on war against racism, she needed assistance.

"We have now turned our attention from the fight against colonialism and apartheid to poverty and its off-shoots of hunger, disease and exploitation of man by man.

Your country has for a long time helped in the fight against imperialism, colonialism and apartheid. You must now help in our fight against poverty," he told the Russian experts.

He said Russia had always been an ally of Zambia in the fight against colonialism and should now be an ally in the development of agriculture.

The war against poverty and its off-shoots of hunger, disease, corruption and crime would remain a relentless one until it was successfully executed, the President said.

He added that Zambia had launched the war against poverty with the same vigour she used to fight imperialism and colonialism.

Earlier, Soviet ambassador to Zambia, Dr Vasili Solodovnikov, said the arrival of the trade delegation was a landmark in the country's development.

He pledged his country's desire to help Zambia develop her agricultural industry, adding that relations between the two nations had always been cordial.

Present at the talks at State House were Secretary of State for Defence and Security Mr Grey Zulu, member of the Central Committee Mr Kapasa Makasa, Minister of Commerce and Industry Mr Remmy Chisupa and permanent secretary for National Commission for Development Planning Dr Leonard Chivuno.

RAILWAY UNFOLDS IMPROVEMENTS PLAN

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] ZAMBIA Railways yesterday unfolded its K144 million master plan to improve the system to meet the expected growth in traffic up to 1986.

Railways corporate planning officer, Mr David Musona, told a Computer Society of Zambia seminar in Kabwe after the weekend that the five-year plan from 1979 to 1983 would avoid a deterioration in the operations of the system and reduce its transport capacity.

The plan would help Zambia Railways modernise its fleet of rolling stock and increase its utilisation to make its capacity effective to handle the expected growth in traffic.

The plan also provided for renewing the 112 km of track, extending and improving crossing loops, renewing the centralised train control and improving the telecommunication system.

Other activities within the plan include:

- Buying ten locomotives and 985 wagons, providing for spare parts for both locomotives and rolling stock.
- Improving maintenance and handling facilities.
- Staff housing.
- Data processing facilities and advisory services at senior and middle management levels and training at all levels to reduce and ultimately eliminate the system's dependence on expatriate managerial and technical personnel.

Running

Mr Musona told the seminar organised by Zambia Railways that at the moment, the railways was running an average of 61 freight and four passenger trains a day. In addition, it was handling one billion tonnes-km and 280 million passenger-km on average a year.

"We have projected annual freight traffic growth of two per cent and passenger traffic growth of four per cent up to the year 1989," he said, adding that the railway's requirement for equipment and facilities depended on these forecasts.

Railways acting general manager, Mr Richard Veenis, who opened the seminar at Zambia Railways training centre, announced that one of the ten locomotives ordered from Europe had already arrived and another one was at Dar es Salaam, awaiting delivery.

Mr Veenis said Zambia Railways had entered into a training programme with the World Bank for its managers. Already, some of them were being trained in Canada and Britain.

The aim was to remove deficiencies from the system caused by lack of training among its senior and middle management staff.

Mr Veenis conceded that this problem was not only peculiar to Zambia but it was common to other developing countries.

He told the seminar it was not possible for the system to be electrified at the moment because this involved a "huge investment."

"We need something between K300 million and K400 million. It will not be plain sailing," he said.

Mr Veenis said even if the money was available, it would still take about five years to complete the programme.

At present feasibility studies were continuing to ascertain the viability of the venture and if proved successful, it would then be included in the 1984 development plan.

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Dec 80 p 4

[From the "Focus" column]

[Text] THERE have been different reactions to the recently announced "salary bonanza" for public servants in Zambia.

Some public servants are quite happy with the salary increments and conditions of service while others feel that these are not substantial enough to make any major changes to the living standards of most low and middle level workers in the public service.

One should therefore expect continued debate on this issue and in particular the effect of these increments on the cost of living in the country.

However, one debate that is most essential now, with regards to our public service, is the whole question of what is wrong with it.

This is an important debate because as far as things are going in our public service at the moment, no amount of salary boost and improved conditions of service can ever change the poor performance of the personnel currently manning it.

This is a controversial debate but, as it takes all the guts to initiate it, it will also need all the guts for those concerned to accept some of these statements as part of a health programme of brain storming by all the people.

Things are so bad in our public service that to continue to hide our defects and problems for fear of projecting a bad national image to the rest of the world can only lead to an irreparable damage to and the collapse of our public service.

Time has come for what the Party and its Government have called "constructive criticism" because to shun this criticism or to treat it as unwarranted theorisation could be a major mistake.

It is unfortunate that the commission that came up with such comprehensive recommendations in such a short time did not see it fit to recognise the serious human factor in our public service which cannot be corrected by raising the salaries and improving the conditions of service of all public servants.

Members of the commission being public servants and indeed serious victims of this human factor could not be expected to examine this factor which is responsible for the current performance disaster in public service.

Neither could they be expected to be frank about the deteriorating standards of our public service because if they had done so, they would have implied that the public servant in this country does not need any salary raise or improved conditions of service until he can change his extremely poor attitude to work.

We would like to initiate this debate by saying that the millions of Kwacha to be spent by Government in improving the salaries and conditions of service of public servants are a waste of essential funds as long as our public service remains what it is now.

What the commission should have recommended is that this money is given as a form of compensation to a large segment of the top and middle level "dead wood" personnel in the public service, which should have been retired a long time ago.

There are many "dead wood" officers who should have been retired but who seem to have mastered an art of putting themselves in irreplaceable positions and who we determined to see that nothing progressive takes place in their ministries.

They are there mainly to earn a salary and to enable their favourite "colleagues" to acquire lucrative posts in the public service.

They spend all their time in the public service plotting how to remain in their positions and how to influence change towards their real interest.

That interest is that no one should find anything wrong in what they do or say and that it is better not to handle anything that is controversial or revolutionary in nature.

They have mastered the public service Bible (General Orders) well to defend their interests and to see that things which require bothersome action are delayed or mislaid so that eventually they will not be forced into implementing them.

It is unfortunate that the old guards schooled in a fairly reasonable system of public administration have turned it into a weapon to be used against any efforts to discipline them or their "favourite" junior officers.

And because of the absence of a "dismissing" mechanism we have now an over-staffed and extremely indisciplined public service where more people are hired and very few are "fired" but many are transferred from one ministry to another to commit the same offences.

The "dead wood" that cannot be burnt has also now specialised in frustrating young graduates from the university and colleges.

Young and professionally trained revolutionary cadres have to flee public service because life is made so unbearable for them, especially if they want to do what they were hired for.

So much time is spent by the middle level administrative personnel in public service filling confidential files of young and challenging cadres with "confidential lies" which are often taken as gospel truth.

If the cadres are determined to face these challenges they have banished themselves to a permanent "promotionless exile".

So there is no better way of killing corruption, indiscipline, laziness and "tribalism" that avoids the purge of the entire public service.

A purge is unpleasant. Whoever introduces it must be prepared to be called all sorts of names.

No one would therefore expect the commission to have had the guts to suggest the "purge" of the public service as a prerequisite to salary raises and improved conditions of service.

To revitalise our public service therefore, the following things could be done easily:

- Cut down on the number of administrative "passengers" on the top level so that the money saved can be used to employ middle level and well trained cadres capable of doing something.
- Revise the whole system of promotion where people who are tired and completely useless end up acquiring other posts.
- Purge the service commissions themselves because at the moment they are manned by the type of people who believe that "old guards" must be rewarded by promotion even if they have lost touch with time and demands of today's Zambia.
- Burn the "General Orders" and come up with a Zambian one. The General Orders are still British oriented.
- Redefine the duties of everyone in public service from the permanent secretary to a sweeper. Such definition must state the position and expected output of each worker.
- Cut down on the tasks which the permanent secretaries must do and the number of decisions they must make as individuals.
- Abolish the personnel division and let every ministry develop its own personnel managers or experts.

At the moment the personnel division is a major cause of delays in dealing with disciplinary cases and promotions thereby frustrating the workers.

- Establish a system of evaluating the performance of every department in each ministry rather than wait for ficticious annual reports which are often two or more years late.
- Introduce foremen who must make sure that every public servant is in the office by 08.00 hours and get out of the office at 17.00 hours.
- Introduce a system of dismissing people (even a ruthless one is welcome for a change).

The truth is the people who man ministries are responsible for the country's under-development and destruction of the little money voted for genuine development.

Why raise the salary of people who do not realise that the cost of living can only be lowered by commitment to hardwork and not misuse of government funds?

That is the question that should have been answered before introducing the "salary bonanza".

As it stands the "salary bonanza" is a sheer waste of valuable funds.

KITWE ZIT CLOSES, STUDENTS SENT HOME

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Dec 80 p 5

[Text] THE Zambia Institute of Technology in Kitwe has been closed indefinitely and students have been sent home.

The closure was announced in a circular from the principal, Mr Allister Corbett, to students yesterday.

But the suspension of classes did not affect University of Zambia students who share facilities with ZIT at the Riverside campus.

According to the circular of November 29 and signed by Mr Corbett the decision to shut the institute had been prompted by the two-day boycott of classes by students last week, in protest against the expulsion of four pregnant students.

Mr Corbett says recent events under the leadership of the students union executive committee had led to a complete breakdown of the norms of discipline and respect by the student body for the lawfully constituted authority of ZIT.

But the students, who called off the boycott on Monday, were taken by surprise yesterday when they discovered the campus was surrounded by police.

They were later told the institute had been closed and were ordered to board buses under police supervision to Kitwe main bus station for those going to Luapula, Northern and North-Western provinces.

Those destined for the Southern, Central, Eastern and Lusaka provinces were driven to Masala main bus station in Ndola.

But because the campus was prematurely shut most of the students were stranded at the stations as they were not given any allowances.

Later a group of students led by ZITSU president, Mr Chibano Kaswaya, marched to Kitwe boma to ask for transport assistance from the governor, Mr Joseph Musonda.

The governor told the students his office could not provide transport because the issue involved ZIT authorities.

Later, Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee, Mr Shadreck Soko, arranged for five buses to take back to Kitwe about 300 students who were dumped in Ndola after the college had been closed.

Mr Soko took the action after the students, who gathered at his office, complained that ZIT authorities took them to bus and railway stations without transport money.

Committed

Mr Soko sympathised with the students about half of them girls, saying they had been treated unfairly contrary to the philosophy of Humanism no matter what offence they had committed.

An official from the Ministry of Education in Lusaka promised Mr Soko that he would go today to Kitwe to issue travel warrants to the students.

The campus was scheduled to have closed officially on December 23 to allow secretarial and business studies students to write their final examinations.

FORMER BANK OFFICIAL BLOCKED MASS NATIONALIZATION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] FORMER Bank of Zambia governor, Dr Justin Zulu halted mass nationalisation of the economy during his leadership because he was concerned about the excessive capital outflow which would have followed such arrangements.

Speaking in an interview in the latest journal of the bank Zambanker Dr Zulu, who was governor from 1967 to 1970, said during his time there was a strong feeling in political circles to nationalise all commercial banks and have massive State participation in commercial and industrial enterprises.

"I did not subscribe to these ideas," said Dr Zulu, who has just returned from a ten-year stint with the International Monetary Fund in Washington, United States as director in the African department.

On IMF discussions with the Government on a second stabilisation programme, Dr Zulu said the new programme would not be a "holding action" like the one just completed, but would aim at raising the growth rate.

Another priority of the new programme is the reduction of the foreign payments arrears which now stand at K350 million.

An IMF team arrived in the country last week for discussions with Government on another programme.

His remedy for the Zambian economy is to raise production and employment, — which could be achieved in two years — by stopping new or complex projects and utilising the limited foreign exchange to bring in raw materials, equipment and technical services.

Dr Zulu said a growth of three per cent could be achieved by reducing administrative costs in Government, parastatal and private sector. "There are too many unproductive people in these sectors," he added.

Dr Zulu dismissed reports that IMF economic stabilisation programmes were only geared at prescribing devaluation in the Third World.

"I wish to emphasise that the role the IMF can play in moderating current economic difficulties is limited. Like in other spheres of human endeavour, the authorities in each country are best places to analyse their situations and design the best measures to resolve them," he said.

KAUNDA ANNOUNCES PLANS TO REVOLUTIONIZE IRRIGATION SYSTEM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] ZAMBIA is to have a ready supply of agricultural inputs. And President Kaunda yesterday announced plans to revolutionise the country's irrigation system.

Speaking to a high-powered European Economic Community (EEC) delegation before lunch at State House, Dr Kaunda said the Government was to exploit Zambia's abundant water resources for irrigation purposes.

He said the Government was studying the possibility of making use of the country's unlimited water potential to improve agriculture.

This was in view of the lesson the country had learnt following successive droughts in the past two years which resulted in the importation of maize.

"We have good rivers most of which flow all the year round as well as good inland lakes which we would like to exploit in the field of irrigation so that we can be able to feed our people," Dr Kaunda said.

The EEC delegation also heard that the Government has taken measures to ensure that agricultural inputs to farmers were always available and curb produce losses because of poor storage facilities.

Minister of State for Agriculture, Mr Justin Mukando, commended the EEC for providing K2.5 million for the construction of 11 multi-purpose agricultural stores in various parts of the country.

He was opening the K176,000 Namboard multi-purpose agricultural store complex at Chongwe yesterday.

And Namboard operations manager, Mr John Nyirenda, disclosed that the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) was providing about K39 million to build additional 64 agricultural stores throughout the country.

He said the deal was a result of gruelling five-year negotiations between the Government and CIDA. Work on the project would begin early next year.

Mr Mukando said the EEC programme was to support the drive for increased agricultural production through the "timely availability" of inputs, especially fertiliser, by providing adequate storage facilities and to reduce losses "arising from undue spoilage and handling."

The EEC storage sheds would handle 20,000 tonnes of farm inputs and crops. Seventeen staff houses are to be built at Mumbwa, Musofu, Mulilima, Kakwelesa, Liteta, Mwachinsompola, Muchenje, Shibuyunji, Kaoma, Namwala and Chongwe.

The minister said that through Namboard engineering department, the company had saved K150,000 for the project consultancy and drawings which started in May this year.

During their State House meeting, Dr Kaunda informed the delegation that Zambia would need capital and know-how to carry out the proposed irrigation project. In addition, there was need for a political will on Zambia's part as well as on the part of those coming to help.

He informed them about the country's three-pronged approach to agriculture — lima programme, the commercial sector and the Government-sponsored operation food programme.

As regards the operation food programme, a number of countries were coming to help Zambia carry it out and the country was looking forward to the EEC participation alongside these other countries.

"We would also like to establish many more projects, apart from those you are already engaged in, with your assistance," the President said.

He said their visit came at an important time when the country was trying to lay more emphasis on economic development rather than preoccupy itself with politics.

In reply, leader of the delegation Mr Jorgen Abrahamsen said the delegation was impressed with the immensity of the country and that during its stay, it had covered long distances to visit various projects.

During their tour, the delegation saw the source of Zambia's problems and appreciated the manner in which the Government was trying to overcome them.

Mr Abrahamsen said the EEC was ready to help Zambia in her new efforts to improve the economy and that the organisation was looking forward to coordinating this programme under the new Lome convention.

"I hope our visit will enhance cooperation between us," he said.

ZCTU OFFICIAL CAUTIONS LABOR TO PREPARE FOR ANY EVENTUALITY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] ZAMBIA Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) assistant general secretary Mr Chitalu Sampa has put the labour movement on the alert, saying it should prepare for any 'eventuality'.

He told a seminar of union leaders at the President's Citizenship College near Kabwe yesterday that the labour movement had reached a crucial period in its history.

Mr Sampa was closing the seminar for national trustees and financial secretaries of ZCTU affiliated unions.

He attacked "evil forces" which he said were trying to divide the labour movement, "using disgruntled functionaries among us."

"They want to alienate the worker from his leaders. One way they are trying to do this is by trying to create an impression that union funds and property are not properly looked after," he said.

Opportunists

In trade union leadership, there was no room for opportunists, Mr Sampa said. "During the difficult times in the early days, we spent months without pay. We organised on foot. This was all for the love of the downtrodden and oppressed worker. That should still be your motto today."

Mr Sampa added: "My fellow leaders, we have reached a crucial period in the history of the labour movement. As citizens of this Republic, we are asked to participate fully in all matters that affect us as workers.

"Now, because we actively respond to this call, there is a threat to withdraw certain legal provisions in labour laws favourable to the smooth operations of our trade unions.

"It is reasonable to advise that whatever little money that comes into your coffers must be well invested for the future and the well-being of our members. We must be wide awake for any eventuality. It is not an easy task."

Mr Sampa, who did not make any references to any particular individual or incident, told the seminar participants that for them to be successful leaders, they should love their fellow men.

About two months ago, ZCTU, chairman, Mr Frederick Chiluba threatened to "press the button" for a general strike before the end of the year if workers' demands were not met by the Government.

Mr Sampa spoke strongly about the need for financial discipline in the unions.

He said members' contributions should be respected and constitutionally spent. Each union has a provision for every fully paid member to have access to union books to avoid suspicions.

"I appeal to you to remain united, for only through unity can we achieve our goals," he said.

MINERS BENEFIT AS MP'S AMEND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION BILL

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Nov 80 p 1

[Text] BACKBENCHERS scored a major victory for miners yesterday when they forced amendments to Clause Five of the Local Government Administration Bill.

Miners would continue enjoying their present benefits.

Debate dragged on during committee stage of the Bill over Clause Nine which deals with elections in the new system and the post of chairman of a district council for which the governor has been proposed.

Before the House broke up for tea, the debate began with strong opposition from some MPs against allowing the clause to go through unamended. But after break some backbenchers spoke in favour of the clause.

The amendments to Clause Five were proposed by Mr Lava Mulimba (Petauke), Luwingu West Mr John Chalwe, Nkana MP Mr Augustine Nkumbula, Kawambwa MP Mr Titus Mukupa, and several others.

Opposing the amendments, Minister of State for Decentralisation Mr Fitzpatrick Chuula said it appeared that these were by-laws and regulations published from time to time by any local authority through statutory instruments and could not form part of the Bill.

"It would not be proper to insert in this piece of legislation. These are amendments which are subject of a declaration by a person administering the Act through a statutory instrument. The amendments are therefore rejected," he said.

Mr Mulimba said the amendments would retain provisions of the Mine Township Act which enables employers to provide services aimed at improving their employees' efficiency and output and thus contribute to the economy of the country.

"This is a subject for proper inclusion in this Bill because we would like to continue enjoying the harmony in the nation. Our economy is dependent on copper and if we do not do anything for the sake of showing our power then we are misleading ourselves," he said.

He was supported by Livingstone MP Mr Sebastian Kapulu, Sesheke MP Mr Yustus Mukelabai, and Mr Nathan Siafwa (Kalomo) who said they wanted to ensure that the legislation was enshrined in the law instead of leaving it out for consideration at the whims of a minister.

Prime Minister Lusaka said the House must follow the legal advice over the Bill.

"It is my conviction that even if these amendments are left out, the ideas will be taken care of. We have to maintain certain standards of legislation because once passed, this Bill will not be circulated in Zambia but abroad too."

He said the changes could be easily covered through subsidiary legislation, adding that the Government was not defending the Bill, and the clause in particular, for the sake of being mischievous.

Perpetually

He asked MPs how they could talk about the economy when they had perpetually been in the employment of the Government.

It was then that Deputy Speaker Mr Raphael Chota, asked the House to vote. Those in favour of the amendments won.

Appealing to the House to leave Clause Nine as it was Minister of Labour and Social Services Mr Joshua Lumina said there would be disorganisation in the country if members of UNIP did not respect the constitution.

Minister of Lands and Natural Resources Mr Clement Mwanamkhu said the clause was the Bill and once tampered with, there would be instability in the nation. "We all know the importance of elections in a democracy but this clause is the basis of stability," he added.

Mr Daniel Mashombwe (Choma), who supported the Bill said Parliament had closed its "eyes and ears" to support the Bill which created the post of Secretary of State for Defence and Security, and urged MPs to do the same now.

Other MPs said the changing of the constitution was the Party's responsibility and the Party could amend it when it felt necessary.

OATUU PROBES UNION RIFT

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] THE Organisation of African Trade Union Unity (OATUU) has called on leaders in the labour movement and those in the Party and its Government to exercise restraint for the sake of harmony.

The call was made in Lusaka yesterday by the organisation's secretary-general Mr James Dennis Akumu who came to Zambia for an on-the-spot check on the rift between the Party and its Government and the labour movement.

He said following reports on souring relations between the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions and the Government and the subsequent seizure of passports of leading trade unionists, he had decided to come and find out what was happening.

"But I am glad to say that now there is genuine intention by the two sides to forget the past and begin afresh," Mr Akumu said at a Press conference.

He said what might have contributed to the misunderstanding was the concern by either side about public utterances.

Mr Akumu said he was not in a position to speak about the security of Zambia, but his organisation could not believe that the ZCTU could have associated itself with people who wanted to destabilise the country.

"What can the ZCTU achieve by destabilising this nation?" he asked. He said by tradition his organisation and labour movements throughout the world were against non-elective governments.

"We cannot have anybody waking up one morning to declare he is a leader", he said.

Anybody who tried to destabilise the Government was an enemy of Africa because Zambia was the "Frontline of Frontline states" which waged a protracted war against oppression in Southern Africa.

The OATUU did not think Zambian authorities were bent on suppressing trade unionism.

He urged the ZCTU to continue being a loyal pressure group to fight the emergence of corruption, nepotism and other social evils common in developing countries.

MUZ SEEKS UNITY, DEBATES SACKINGS

Divisive Forces Scored

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 28 Nov 80 p 7

[Text] THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia chairman, Mr David Mwila, has called on all members to remain united in view of the sour relations between the union and the Party and its Government.

In a statement released in Kitwe, yesterday Mr Mwila said the forces of "divide-and-rule" were at work to try and sow seeds of hate among members.

Mr Mwila wondered who the patriots were if the efforts MUZ had made to ensure peace and discipline among its members were not appreciated as being patriotic.

Union leaders were now living in fear since even the news media was completely controlled by those in the corridors of power, he claimed.

"We have been called names but the people of Zambia know who is telling the truth. It is very unfortunate that in this country this is the price organisations, their leaders and individuals have to pay for patriotism," the MUZ chief said.

Meanwhile, Mutondo branch of MUZ at the centralised services division of NCCM has called for the amendment of section 72 of the Industrial Relations Act to make works councils more effective.

Branch secretary, Mr Charles Nkowani, said yesterday in its present form the section was allegedly powerless on matters relating to management decisions as it only covered certain fields and was not absolute.

Council Meets in Kitwe

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 29 Nov 80 p 5

[Text] THE Mineworkers Union of Zambia supreme council met the whole morning in Kitwe yesterday to discuss the UNIP National Council resolution which ordered it to re-instate 16 shop stewards sacked for taking part in the recent Party elections.

The meeting was chaired by MUZ chairman, Mr David Mwila. It was to report its decision to the Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee, Mr Shadreck Soko.

MUZ is opposed to the introduction of the decentralised local government system. At its bi-annual conference in Livingstone recently it resolved to sack any union official who contesfed the Party elections in preparation of the new system.

Last week the MUZ executive was summoned by Mr Soko to discuss the strained relations between the Party and the union over the sacking of the shop stewards.

The shop stewards were fired at Chingola, Chililabombwe and Roksna in Kitwe.

Talks Deadlocked

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Dec 80 p 5

[Text] A SECOND meeting between Copperbelt Member of the Central Committee, Mr Shadreck Soko, and a delegation of the Mineworkers Union of Zambia executive officials yesterday failed to reach a decision on whether to reinstate the 16 sacked shop stewards.

Mr Soko said after the meeting he would have to report to President Kaunda on the deliberations of the meetings he had convened with MUZ so far while union chairman, Mr David Mwila, said he would call an emergency meeting of his supreme council.

"I am very hopeful and confident that an amicable solution will be found because I have been assured there are no ill feelings between MUZ and the Party or the stewards," Mr Soko said.

He added that MUZ could not say yes or no to the Party demand and the issue was being considered on merit.

Briefing reporters in the presence of the MUZ delegation in the conference hall at the end of the two-and-a half-hour meeting, Mr Soko said: "The question of confrontation is completely out. The delay in reaching a solution should not bring any apprehensions, but I will report to the President."

The recent UNIP National Council meeting in Lusaka resolved that MUZ should immediately re-instate the sacked officials and, ten days ago, Mr Soko summoned the union executive officials, led by the deputy chairman, Mr Timothy Walamba, for a special meeting with him.

At that meeting, the MUZ leaders asked for time to meet and later a meeting of the supreme council of the union ended in deadlock on the Party's demand to have the stewards re-instated.

At yesterday's meeting, the MUZ delegation asked for more time to call up another meeting of the supreme council to consider new facts brought in by the Party.

Mr Soko said he was happy with the way the executive officials put forward their case at the meeting and it was only fair that they should be given time to deliberate among themselves in their supreme council.

There were a number of features which had come up and these had not been known to the MUZ supreme council when it last met, but Mr Soko emphasised there were no areas of disagreement in the discussions.

'LIMA PROGRAM' MOTIVATION FOUND LACKING

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Dec 80 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] THE rains are now with us in earnest. In the face of a world food crisis, this should be a most welcome booster to our "lima" programme. It is a time when farmers are very busy.

We are told that Zambia is capable of feeding 150 million people. The guidelines for doing just that are through the "lima" and "operation food production" programmes.

Given the proper motivation and incentive, the people of Zambia will respond with massive enthusiasm to these programmes.

The measures announced by the Government yesterday to ensure that agricultural inputs are available to farmers and that facilities for grain storage are going to be increased are the incentives that should spur Zambians to greater efforts in food production.

Be that as it may, but are we going about motivating the people for "lima" in the right way?

It is easy to make people deaf by just repeatedly telling them to do something without telling them how. Zambia's dilemma seems to be how to translate policy into immediate action.

Take the "lima" programme for example. Its need is too obvious for anyone to deny. But it is flogging a dead horse to urge people in Ndola's Chipulukusu or Lusaka's Mtendere to "lima".

That is missing the target. Much as they would like to do so, they just do not have the land on which to "lima". The target people who need to be cajoled, persuaded and encouraged to "lima" are the numerous smallholders dotted all over Lusaka and the Copperbelt.

But again there is one hitch here. That is that most of the smallholders are defined as leaders in one way or another, and as such, are inhibited by the requirements of the Leadership Code.

They dare not be seen to amass wealth through "lima's" lest they contravene the provisions of the Leadership Code.

So we suggest that in order for the numerous smallholders who are leaders to fully participate in "lima", they should be exempted from the Leadership Code.

We further suggest that the curfew should be lifted now. It may not be realised that it is inhibiting the success of "lima" at this point in time.

Farmers in the affected areas are expected to be up early and be in their fields well before 05.00 hours. Dawn these days is very clear and farmers like to put in a lot of work then.

Besides the curfew reduces their working day. They have to get out of the fields well before 16.00 hours to beat the curfew.

The man hours thus lost are in fact retarding the "lima" programme. If the curfew has not served its purpose yet, at least it should be lifted to allow farmers in the affected areas to go on with "lima".

EEC TEAM HAILS FOOD DRIVE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Dec 80 p 2

[Text] THE European Economic Community Development Fund committee which left the country yesterday has praised Zambia for her interest in developing agriculture.

The team which was in the country for five days held talks with President Kaunda and senior Government officials.

Speaking at a brief Press conference before departure, the spokesman of the committee said they had agreed with what Dr Kaunda said in singling out agriculture as a top priority.

He explained that the team came to Zambia basically to have an on-the-spot check on economic problems so that the EEC could provide proper advice to the Government.

The committee which has already been to Tanzania, visited a number of development projects in the country.

These included Mpongwe wheat project the open pit mine at Chingola, Chambeshi cobalt plant, site and service scheme in Mazabuka, Batoka dairy scheme, Palabana dairy and Chongwe storage facilities.

Yesterday morning the team held discussions with Minister of Commerce and Industry Mr Remmy Chisupa and permanent secretary of the National commission for development planning Dr Leonard Chivuno.

The team noted that Zambia had vast potential for achieving self-sufficiency in food requirements and realise a surplus for export.

Earlier Dr Kaunda told the team at a luncheon he organised for them at State House that plans were under way to revolutionalise the country's irrigation system.

He said that the Government was studying the possibility of making use of the country's unlimited water potential to improve agriculture.

Meanwhile Zana reports: The Zambian economy has shown a modest improvement during the first quarter of this year, a Bank of Zambia quarterly Financial and Statistical Review has said.

According to the report, the first quarter was characterised by satisfactory outturn in the country's balance of payments and the Government budget and a further reduction in the level of payments deficit.

This improvement, the report added was accounted for by high foreign exchange inflows from exports and increased revenue receipts.

MARKETING OFFICIAL ON FAILURE OF CO-OPS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Dec 80 p 5

[Text] LACK of effective information and organisation has led to the failure of the cooperative movement in Zambia, director of Marketing and Cooperatives Mr Edmol Mughandila, has said.

Addressing a cooperative seminar at the President's Citizenship College near Kabwe on "public relations and propaganda" on Tuesday, Mr Mughandila blamed the crisis of expectation among those charged with running cooperatives for their failure.

"Cooperative members thought of getting rich quickly without looking at the process in which wealth came about. Lack of preparation was another factor," he said.

Mr Mughandila noted that a number of cooperative members had resorted to self-service and cared little about consolidating their organisation.

He urged seminar participants to be courageous and rededicate themselves to the reorganisation of the ailing cooperative movement in the country.

The mass media should play a leading role in improving the image of the cooperative movement by visiting successful societies and exposing those doing badly.

Downfall

"If your propaganda and promotion is not well done, just call it off because the absence of this has led to the downfall of the cooperative movement in Zambia," he said.

Mr Mughandila said the setting up of stronger and productive cooperatives depended on good preparation and the pre-education of members.

"It also means less drink and more reading. There are no shortcuts," he added.

He disclosed that from 1964 to 1969, there were 1,121 cooperative societies and this contributed "greatly towards the bad name of the cooperative movement in Zambia."

The number had been reduced to 821 by last year which had been absorbed into 50 rural reconstruction centres.

"We have as yet to assess the success or failures of these new types of cooperative societies as our field officers are continuing to educate the settlers at these centres," he said.

To have well trained, educated and prepared cooperators in his department, Mr Mughandila said there should be reasonable conditions of service with remunerations similar to those in parastatal organisations and the private sector.

AFC LOANS TO FARMERS INCREASED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Dec 80 pp 1, 5

[Excerpt] THE Agricultural Finance Company has increased farmers' loans from K40 million in the 1979/80 season to K50 million for the 1980/81 season.

And the Cattle Financing Company has increased the allocation for cattle rearing loans from K500,000 in the 1979/80 season to K1 million for the next season.

Prime Minister Lisulo announced this in Parliament yesterday when he answered a question from Liuwa MP Mr Namushi Namuchana.

Mr Namuchana wanted to know what measures the Party and its Government had taken to induce people to go back to the land and how many leaders had answered the call.

The Prime Minister said the Party and its Government was doing all it could to give as many incentives to farmers because of the importance of agriculture.

He said the increase in the amount of money for agricultural loans and the incentives to farmers in form of reduced prices for inputs and increased producer prices were testimony of the desire to improve agricultural production in Zambia.

He said cattle farming had been extended to areas where cattle rearing was unheard of.

Efforts were being made to improve facilities such as dips in areas with cattle rearing potential.

He said financial institutions such as the Development Bank of Zambia and the Zambia State Insurance Corporation as well as private banks were being encouraged to provide lending facilities to farmers and that the response was favourable.

TRUCKERS' RATES HIKED--The Government has increased haulage rates for contractors transporting agricultural produce by more than 30 per cent. The increase affects transporters having contracts with Namboard and the Lint Company. Truckers Association of Zambia secretary, Mr Jack Stuart, said this in Kitwe yesterday after a meeting of the association and described the rise as "significant." Mr Stuart said the increase was in the light of the Government's realisation of the high costs truckers had to meet in maintaining their fleets. He said: "The Government has increased the rates by 30 per cent. This, we think, is because it realises the high costs of consumer goods such as fuel which has gone up tremendously in the past four or so years." If the truckers had to continue running their fleets and be fully involved in the agricultural programmes, the rates should be reviewed once in a while, he said. "We regard the increase as one of the most significant ever. This will give encouragement to truckers as they will be able to maintain their fleets regardless of the increases in fuels and other requirements," Mr Stuart said. The association wanted to organise truckers so that there was uniformity on rates which now differed from one contractor to another. [Text] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 1 Dec 80 p 1]

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED FOLLOWING LUSOPHONE MEETING IN LUANDA

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] A meeting of the heads of state of Angola, Cape Verde, Mozambique and Sao Tome and Principe took place in Luanda, capital of the People's Republic of Angola on 2 December 1980.

Those present at the meeting included:

His Excellency Jose Eduardo dos Santos, president of the MPLA-Labor Party and president of the People's Republic of Angola, His Excellency Aristides Pereira, secretary general of the PAIGC and president of the Republic of Cape Verde, His Excellency Marshal Samora Moises Machel, president of the FRELIMO Party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, His Excellency Manuel Pinto da Costa, president of the MLSTP and president of the Republic of Sao Tome and Principe, who headed important party and government delegations.

The summit discussed issues of common interest and expressed the need to preserve the ties of solidarity, unity and cohesion forged during the struggle against colonialism and imperialism and in the building of a new society. The participants specifically analyzed the coup d'etat in Guinea-Bissau and its implications on the relations between our five countries.

The summit noted that the coup d'etat endangers the survival of the PAIGC as a supranational party and the implementation of the project of unification between Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde; it also drives a blow to the prestige of the liberation struggles of our peoples.

According to the universally recognized principles bearing on relations between states, the summit reaffirmed the principle of non-interference in the domestic affairs of Guinea-Bissau.

On the basis of the principles which always oriented the activities of our parties and of the sense of brotherhood uniting the peoples of the five countries in the struggle against Portuguese colonialism, the summit decided to send a delegation to Guinea-Bissau.

The summit expressed its conviction that the physical safety of PAIGC assistant secretary general comrade Luis Cabral and respect for his militant past, as well as the safety of other leaders and militants now under detention, will be taken into account and lead to their rapid release.

The summit took place in an atmosphere of friendship and cordiality and agreement was reached on every subject.

At the end of the meeting, PAIGC secretary general Aristides Pereira and the presidents of the FRELIMO and MLSTP parties expressed to the president of the MPLA-Labor Party and president of the People's Republic of Angola their appreciation for the warm and brotherly welcome afforded them during their stay in the Angolan capital.

PRESIDENTS MEET IN BUJUMBURA--Bujumbura, 7 Dec (AFP)--According to the Burundi Press Agency President Jean-Baptiste Bagaza of Burundi said on Saturday that the Economic Community of the Countries of the Great Lakes (CEPGL) is gradually asserting itself as a homogenous and viable regional organization. The president said this on the occasion of a banquet he gave in honor of the president of Zaire, Mobutu Sese Seko, and the president of Rwanda, Juvenal Habyarimana, after the solemn opening of the heads of state summit of the CEPGL. President Mobutu said that the member countries of the CEPGL could rightly rejoice at the progress that has been made these past 4 years within the framework of regional economy. He expressed the hope that the CEPGL will progressively intensify its relations with other regional bodies on the African continent in order to create bigger markets capable of stimulating true regional integration. The Zairian head of state drew the attention of his counterparts to the Chadian drama: We must do all in our power to join in the efforts of others to promote peace in the hearts and minds of Chadians and eliminate [words indistinct], violence and vengeance. On the refugee conference due to be held in Geneva in 1981, President Mobutu said he expected the international community to give more support and aid to meet the problem. HOME TRADE MINISTER DENOUNCES RUMORMONGER

AB051326 Paris AFP in French 0859 GMT 5 Dec 80

[text] Luanda, 5 Dec (AFP)--Over the last few days, the Angolan Government often denied rumors (boatos) to the effect that there are risks of prolonged shortages of food items but it admitted that the country is now facing real supply difficulties.

The minister of home trade, Mr Alberto van Dunen, last week denounced counterrevolutionaries who are claiming that there is a threat of famine. The commission in charge of preparing the first extraordinary congress of the MPLA Workers Party (scheduled to take place from 17 to 23 December) also accused the authorities of certain production, commercial and distribution organizations of refusing to sell to the public under the pretext that their products are being reserved for the congress.

Mr van Dunen was of the opinion that the counterrevolutionaries want to create a climate of tension and instability in the country, under the heading "Combate Aos Boatos." The JORNAL DE ANGOLA recently affirmed that rumors are not a new phenomenon in Angola and that they are spread whenever the country is going through important moments such as the death of President Agostinho Neto of the trial of members of UNITA (National Union for the Total Independence of Angola). According to the newspaper, the rumors are usually spread by puppets in the service of imperialism or reactionary foreign organizations. In the present case, however, it is the local reactionaries who are being accused.

The editor of the Portuguese communist newspaper O DIARIO, Mr Miguel Urbano Rodrigues, recently recalled in a conference in Luanda the danger which these rumors represent. He cited the case of Chile where, he said, the coup d'etat against President Salvador Allende had been considerably facilitated by rumors spread by certain local newspapers which thus provoked a hunger scare. The Angolan authorities however admit that the rumormongers, the boateiros, are taking advantage of the real food difficulties being experienced by the country. Drawing up the balance sheet of 5 years of independence on 11 November this year, President Jose Eduardo dos Santos himself expressed the view that hunger constitutes Angola's second preoccupation after war. He added that food production has remained low, that importation is not adequately planned and that the distribution network and sale are inadequate in many cases. The Angolan authorities admit that certain products like sugar, rice and fish sometimes disappear from the market. These phenomena are the cause of the queues which are sometimes formed in front of the people's shops which serve labor card holders only--in accordance with the principle that those who do not work should not eat--and holders of supply cards which enable one to buy a limited quantity of products.

In a communique published on Wednesday, the minister of agriculture admitted that there are now difficulties in the supply of meat. He attributed them to reduction in production since independence, increased consumption and the South African attacks on the livestock rich regions of southern Angola. He recalled that Angola must now import meat with the following consequences: delays by the suppliers and transporters and lack of refrigerators to stock the meat. However, the minister of home trade expressed his conviction that these difficulties--which he attributed more to deficiencies in the importation and distribution systems than to real shortages--will pass away. According to Mr van Dunen, the best way to counter the rumors of the counterrevolutionaries is to flood the market with products, to send food supplies to all the provinces and to bring to them even that Portuguese wine which, the boateiros affirm, is reserved for the people of Luanda.

THREE UNITA MEMBERS RECEIVE DEATH SENTENCES

AB090723 Paris AFP in French 1721 GMT 8 Dec 80

[Text] Luanda, 8 Dec (AFP)--The death sentence passed on three members of the UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] raised to 32 the total number of members of Dr Jonas Savimbi's rebel movement who have been sentenced to death since the beginning of the year in Angola.

The people's revolutionary tribunal held its sessions last July in Luanda; in August in Huambo (center of the country), on 4 December in Kuito (center of the country), and lastly on Monday in Lobito (on the Atlantic Coast) and tried a total of 63 counterrevolutionaries.

In addition to cases of death sentences, the tribunal has handed down prison terms to 17 persons ranging from 2 to 24 years and made 13 acquittals since the beginning of the year. It decided to drop the case of a 16-year-old minor and to refer it to a special court. The court of appeal which was founded this year, confirmed all the death sentences and reduced some prison terms.

Last August, it was learned that about 130 rebels from six different networks of the UNITA had been arrested by the end of 1979 or early 1980.

Most of those who have already been tried were accused of being involved, since 1977, in acts of sabotage and bomb attempts on economic facilities including dams, factories, airports or other heavily populated areas (markets, trains, hotels).

The JORNAL DE ANGOLA recently reported that those rebels who have been receiving political and material support from South Africa enjoyed their right to defense as well as public hearings in conformity with universal judicial principles.

PAPER HAILS EANES VICTORY IN PORTUGAL'S ELECTION

AB101455 Paris AFP in French 1040 GMT 10 Dec 80

[Text] Luanda, 9 Dec (AFP)--In a front page editorial published on Tuesday the JORNAL DE ANGOLA rejoiced over Gen Ramalho Eanes' victory in last Sunday's presidential election in Portugal. The newspaper was pleased that the Portuguese electorate has once again barred the way to fascism represented, according to it, by the candidate of the Democratic Alliance, Gen Soares Carneiro.

The paper recalled the role which General Carneiro played in the past in Angola and stated that the election of one of the most faithful and enthusiastic servants of colonialism would not have been favorable to the development of the relations between both countries. On the other hand, the paper recalled the meeting between Gen Ramalho Eanes and former Angolan president Agostinho Neto in Bissau in June 1978 which enabled the normalization of relations between the two countries.

The Angolan daily added, however, that the spirit of understanding which should have resulted from this has not yet been achieved. In this connection, the paper criticized those who, in Portugal, have been dreaming of a return to the past and adopting positions and measures which constitute a violation of Angola's dignity and independence. For example, the paper mentioned the support which, it said, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola has received from some responsible political forces in Portugal.

MINISTRY EMBARKS ON PILOT LABOR-INTENSIVE PROJECTS

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 27 Nov 80 p 1

[Article by Kwapeng Modikwe]

[Text]

The Ministry of Local Government and Lands has embarked on a pilot project in the Central District to experiment with labour-intensive methods and the use of proper implements for the maintenance of ungazetted roads. It is also the intension of that Ministry to build within district councils, an organisational structure capable of implementing labour based road construction and maintenance techniques.

This was said by the Vice President and Minister of Local Government and Lands Mr Lenyeletse Seretse in Parliament on Tuesday. He was responding to a question from the Member of Parliament for Bobirwa Mr W.G. Moswsu. The MP had asked whether the Minister would not by 1981 find it of vital importance to purchase road graders for the district councils, to enable them to be practically responsible for the maintenance of ungazetted roads.

The Vice President said the average price of a small grader is P63,000. This, he further explained, included depreciation, fuel costs, maintenance and administrative overheads. He also stated that the total operating costs for a grader are according to the Central Transport Organisation P26 per hour. Mr Seretse said, to engage such a grader for 1,500 hours per annum, which is reasonable, would cost P35.000 per year for only one grader.

Furthermore the Minister said, heavy plant mechanics are not available in the country, and spare parts are in short supply also. Because of this shortage he revealed, both Government and private sectors have to rely almost exclusively on expatriate mechanics for their heavy plant.

He further said for the reasons already given it was not therefore advisable to purchase road graders for the district councils because no council workshop is equipped for the maintanence or repairs of heavy plant. On the other hand he said to avoid discouraging district councils too much, they could be allowed to buy tractors with light grading attachments.

Mr Seretse also told Parliament that the upgrading or promotion of the tribal administration staff was the responsibility of their respective staff committees. This time he was answering a question from Mr G.S. Mosinyi MP for Shoshong. He said before such upgrading and promotions could be effected, such committees must ask for the creation of higher posts and for financial provision to be made at the time of preparing estimates for the next financial year. He also disclosed that the Ministry was processing recommendations from tribal administration staff committees for the upgrading of their staff. Mr Seretse also admitted that in some areas of the country a number of customary court clerks stagnated on TGA.5 for some time.

Also this week Parliament heard that there are no plans to shift the location for the Gemsbok Domestication Scheme from Nwatle to Lephephe as had been asked by the Member of Parliament for Mochudi Mr G.W.S. Ruele.

However Mr M.P.K. Nwako, the Minister of Commerce and Industry said the possibility of locating that scheme at Lephephe had been considered by his Ministry but it was found that the origional location was a better one.

MINING NOW BACKBONE OF NATION'S ECONOMY

Gaborone DAILY NEWS in English 18 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

While agriculture still affects the largest numbers of Botswana directly, mining now provides the largest source of Botswana's export earnings and Government revenue.

This was stated by the President Dr Q.K.J Masire when he addressed Parliament yesterday during the opening of the First Meeting of the Second Session of the Fourth Parliament.

He said it had been the strategy of the ruling Botswana Democratic Party (BDP) since independence to pre-invest the earnings from mining projects to diversify the economy and spread the benefits of development throughout Botswana.

"Diamonds are the most important single sources of export earning and provide over one third of Government revenue, and will become even more important when the Jwaneng Mine is opened in 1982," said Dr Masire.

The P230 million being invested at Jwaneng is bringing substantial benefits already, in the form of construction employment and local purchases by DEBSWANA and its contractors and Customs revenue.

The new diamond sorting building now under construction in Gaborone he said, will provide facilities for the sorting and valuing of our diamonds effectively, said President Masire.

Furthermore, a diamond cutting plant is being established in Gaborone to further spread the local benefit from this national resources. Exploration for more diamonds is continuing, MPs were told.

"I may this year, a second financial restructuring was completed for the BCL copper-nickel project at Selibe-Phikwe. While the mine is now very sound technically, the company continues to have major financial problems due to earlier technical difficulties, the burden of large amounts of debt financing, and the continued weakness of metal markets, "Dr Masire told Parliament.

Dr Masire said it is a credit to the mine management and its labour force that the BCL mine has performed so well under such adverse circumstances.

He said BCL remains the largest single employer in Botswana other than the Government, and is an important national project.

President Masire added that just as the Government was attempting to diversify the economy outside of mining, so, too, are "we trying to diversify our mineral production.

He disclosed that Botswana has major coal resources, and we are confident that current prospecting activities will soon result in proposals from the private sector for significient coal-mining production for export.

In addition, exploration continues for a variety of other minerals, carried out by several large private firms, bilateral aid teams, and our own department of Geological Survey."

Turning to Commerce and Industry, President Masire said Government efforts towards the promotion of commerce and industry are taking place over many fronts.

CUBAN FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION'S VISIT ENDS

Conakry HORUYA HEBDO in French 9-15 Nov 80 pp 43-44

[Interview with Roberto Garrido, head of the Cuban delegation in Conakry, date not given, by Alhassane Tangue Bah]

[Excerpts] A delegation from the Cuban Communist Party led by Roberto Garrido, chief of the African section of the department of foreign relations of the Central Committee and comprising Jorge Gomez, high official from the directorate of revolutionary orientation of the Central Committee of the Cuban Communist Party visited our country from 28 October to 3 November 1980.

This visit, a genuine expression of the excellent relations of friendship and cooperation existing between the Guinean and Cuban peoples, their parties, governments and leaders President Sekou Toure and Commandant Fidel Castro for 20 years, offered the opportunity for the Cuban delegation to get in touch with mass organizations and visit a number of projects in the economic field. Before leaving our country on Monday 3 November, the head of the delegation, Roberto Garrido, was interviewed by our reporter Alhassane Tangue Bah.

[Question] What was the aim of your visit to the People's Revolutionary Republic of Guinea?

[Answer] The principal objective of our visit is to broaden the relations of friendship and cooperation between our two countries, the 20th anniversary of which was recently celebrated.

These good relations have been reinforced during the course of the years. It should also be stressed that whenever conditions have required it, we have exchanged delegations at the party, government, and mass organization level. This has contributed toward reinforcing the ties of militant solidarity between our two nations.

[Question] How do you view future relations between Guinea and Cuba?

[Answer] We have taken advantage of the fruitful discussions with Comrade Damantang Camara, permanent secretary of the BPN [National Political Bureau] and president of the People's National Assembly to inform him of the importance accorded by the Cuban Communist Party to the presence of a Guinean delegation to its second congress which will soon take place. This congress will be a vital event in the life of our people, and the participation of the party-state of Guinea is awaited in Cuba with great interest.

[Question] Do you have a message for the people of Guinea and its leaders, President Ahmed Sekou Toure?

[Answer] During our talks with the permanent secretary of the BPN, we asked him to give, in the name of our people and our party a message of brotherly greetings to the people of Guinea, its party-state and its beloved leader President Ahmed Sekou Toure. Once again, we renew this brotherly greeting, to which we would like to add our sincere appreciation for the hospitality extended to our delegation.

FRENCH NEWSMAN CONSIDERS COUNTRY'S THEORY, REALITY

Paris LE MONDE in French 2, 3, 4 Dec 80

[2 December 1980, pp 1, 6]

[Article by Jean-Pierre Langellier: "Mozambique: Words and Deeds"]

[Excerpts] Of Slogans and Common Sense

Maputo--The faces of 14 newsmen decorate the entrance hall of the Ministry of Information. These photos, the sign says, bring to the people's attention the "elements involved with the fascist-colonial organizations." Publicly shown for 2 years, these faces disappeared during the month of November.

This Mao-style denunciation is akin to exorcism. Following independence in June 1975, aides of the colonial regime were legion within the administration. There were no summary trials nor bloody reprisals. The hemorrhage of Portuguese cadres was such that the revolution needed everyone's contribution. In the case of the less guilty ones, the regime used more subtle methods. They admitted their sins during public confessions. Humiliation and contrition were their punishment. However, there were others who paid a heavier price. "No man will discover his errors because he was kept within four walls," Samora Machel repeats. To punish, yes, but on condition of improving as well. The revolution must assume its educational vocation without faintheartedness. Thence the existence of "reeducation centers." Foreign newsmen have been able to visit one of them, near Chicomo. These are isolated camps without barbed wire or observation towers, and practically without guards: located in the middle of the jungle, any escape attempt would be doomed to failure.

Those undergoing the process of "reeducation" are estimated to number, in the absence of any official data, approximately 10,000 in about 10 centers. This figure does not include Jehovah's Witnesses--eternal enemies of any state--persecuted by the present government as they used to be under the former regime. Those who did not abjure their faith are apparently still under detention.

Detainees acknowledge that they are well fed and decently treated. Their sufferings are mostly psychological and moral. Visiting one of the centers in November 1979, Machel had promised that detainees could meet their families. Several months later, the press reported such meetings and the presidential decision was hailed as a clemency measure. Therefore, one must conclude that in general, families ignore the whereabouts of the detainees for a long time. An added torment is the fact that the latter themselves are not informed of the duration of their "reeducation" period, for the simple reason that they have not been formally sentenced. Camp authorities will not release them until such time as they exhibit indubitable signs of good political health to the officials' satisfaction.

Undoubtedly, most of the detainees are petty criminals who only stay in the centers for a short period of time. However, they, too, run the risk of being "forgotten" by the authorities. Additionally, internment in the camps is the result of an uncertain procedure. A simple denunciation by a base group of the FRELIMO seems to be sufficient motive. Such methods invite arbitrary procedures and even common settlements of accounts. One thing is certain: the prospect of a stay in a "re-education" center particularly frightens the man in the street.

Nevertheless, it is in his name that Mozambican justice is acting. Former colonial courts have been replaced by the "people's tribunals" where professional magistrates sit together with judges elected by the party. In the hiararchical order, the former play an increasingly important part. The latter are laymen, and often illiterate.

Defense lawyers belong to the past. FRELIMO believes that the suppression of the defense system is a "revolutionary victory." However, most observers believe that in practice if not in theory, human rights are less disregarded in Mozambique than in many other African countries. This may well be, but is it possible to stint on some universal principles?

The Power of the Church Is Broken

On a Sunday morning in Maputo, in the white cathedral across the street from the City Hall adorned with a giant poster of Samora Machel, the solitary voice of the priest booms in an almost empty sanctuary. No more than about a hundred faithful--half of them black--are present for the mass. The formerly omnipotent Catholic Church is the main loser of the revolution. Before independence, Mozambique numbered more than 2 million Christians. In 1980, only a few thousand dare practice their religion. The province of Cabo Delgado--one of the most Christianized--one cathedral and one chapel remain open. In most of the smaller cities, churches are closed and abandoned.

Unambiguously, FRELIMO has broken this rival power, too strong to be tolerated, too compromised to be forgiven. In the eyes of the regime, the church does not constitute an important worry and is no longer the target of diatribes. It has lost its temporal function, preserving only its religious mission, which is itself moribund.

In orthodox Marxist fashion, the party is in command, both in government and in the army. Its leading role is periodically reaffirmed. The strongly centralized supreme power belongs to a narrow circle.

No Power Outside the Party

The activities of the state and those of the party are more and more clearly demarcated. In this context, two FRELIMO veterans, Marcelino dos Santos and Jorge Rebelo, left the government last April to devote themselves exclusively to the party. The leading nucleus presents an aspect of unblemished unity. Discussions--often heated, it is said--do not surface in the open. Outside the party, protests are naturally not tolerated. Governing circles do not trust popular spontaneity. At the base, 300,000 Mozambicans participate in the "vigilante" groups. They are the antennae through which the political police takes the pulse of the country.

A year ago, Machel declared war against the "extreme left," a source of confusion. He exalted certain revolutionary virtues: the sense of discipline, a good appearance, respect for officials. Not everyone, he decreed, could be called "comrade" indiscriminately. In factories, workers' control, no matter how legitimate, should not encroach on the directors' power of decision. It is not advisable, Machel continued, that an official "should stand in line for bread or meat" (he meant: like everybody else): a not necessarily popular speech. In contract to all other "Marxist-Leninist" parties, will FRELIMO be able to guard against turning into a privileged caste, a hindrance to and negation of socialism? For Aquino de Braganca, a Mozambican university don, such a risk does not exist, because FRELIMO possesses antidotes: "It practices self-criticism and preaches permanent controversy within the state." The regime's formalism encourages sometimes singular ceremonies: in September, Machel awarded ranks and medals to a group of about 20 leaders, some of whom were recently promoted to superior rank and did not boast--no offense meant--of a long military career.

That day, the army of the FRELIMO became a regular force. Machel received the rank and the staff marshal. On a continent that has known the likes of Bokassa and Amin Dada, was this a fitting initiative? In a resolution, the Central Committee honored Machel as "a statesman, strategist, victorious commandant, magnanimous revolutionary of exemplary political and moral behavior." School children sing the praises of "Papa Samora." The personality cult is not too far away.

Beyond the Slogans

To avoid the pitfalls of bureaucracy, the regime has a number of trump cards. Its cadres are often very young and always enthusiastic. Beyond the slogans and the illusory formulas--the "dictatorship of the proletariat," in this largely peasant society, constitutes the best example--the leaders show proof of pragmatism. They admit their errors and proclaim their readiness to correct them. They seem aware of regional disparities and the distortions introduced by history, colonization and the armed struggle. A Mozambican intellectual predicts that "we shall need many decades to build the Mozambican nation." But which other African country inherited at independence a population 90 percent illiterate? This was barely 5 years ago.

Mozambique has exorcised many a demon. Racism? It is almost imperceptible. One minister in three is white--as are most of the higher officials--but no one seems to take offense at this. Undoubtedly, contradictions abound in the regime. Women's rights are exalted, but the 10 members of the permanent political committee are all men. Every Sunday morning, workers attend a course of political education. In the evening, they go to the movies to see Catherine Deneuve or "Apocalypse Now." In Tete, a small provincial town, we relived, with Jacques Tati, the laughter of "Les Vacances de M. Hulot."

[Excerpts] Maputo--The young Mozambican Revolution--as so many others before it--has the appetite of an ogre. To consolidate its foundations, while at the same time preserving its "purity," it must constantly defeat a Satan, be it only in symbolic fashion. Through the periodic fustigation of the "internal enemy," the government identifies in, and attributes to this anonymous and collective being the weaknesses and failures of the revolution. This is as good a method as any to clear away the dross secreted by "socialism on the march." No relaxation of tensions is admitted, because the "internal enemy" has penetrated everything. It is true that the enemies of the revolution do not only haunt the president's harangues or the hallways of the ministries. They are truly present in the jungle, a few kilometers from Maputo.

Armed Rebellion

Anglo-Portuguese colonial disputes left Mozambique with a tortuous profile. South of the Zambeze, the country narrows: only a 2-hour ride from the port of Beira to the border of Zimbabwe. Militarily, there is no doubt: this is the territory's weak link. The rebels of the National Resistance of Mozambique (RNM) thus have chosen it as the field of confrontation. A particularly vulnerable choice target is offered them: the Beira-Maputo road, the country's vital artery and the only road link between the south and the center. To the east, immense forests dotted with swamps end up at the food of the border mountains. Would it be possible to find a terrain better suited to guerrilla warfare?

Despite the absenceof military communiques, the situation can be evaluated rather precisely. A first certainty: over a 300-km span, between the Save River and Chimoio, the road can only be traveled under the protection of the army. "It took us a day and a half," recounts a witness, "to travel this dangerous portion of the road. According to an officer who was excorting us, the rebels unleash, on the average, one attack a day against the road."

In recent months, many foreign companies have lost a number of trucks. The warning has been heeded. Trucks belonging to the Portuguese company which manages the Cahora Bassa dam now make a long detour via the Transvaal and Salisbury. A diplomat sums it up: "The Maputo-Beira road is morally cut off."

The RNM claims it was formed in November 1976 at a meeting of former FRELIMO commanders hostile to the victorious Marxist line. To buttress its credibility, the RNM carefully tended its nationalist legitimacy. It did not hesitate to cull it from the best sources by claiming itself the political heir of Eduardo Mondlane, the founder of the FRELIMO who was murdered in 1969.

Pretoria's Support

Some of the RNM founders are genuine refugees from the FRELIMO: Andre Matade, Andre Matsagai--killed during a skirmish--Afonso Jacomo, its present leader. But the movement has mostly included in its ranks the former allies of the colonial regime:

agents of the PIDE--the Portuguese political police--mercenaries reconverted into instructors, fugitives from various "anti-terrorist" organizations (commandos, special groups, etc.). The RNM owes its survival mainly to the support provided by South Africa, white Rhodesia and certain Portuguese business circles. Near Umtali, in the eastern part of Rhodesia, there was a lot of Portuguese spoken in small bars no more than a year ago. In Salisbury, the RNM maintained a post office box, transferred today to Caseais, a fashionable suburb of Lisbon. Its radio station, the Voice of Free Africa, used to broadcast from Rhodesia. It is now located in South Africa. Following the independence of Zimbabwe, the RNM accused "Smith's agents" of having "betrayed" it by stinting on their military support. This was a reproach under the guise of an acknowledgment....

Robert Mugabe's electoral victory naturally modified the balance of power. The rebels lost their "sanctuaries" beyond the border. These misfortunes have seemingly compelled the RNM to rethink its strategy. The insurgents have restricted their field of operation and are now limiting their attacks to targets that are economically important as well as difficult to protect, such as the railroad or the Maputo-Beira road.

No Risk of Destabilization

How many are there? According to the most modest estimates, at least one thousand. As months go by, their methods have become more brutal. The December 1978 massacre of bus passengers had remained an isolated case. Drivers of destroyed trucks mostly escaped with their lives. Today, the rebels are wounding, maiming, killing civilians. What separates subversion from highway robbery? RNM fighters do not lack for funds. Thanks to the millions of escudos taken away by the colonizers at the time of independence, they had a genuine war chest.

The conversion of the currency, on the drawing boards for a long time under the utmost secrecy, took place in June and was notably aimed at ruining the rebels. The exercise turned out to be partly useless. To the authorities' despair, the escudo remains valid currency in many jungle villages where the peasants were unable to exchange their money within the prescribed period of time. Most importantly, the rebels succeeded in intercepting a truck loaded with brand-new bills: enough pocket money for a number of years. They don't seem to be starving and demonstrate this by destroying an entire load of dried fish or by letting rot a herd of goats they had just killed.

The army claimed two important victories: the first in November 1979 in the Gorongosa National Park and last June in Sitatonga.

Despites its rebuffs, the RNM continues its attacks on the Beira-Maputo road. A train was attacked at the beginning of October. The railroad was useless for a 2-week period. The province of Manica has become the heart of the abcess of dissidence. To finish off the rebels, Machel and Mugabe are now coordinating their military operations. The two allies remain very discreet about their agreement. It reportedly includes unhampered border crossings for "hot pursuit" operations.

Battle of the Waves

How about South Africa? Maputo accuses this country--albeit in rather vague terms--of sheltering the RNM broadcasting station and of training dissidents in a camp in Northern Transvaal. South African logistical support is reportedly constituted mainly by parachuted arms and munitions. The RNM cannot "destabilize" the Mozambican regime. Time is against it and Pretoria knows that. Moreover, rebel activities do not always serve South African interests. An example. over the course of many weeks, the RNM systematically destroyed the insulators of the high tension line connecting Cahora Bassa to the Transvaal and brining electricity to the Johannesburg area. Production of power was cut in half. In the middle of a particularly rigorous winter, this decrease was not to the South Africans' liking.

The RNM will not surrender from one day to the next. A Mozambican newsman say : "The rebels will inconvenience us for another 2 or 3 years. Some of them have infiltrated the northern provinces. They are receiving support from Malawi, which is thus playing with fire." The two camps are also engaged in a "battle of the waves." They explain their goals and trade copious insults. Both the government and the RNM punctuate their propaganda with the same FRELIMO slogan: "The struggle continues." One may well ask: "For how long?"

Reconcile Marxism and Growth

[Excerpts] Cahora Bassa--The site is grandiose. Cahora Bassa, the world's sixth-largest dam, is a symbol, both a witness of former servitude and a promise of greatness. Born at the end of an era and the beginning of another, this is where the contradictions present in Mozambique meet.

Built by the Portuguese for the South Africans, this dam, before 1975, represented the most extreme colonial exploitation. The FRELIMO fighters, who hated it, unsuccessfully tried to destroy it. Today, the electricity from Cahora Bassa--one of the least expensive in the world--brings little profit to Mozambique, which only receives some income from transit rights. Its 2,000 megawatts, 98 percent of which are sold to South Africa, power the Apollo sub-station near Pretoria. Around the year 2000, once the capital is reimbursed, Cahora Bassa will finally become national property.

Even if the Mozambicans are not entirely reconciled with their dam--mutters an official: "We have inherited a monster"--they have "recovered" it to serve their economic ambitions. And justly so: the forthcoming construction of the northern plant (Cahora II) will be a key to industrialization. The river has become navigable. The retaining lake, which extends over 250 kms, offers huge irrigation possiblities.

Cahora Bassa, then, is not only a formidable power plant, but the "open sesame" of a brilliant future, the tidings of the Mozambicans' "great dream." Maputo has visions of grandeur. The regime gave itself no more than 10 years to conquer underdevelopment.

Everything, Right Away

To prod the energies, shake off the burdens, mobilize a people which has just emerged from "colonial darkness," it is naturally useful to set exalted goals, so long as wishful thinking is not confused with reality. Thus, Mozambican leaders, in the eyes of their partners, often seem to want everything, and right away: install color television in Maputo before the electrification of the country, produce bananas on a par with Panama in 10 years, cultivate without delay 400,000 hectares of cotton and, against all notion of prudence, ship by air 200,000 vines.

The variety of needs, as well as their urgency, no doubt explains these wild wishes. When financial support is offered, ministries are reluctant to set any priorities. Isn't it true that everything is indispensable? Maputo never pronounces the word "assistance," which has horrible neo-colonial connotations. "We do not ask assistance from anyone," Machel likes to repeat, when no project can emerge--and this is well known to foreign businessmen--without turnkey financing. In Maputo, national pride is ever-present; there is a clear distinction between words and deeds.

Daily reality is less intoxicating than official speeches. In the "city of concrete," as well as in the poorer suburbs, lines form in front of stores from dawn until evening. The same is true of the provinces: in Tete, store windows only exhibit some rare articles: notebooks, flashlights, cookies. Scarcity has affected all basic products, and especially food items. In most of the hotels, breakfast does not include either butter or coffee.

Toward Rationing

Lines have become a social phenomenon. In an attempt to combat them--but without any hope of putting an end to them--the government is preparing to institute a system of rationing in large cities such as Maputo, Beira and Nampula for items of first necessity: cereals, flour, meat, fish, sugar.

A large variety of consumer goods remain inaccessible for the man in the street. The purpose of a pair of slacks consumes one-fifth of a young worker's salary. Foreign residents, armed with foreign currencies, frequent supermarkets in Swaziland or South Africa. In order to stimulate agricultural and industrial production, the government has increased the prices of certain products which had been frozen since independence. However legitimate, this measure fueled inflation. Despite rising prices, Maputo nevertheless remains, according to a study conducted by a U.S. magazine, in fifth place among the "cheapest" capitals of the world, at least for a foreigner passing through....

Every day, 200 new arrivals, most of them from rural areas, converge to Maputo. Few among them can afford to pay individual rent. This urban influx aggravates unemployment. "Green belts" devoted to agriculture will receive the unemployed young and petty criminals. Prostitution has practically disappeared.

All sectors of the economy suffer from two main evils: lack of qualified technicians and scarcity of spare parts. Everywhere, a large number of machines have been standing useless for a long time. In 1975, taxi drivers left with their cars. Five years later, there are only 2 or 3 left, impossible to find. The burden of the Rhodesian conflict came to aggravate the heavy consequences of a botched decolonization. This last chapter, at least, is now closed.

Failure of the People's Stores

The most audacious initiative concerned the "people's stores." To avoid a financial debacle and preserve thousands of jobs, the government had found it necessary after independence to reappropriate all properties abandoned by their Portuguese owners: houses, restaurants, beauty parlors, garages, etc. This was a vast domain, given the fact that grocery stores were largely owned by the lower-class whites (only 80 Africans were in business for themselves in 1975). Thus were born some 200 "people's stores" which were supposed to sell food and clothing. This nationalization of the retail business was a fiasco. Employees who had risen to the status of managers did not have the vaguest idea of how to conduct business.

Even more serious, the stores turned into nests of corruption. The government has therefore undertaken the "denationalization" of these "people's stores." They are being transferred either to consumers' cooperatives or sold to private entrepreneurs. In Maputo, 70 sotres have already changed hands. Candidates to purchase them are legion. There are more than 500 buyers for 27 clothing stores which were reputed, it is true, to turn appreciable profits. The same happened with bakeries. The lucky few were not always the highest bidders: the government wisely took into account the competence of the applicants.

In transferring the owernship of these "people's stores," did the revolution betray Marxist-Leninist orthodoxy? Machel forcefully maintains it did not. Insisting on the continuity of his policies, Machel points out that the third FRELIMO congress in February 1977 had already stressed the importance of private enterprise. This is not a case, therefore, of renouncing any doctrine, but rather of having learned from failure. It is true, however, that individual initiative and the profit motive have become legitimate again, and this is no mean change. At the same time, bureaucracy will be thinned out. Certain industrial enterprises will no longer be required to channel their orders abroad and export their products through the state "purchasing departments." The wage policy now being drawn will actually introduce cash awards. The EMOCHA tea plantation workers, for example, will be the beneficiaries of a "bonus" system.

Priority to Agriculture

It is true that agriculture, which employs 9 out of 10 Mozambicans. needs to be stimulated. The government has granted it priority in its budget. Mozambique is far from having solved its food problems. Only tea and sugar production are rising, while cotton, hated by the peasants in colonial times as "forced labor," is going through an acute crisis. The government has undertaken to regroup the peasants in "communal villages" on a voluntary basis. There are about 1,000 such villages. However, the collectivization of agriculture is limited. Plots of family-owned land represent an area 10 times vaster than "state farms."

Should "state farms" be multiplied? Could marketing cooperatives be tolerated? Will collectivization of agriculture be "heavy" or "light"? These issues continue to fuel the debate among the leaders. They reflect as much internal ideological choices as external influences affecting Mozambique for the past 5 years.

[Excerpts] Alignment Without Servility

Maputo--"Mozambique will never be a satellite nation," an offended official growls. Is this a profession of faith or an exorcism? Machel is surely not the kind of political animal that can be kept on a leash. He likes to repeat that "we are Mozambicans before anything else." Indeed, the nationalist fervor of the FRELIMO leaders seems unimpeachable. Professor Aquino de Braganca says: "As long as Samora is in charge of this country, we have nothing to fear. Mozambican Marxism is endogenous. It was born in the jungle, not in the country of Lenin. The October revolution never reached us. We shall never agree to any kind of tutelage. We discuss and deal with our communist partners in East Europe on an equal footing. Moreover, we reject the notion that any concept of socialist orientation could be imposed on us." In sum, Mozambique cannot become a new Bulgaria.

However, these ticklish protestations of independence are coupled with the intense desire to be acknowledged as members of--and admitted into--the socialist family. Over a period of many months, officials in Maputo are multiplying acts of allegiance to Moscow. The chief of state happily stresses the common ideology between his regime and its "natural allies." Of course, he acknowledges humbly that Mozambique has not made the same progress on the road to socialism: however, there is only a difference in degree, not in nature.

"Imperialism Is Encircling Us"

This feeling of belonging to the communist "church" sometimes expresses itself in manichean speeches with messianic overtones. Machel likes to stress the obsidional character of his struggle: "Imperialism continues to encircle us." Both the Soviet Union and Cuba are harvesting the fruits of the material support given FRELIMO during the war of liberation. China, whose support was more hesitant, has been unable to preserve this investment. The Maoist revolution had fascinated Mozambican fighters. The FRELIMO analyses, its methods and speeches--especially in the field of rural development--are sometimes, albeit decreasingly so, tinged with Maoism.

Not a Servile Partner

China is largely responsible for having fallen into semi-disfavor. Its economic assistance, parsimoniously shelled out, has not corresponded to initial hopes. Beijing has seemingly become disinterested in the Mozambican experience and has not attempted to smooth over any misunderstandings, nor has it tried to counterbalance Soviet influence. Nevertheless, Maputo kept neutral in the quarrel between the two communist giants, while at the same time displaying increasing mistrust toward the Chinese strategy of systematic support to African nationalist movements hostile to Moscow.

Diplomatically aligned with Moscow, Mozambique is not, however, a servile partner. For many years now Machel has refused berthing facilities in Beira and Maputo to the Soviet Navy. FRELIMO is remaining faithful to its initial promise "not to integrate itself into a military bloc and to refuse to grant military bases to foreigners on national soil." In the view of certain Western observers, Machel's stress on ideology could be explained by his desire to provide guarantees for the Soviet Union at a time when he is busy soliciting financial and technical support from the capitalist world.

It is true that cooperation with the Eastern bloc is not always in odor of sanctity in official circles. Commercial exchanges with Moscow are mostly transacted on a barter basis. In return for MiG planes and tractors, tanks and Stalin organs, Mozambique has granted Soviet vessels important fishing rights in its waters abounding with crustaceans. In the lines winding out of Maputo fish markets, housewives frequently inveigh against the "fish without heads" of mediocre quality frozen in the Soviet Union and sold to Mozambique.

Other mishaps in "internationalist solidarity": the government has requested the departure of 60 East German technicians working in the Moatize mines. It seems that their technical competence in the field of coal mining was doubtful. As for the Romanian experts in charge of cotton production projects, their advice has reportedly met with skepticism.

Soviet cooperants reportedly number more than a thousand, at least half of whom are military instructors. As for the civilians, they are physicians, advisors at the Ministry of Planning, tugboat pilots in the ports. East Germans number in the hundreds. Faithful to its specialty, the GDR is assisting Mozambique in the organization of its security services. Bulgarians are working in administration. According to Western estimates, Cubans appear to be the most numerous. Most of them are civilians: physicians, sugar experts, construction technicians. Many among them are black or mulatto. At any rate, Mozambique, unlike Angola or Ethiopia, can better distance itself from its "fraternal countries" since the very survival of its regime is not dependent on their military assistance.

On the Threshold of COMECON

Will Mozambique join the COMECON? The question is bandied about Maputo's Western embassies. There have been a number of signs of a forthcoming favorable decision. Mozambique is at the threshold of COMECON: no leader denies it. Minister of Finance Rui Baltazar says that "it is a normal step: we are a socialist country. We shall not lose our independence by joining."

Are the allies of the Soviet Union reluctant to accept this prospect, as some diplomats in Maputo seem to believe? The entrance into COMECON of the only two countries to join outside Eruope--Cuba and Vietnam--was apparently not unanimously accepted by the socialist camp. Two things are almost certain: broadening of the family will modify somewhat its raison d'etre. Initially conceived as the framework for economic integration, COMECON will additionally fulfill a mission of support for the Third World; hence the reticence of certain of its members. Moreover, Mozambique's eventual membership would inevitably reduce its freedom of negotiation with the capitalist world. Beyond the speeches, this would be the first genuine breach in the policy of nonalignment proclaimed by Machel.

A Window to the West

Mozambique's position toward the Lome Convention is clearer. "We would like to have direct financial relations with the EEC," says Prakash Ratilal, vice-governor of the Central Bank. "Why does the EEC refuse to do that, when it actually maintains important commercial exchanges with the socialist world?" Without totally dismissing eventual membership, Mozambique is preserving the status of observer.

As early as 1975, Mozambique had to have recourse to foreign cooperants. Among the experts present today, there are 53 nationalities represented. Europeans, Japanese and Scandinavians share the scene with socialist technicians in all of the civilian sectors of the economy. This year, Maputo officials stated that they wished to open "a window... to the West." This window, in fact, was already ajar. Two figures among many: two-thirds of Mozambique's exchanges are with the West; the United States are among the best customers.

In the name of a "mutually fruitful cooperation," Machel invited the West to invest in his country. Mozambique does not lack advantages: good financial situation, reasonable cost of living, satisfactory repatriation of profits, social peace.

"Modus Vivendi" With Pretoria

"One does not choose one's neighbors," Machel likes to repeat. "Our relations with Pretoria do not bother me." The giant of Southern Africa remains Mozambique's most important trade partner, and its main supplier. South African technicians employed by companies associated with the shipping business conduct almost permanent activities in Maputo.

The number of Mozambican workers in the Transvaal mines had decreased since 1975. However, it has significantly risen during the last 6 months. South Africa pays its neighbor a total of 140 million dollars (or 40 percent of Mozambique's foreign exchange resources).

For Maputo, any break would be suicidal. Compelled to the role of good neighbor, Machel avoids all provocation. South African refugee blacks who are living in the country do not receive any military support.

A sort of "modus vivendi" seems to govern at present relations between the two countries: Maputo gives limited support to the ANC, while Pretoria does the same with Mozambican dissidents. The Mozambican revolution triumphed over the Portuguese in 10 years. It will need a considerably longer span to free itself from its historical heritage and to manipulate to its own advantage the laws of geography.

COOPERATION AGREEMENT WITH SPAIN--Spain and Mozambique signed an agreement on scientific and technical cooperation today in Maputo and an appended protocol on the status of Spanish residents in the country. The agreement will last 5 years and lays down the terms for specific areas of collaboration in fishing and forestry. This agreement is similar to others between Spain and other African countries and almost the whole of Latin America. [Text] [LD150456 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 2000 GMT 12 Dec 80]

UNIVERSITY CLOSED DOWN--Bayere University in Kano has been closed down indefinitely. After an emergency meeting of the senate of the institution, the acting registrar explained that the decision was taken because the authorities could no longer guarantee the safety of staff and students of the institution. He therefore requested all students to go home. The closure of the university followed student demonstrations which resulted in serious damages to the residence of the vice chancellor and other buildings in the institution. The university senate condemned the manner in which the students conducted their demonstration and explained that no formal representation was made to it on their grievances. Meanwhile a committee made up of seven members has been appointed to investigate the demands of the students. It is headed by the Deputy Vice Chancellor Professor D. Abdul Adam. EXTERNAL ASSETS INCREASE--Nigeria's external assets at the end of last July stood at about 5,000 million naira. This represents an increase of about 10 percent over that of the preceding month. These facts are stated in the Central Bank report for the month of July this year. The document also reveals that foreign exchange transactions through the bank in May this year resulted in a net inflow of about 317 million naira which is about 14 million naira higher than that recorded in April. MORE ARMY TRAINEES FINISH CAMP

[Text]

THE Seychelles People's Liberation Army added to its ranks on Sunday another group of soldiers who have not only received basic military training but have also been taught their role in the economic and social development of the Republic.

This understanding of the twin role of the SPLA was spelled out by the recruits themselves and by the Minister of Defence, Mr. Ogilvy Berlouis — deputising for Commander-in-Chief, President René — at a passing-out parade at the Pointe Larue camp attended by Ministers, members of the SPLA Central Executive and branch committees and officers and other ranks.

After the usual inspection and march-past ceremony, the new soldiers swore the oath of allegiance to the President and the Republic, to defend the country, the people and the Revolution and to work side by side with the people in the development of Seychelles.

"In the name of all my brother soldiers who have been sworn in today", declared Private René Hoareau, in a short address, "I would like to make this pledge to all the Seychellois people : that we are prepared and ready to work side by side with you, as brothers and sisters so that together we can build our new socialist society along the line traced by the Revolution of June 5th and under the direction of President René.

"We are prepared and ready to defend our country and our revolution to the last drop of our blood. We are prepared to give our lives so that our brothers and sisters can remain free. Let this message go out very clearly to any enemy who is foolish enough to try something against our people.'"

As part of their training, the new soldiers spent five months at the SPLA's agricultural development project on Coetivy island.

There, as Private Hoareau said, "We also learn how to cultivate the land, to fish, to build houses and many other economic activities".

"The hope of our country and people rests on the development of all our islands and we are proud to have been among the first to have participated in this work. We have discovered the value of work and the satisfaction that comes from a task that is well-done. This will help us tremendously in our career as soldiers".

Private Hoareau asked Mr. Berlouis to convey their thanks and appreciation to President René for his guidance and participation with them in the development work of Coetivy. He also thanked the camp commander, Major Macdonald Marengo and all other officers and instructors who have contributed to their successful training.

"We know that we have a lot more to learn", he ended, "but we are determined to continue learning so that we may be able to serve our country and people to the best of our ability".

Mr. Berlouis, replying in the name of President René, congratulated the soldiers on their goodwill and great efforts and assured them that their message would be passed on to the Commander-in-Chief.

He reminded them that the Front's policy was the development of the whole archipelago and said that the success achieved on Coetivy was due to the work of the SPLA troops who had followed the direction given by President René and thus seen what could really be achieved when they work together as true militants.

"We have a heavy task as the defender of the Seychellois people. They are relying on us for the defence of the nation and if tomorrow we do not deliver what we have promised, the people will want to know why."

Calling for continued vigilance, Mr. Berlouis said most people now appreciate what the SPPF and government are trying to do for the progress of the people and the need for an armed force to defend the revolution. "Unfortunately, he added, there are still a minority of people who do not want our society to progress on the way we have chosen because it affects their pockets. They will do everything they can to undo what we are trying to achieve. Therefore, we must always be vigilant and never forget that while we have many friends, we also have enemies. Never make the mistake of forgetting that!"

The Minister, however, was also very confident that victory could be achieved. "If all of us who are the "avant-garde" of the revolution put our shoulders together under the guidance of our Commander-in-Chief, we shall make a lot of progress and reach our goal. The struggle must continue."

The ceremony closed with the presentation by the Minister of gifts to the three soldiers who came out top in their training: Philip Barbé, René Hoareau and George Berard.

NEW ABSTRACT GIVES DETAILED NATIONAL STATISTICS

Victoria NATION in English 26 Nov 80 p 1

[Text]

DETAILED information on many aspects of life in Seychelles is given in the new Statistical Abstract for 1979, which has just been published.

This third edition of the Abstract, which includes data from previous years, covers the land and climate, population, migration and tourism, trade, commerce, prices and wages, and the whole area of production, both industrial and agricultural.

The population of Seychelles continues to increase, with the 1979 mid-year figure at 62,686 and the estimate for 1981 of 65,950. By the year 2001 it is expected that there will be 97,900 people in the Republic.

Visitor arrivals, too, continue their upward trend, the 1979 figure being 78,852. The average length of stay is falling, however, being 9.1 nights compared with the 1976 figure of 11.5 nights. Spending by tourists in 1979 is given provisionally as R. 246 million.

The value of Seychelles' exports rose substantially during the year to R. 30,948,000, to which copra sales continued to make by far the biggest contribution with R. 19,924,000 from 3,439 tonnes produced. Frozen fish exports showed a strong sign of the Government's determination to boost this profitable field with sales of R. 6,095,000 compared with R. 3,550,000 in 1978.

Imports, too, continued to rise to a total of R. 562,850,000 but sharp increases in the prices of oil products made a significant impact on this figure. Machinery and transport equipment was the biggest single area of imports at R. 162,673,000.

The Abstract gives further evidence of the Government's efforts in different fields to improve the people's standard of living and social care.

It is on sale at the National Bookshop, Albert Street, for R. 50.

U.S. VIEW OF NEW NATION ASSESSED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 12

[Article by Dr Kenneth Mufuka: "America's Image of Zimbabwe--A Short Honeymoon... a Sense of Being Unappreciated"]

[Text] BORN in Zimbabwe, Dr Kenneth Nyamayaro Mufuka was largely self-educated. He received a B.A. degree from London Univeristy, a Master of Letters from St Andrew's University in Scotland, and a Ph.D. degree from Queens University in Canada.

Being a man of two worlds, born and reared in Africa, yet living and working in the United States for the past 12 years, he found himself called upon to interpret one civilisation to the other. His gift as interpreter has gained slow but steady recognition.

In 1975-1976 he accepted an invitation to become a visiting professor of African History at the University of Texas in Austin. In 1978 he served as an international scholar at Old Dominion University in Norfolk, Virginia; and is the author of two books—Missions and Politics in Malawi (Limestone, Canada, 1976) and Introduction to Africa (Irvington, New York, 1980).

Dr Mufuka is an associate professor of African and Western Civilisation at Lander College in Greenwood, South Carolina, a position he's held since 1976.

He is a guest columnist for the Index-Journal (Greenwood), and the Greenville-News, and is now writing an occasional column for The Herald.

THE American Press gives all new governments a honeymoon period of three months in which all that is written is good and exciting. For Zimbabwe the honeymoon was shorter.

Reuter reports on October 19 that because of alleged "misrepresentations and distortions of news, the Government of Zimbabwe is taking measures to control undesirable and irresponsible reports in the overseas Press."

Some of the misrepresentations could have been avoided, however. In the first week of August news about the International Conference on Investment began to filter back to the United States.

The small country newspapers across the country began to report an "acute sensation of being unappreciated — with past assistance and friendship repaid in the coinage of anti-Americanism." In South Carolina a story was widely circulated that the American Ambassador to the United Nations, Donald McHenry, was met with less than open arms.

"The people there are disappointed that the U.S. has not come across with as much aid as they thought there would be. And although moves are under way to help even more, there continues to be criticism of the American efforts."

My suspicion is that the crux of the matter was the so-called lavish entertainment and television interviews of Cuban revolutionaries which coincided with the conference.

Zimbabwe as a free country can and should entertain whoever it wishes. Practical politics, however, may dictate that a good host does not entertain a cat and a dog at the same dinner table. Words like racism, class conflict, imperialism and above all communism are dirty words.

To the American conservatives, Mr Ian Smith, Anatasia Somoza and the Shah are now called "moderates." The president of the Carnegie Endowment, Mr T. Hughes, says the fact of the matter is that "America avoids references to class conflict for fear of sounding marxist. American journalists rarely mention it, mainstream politicians and bureaucrats never do."

In the country newspapers, the investment conference itself was never mentioned. A country paper concluded, "under these circumstances (of anti-Americanism) can there be any questions about why some Americans resent foreign aid?"

MODERATE

If you want help from Americans, the more provocative statements should wait. There is no honour in insulting your guest even inadvertently.

Surprisingly, Mr Richard Nixon was more moderate about the whole affair than most Americans. He said: "Take Zimbabwe. Mugabe is a marxist, but I would provide aid to him — as long as he concentrated his activities in his own country.

"If Mugabe starts exporting his marxism to other parts of Africa, then we cut him off. I don't believe in subsidising our enemies. If we are providing a significant amount to him, then he is not going to screw (sic) around elsewhere."

Former President Nixon is now an adviser to President-elect Reagan. Even this "moderate" position is considered too liberal by most Americans.

If the money promised by President Jimmy Carter has not already been delivered, it would come as no surprise if it was cancelled altogether by Mr Reagan.

IN THE presidential debate between President Carter and Governor Reagan, very little was said about the black plight which has been worsening and has since become chronic. The problem is that even a whisper of recession destroys the small gains which blacks have made in recent years.

The election on November 4 will not effect the reality in the slightest. It is also true that since President Carter came to power the problem has worsened, despite all the goodwill that comes from his office.

It is the realisation by black leaders that even when there is a sympathetic President, their position is not going to improve automatically; that has created a sense of quiet desperation. The Census Bureau published a frightful report in May 1980. Among its findings were:

- The misery index which is a combination of inflation and unemployment, was 12 percent in 1976 and now stands at well over 20 percent.
- For blacks unemployment is 15 percent, twice that of whites.

In good times as well as in bad the employment rate in black cities and in the ghettos is greater than for whites. In Detroit, New York City, Gary and Atlanta, the Urban League estimates that the unemployment rate is near 30 percent.

- In education 42 percent of black students are channelled to technical colleges while only 33 percent of the whites go there. The result is that very few blacks ever qualify for management positions and the servant-master relationship is perpetuated.

GREAT FEAR

The real disappointment in the Carter Administration is that in four years he barely made a dent in the things that matter to blacks. The great fear is the creation of a permanent underclass of unemployables.

In New York, Detroit and Washington, the Urban League, a black civil rights movement, fears that it is not so much unemployment but blacks who have given up hope and have reached the age of 30 or more without steady gainful employment.

But this is not all. All affirmative action programmes depend on federal funding and on the 10 percent clause which allows for minority businessmen to be employed in federal projects. The whisper or threat of recession has killed all these projects.

There is a growing meanness among the petit-blancs that comes with recession. In 1978 a Mr Alan Bakke sued a medical college which had refused him admission while admitting blacks on the grounds of reverse discrimination.

The ruling that: "The guarantee of equal protection cannot mean one thing when applied to one individual and something else when applied to a person of another colour," literally killed affirmative action programmes. Every Tom, Dick and Harry can cry "reverse discrimination" if a black is given a job and threaten to sue.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964 disallowed racial segregation in employment, schools and any public place. The black State Senator Julian Bond of Georgia laments that employers are using this same law, intended for black advancement, to the advantage of white women, who are now called a minority.

The division among black leaders over President Carter stems from this desperate situation. The Rev. Ralph Abernathy, who succeeded the Rev. Martin Luther King, has turned to Governor Reagan.

If anything, Mr Reagan has the support of extreme right-wing groups which in the past have supported the positions of the extreme racist Governor George Wallace of Alabama and Senator Barry Goldwater. At the time of writing, the Republicans are smelling victory and this further adds to the spirit of doom and desperation among blacks.

REPORTAGE ON NYERERE'S OFFICIAL VISIT

Crowd Salutes Mwalimu

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Dec 80 pp 1, 12

[Text]

THOUSANDS of colourfully dressed Zimbabweans greeted President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania when his blue and white aircraft touched down at Salisbury airport from Dar es Salaam yesterday morning.

A crowd of between 40 000 and 50 000 gathered at the airport to greet the visiting head of State at the start of his five-day stay in Zimbabwe.

Cheering women wearing gaily printed ethnic dresses mingled with white-robed choir members and tribal dancers attired in colourful traditional costume. Everywhere were T-shirts in a riot of colours emblazoned with party slogans.

Riot police armed with batons had to struggle to keep the enthusiastic crowd from surging across the apron as the white-haired Dr Nyerere, accompanied by his wife, Maria, stepped on to Zimbabwean soil.

Several people collapsed in the heat and had to receive first-aid treatment. One man, who was suspected of having suffered a heart attack, was revived with oxygen.

Travelling with Dr Nyerere were the Tanzanian Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr Salim Ahmed Salim, the Minister of Trade, Mr I. M. Kaduma and the Minister of Agriculture, Mr J. Mungai.

At the foot of the aircraft steps the party was greeted by President Banana and the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, with his wife Sally.

Mrs Mugabe, wearing a soft blue, yellow and white gown with a white head scarf, and Mrs Nyerere, dressed in a multi-coloured caftan, greeted each other warmly before following their husbands to the foot of the base from where President Nyerere took the salute.

On show for the first time was the new red, green and gold flag of the National Army bearing the Zimbabwe bird emblem.

Six Hawker Hunter aircraft streaked overhead and the crowd cheered wildly as the 21-gun salute was fired to honour Dr Nyerere for the support he gave during the struggle for independence.

Pupils of the Mbizi Primary School garlanded the visiting couple.

After inspecting the guard of honour mounted by 22 Bn, President Nyerere met service chiefs, Cabinet Ministers and other dignitaries. On hand to greet him was the Tanzania High Commissioner in Zimbabwe, Mr Anthony Nyakyi, and his counterpart in Dar es Salaam, Mr Farai Masango.

Dancers

Dr Nyere spent the time chatting with the troupes of dancers who had welcomed him before he joined the motorcade for the drive to the city.

On his way to the Guest House in Chancellor Avenue, the Tanzanian leader was cheered thunderously by thousands of jubilant and chanting Zimbabweans when his motorcade, nearly 1 km long, entered Julius Nyerere Way, the former Kingsway renamed in his honour.

The crowd, singing revolutionary songs and waving pennants, shouted slogans praising him for the role he played in the liberation struggle.

As deafening screams of "Karibu (welcome) President Nyerere" and "Mwalimu oyo" (forward with the teacher) went out, Dr Nyerere, who was with President Banana in a closed dark Rolls-Royce, acknowledged the cheers with a power salute.

At least five people fainted as they surged forward to try and get a glimpse of the Tanzanian head of state.

From Julius Nyerere Way the procession turned right into Samora Machel Avenue, left into Fourth Street and right into North Avenue before entering Chancellor Avenue leading to the Guest House where President Nyerere will stay.

Throughout the procession security was tight as many uniformed and Special Branch officers kept vigil over the vast crowds.

On arrival at the State House, Dr Nyerere inspected a guard of honour mounted by the Zimbabwe Republic Police.

According to the Government's programme, Dr Nyerere will today tour the ethanol plant in Chiredzi, the Chiredzi Research Station and Great Zimbabwe. He returns home on Saturday.

People Applaud Nyerere

[Editorial: "A Happy People"]

[Text]

THE welcome extended to President Nyerere when his aircraft landed at Salisbury airport yesterday morning far exceeded the expectations of many.

It should not have done. The capital city was in festive mood, the sun was shining and a leading international figure was our guest.

What more fitting occasion could there be to celebrate? And the people responded, as we knew they would, with warmth, with humour, with acclamation.

The city centre has seldom been as full of happy people waiting to greet a distinguished visitor and friend. We are confident that the people of Zimbabwe will greet President Nyerere in similar fashion wherever he goes.

He is a man of simple dignity, with deeply held beliefs on the right of all men to a life of equal opportunity. A leader in the field of African socialism, his comments on what he sees in Zimbabwe will no doubt be listened to with interest by our Government leaders.

Every country, of course, has its own particular problems, and ours, with a mixed economy, bears little relation to Tanzania's. But the successes and pitfalls encountered by Dr Nyerere in his drive for social equality are better related first hand and this is the value of State visits.

Much more of value is discussed in quiet off-the-record talks than would appear from the outward pomp and ceremony.

We are sure that this will be the case during his visit, which can only cement long ties of friendship he has with our Government.

Zimbabweans Praised

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 pp 1, 14

[Text]

PRESIDENT NYERERE yesterday praised the sacrifices made by Zimbabweans during the liberation struggle, saying Africa was freer from colonial rule now the country was independent.

Addressing a rally here yesterday the Tanzanian leader, who was cheered thunderously when he took his seat, thanked Zimbabweans for the "kind reception" they had given him.

He was alluding to the gifts he received earlier at the stadium from the Women's League which presented him with plates, glasses and a costume.

Speaking to more than 5 000 people, the Mwalimu said: "Thank you very much for increasing African freedom. We have come to your independent Zimbabwe to say thank you very much for the sacrifices that you made to make the country free."

Earlier Dr Nyerere had toured Great Zimbabwe, Buffalo Range, the ethanol plant in Chiredzi and the Chiredzi Sugar Research Station where thousands cheered his arrival.

In his speech, interspersed by applause and chanting, the visiting head of State said he appreciated that Zimbabweans were still celebrating their independence as it had been born out of a bloody war.

At Great Zimbabwe, African traditional drum beats echoed across the rocky hills nearby when more than three thousand people welcomed President Nyerere.

Salutes

As the flag-and-pennant-waving crowd sang revolutionary songs praising the Frontline States' chairman for the key role he played during the liberation struggle, the Mwalimu acknowledged the salutes with a smile and a hand wave.

He was accompanied on his trip — the second day of his five-day State visit to Zimbabwe — by President Banana, Mrs Nyerere, Deputy Prime Minister Mr Simon Muzenda, Information Minister, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira, and senior Government officials.

Today Dr Nyerere flies to Risco to see the steel works and to Bulawayo where he will address a political rally at Barbourfields Stadium.

He returns to Dar es Salaam on Saturday.

State Banquet

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 1

[Text]

THE visiting Tanzanian leader, Dr Nyerere, on Tuesday night displayed characteristic modesty by saying at a State banquet in his honour that he was in Zimbabwe to thank the people for their "long, desperate and finally successful struggle" to achieve freedom.

This was a telling statement at a time when Zimbabweans feel Mwalimu has been invited to be offered profuse thanks for the key role he played in support of the independence struggle in Zimbabwe.

After describing President Banana's eulogy as "very kind, and very flattering", President Nyerere went on: "I appreciate the spirit behind your words, although I admit to a belief that at least some of your remarks depict your own sincerity, and that of the people of Zimbabwe, rather more accurately than they describe me or my work."

Dr Nyerere emphasised that if he had been able to make any personal contribution to the liberation struggle in Zimbawe, then he was doing what he wanted to do — to help forward the liberation of Africa.

"In that, I was no different from the millions of individuals within Zimbabwe, elsewhere in Africa, and even in the rest of the world."

All were doing what they had to do — they were doing their duty as human beings and as Africans, said President Nyerere.

"For freedom is indivisible; when my brothers' freedom is denied, then my own freedom is denied."

GREAT CAUSE

Dr Nyerere believes all those who supported the Zimbabwe struggle found "great personal satisfaction" in doing whatever they did because they were part of a great cause and a great community — "the community of brothers and sisters determined to be free".

The Tanzanian leader places great emphasis on the role played by the Zimbabwean people in the struggle for independence and believes it was decisive to the achievement of victory.

"No one can be freed by others. Freedom is a thing we have to gain for ourselves and to guard for ourselves. Others can help or hinder us, but freedom which depends on others is not freedom — it is dependence with all that implies," according to the philosopher - President, rated among Africa's great intellectuals.

"You, the people of Zimbabwe, freed Zimbabwe. The rest of Africa is in debt because you extended the freedom of Africa."

NECESSARY

Another key point in his speech was Dr Nyerere's recognition of the contribution made by "all" the people of Zimbabwe to their freedom.

He said: "The armed struggle was necessary—freedom could not have been obtained without it. But the soldiers in the Patriotic Front armies could not have survived, much less inflicted damage to the enemy, without the active support of the masses among whom they moved, and lived and fought.

"It was the unity of the people, their united demand for freedom and their united support for the freedom struggle, which enables us to be here tonight."

In his tribute to the people of Zimbabwe, Mwalimu observed that they had learnt the lesson of unity, applied it and through it triumphed with the birth of Zimbabwe.

But most important was Dr Nyerere's appeal to Zimbabweans to remain united.

Tactics Behind Pomp

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 2

[Text]

IMPORTANT talks on joint political and economic strategy in Southern Africa are being held in informal sessions behind the pomp and panoply of Tanzanian President Nyerere's State visit.

The hero's welcome for President Nyerere was a tribute to the help he gave Mr Mugabe's ZANU (PF) and its ZANLA military wing during the war.

But the two leaders are using Dr Nyerere's first visit to Zimbabwe to exchange views on issues crucial to the future course of events in Southern Africa.

These would include the Namibia issue, now poised delicately on the brink of a multi-party conference that could lead to a settlement; the moves to reduce economic links with South Africa; the political situation in South Africa and international efforts to change it; and the clash between socialist and free enterprise ideology that is looming increasingly large in the sub-continent.

The two leaders will sign an agreement on economic and technical co-operation tomorrow, according to official sources here. It is not yet known, however, whether they will also sign a defence pact along the lines of the one signed by Mr Mugabe and President Machel of Mozambique on his State visit here.

The meeting between President Nyerere and Mr Mugabe comes at a time when the frontline States are giving their support to the United Nations-sponsored talks on Namibia and are believed to be pushing a reluctant Mr Sam Nujoma, the SWAPO leader, to the conference table.

'Nyerere: Man of Steel'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 14

[Article by Noni Jabavu]

[Text]

"TUESDAY December 2 1980, the arrival on his State visit of President Nyerere of Tanzania to Zimbabwe" — was that not a golden day for the masses, the people of Zimbabwe, our country?

Zimbabwe's unfailing supporter during all those agonising years in which the people, the masses — I'm afraid one has to use that word — struggled for FREEDOM.

In his own Bantu language KiSwahili (the seventh most widely spoken in the world), UHURU. And by now the whole world knows it, the rightness for which it stands. And many languages have adopted it.

I've talked with Swedes and Spaniards, Arabs and Anglo-Saxons, Americans, Jamaicans, Englishmen, Irishmen, Indonesians, and found them using it and not only beguiled by its euphoniousness but supporting what it stands for. Men and women in their right minds the world over know that Uhuru stands for what is morally right.

You'll have noticed I use the word "masses" somewhat apologetically. Why? Because a "mass" of people is composed of individuals, isn't it? And each with his own unique experiences and feelings, for being only human, we are each and everyone of us unique and are entitled to our personal private feelings.

What I'm leading up to is this: that golden Tuesday December 2 1980 when President Nyerere arrival was for a few among us, not golden but somewhat glum! I refer to the few who were having to readjust their private feelings on setting eyes for the first time on this man, this front-line statesman who had championed the yearnings of the majority of Zimbabweans for Uhuru.

You know the "few" I mean — the "never in a hundred years" type, those who had been traumatically shocked by Prime Minister Macmillan's winds of change speech, horrified by the prospect it implied. Some of those few have nevertheless stayed on in Zimbabwe for one reason or another (usually because of not being able to take their money out).

ADJUSTING

Obviously, it was not automatically a golden day for such. They are adjusting their private feelings. Some have realised, since last April, that this Uhuru which President Nyerere stands for is after all not that bad!

The skies haven't fallen down; what is right (uhuru) is right, and what was wrong (domination by a privileged few) was wrong. Being Zimbabweans now whatever their complexion, whether they liked the idea or not, they are entitled to their private feelings; and the rest of us will assuredly extend our famous African patience by giving them time to readjust their feelings.

So long as they behave, of course and exercise the standards of respect towards others which is a very "African" type of behaviour.

I've talked about each and every person having their own private feelings. Now I come to my own feelings on that day: for me, it was not merely a golden day, it was one of a diamond quality! Why? Because I had met President Julius Nyerere once and once only, many years ago in London when he was a fellow guest at a luncheon party thrown by a mutual friend for 20 or so people at his house in London's East End, Rotherhithe, overlooking the River Thames.

A champagne and hors d'oeuvre affair, for us to watch the ship that would sail past carrying Princess Margaret and her husband Anthony Armstrong-Jones off on their honeymoon. We had our flags, rice and confetti at the ready!

We mostly had some connection with the then British parts of East, Central and Southern Africa. Some of us were born there, black natives, or descendants of white settlers — most of the latter fresh from one or other of the Oxbridge type of university, and Edinburgh or Aberdeen.

Our host introduced us to one another, so I met his friend whom he called simply "Julius"; a very slightly built man in whom I noticed only his twinkling eyes, curiously filed teeth when he smiled his engaging smile, his sociable attitude; and also that unlike the rest of us, he was not sipping or gulping champagne — not even holding a glass of it — but only partaking sparingly of the eatables as he chatted in a friendly and gentle manner to each and all, even to those among us who were becoming somewhat boisterous!

PHILOSOPHY

Our general chat at that party was a good deal about philosophy and politics: Karl Marx, Bertrand Russell, Confucius, Trotsky, Stalin, Winston Churchill's standing as an historian; and about royalty, privilege, peasants, the "working classes".

Rotherhithe was a lowly working-class district, but had gained fashionable attraction due to the revelation that the Princess and her Anthony had secretly been courting in that very area! I, for one, was not aware that in shaking hands with this "Julius", I was in the presence of a peasant, a very great man!

He was so unassuming, modest, gentle — I wasn't the only one at that party who could imagine that he was inwardly a man of steel; who would in later years be the startling catalyst not only in his own country, the then Tanganyika Territory, but as far south of it as the then Southern Rhodesia; that he would be among the leaders, the Front-Line Statesmen who championed the cause of black Southern Rhodesians in their quest and agonising years of battle to free themselves from domination by a privileged minority.

And how he did! The "teacher" instinct in this small man led him not to hesitate to scold aspiring Zimbabwe leaders and politicians for quarrelling among themselves; he didn't hesitate to scold them for their "tribalism"!

And he knew what he was talking about, for his own country has far more "tribes" than has Zimbabwe; yet by his iron-mindedness, the unsuspected steel in his modest frame, he had instilled in them the notion and acceptance of unity, of nationhood!

A Herculean task, for his country is of enormous size. I've been lucky enough to traverse it several times, by car from Dar es Salaam to Moshi and Arusha, right up to its north, Mwanza, on the edge of Lake Victoria bordering Uganda. And of course, I climbed snow-capped Mount Kilimanjaro, as all visitors feel impelled to do — and was amused that the locals call the mountain "Kibo", which means a "hill"!

I couldn't prevent myself from teasing my then husband, an Englishman, that his English people were too arrogant in thinking they are the only ones capable of delicate understatement!

ANTHEM

All these memories came back to me as I watched the preparations Salisbury was making to welcome his arrival. And when I actually set eyes on him once more (since that Rotherhithe luncheon gathering years ago), I even recalled that in his quest for African unity, he had adopted as the National Anthem of Tanzania the South African Africans' own anthem, the lovely tune "Nkosi sikele' i-Africa" as a sign of the brotherliness we should all feel towards one another as Eastern, and Central, and Southern blacks.

As I watched him, the motorcade, moving slowly past my huge picture windows in my hotel room (I always seem lucky enough to have a front seat on such occasions!), I thought: "My goodness, I was in the presence that day years ago without knowing it, not only of a man of steel, but a man of imagination!"

For it would indeed be nice, as well as poetic, if all of our African countries in this part of our huge continent could demonstrate our [illegible] by sharing the same an[illegible]n; the tune fits [illegible]to any Bantu language; besides, it was composed by a humble, musically gifted South African black peasant, who achieved the rank of a church pastor. For non-Bantu language speakers, I should explain that the words mean "May God Bless Africa".

And I thought to myself as I waved to Mwalimu (Teacher) Julius Nyerere from my window: "May God Bless You, Mwalimu!", and in his own language KiSwahili which I learned to speak and write during my years living in Kenya, I added, as the custom is up north, "Asante sana kukuja siwona; tafathali rudi saa ingine". Which means, Thank you so much for coming to see us; please come again another time.

I'm absolutely sure in my heart that the masses were saying much the same in their individual hearts.

THREE-DAY VISIT IMPRESSIVE, SAYS WEST GERMANS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 13

[Text] THREE West German parliamentarians left Zimbabwe last night after a three-day visit during which they held talks with senior Government officials.

Dr Anton Stark, Dr Wolfgang von Geldern and Professor Karl-Heinz Hornhues were in Zimbabwe on a fact-finding visit. They arrived in Salisbury from Zambia, where they spent a day, and have left for South Africa, after which they will visit Namibia.

All three men were Christian Democrats, the official opposition party in the West German Parlia-

Zimbabwe Students Take Off

A GROUP of 57 Zimbabwean students leaves today to take up scholarships offered to them by the West German Government. The grants range from hotel management to computer programming.

It is the first group to leave under the scholarship programme agreed between the Zimbabwean and German Governments.

Bonn has offered 100 scholarships for 1980 and another 100 for 1981 in a scheme to help Zimbabwe train specialists in technical and vocational fields.

The courses will all begin with a six-month course in the German language and will last from between two and five years.

ment, Dr Stark said. He added that the purpose of the visit was to gain political understanding of the situation in Zimbabwe and to look into areas of possible West German assistance.

"It was good to see the country at first hand," said Professor Hornhues. "Sometimes the West German Press painted a very different picture of the situation in this country."

He said the average German, and many other people in Europe, had a very distorted impression of Zimbabwe.

The visitors said they were impressed with what they had seen on their short visit and would take favourable reports back to Bonn.

"When we return to West Germany, we will encourage private investors in our country to take an interest in Zimbabwe as this country has great potential," Dr Stark said.

On aid programmes, Professor Hornhues said they would recommend that aid be directed at rural development, transport and tourism.

Apart from providing scholarships for Zimbabwean students they said their country would also like to see the setting up of more vocational training centres similar to one they had visited in the Sinoia area.

All three said they would like to return to Zimbabwe as soon as they could.

Dr von Geldern said he did not think potential West German investors would be put off because of reports of political uncertainty in the country,

EEC TO PARTICIPATE IN 1981 TRADE FARE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 1

[Text] ALL 10 members of the European Economic Community, as well as the Community Commission itself, will exhibit at next year's Zimbabwe International Trade Fair, the general manager, Mr Graham Rowe, said in Bulawayo yesterday.

The fair will run from April 24 to May 2, and a delegation from the EEC in Brussels and ambassadors of the member states will visit the fair on April 30.

It will be only the second time that the Community will have been represented by all member countries at a trade fair in Africa. The last time was in Khartoum in 1978.

Those taking part will be Belgium, Denmark, France, Britain, Greece (which becomes a member in February), Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and West Germany.

Mr Rowe said the Community and the Commission will occupy about 3 000 m² of the ground floor in the new $1,35 million Exhibition Hall. France has also agreed to take three outside stands, and Germany one stand, in the vicinity of the hall.

Madame Gisela Hoddigfold, representing the EEC and the Commission, Mr E. R. Allen of Britain and Mr Jean-Pierre Stephan of France, were in Bulawayo yesterday making preparatory arrangements for the composite exhibition.

Mr Allen said: "When we discussed the participation of member states in Brussels recently there was absolute agreement that we should take part in the fair.

"The signing of the Lome Convention was a significant European-Zimbabwean relationship and deserves celebration, and we wished to show our faith and confidence in this great country."

Mr Stephan said some of the latest cars made in France would be on display. Madame Hoddigfold said most countries would show commercial products and would have information stands.

JAPANESE TO DECIDE ON PREFERENTIAL TARIFFS SOON

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 3

[Text]

TOKYO.

THE Japanese government's tariff council is to meet in mid-December, when a decision is expected to be made on preferential tariffs for imports from Zimbabwe.

The two most important commodities involved at present are ferrochrome, on which the import duty is currently eight percent, and nickel metal, 12 percent.

If Japanese companies import a large volume of duty-free Zimbabwean ferrochrome, industry sources here predict heavy impact on South African plans to raise the price of Japan-bound shipments.

According to information available here, the republic's ferroalloy makers want to boost the ferrochrome price from 45 to 47 cents per pound c.i.f. in the January-March period, and then to 50 cents for April-June.

However, Brazil has already clinched deals for the first three months of next year at 45 cents a pound — following the granting of preferential tariff — and most industry observers believe Zimbabwe will soon make an offer at the same price.

There are predictions here that South African companies, if they fail to get the price they want, may withdraw totallly from January-March sales and stake everything on April-June deals.

This tactic may have little effect.

Special and stainless steel manufacturers have been taking drastic measures in recent months to cut back on raw material purchases in view of declining production and demand.

Nippon Steel for example, is trying to run down its ferrochrome inventories, and company officials don't believe Japan's number one steel producer will be bothered by the South African withdrawal, even if it extended into the April-June quarter.—Kiana-Rtr.

UNION LEADERS CRITICIZE ZCTU

Derah, Sithole Speak

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 2

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

TWO trade union leaders based in Bulawayo yesterday accused the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions of disrupting established workers' organisations through what they called trade union "failures" and non-union members.

The general secretary of the Zimbabwe Motor Industry Workers' Union, Mr M. M. Derah, and the United Textile Workers' Union chief, Mr Phineas Sithole, said instead of promoting unity among workers, the ZCTU had embarked on a campaign to replace stable unions with splinter bodies.

Mr Derah said: "Recently a splinter organisation calling itself the Zimbabwe Motor Trade Workers' Union was formed in Mashonaland and Victoria district where some people purporting to be its representatives have been collecting money from ignorant workers without even issuing receipts.

FAILURES

"Our union has established that these unscrupulous people are trade union failures who are being used by the ZCTU to disrupt well organised and established unions."

Mr Derah said there was no justification for the ZCTU to form splinter bodies as far as his organisation was concerned because "my union has achieved a great deal for its members.

"A few months ago, we announced that a National Industrial Council meeting had agreed to increase the industry's lowest wages by 16,6 percent."

He said the council had also reduced the time for workshop workers and other employees from 46 hours to 45 hours a week, while that of petrol attendants came down from 100 hours to 96.

Mr Derah said: "My view is strengthened by a letter from the Minister of Labour and Social Services dated October 30 and sent to the Motor Industrial Council secretary.

"In the letter, the Minister, Mr Kumbirai Kangai, said, among other things, that he was fully aware that some persons purporting to be acting in the name of the ZCTU had exceeded the mandate given to that organisation, that is, to organise a national trade union centre, but had instead involved themselves in disputes and investigations of personal grievances in certain industries."

Mr Derah said that the letter's tone differed from a statement by Mr Elifigio Soko, ZCTU publicity and information secretary, that the organisation had "progressed in uniting various splinter groups in the country".

Commenting on a weekend report that a UTWU meeting at Hartley had decided to expel him from his executive post, veteran trade unionist Mr Phineas Sithole said: "I have investigated and established that the Hartley meeting was called by the ZCTU's Mr Webster Gwekwerere, some workers' committees and non-union workers."

He said its purpose was to legitimise attempts by certain ZCTU officials to be regarded as UTWU representatives.

"Our union is not prepared to consider any decision emanating from the ZCTU, as the ZCTU has no right whatsoever to interfere in our union's affairs.

"I am aware that the Chief Industrial Relations Officer, Mr I. T. Chigwendere, and some ZCTU officials wish to take over the union's administrative machinery built by me and other executive members over a period of 21 years.

"They want to promote their own political ideology among the union membership. I, on behalf of the union, will not accept that, and our national executive is prepared to challenge the ZCTU's decision in our courts of law."

Sithole Slams Sacking

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 pp 2, 9

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

UNION leader Mr Phineas Sithole said yesterday neither he nor anyone else from the United Textile Workers' Union was at a meeting which "sacked" him as UTWU general secretary.

Mr Sithole said in Bulawayo that the meeting on Saturday was called by the organising secretary of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions—and that of the 22 people who attended, none was from the UTWU.

"I am going to ignore the ridiculous decision to sack me because it was illegal.

"According to the constitution of my union—I can only be sacked by a congress of the UTWU—even a meeting of my own national executive could only recommend that I be fired.

"My union is not affiliated to the ZCTU and that body has no legal right to interfere in our affairs. I have the full support of my own union who recognise me as the general secretary," Mr Sithole said.

The veteran union leader claimed that the men who attended the meeting which "sacked" him were from the ZCTU and other workers' organisations, but not his own.

He is going to continue as general secretary and fight the matter through the courts if the ZCTU or anyone else attempts to implement the sacking decision.

No one from the ZCTU was available for comment yesterday on the allegations made by Mr Sithole.

Chimusoro Slams 'Political' ZCTU

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 9

[Text]

A LEADING trade unionist yesterday accused the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions of using politics to drum up support from trade unions and workers in Zimbabwe.

The general secretary of the Engineering and Metal Workers' Union, Mr David Chimusoro, said in an interview that the labour movement in Zimbabwe wanted a genuine umbrella organisation for individual trade unions to make representations to the Government and employers.

"Instead we see everyday the ZCTU taking the role of trade unions and causing more splits in the trade union movement in this country," he said.

Mr Chimusoro said the ZCTU was using the slogans of a political party to get support.

He said the sooner the ZCTU stopped "this nonsense" the better for the trade union movement.

"Any genuine trade union organisation should not be politically inspired like the ZCTU. Their actions are destructive after we have resolved that we have a strong and effective trade union centre in Zimbabwe."

He said that the ZCTU was formed this year on the understanding that it would not be politically inspired.

NEW INTEGRATED BATTALION SETS UP BASE AT GLENVILLE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Dec 80 p 3

[Text]

A NEWLY INTEGRATED battalion of the National Army has pitched camp at Glenville, near Bulawayo.

The dry and barren bush which covered the area has been transformed into a seat of green tents and soldiers are busy settling in.

The camp is only temporary and the 13 Battalion will move to Wankie by March next year when its permanent barracks are ready.

More than 1 000 ex-guerillas have been integrated to form the new battalion. They spent a month training at Llewellin Barracks and are now under Commander James Chauke.

Two British army men, Major Peter Hoare of the 14/20 Kings Hussars and Warrant Officer Kevin Clarke of the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards, have been assigned to 13 as advisers.

Discipline and morale is high and all men are keenly working on camp improvements.

More bush is being cleared, a parade square is being prepared, paths and roads are being marked out and kitchens, toilets and storerooms have been built.

The camp already has a water supply and electricity and telephones will be linked up within the next few days.

A shop at the camp has been opened — run by an outside contractor with a commission for camp funds.

Commander Chauke said yesterday everything was running smoothly and that his men were proud to be members of the National Army.

"They are interested in serving and protecting the public and morale here in Glenville camp is high. All men are working hard on improving the area—even laying out sports pitches," he said.

The battalion spent a training period at Llewellin Barracks between October 9 and 31.

LEVELLED

Before they moved to the camp at Glenville bulldozers levelled most of the area and the men then began pitching dozens of tents.

The British army officers designed the camp layout and have advised on all aspects of settling in.

Brady Barracks in Bulawayo will exchange Military Police and administrative staff with 13 Battalion to help in training.

Commander Chauke said if any form of trouble occurred in the city his battalion would be on call, just as any unit of the National Army would be.

The commander trained at the Gwelo School of Infantry and joined his men at Llewellin.

The new battalion at Glenville is the second integrated unit in 1 Brigade.

NEW JUSTICE PLAN AIMS AT ENDING 'RACIST BASIS' IN COURT SYSTEM

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 8

[Text]

ZIMBABWE'S new system of village and community courts is part of the Government's plan aimed at streamlining tribal and magistrates' courts—formerly the reponsibilities of two different Ministries—under the Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs.

The man who is behind the new system is justice and constitutional affairs expert Mr Ennias Chikove.

Mr Chikove said in an interview that the two judicial systems, one catering for the magistrates' courts, the two divisions of the High Court and the other for the district commissioners' courts, tribal appeal and chiefs' courts, were based on racist notions of justice.

To transfer the responsibility for the district commissioners' and tribal courts to the Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs. Mr Chikove said, a reconstruction of the tribal courts and a reallocation of the jurisdiction if the District Commissioners' courts was necessary.

As it was not feasible to transfer all the judicial work done by these two courts, it was necessary to establish a lower order of courts to replace them. These would be known as primary courts.

INFORMAL

Village courts would be courts of first instance with informal procedure in customary law only. They would operate on traditional lines and would not be courts of record. No legal training was envisaged for their personnel.

Community courts, as the existing chiefs' courts, would perform the function of formal courts. However, owing to the evolution of urban societies and changes in attitude brought about by technological advances and the war, a change from the traditions of such courts was planned.

"It is necessary to recognise these changes and provide courts that will administer a customary law that reflects the changing norms of the people.

"In fact the legendary customary court is continually losing its identity due to these factors," Mr Chikore said.

Community courts would have both original and appellate jurisdiction — administering customary law and acting as courts of appeal for decisions by village courts. They would be courts of record and presiding officers would be trained for six months.

The possibility of village and community courts trying criminal cases was being studied seriously. Mr Chikove said: "Currently there are 132 chiefs' courts with criminal jurisdiction. I personally do not see any convincing reason why we should not give our community courts some limited amount of criminal jurisdiction."

The new system would have five tiers: village courts, community courts, magistrates' court, the general division of the High Court and the Appellate Division of the High Court.

ABSORBING

Headmen and chiefs would not be interfered with as they were the responsibility of the Ministry of Local Government and Housing. But the Ministry of Justice was considering absorbing those of them whose judicial wisdom, experience and services they valued.

Asked if village and community courts would affect whites living in rural areas, Mr Chikove said the aim of the system was to disregard race as a criterion for determining who would be subject to what law.

Mr Chikove said the new system would not be based on any that was being used elsewhere in the world.

"But we have thoroughly studied and learnt a lot from the experiences of Zambia, Kenya, Sierra Leone, Tanzania, Nigeria, Uganda and Ghana, most of which had similar colonial judicial experiences."

Also studied had been the deliberations of the 1963 Dar es Salaam Conference on Local Courts and Customary Law; and The African Commonwealth Countries Seminar on Legal Education for Adjudicators in the Magistrates' Courts, Local, Primary and Customary Law Courts held in Lusaka from July 27 to August 2 this year, which Mr Chikove had attended.

HIGHLANDS BY-ELECTION SEEN 'INDICATOR' OF WHITE FEELINGS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 12

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE DECISION by Dr Timothy Stamps to stand as an independent in the Highlands by-election against Mr James Thrush of the Rhodesian Front has turned a non-event into what could be a most interesting indication of white voters' feelings.

Dr Stamps, as a city councillor and a former MoH for Salisbury, is an experienced debater and public speaker, and a man who is most forthright and often controversial in his views.

This is not his first venture into politics. In the general election this year, when he stood as an independent in the Kopje constituency, he had a formidable opponent in Mr Dennis Divaris. He lost by 1 999 votes to 1 053.

With that background he should do better against his new opponent, who is a relative newcomer to Salisbury.

The Highlands voters on January 13 can either go along with the outmoded policies of a tired party that has yet to change its name to conform to the realities of Zimbabwe 1980; or break the RF's stranglehold on progressive thought by electing an independent who is sure to bring fresh ideas and a new white point of view to the House.

The outcome of the election will be significant inside the country and far beyond its borders.

POSTPONEMENT OF SALISBURY, BULAWAYO ELECTIONS DEPLORED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 14

[Editorial: "Lagging Behind"]

[Text] IT is nearly three weeks since it was announced that the local government elections had been postponed indefinitely in the former township areas of Salisbury and Bulawayo and in Chitungwiza.

At the time the Minister of Local Government and Housing, Mr Zvobgo, said he believed it was prudent to avoid the risk of unrest. Candidates should be able to campaign without restriction of fear of any form of interference.

The postponement followed the outbreak of fighting in Bulawayo which, the Minister said, made it necessary for the Government to be as circumspect as possible to ensure the safety of the people in local government areas.

Since that announcement a revolution has been taking place in towns throughout Zimbabwe excluding the two main centres.

The local government elections took place peacefully and in nearly all cases ZANU (PF) candidates romped home and the country's first black mayors have been and are being chosen from their ranks.

A new era in local government has begun, putting paid to the absurd situation in which most of the people who lived within the municipal boundaries had no say in the election of town or city council members.

But until Salisbury and Bulawayo are included in the process the anomaly remains. It is to be hoped that the Government will soon be able to announce the dates for the postponed elections. It is hardly right for the capital city to be lagging behind.

ZAPU MEMBERS WHO ATTACKED ZANU OFFICIAL JAILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 5

[Text]

THREE ZAPU "policemen", who fired at the house of a Mufakose ZANU (PF) official in April, were convicted by the High Court, Salisbury, yesterday of common assault and each jailed for an effective three months.

Lesley Moyo (28), Nkosana Nsingo (27) and Vusumuzi Ndhlovu (22) pleaded not guilty to trying to kill Mr Patrick Marime, members of his family and ZANU (PF) youths at 7 Muncondo Street on April 21.

Mr Justice Horn sentenced the men to 12 months' jail each and conditionally suspended nine months of the sentence for five years.

The men told the court they went to the house with AK rifles to try to persuade people there to hand over the child of a party supporter they believed was being held captive.

They saw a large crowd, shots were fired from the house and they fired into the air.

Mr Justice Horn said that although the court had no doubt from Mr Marime's evidence that he felt his life was endangered by the firing, the defence case was upheld "due more to the deficiencies in the State case than to the cogencies of the evidence of the accused".

The firing at the house was done to "show tangible evidence that the PF had the power to attack people, who were members of the party of which Mr Marime was a member", said the judge.

Acquitting the men of attempted murder, Mr Justice Horn said they committed assault by firing their weapons to frighten people in and around the house.

Speaking in mitigation before sentence the defence counsel, Mr John Manyarara, said the men's prospects of being attested into the Zimbabwe Republic Police had been "shattered" because of their conviction.

Passing sentence, the judge said the assault "involved creating or adding fuel to a situation of disorder and inviting further retaliation and retribution by other political parties or another political party".

With their police training the men should have realised the danger they were creating, he said, and their conduct "involved setting yourselves up as law enforcement agencies, which you were not and this can only lead to anarchy".

Mr Justice Horn sat with two assessors, Mr H. P. Duncan and Mr A. P. Jackson.

Mr Kevin Terry of the Attorney-General's Office prosecuted and Mr Manyarara appeared pro Deo for the accused.

NKOMO DISMISSES ACCUSATION OF HARASSMENT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 13

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

THE Home Affairs Minister and Patriotic Front President, Dr Joshua Nkomo, yesterday said it was nonsense to say that people allegedly harassing and haranguing farm workers at Nyamandlovu were PF personnel.

Dr Nkomo was commenting on a report that some PF personnel from a farm in the Nyamandlovu area were assaulting and intimidating farm workers in the area.

The PF leader said: "If there are people like those referred to by the Chronicle, they are not PF members because our membership is very disciplined and know how to behave properly.

"These must be some mad chaps who benefit by going about terrorising innocent people, and we must set the police on them."

Dr Nkomo said it was necessary for the public to differentiate between "ordinary criminals and political activists".

"Ordinary criminals take advantage of the present situation to commit criminal acts for their own selfish ends, but political activists of the PF work within a set, tested and accepted code of behaviour for the public's benefit."

A police spokesman said yesterday: "The anonymous farm manager mentioned in the Chronicle story has informed police that he does not wish to lay any form of complaint and he advises police that his reason for contacting the paper was to draw the attention of the Minister of Home Affairs to the activities of people resident at Woody Glen farm.

"Police rely on members of the public to come forward and lodge their complaints."

CATHOLIC WAR ROLE PRAISED BY MUGABE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Dec 80 p 9

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, has called on the Roman Catholic Church to help his country by expanding the educational system and organising more overseas aid.

Speaking on a television programme on Sunday night, Mr Mugabe said he saw the church playing a big role in the new country's future as far as education and health services were concerned.

Saying the Catholic missionaries had played a significant role during the war by helping liberation fighters, Mr Mugabe added there were similarities between marxist and Christian societies and he hoped to adopt these in a new Zimbabwe society.

"Surely, it is the purpose of God that we live together and share his gifts. Therefore, common ownership is not opposed to Christianity.

"I want the church, especially the Catholic Church, to help this country more as we build a new society."

Mr Mugabe, who was educated at a Catholic mission school, added: "We valued the support which the church gave us as it helped to internationalise our grievance and helped to mobilise international support for us.

"Within the country it gave us a broader base than the one which we ourselves, acting entirely on our own, could have created. We felt that within the country there were democratic or Christian forces which were opposed to the regime established after UDI that we were fighting."

Mr Mugabe said his Catholic background had had an immense influence on him, instilling in him "morality discipline and the oneness of our country".

On the same programme, a ZAPU spokesman said although the Catholics had never formally approved the war, there was tacit support from missionaries, who fed and sheltered liberation fighters.

FARMERS SPEAK OF INTIMIDATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 2 Dec 80 p 4

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

A NUMBER of incidents of violence, intimidation and interference with farm workers have been reported by farmers in an area between Nyamandhlovu and the Victoria Falls road near Bulawayo.

It is claimed that at least seven farms have been affected, although two of the farmers refused to confirm or deny that there had been trouble on their farms. A third could not be contacted.

Those who have told our correspondent that their labour force has been harangued or intimidated by outsiders, say these responsible come from a nearby farm owned by the Patriotic Front.

One farm manager says he has not slept at the farm for a month following an assault on him by what he called "ZIPRA boys".

"I have been 'in court' every morning for the last month, with these men asking me silly questions and telling me I am a sell-out," he said.

"I have also heard them telling people they should not work hard and that they should steal from the farm.

"I am not reporting these men — but I just want Joshua Nkomo to come and tell them not to interfere with other farms. He is the only one they will listen to."

The senior labourer on the farm also admitted having been hit about the face with a stick, but he was reluctant to discuss the matter.

The owner of the farm said the workforce was difficult to handle now because of the trouble that had been stirred up.

At a second farm the owner said six of his workers had been beaten up two weeks ago for no apparent reason.

More recently a woman in his farm village had been beaten because she was alleged to be going out with two men at once.

"They go around in groups of about 15. I don't think the police can do much about it. I have not reported these incidents to them," said the farmer.

"These men just walk into the sheds or on to the land and stand there. Sometimes they question me about how much people get paid and so on.

"The people here are very uneasy at work."

A third farmer said his senior labourer had been threatened with a beating for alleged errors in overtime payments.

In another incident two goatherds had been assaulted for refusing to give the intruders a goat, the farmer said.

A meeting had been arranged with two senior officials of the PF from Bulawayo and since then the situation had improved.

A police spokesman said only one incident of violence had been reported to the Nyamandhlovu police and that was several months ago.

The PF provincial publicity secretary in Bulawayo, Mr E. Ncube, said none of the incidents in the Nyamandhlovu area had been brought to the attention of his office.

"If the farmers concerned will please contact us, we are always willing to go out and settle anything of this kind," he said.

"We are not interested in our people going around and intimidating people. We are quite ruthless with these people if we find incidents like this really are happening."

COUNCILLOR Patrick Kombayi (42) was chosen Mayor-elect of Gwelo at a special caucus meeting of the full council on Monday night.

He and his deputy, Councillor Madasa Chipandambira, will be installed in their offices at a council meeting in Gwelo's Theatre on Monday, when the retiring Mayor, Councillor Roy Futter, will give his valedictory.

A long-standing member of ZANU (PF) who campaigned for it in Zambia, Britain, Mozambique and Zimbabwe, and now a businessman, Mr Kombayi can rightly claim to be the local man who made good.

He was born in Chilimanzi in the Umvuma district and grew up and was educated in Gwelo where he married his wife, Mavis, in 1963.

He is a former pupil of the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, who taught him at primary school.

Starting his working life as a teacher, he subsequently joined the railways as a fireman, gaining promotion to locomotive driver and running shed foreman.

As a driver he was transferred to Zambia where Mr Kombayi established his first commercial operation, the Chitukuku Company Ltd, based at Kafue.

The company is extensively involved in the operation of night clubs, transport and butcheries as well as imports and exports.

He intends to extend these operations to Zimbabwe in the near future.

While based in Zambia Councillor Kombayi successfully studied public relations, personnel and public administration, job instruction, effective communications and company administration in London.

As an active member of ZANU (PF) in Zambia he held various positions at branch, district and provincial level. He was particularly involved in the mobilisation of human and material resources during the liberation struggle, both in that country and Mozambique, where his travels next took him.

He was one of the key planners during the election period, being responsible for transport arrangements in connection with massed rallies.

The Kombayis have had eight children. Two of them, Dennis and Henry, were killed in a fire accident while they were in London.

The new Deputy Mayor-elect, Councillor Chipandambira (37) is head of the English department at Mambo Secondary School in Gwelo.

He is a lay preacher at St Michael's Catholic Church, a member of the Midlands provincial executive of the African Teachers' Association and a committee member of the local Jairos Jiri Association.

Mr Chipandambira was also born at Chilimanzi and did his primary education there and in Que Que. He completed his secondary studies at Inyati Secondary School near Bulawayo and then returned to Chilimanzi to teach at Museza Primary School in 1966.

MAYOR-ELECT OF FORT VICTORIA PROFILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 4

[Text]

THE Mayor-elect of Fort Victoria, Councillor Thomas Tavagwisa Zawaira, is no stranger to the corridors of power and authority, for he was the Member of Parliament for the huge Kunyasi constituency for several years.

A former teacher, headmaster and lecturer, he is a businessman in Fort Victoria and the ZANU (PF) political commissar for the province.

Mr Zawaira (46) was born at Zvenyaningwe in the Chilimanzi TTL, the eldest of the seven sons and three daughters of Sub-Chief Gundura who died in 1960. His mother still lives there.

He did his primary schooling at St Joseph's Mission in Hama and then went to Gokomere secondary school where he matriculated and qualified as a teacher. He taught there for four years and from 1961 spent a year in Britain where he took a diploma in social science.

He and his wife Felicitas have six children aged between one and 21 and his eldest daughter is a second year medical student at the University of Zimbabwe.

DEVELOPMENT

Councillor Zawaira says he envisages a lot of economic and commercial development in the Fort Victoria province and says that as mayor he will push for the decentralisation of industry.

Asked about the likely relationship between the ZANU (PF) councillors and the three white councillors he said: "There is a very good relationship already. We have met twice so far and I find those gentelmen extremely co-operative. I expect that will continue and I see no rifts developing. They and I are mature enough for us all to put the common good first and foremost and ourselves last."

Would the ZANU (PF) councillors be subject to the party whip on local affairs? "ZANU is democratic to the point where, in fact, we can decide our own affairs in complete freedom," he said.

"It is a party in which, if you have good reasons and put them forward, you can always carry the day."

Councillor Zawaira will be installed as Mayor, and Councillor Nelson Francis Tamba as Deputy Mayor, at a meeting of the new council on December 12.

BOOK BY MINES MINISTER NYAGUMBO REVIEWED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 11

[Book review by Bill Saidi: "A Deep Passion for the Goal of African Dignity"]

[Text] WITH THE PEOPLE, by Maurice Nyagumbo (Graham Publishing).

THIS is probably the most important publishing event in post-independent Zimbabwe, a book about the liberation struggle, not by a dispassionate chronicler but by someone who, in a manner of speaking, was "in at the creation".

Maurice Nyagumbo, who spent a total of 20 years in Rhodesian jails or in restriction, writes with a deep passion about the setbacks, the betrayals, the despair and the final success of the African fight for dignity.

The book has a few inaccuracies of time and sequence which thankfully, Terence Ranger, a long-time friend of the author, corrects as the narrative goes along.

Ranger, of course, is a well-known historian of the African struggle against white colonialism in this country. His revolt in Southern Rhodesia 1896-97 is one of the most distinguished chronicles of the early resistance by the Africans against the white settlers.

One fact which Ranger (or anybody else for that matter) cannot dispute is Nyagumbo's poignant account of the formation of the first nationally-organised African political movement, the Southern Rhodesia African National Congress in 1957.

I was then a cub reporter on the African Daily News and was reporting the meeting. Most journalists present realised there was a hitch of some kind when the meeting didn't begin as scheduled, but I certainly had no idea of the real problem. The meeting was held in the Mai Musodzi Hall. Nyagumbo and a group of fellow patriots had driven to Salisbury from Rusape for the meeting.

Nyagumbo writes: "I entered the hall where I found Chikerema, Nyandoro and (Paul) Mushonga talking to someone who was introduced to me as Mr Dauti Yamba, the Northern Rhodesia African National Congress representative.

"The three men, who appeared frustrated and depressed, told me that there was no one to chair the meeting. Previously they had made arrangements with Advocate (Herbert) Chitepo who agreed to chair the meeting. Unfortunately, early that morning Herbert Chitepo had sent word that he was not available . . ."

LATER FAME

Enoch Dumbutshena was also asked to chair the meeting, but he too declined. Guy Clutton-Brock, later to gain fame with his Child Comfort Farm project, was asked.

"I am no different from Sir Patrick Fletcher," he replied. As I remember him, Fletcher was not particularly keen on African advancement, although Fletcher High School, the alma mater of many journalist friends, was named after him.

The trouble, according to Nyagumbo, was that Chikerema, Nyandoro and Mushonga wanted an African graduate to chair the meeting. It was their belief that a graduate would give the movement the kind of prestige that previous movements had lacked.

Nyagumbo says: "... Mr Clutton-Brock warned against following the same path which the Africans of South Africa had taken. He said that the Africans of this country should guard against opportunists, those who were self-centred and had no love for their country."

The three men, the prime movers of the formation of the SRANC, were unconvinced — they had to have a graduate. In fact, the meeting would be postponed if there was no African graduate to chair it.

"Among the people from Bulawayo was Joshua Nkomo. Nyandoro and Chikerema approached him and Mr Nkomo agreed to chair the meeting. But the Bulawayo delegation, which included Joseph Msika, Knight Maripe, Jason Moyo and Francis Nehwati, rejected Nkomo's chairmanship and walked out of the hall in protest."

Nkomo, at the time, ran an auction-room in Bulawayo, having been a trade union leader with the railway workers.

In the end, Nyandoro and Chikerema persuaded the Bulawayo "dissidents" to return to the meeting, which duly went ahead with Nkomo in the chair.

Thus began the chequered history of the SRANC.

Nyagumbo, like the rest of the leaders who followed Ndabaningi Sithole out of ZAPU to form ZANU in 1963, is critical of Nkomo's leadership throughout his book.

Somehow, however, there is nothing personal in his criticism. So committed was Nyagumbo to the struggle that in trying to maintain unity in the leadership he was, at one time, prepared to give Nkomo the benefit of the doubt.

What manner of man is Maurice Nyagumbo? What made him sacrifice 20 years of his life in prisons, detention camps and restriction areas?

In his book, Nyagumbo emerges as a man of dignity, a man unprepared to tolerate any slight to that dignity, especially by whites. Like most Africans of his day, he suffered deep humiliation at the hands of the racists.

Then, when he went to South Africa, the indignities were multiplied. He met Chikerema in South Africa; many other Rhodesian Africans were in South Africa, either for education or to seek their fortune.

Nyagumbo was in the latter category, although it is clear that the only fortune he gained was in political education. He was reluctant to become a member of the Communist Party of South Africa, initially because he wanted more time for ballroom dancing, at which he had become apparently quite adept, winning second prize in a competition which included whites.

After his deportation from the apartheid republic, he returned home to Makoni reserve, where he married and was introduced to the African politics of the day by Chikerema, during a brief visit to Salisbury.

Nyagumbo details his days in prison and detention without much rancour, although he tells of losing his temper several times and assaulting officials. Yet he doesn't regret his incarceration, chalking it up to his contribution to the struggle.

He was in prison right up to the Lancaster House conference, which he attended after his release in 1979

Most students of the struggle will find Nyagumbo's autobiography an invaluable addition to their library, chiefly because he pulls no punches and "tells it like it is", not sparing either himself or his opponents.

Apart from Terence Ranger, John Conradie features in the book with a preface and a brilliant Epilogue. Both men share an admiration for Nyagumbo's resilience, as will most readers who enjoy a no-holds-barred autobiography. — Bill Saidi.

NEW TREASURY BOND PLAN MAY RAISE $74M

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 1

[Article by David Linsell]

[Text]

BANKING circles in Salisbury were caught on the hop by the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, when he announced the first measures for the release of funds blocked in the country since 1965.

Representatives of the commercial and merchant banks were called to a meeting last Friday by ministry officials, but were told no more than that contained in the official announcement issued that day.

Since then banks have been flooded with inquiries, but sources said this week that the Reserve Bank would not be in a position to release precise details until next week.

"We know as much as you do. Someone seems to have slipped up somewhere," said one source.

Senator Nkala said that dividends, interest and other income accrued during the years 1965 to 1973 would be released over a six-year period through 4 percent Government of Zimbabwe Blocked Bonds.

Similarly, 50 percent of blocked branch profits would be freed, although these concessions do not include insurance companies.

Non-residents and former residents who have cash sums not exceeding $1 000 could apply for immediate release of these assets.

Others with between $1 000 and $3 000 may apply for the six-year bonds.

Anyone with more than $3 000 would have to wait for further concessions.

In order to promote further local participation in foreign-owned companies operating in Zimbabwe the Minister said that proceeds from share sales would qualify for remittance through the 4 percent bonds.

All attempts to gain clarification of the statement were blocked by officials.

The Secretary of Finance, Mr David Young, and his deputy Mr Brian Walters refused to comment.

A Department of Information spokesman said: "I regret that neither Mr Young nor Mr Walters will agree to an interview on the subject of blocked funds. They have nothing further to add to the statement which was released last week."

It is now believed that Treasury and Reserve Bank officials estimate that around $74 million will be channelled through the new Government stock.

Some $30m. should be accounted for by dividends, $10m. by personal cash assets, $10m. in branch profits and $24m. by local participation schemes.

The amount of interest payable over the six years will come to some $10,4m.

If the target is not achieved, officials will consider extending the cut-off date from 1973 to possibly 1976, said one source.

Another indicated that companies agreeing to local participation measures would be dealt with on a first come, first served basis in the event of a scramble.

"The Treasury has set that limit of $24m. and it intends to stick to it as far as I know," he said.

Senator Nkala said that the funds would be channelled into Government, but it is still unclear how they will be spent or invested.

Some members of the banking community are concerned that this money may just be used to cover ordinary expenditure, in which case the money supply would rise even further, as would the high liquidity of the commercial banks.

Others hope that a major slice would find its way into statutory bodies, parastatals or groups in which the Government already has a direct investment, such as Air Zimbabwe, the National Railways, ESCOM or the Industrial Development Corporation where the money could earn a higher return upon increased investment.

One unknown factor was how much of the country's current foreign exchange reserves would be absorbed by freeing cash deposits of up to $1 000.

These accounts are known to be regarded by the Reserve Bank as a time-consuming nuisance and officials would like nothing more than to be rid of them.

Another area of uncertainty concerns the extra revenue to be generated by the 6c per litre increase in the cost of petrol.

No indication of what the levy will contribute toward the cost of servicing Government revenue and borrowings will be and what impact it will have upon the projected budget deficit for 1980/81.

Informed sources have said that the extra levy is unlikely to bring in more than $14,5 million.

NEW EMERGENCY FOOD PROGRAM LAUNCHED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 1

[Text]

AN emergency feeding programme for about 150 000 under-nourished children in rural areas is being launched this week by the Ministry of Health.

The $2 million programme, announced by the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, last night is specifically aimed at one to five-year-olds.

Thousands of children risk severe malnutrition and related infectious diseases because of food shortages during the period November to April when supplies were badly affected by the war and drought.

In a statement, Dr Ushewokunze said the programme was distinct from the one under the direction of the Ministry of Labour and Social Services.

The programme resulted because a number of surveys showed "alarming" conclusions on the nutritional condition of children in this country.

The most recent survey, conducted by the Ministry of Health, the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF) and former guerilla medics, has resulted in a map of under-nutrition showing the worst hit areas.

Children with arm circumferences of less than 13 cm — an objective measure — will be registered for a supplementary daily meal during the crisis months.

Dr Ushewokunze emphasised that the foods being used — maize-meal, beans, groundnuts and oils — would be a supplementary meal and would not replace food already being given to children.

Dr Ushewokunze called on anyone interested in donating to the fund to approach the organising secretary, Mrs F. Gwazemba, Children's Supplementary Feeding Programme, P.O. Box 4590, Salisbury.

OFFICIAL DISCUSSES PLANS TO DIVERSIFY TRADE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 2

[Text]

COMPANIES which broke sanctions during UDI are still monopolising the economy, and those businesses which observed sanctions are now in an unfavourable trading position, but, in the long term, this situation will change, says the Deputy Minister of Commerce and Industry, Mr M. J. Mvenge.

Mr Mvenge was responding yesterday to a suggestion that those sanctions busters who operated during UDI were still monopolising the economy — and those businessmen who declined to be part of the sanctions busting clique were losing out.

He affirmed that during UDI import permits were issued on a "past performance" basis to a network of businesses, and this restriction had not yet been lifted.

"We are still giving (import) allocations based on past performance, but some emergent Zimbabwean businessmen have now received allocations which are outside this category and we are not strictly following the criteria laid down.

He admitted, however, that the proportion of emergent businessmen was "very low" in relation to the entire commercial sector. But Zimbabwe was in the process of building on an inherited situation.

And his Ministry's firm policy in the long term would be to expand and diversify trade patterns to include Scandinavian, Eastern bloc and Third World countries which did not break sanctions during UDI.

Presently under investigation, said Mr Mvenge, were multinational companies which engaged in the "diabolical" practice of buying from overseas parent companies at inflated prices.

Some of these companies were making as much as 900 percent profit since they presently enjoyed sole franchise. It was possible too, that an illegal system of under-invoicing was being practiced.

"I do not believe in threatening people. But if companies are buying from the parent body despite the fact that they could purchase from other companies at cheap prices, very stern measures will be taken."

Among complaints which he had received from representatives of Third World trade organisations was their difficulty in obtaining some mining commodities from Zimbabwe.

The mining sector, he said, had forward commitments embracing the next three of four years and it might not be possible for mining companies to meet new export arrangements as a consequence.

NO MORTGAGE RATE INCREASE FORESEEN

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 1

[Text]

BUILDING society mortgage rates are likely to remain unchanged during the current financial year ending in June 1981.

But they may be increased in the second half of next year, says the incoming president of the Association of Building Societies of Zimbabwe, Mr John Cameron.

High liquidity in the money market is the main reason for rates staying as they are for the time being, but when they are increased, they will have a greater effect on the top end of the market than on the average home buyer.

During the last few years, mortgage rates have remained constant and the only changes that have taken place recently have affected properties over $12 000 and loans for the purchase of industrial property.

Interest on properties over $12 000 was raised to 7½ percent and interest on industrial property loans was raised to 8½ percent.

Building societies have always tried to keep mortgage rates as low as possible, said Mr Cameron, in the interests of the "man in the street" home owner.

"After all, apart from providing deposit facilities for clients, their main purpose is to make money available to the individual for the building and purchasing of houses."

Low-cost housing was really a government venture, and although building societies made block loans of more than $28 million to municipalities and the Government in the last financial year, these bodies did not have to rely on building societies for funds as they had their own ability to raise capital.

"Our prime concern is to assist the individual home owner in finding the necessary capital for the purchase of a house," said Mr Cameron.

The position in the housing market at the moment is that a lot of houses are changing hands, but few new ones are being built.

Total mortgage volumes, therefore, are not increasing substantially and it will need a large scale building programme before any significant increases become apparent.

Another reason for the stable mortgage volume and shortage of houses is the fact that large companies have been buying up houses for the accommodation of expatriate staff and foreign governments have been on a buying spree, mainly in Salisbury.

The question of liquidity in the money market is related to the tempo of activity, said Mr Cameron, and an increase in the amount of foreign exchange available in the country would have the effect of stimulating internal development. This would include an upsurge in the building of houses.

As a matter of precaution, building societies keep a large amount of capital on standby, but apart from these reserves, there was excess money that was being underutilised.

If more houses were to be built, however, some of this money could be put to good use for the provision of mortgages.

It was inevitable that costs will escalate, said Mr Cameron, as building societies were having to implement major training programmes, especially in the training of more responsible staff.

A considerable drain of skills would have the effect of inhibiting growth at a time when the country can least afford it.

IAN SMITH TO TESTIFY IN OIL SANCTIONS CASE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 13

[Text]

LONDON.

FORMER Rhodesian Prime Minister, Mr Ian Smith, has agreed to give evidence at an arbitration hearing here in which Lonrho is claiming £116 million against Shell and British Petroleum over alleged sanctions-busting.

A spokesman for Lonrho said yesterday the company had asked Mr Smith to give evidence before the arbitration tribunal and he had agreed to do so when hearings resume in March next year, reports Ziana.

"He is prepared to make available the facts. He is the central figure in this whole exercise," said the spokesman.

The case has been going on for some months at arbitration level — a private legal action instituted by Lonrho.

Its findings must be supported by the High Court and, on Monday a judge ruled that Lonrho had no legal basis for its claims.

Lonrho intends appealing against this judgment, and the arbitration hearings will continue while this takes place.

Lonrho bases its claims on the arbitration finding that the oil companies broke a 1962 contract under which it was agreed that all oil for Rhodesia would go through a pipeline built by Lonrho from the Mozambique port of Beira.

The pipeline was closed soon after UDI in 1965, and after that, oil reached Rhodesia by road and rail.

On Monday Mr Justice Parker upheld this finding, but he reversed another which said Lonrho would have an arguable claim for damages if it could establish that Shell and BP had conspired in the U.K. to break sanctions.

He said the acts which Lonrho had complained had not been specifically directed against Lonrho, that the companies could not be sued individually or together, and that there was therefore no basis for a conspiracy claim.

He also maintained there were no implied terms in the agreement that Shell and BP would be liable for the acts of their Southern African subsidiaries.

The arbitration hearings at which Mr Smith has agreed to appear will be private.

BRIEFS

MANDELA FREEDOM SUPPORTED--About 5,000 more petition signatures demanding the release of Nelson Mandela, leader of the banned African National Congress, from Robben Island reached the Zimbabwe "Free Mandela" committee this week. This brings the total number of signatures collected since September 30 to more than 11 000. Three weeks ago about 700 petition forms with a letter of support from the Minister of Education and Culture, Mr Dzingai Mutumbuka, were sent to 180 schools and about 17 colleges throughout the country. Many of them have now returned their signatures demanding Mandela's release. Support has come from as far away as Umtali, Gwelo, Bulawayo, Fort Victoria and Wankie. The Free Mandela campaign committee spokesman in Salisbury, Mr Clifford Mashiri, appealed to heads of secondary schools and teachers' colleges on Tuesday to return all uncompleted petition forms before they close for the Christmas holidays. Mr Mashiri also appealed to the South African Government to spare the lives of three ANC men who were sentenced to death at a recent treason trial. "The Free Mandela committee also calls on Amnesty International, the Organisation of African Unity and the United Nations Secretary-General to intervene on their behalf," he said. Once all petition forms have been returned to the committee by the middle of December the campaign will end. "But we will never stop focusing on the South African situation until the people there are all free," said Mr Mashiri. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 4]

NGANGAS RESEARCH CENTRE--A Salisbury research centre has been established by the Zimbabwe National Traditional Healers' Association, the president, Professor Gordon Chavunduka, said in Salisbury yesterday. Professor Chavunduka said qualified personnel would carry out research into traditional medicine and bring it up to standard where necessary. The research station premises in Westwood are being renovated and are expected to be officially opened by the Minister of Health, Dr Herbert Ushewokunze, in January. Professor Chavunduka said the centre would also be used for conferences and, later, for training. It would be fully supported by the Ministry of Health. Six regional administrative offices have been established in Bulawayo, Gwelo, Fort Victoria, Que Que and Shabani. The Umtali office would be officially opened on December 14, he said. CIVIL SERVICE REPLACEMENTS--Over-aged civil servants who held posts for which younger qualified replacements were available would be served with notices of dismissal, a spokesman for the Public Services Commission said yesterday. He was reacting to questions arising from a recent report which said that hundreds of over-aged white civil servants would face a bleak Christmas knowing they might be declared redundant early next year. A spokesman for the PSC said yesterday the dismissals were part of an annual exercise which, in many respects, had gone on for many years. He said: "We are not going to sack people just because they are over-aged. We will only do it if qualified replacements of a younger age are available." He said officers were given six months' notice while other employees got one month. He said notices had been sent out and that March 31 was the date they had in mind for people who could be replaced. "We are drawing up a list of people who are over-age and in conjunction with the Ministry we will see who can be and who cannot be replaced." He said the retirement age was 65 but that regulations permitted the PSC to give notice to officers once they reached the age of 60. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 5]

UANC SACKS THREE MEMBERS--The UANC yesterday expelled three members of the party for "undisciplined behaviour." A spokesman for the UANC said that the men were expelled by a unanimous decision of the central committee. They were the deputy director for youth, Mr Misheck Hove, and two assistant directors, Mr John Nyawhata and Mr Thompson Tananguraryi. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 3]

LANDMINE KILLS TWO--Bulawayo. A powerful landmine, believed to have lain forgotten since the war, exploded near the Victoria Falls Bridge on Monday morning, killing two railways employees and seriously injuring two others. The four were part of a labour gang removing a pile of sleepers near the track, a police spokesman said. The bridge was immediately closed to road and pedestrian traffic while Army engineers checked the area for more explosive devices. Rail traffic was not affected. The bridge was reopened at 3.30 p.m. The spokesman said it appeared the mine was not laid recently, "and was something left over from the war." The two dead men were named as Mr Silos Gaya and Mr Tauzeni Kashweka. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 3 Dec 80 p 1]

VEHICLE LIGHTBULBS SHORTAGE--Increased night travel due to the improvement in the security situation throughout the country has resulted in a marked shortage of light bulbs for motor vehicles. One-eyed vehicles are a common sight in Salisbury's roads after dusk, and it is not a great surprise when one comes face to face with a vehicle displaying no headlights at all. The position is not confined to Salisbury, however, and is far worse in the smaller towns and rural areas. Motor dealers throughout the country report a severe shortage of light bulbs for headlamps and some say that they are completely out of stock. Many of them have placed orders with suppliers in South Africa and overseas but are still waiting for those to arrive. In the past, import allocations to the motor trade have been limited and existing supplies of bulbs have not been sufficient to meet the significant increase in night travel. Motor Traders' Association president, Mr Dick Parry, says that the Government has increased allocations and this has allowed dealers to make the necessary orders. However, time-lags are proving a problem and some dealers are experiencing delays of up to 8 months between placing orders and receiving their goods. One of the main sources of light bulb supply, a factory in South Africa, was recently damaged by fire and this has caused a considerable delay for Zimbabwe dealers. Another South

African supplier has moved to different premises and orders placed with overseas firms are subject to long delays. But the situation should be alleviated within the next two months, said Mr Parry, when order made by various dealers should start coming into the country. TRADE FIGURES SLIP--Balance of trade figures for August slipped back by 13.7 percent to $9 763 000 compared to the previous month's recovery to $11 315 000, according to the Monthly Digest of Statistics released yesterday. Exports reached their third highest level for the year and stood at $75 555 000 a 2.7 percent rise on July. Imports increased to $65 792 000, marginally lower than the year's peak in May. Generally the figures were unexciting, but reflected recoveries in minerals and metals, whereby asbestos and chrome sales returned to their usual level of sales while copper exports earned $5,2m in foreign exchange. On the debit side petroleum accounted for most of the increased import bill. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 4 Dec 80 p 3]

COST OF WANKIE STRIKE--The recent unofficial strike at Wankie Colliery and earlier unrest at the mine is likely to result in a loss of over $1m. This warning was given on Monday when chairman Sir Keith Acutt addressed shareholders at the annual general meeting of the Wankie Colliery Company Ltd. Production was almost back to normal, but Sir Keith said: "But the effect of this strike and the earlier disruption is that little or no profit has been earned during the last three months. "November figures are not yet available and therefore I am unable to quantify this." The estimated loss of $1m. was based upon results for the year ended August 31 1980 which showed a trading profit of $5 144 000, a company spokesman said after the meeting. The previous two months' earnings were covered by an expiring price agreement and the effect of the strikes and the costs involved eroded old profit margins.
